Eternal God, our Father, thou who has borne our iniquity and shared our grief, we bless Thee for all Thy love and Thy redemptive work. We stand condemned before Thee when we realize how inadequate have been our puny efforts, how unresponsive we have been when duty was fraught with danger, how insensitive we have been to some of the higher notes in the gospel scale. Have mercy upon us. Keep fresh in our thinking the ministry of a suffering Savior. Forbid that we should ever close our ears to the still, sad music of humanity. Halt our lightheartedness with the realization that there are many occasions for divine lamentations today—and some of them are ecclesiastical! Forgive our sins. Stab our spirits awake. And ere this day and the accompanying night pass into irretrievable history, grant that some splendid vision may glow on the altar of every life. Amen.

A NOTABLE MINISTRY

News reaches us concerning the official retirement of Dr. James R. Clinton as Pastor-at-Large for the Home Boards. Through his singing, preaching and writing the healing shadow of Dr. Clinton has fallen upon the Southern Convention. A number of our churches have been strengthened by his ministry, and our reading constituency has been edified by his published sermons and poems. We are conscious of our real debt of gratitude to Dr. Clinton and to the Board of Home Missions for its vision, wisdom and generosity in promoting this far-flung ministry.

Dr. Clinton possesses remarkable facilities for proclaiming the gospel. His commanding physique is a magnificent temple for the indwelling and outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Although the vast majority of ministers neglect the singing voice and rely altogether on the speaking voice, Dr. Clinton has cultivated and utilized both in a most effective way. His exquisite tenor voice and his sympathetic expositions of the great hymns have amplified and enriched his ministry. Surely this is a pattern worthy of emulation!

We find in Dr. Clinton a pastor-evangelist in the finest sense of the word. His education never robbed him of evangelistic fervor, and yet his preaching has not been characterized by heat at the expense of light.

Many of us are indebted to Dr. Clinton for his versatile ministry and trust that he will continue to share with us his wealth of scriptural insight, his unique expositions and his boundless friendship.

SOUL-WINNING INVALID

Dr. J. G. K. McClure tells about an invalid woman residing at Spring, Illinois, who had been bed-ridden for seventeen years, and was almost helpless. For many years she had been praying to God in a general way to save souls. One day she asked for pen and paper. She wrote down the names of fifty-seven acquaintances. She prayed for each of these by name three times a day. She wrote them letters telling them of her interest in them. She also wrote to Christian friends, in whom she knew these persons had confidence, and urged them to speak to these persons about their souls' welfare and to do their best to persuade them to repent and believe. She had unquestioning faith in God. In her humble, earnest dependence upon Him she thus interceded for the unsaved. In time every one of those fifty-seven persons avowed faith in Jesus Christ as his Saviour.

Congregational Christian Churches and a Protestant Strategy for the Southeast

By REV. STANLEY U. NORTH

Protestantism in the Southeast is highly competitive. Many of the churches would deny the validity of evolution but all of them are engaged in a struggle which exactly illustrates Darwin's phrase "the survival of the fittest."

Let us be honest with ourselves. There simply does not exist an overall Protestant plan of action for the churching of the Southeast. Each denomination is a law unto itself. Its churches are established with the single thought of extending and strengthening its own life. The fact that a community is already over-churched is no deterrent to a denomination not represented therein from establishing yet another church. The result is a clustering of small churches, none of which has sufficient strength to afford adequate leadership or richness of program. It is wasteful. It is inefficient. It impoverishes the community. Let me give an illustration of the South, but not of the Southeast, which typifies the pattern of church life through the region. For twenty-five years or more a rural Congregational Christian church has served the countryside adjacent to Lynchburg, Va. Within recent years the area has become suburban, presenting the church with an opportunity of developing strength and adequacy. But the little church which as a matter of justice and decency should be permitted to recruit strength from among its new neighbors finds its very existence threatened through the invasion of its parish by a Disciples Church five blocks distant, a Baptist Church six blocks removed, and a Nazarene Church two blocks away. This means that none of the churches will have the essential strength to serve the community with adequacy, or else that one of the churches, through access to large resources, will out-compete all others and eventually stifle their very lives. There is a third alternative, namely that sectarian denominationalism shall subsidize each of the churches with national funds which a wise Protestant strategy would invest in under-churched areas to perform needed and unmet services.

In contrast, the Roman Catholics space their churches throughout the city giving to each parish available families of 1,000 to 3,000. Each church has the strength to have an imposing building and a constituency of sufficient strength to win prestige and command respect. By comparison the behavior of Protestants is luxurious and profligate, to say the least, and sinful to say the worst.

Rural areas are losing population and so there is not the need for new churches which characterize expanding urban centers. The present pattern of multiple Protestant churches in small villages throughout the region is quite old. It was born of an aggressive sectarian spirit. It has been made possible either by denominational subsidies or by yoking fields, or by the service of ministers whose livelihood is secured through secular employment. When a community has three churches, but no resident minister, when the same people worship in one church the first Sunday of the month, in a second church on the second Sunday, and in a third church on the third Sunday and nowhere on the fourth Sunday, it would seem that denominational labels should be subordinated and that it is high time the people concerned put an end to this system in the interest of unifying and strengthening the religious life of the community so that their children shall have the advantages they need and from which wasteful competition robs them.

Now I well know patterns that are long established cannot be changed abruptly, however costly they may be in terms of money and community well-being. But I also know that unless a start be made to correct conditions that are both wasteful and harmful, progress will never be made. Because other denominations are sectarian in spirit and bigoted in conduct does not justify our pursuing a course on the same level. If we have any excuse for existing in a region that has far too many churches it is as a leaven which shall function to correct, with the passing of time, abuses which are now taken for granted. If we are simply to be another church engaged in the mad scramble to win members before another church has enlisted them, then we might better withdraw to spend our energies where Protestantism is organized and cooperative, possessing a sense of responsibility for an orderly and efficient churching of the community and the region.

Surely, if the Convention is to play a helpful part in a Protestant strategy for the Southeast, the first step is to put its own house in order. These are some of the questions that need to be asked:

1. To what extent are churches of the Convention competitive?
2. Can competitive situations be corrected through the exchange of churches with the other denominations involved?
3. Can competitive churches be federated?
4. To what extent can the patterns of one service every two weeks, every three weeks, and the like, be corrected?
5. Can churches now inadequately served be vitalized through a re-districting and reconstituting of larger parishes?
6. What is the distinct contribution of our fellowship to the region?
7. Is our contribution of sufficient value so that we may reasonably expect all of the churches to participate in providing the essential resources?

A thorough-going comprehensive study of Congregational Christian work in the Southeast is about to be made. But that should not hinder the Convention from addressing immediately and repeatedly to itself the question: What shall be the role of the Convention in a Southeast Protestant strategy?

The following points are suggested for your consideration:

1. Field visitation of weak churches by the Convention staff, assisted by ministers and competent lay people, to counsel our weak churches with reference to goals, program and methods.
2. A study of the Convention churches, with a view to organizing and reorganizing larger parishes that shall have the resources to employ full-time adequately trained leadership.
3. An honest facing of parishes that are highly competitive, issuing in negotiations for the exchange of fields with other denominations concerned thereby giving to the communities involved the essential unity for adequacy of church life.
4. A proposal to regional and state Councils of Churches or similarly functioning bodies that steps be taken immediately toward establishing of agreements relative to church extension, to the end that the churching of new communities shall be done cooperatively, rather than according to the present ruthless and wasteful pattern. This will not find favor in some

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Please do not miss the Young People's Summer Conference at Elon College Sunday afternoon, June 19, and the week following. Do not miss it, that is, if you are one of the young people of the Southern Convention. The Conference will actually begin at 4:30, and close with the 7:30 service for the first big session.

The Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship—a Convention-wide organization of our church youth—will meet in business session. Every church in the Convention should be represented. Many car loads from every Conference should be there. The college will be ready for you. The beautiful campus will be at its best. Trees, shrubs, giant oaks and hickories in mid-June will give a great setting for youth.

The beautiful Whitley Memorial Chapel should be filled at 4:30. At 6:00 there will be a picnic supper, at 7:00 a vesper service. And at 7:30 a great challenge to youth.

Allow yourself five hours if you attend from Eastern Virginia Conference or the Valley of Virginia Conference if you drive your car. Stay through the following Friday if you can. Registration, room and board for a big week is only $11.50. But if you cannot stay for the entire week be sure to attend the big services Sunday afternoon and evening. Stay just as long as you can. The Youth Conference will make a land-mark in your life if you can remain for the week. Such a Conference grows in a cumulative fashion as you learn to know one another by singing together, studying together, listening at inspiring sessions together, playing together, and sensing something of the majesty and greatness of the Church with its Christian youth around the world.

Churches looking for leadership from their youth in young people's meetings can well afford to pay part or all of the expenses of some of their choice young people. Pastors planning to have real help from their youth can well afford to gather up an automobile load or more and attend this Conference. You can count on that pastor, church and people which has a large and enthusiastic number of such leaders of tomorrow there. I shall never forget some of the groups I have seen at such Conferences with their pastor. What a wholesome team they made! What fun they had, and what leadership has been developed by just such contacts. An active pastor and a dozen of his own young people can set the pace for such a week, yes, and can set the pace for the success of their church for tomorrow.

"Come ye apart and rest awhile" said the great Teacher to the young men who followed Him. Happy the church or convention, or pastor, who can have a number of his youth quietly rest together and pray together in such a place. It is not all fun for running through it all there will be found quiet, worship, prayer—and a glimpse of tomorrow as viewed from some mountain-top experience with the Master.

A SHORT HISTORY OF PLEASANT RIDGE CHURCH.

By SYBRANT PELL.

Some time ago as Memorial Day Services were being planned it was suggested that a short history of the Pleasant Ridge Church be given during the day. This I will attempt to do. But first, what is a church history? According to Webster a church is a building for public Christian worship; history is events which form the subject matter of history.

The exact date of the organization of the Pleasant Ridge Church is uncertain. One record I have found states that the organization took place April 10, 1850. However, there is a book published by the Southern Convention which dates the church back to 1835, at which time Dr. J. W. Wellons organized Parks Cross Roads, Shiloh, Pleasant Grove and Pleasant Ridge.

In the records of 1850 we find the names of the following charter members: William Brown, Sr., William R. Brown, Adam Brown, Mary Brown, Jane Brown, Elizabeth Henson, Clary Smith, Martha Henson, Sophia McDaniel and Rachel Williams. In those days the names of the men and women were kept on different pages of the record book.

There is a monument in the cemetery to John A. Welborn for the land for the cemetery. (It is not sure that he gave the land for the church building.) He died in 1903 followed by his wife in 1909.

It seems that the first building was constructed of logs. Then several years later a 30-foot by 40-foot frame church was built. Many remember this building as a school house built in 1860. We find in the minutes of a Quarterly Conference of July 4, 1860, that Mr. W. R. Brown bought and hauled some material for the building from Fayetteville. We think of Fayetteville, North Carolina, as some distance now as it takes about two hours in a fast car; but think of hauling some material for the church this distance in a wagon drawn by horses!

The church in those days had three rows of pews. Two outside rows faced the center row. The women sat on one side of the church and the men on the other side. At one particular place a Mr. John M. Stinson always sat; after his death a cross was placed on the spot where he sat for so many services. Mr. Stinson was deacon, secretary for 28 years, and Sunday school superintendent for a number of years.

In 1873 a Sunday school was formed. This organization has made a large amount of history. It is the right arm of the church and extends a welcome to all.

January 24, 1874, Rev. W. R. Brown was elected as pastor of the church. The beautiful stained glass window near the altar is a Memorial to this godly man and his good wife.

On March 21, 1896, Mr. W. E. Allred was elected secretary-treasurer and served well over 30 years. He was elected deacon March 25, 1926. We remember him as a Sunday school teacher; he was given five minutes after class to summarize the lesson each Sunday. He was very fond of the writing of St. Paul.

Sometime in 1913 the people began thinking about another church building. At conference that year they asked for and received $100.00 to be used in constructing a new building. It was patterned after the Parks Cross Roads Church except for the center entrance.

Until now we have had five generations of the Brown family. The third generation was Mr. Welland Brown. He was very active in his church, holding all the offices at one time or another. He was an excellent Sunday School teacher and how he loved to show his class to the entire school! Many of his boys in the class remember him well. He stood for the best things in life. He would sit here in

News of Elon College

ELON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The 59th annual commencement of Elon College was held May 28, 29 and 30. The program was carried through to a satisfactory completion. All exercises with the exception of Sunday night were more largely attended than any previous commencement. The cornerstone for the new gymnasium was laid by the Grand Lodge of North Carolina with the Ancient rites and ceremonies of the Masonic order. The program was very impressive and a large number of alumni and friends were present. The one big job that the church, the alumni, the college, the students, and friends of Elon College have at the moment is the completion of this building. It will cost a lot of money but where there is a lot of love and a lot of interest no reasonable job is too great to undertake.

The graduating class numbered 78 last year. This year 109 diplomas were awarded. There were a number of certificates and diplomas in various departments awarded. The graduates had the privilege of hearing Dr. Harold A. Bosley, Dean of School of Religion, Duke University, at 11:30 a. m. on Sunday. Dr. Bosley gave a very fine message to an audience that filled the auditorium including the balcony. Monday, Graduation Day, the graduates, their guests, faculty, students and others had the privilege of hearing Lieutenant Governor H. P. Taylor deliver a very timely address. Mr. Taylor, a layman and a politician, emphasized the necessity of the religious emphasis in education, secondary and higher.

The Board of Trustees met for its final session at 2:00 o'clock in the afternoon. Among other important actions of the Board, it gave authorization for the completion of the gymnasium now in the process of construction and if it were found to be necessary a loan was authorized. We sincerely trust and believe that the alumni and friends of the institution will make their contributions in sufficient numbers and amounts to pay the bills without necessitating the negotiations of a loan.

It has been the custom for the past seventeen years for the president to have a final word with the graduates. The message for 1949 is as follows:

Class of 1949.

During your years in college your Alma Mater has sought to assist you in exploring new fields, in opening new doors, doors that reveal new opportunities and new responsibilities. In our united efforts you have been brought in touch with minds that are new to you, minds that live in books as well as in personalities. These meetings of minds have meant much to you. Your own minds have been flooded with authoritative information, information that has brought new light, increased your capacities, widened your vision and quickened your souls.

Your minds were meant to grow. They have grown constantly and continuously since childhood, but today should mark the true commencement of your minds' unfolding. The confusion and conflicts in our world challenge you—challenge the best that there is in you. It is your opportunity to help bring order out of chaos, understanding out of contentions, cooperation out of conflicts, plenty out of scarcity, and peace out of war. "Who knows but that God has brought you to the Kingdom for such a time as this?"

As you turn from this altar you face a grim world with all its stark realities. As you leave this campus you put your feet in the highway of life that leads to destiny. May God have mercy and give you wisdom. Surrender your wills to His will that you may be an honor to Him, to your Alma Mater, and to those who love you.

The college awarded three honorary degrees:

Miss Lilla Belle Pitts.

Miss Lilla Belle Pitts was born and reared in the State of Mississippi and was educated in private schools. She is a alumna of Ward-Belmont College, Nashville, Tenn, and of Teachers College, Columbia University, New York City. She has done graduate study in music at Juilliard School, New York City; Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois, and private study in London and Paris. She is an authority in public school music and has the distinction of having helped to train and guide literally hundreds of talented young people who were interested in music and the teaching of music.

At present she is professor of music education in Teachers College, Columbia University, New York City, her Alma Mater. She has served as supervisor of music in the States of Texas and New Jersey. Because of her broad information in the different fields of music education she has served as visiting professor in a number of the leading universities of our country; such as, Ohio State University, University of Southern California, and Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois. She is the author of textbooks in music education and has written numerous articles for magazines and periodicals. She has held important official positions in our leading musical organizations. She has served as President of Music Educators' National Conference and as a member of the Executive Committee of the same organization. She has represented the musical interests of this country in foreign conferences and influential committees. She is currently serving as a member of the Advisory Board of School of the Air, Columbia Broadcasting System, New York; National Music Week, New York; Music Press, Inc.; Music Education Committee, Metropolitan Opera Guild, New York; Project on Music Bibliographies for the Research Council of the Music Educators National Conference, and a number of other organization.

Mr. President, it is my privilege to present Miss Lilla Belle Pitts for the award of the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Music.

At Home and Abroad

A LETTER FROM THE AMERICAN BOARD.

DEAR FRIEND:

Doesn't it give you great satisfaction to know that right now you are being represented by 415 doctors, ministers, nurses, social workers and teachers in Africa, India, China, Japan and elsewhere? Through them you are changing the world—for the better!

For those who are concerned about the future, the American Board provides an opportunity to communicate the riches of Christ, to strengthen the Universal Church, and to promote international understanding. More than 2500 friends annually send gifts over and above the contributions which they regularly make through their churches.

Because of extreme inflation abroad and other increased costs, new gifts are urgently needed this year to maintain our missionaries, to keep open our churches, hospitals and schools, and to provide national Christian leadership for the future.

Our loyalty is to Christ who said, "As the Father sent me, I also now send you." A gift will make it possible for you, through your missionaries, to go in His name and to help answer His prayer, "Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." There is no greater privilege than this for those of us who follow Him!

Yours in His service,

The American Board.

YOUR MINISTRY IN TERMS OF AN INDIAN CHRISTIAN ORPHAN.

DEAR FRIENDS:

I am writing this story in connection with our Christian World Mission. Its success at home and abroad will mean a great deal to us missionaries. But what is more important it will mean much to Daniel who is one of eighty boys in our industrial school in Pasumalai.

Now I should like to tell you about Daniel. He is a penniless boy, orphaned, homeless, yet he has a deep, abiding, and unshakeable faith in Christ. His face always has a glorious smile, and he sings beautifully in the Tamil lyrical music.

Daniel invited me to his village to see how he lived and to meet the village Christians. It was getting dark when I arrived so I followed in his footsteps as he found the way to the house of one of the Christian families. There were a group of Christians seated on the floor with a dim lantern light. They offered me some bananas and hot milk. That is the Indian way. The leader asked me if I had anything to say to them. One cannot go among Christians without a message. Village life is so barren. What good news the Gospel must be to many hearts! How beautiful upon the mountain are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings! I thought how shallow the sermon which I had prepared would be to this little group of informal believers, so I expressed what was in my heart; namely, that our real wealth and happiness in this world is Jesus Christ, prayer, and the Bible.

Once I asked Daniel when he prayed. He startled me by saying that he always prays. And I believe he does, for he never loses a sense of God's presence. He is penniless and devoid of material goods, but to look at him you would be sure that he is "rich"—very rich. Can we say with our cars, comfortable homes, material possessions and gadgets of every conceivable kind, that we are as happy as this boy who hasn't even parents? When we prayed in the teacher's house, he thanked God that I had left all conveniences and comforts in America to come 10,000 miles to serve here in India. I felt a wave of almost shame. What I had left was but rubbish compared to the joy I found in this village. Your help means that Daniel will become a Christian leader of great value to his own nation, witnessing to his Lord Jesus Christ as a carpenter, singer, painter and preacher. And remember that each of the other boys has his story and his possibilities. This is the story of Daniel, and I count it a privilege to have shared his joy which is Christ our Lord.

Yours sincerely,

CHARLES HEINEMAN, Pasumalai, Madura District,
South India.

MORNING STAR VI MAKES PASTORS' CONFERENCE POSSIBLE.

"Miss Eleanor Wilson and I decided that it would be best to bring a group of pastors and teachers here from the Marshall Islands for a short course of study.

"Although the Morning Star needed some repairs, it made two trips and brought fourteen men. Others came on a small Navy ship. In all twenty-two came, and these were joined by one of the two Kusaie pastors for this course of study.

"It is truly an inspiration to teach such appreciative and eager students. They have been studying Bible, Homiletics, English and Music.

"Our students will return to carry on their work for the Lord with renewed zeal and effectiveness. Surely God was leading us as we planned this project and He has richly blessed us in our fellowship of study and work. We believe that you will be happy to know that once again the Mission School at Kusaie is helping promote the cause of our Christ in Micronesia."

quarters for years to come and never unless thinking about it to be initiated.

5. A forthright recognition that the function of the church is not merely to perform a ritual but to transform lives and life. Piety is not enough. We must also be righteous. We cannot have the fatherhood of God unless we achieve the brotherhood of man. The cross of Jesus is not to be applauded, but occupied. If we fail to occupy it in small degree there is not much chance that we will occupy it in large measure, issuing in a vital church, a vindicated Protestantism, a triumphant Christianity.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

REPORT OF RECOMMENDATIONS COMMITTEE.

1. Article 6, Section 3 of the Constitution reads: "The Standing Committees shall be Literature, Life M. and M., Spiritual life, Christian Family Life, Interdenominational Cooperation, Friendly Service, Visual Aids and such others as the Convention or Executive Board may deem necessary to promote the purpose of the organization."

We recommend that the following be added: "Chairmen of the Convention committees shall be elected by the Convention. In addition, each conference shall elect one member to each committee, with the understanding that these members shall also serve on the conference boards."

2. Section 4(b) of the By-Laws reads: "Vice-President—Shall perform the duties of the president in her absence and in case of her death or resignation shall become president for the unexpired term. She shall serve as Chairman of the School of Missions."

We recommend that the last sentence be changed to read, as follows: "She shall serve as Chairman of Friendly Service."

3. We recommend that a School of Missions Committee be appointed annually.

4. We recommend that the 1949 Thank Offering go for some special project in Shaowu.

5. The 1947 Convention took the following action: "That the funds received through the Life M. and M. Department for the next four years be turned over to the American Board, to help educate in the U. S., a Chinese Seminary Student, from Shaowu, recommended by Rev. Richard Jackson and approved by the Mission Board."

Since the American Board does not handle such funds, we recommend that this action be rescinded.

6. We recommend that the funds received from Life M. and M. for a period of four years, beginning June 8, 1947, and closing July 1, 1951, be turned over to the Mission Board of the Southern Convention to help educate in the U. S. a Chinese Seminary Student from Shaowu, recommended by Rev. R. Jackson and approved by the Woman's Convention or its Executive Board. These funds shall be paid to the Mission Board at such times and in such amounts as may be requested by the committee appointed to administer such funds, which committee shall be the President of the Woman's Convention as Chairman, the Chairman of the Mission Board, and the Superintendent of the Southern Convention.

7. Section 7 of the By-Laws reads: "These By-Laws may be amended by a two-thirds vote at any regular meeting of the Convention. Also by a two-thirds vote the rules may be suspended temporarily."

We recommend that the last sentence be deleted.

8. We recommend that Section 8 be added to the By-Laws to read, as follows: "When no rule of the Convention applies, Robert's Rules of Order, Revised, shall be final authority."

MRS. W. E. WISEMAN, Chairman.

MRS. W. V. LEATHERS,
MRS. R. A. WHITTEN.

The above recommendations will be presented to the Convention by the committee and voted on. Please study these recommendations and decide how you will vote at the coming biennial session of the Woman's Convention—June 13-15.

There are many items of important business to be voted on at the Convention. Be sure to have your delegates there so they may vote and express the will of your woman's group.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Last week I was writing about June brides and weddings. This will be published on the day of our wedding anniversary and perhaps I should have saved my June bride ideas until then. But I didn't, so here are some more ideas.

I feel very strongly that the Protestant church needs to save a lot of marriages and the way to do it is to start with youngsters like you.

If you want to be successful in marriage learn to grow up! It is an awful job and I am not sure that any of the grown-ups I know are altogether grown up. I'm not myself. Ever so often I wish I was four and could dump all my cares into my mother's lap but—not for long! I like my age better than four. Sometimes you little folk want to be "big" as you say so much that you skip over a lot of the learning.

When I say grow up I mean stop depending on tears, tantrums or pleading to get your way. I mean to stop being the one and only person who knows anything. Stop thinking you are misunderstood. All of these things happen to children and young adolescents but they shouldn't to adults. You can think of "big" people who cry and make everyone feel so miserable that they give in. What about fathers that act hurt and stay that way for such a long time if you are not doing as they like?

Jesus knew this part of growing up. And Paul said, "When I was a child I spoke as a child, but when I became a man I put aside childish things." Maturity is the grown-up's word for it. Becoming mature is a Christian duty.

Sometimes we see people working in the church who haven't grown up. They want to have their way, don't like the minister, the choir, the Sunday school superintendent . . . nothing, unless they are in charge and planned it all! Poor people, they really have few friends!

Sometimes you will find a boy or girl in your class getting ready to be a boy or a girl forever. They want all the toys, all the books and interrupt all the stories, don't they?

I mentioned the Protestant Church. We are a part of that. The Jewish and Roman Catholic faiths train their children to prepare for marriage, a lasting marriage. So must we! It is exciting to read about Hollywood marriages, but their chances of surviving are very slim and they usually are very unhappy. Grow up and prepare for a long, happy married life! I like to recall my wedding which took place thirteen years ago today. It has made us happy because we have worked to make it that way. Let me tell you a family secret . . . we decided that the word divorce would not be in our vocabulary. And it hasn't—as far as we are concerned—it simply doesn't exist!

HIS FATHER'S HOUSE.

By JANET T. VAN OSDEL.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

For days the sparkle in Susan's brown eyes had been dimmed by a look of puzzlement. She was wondering why Uncle Robert did not come to Sunday dinner as he used to do and why he no longer drove out after school house especially to see her. She also wondered why, when she heard his name mentioned by grown-ups and drew near to listen, they at once stopped talking. When she asked her mother about him, she was put off with, "Not now, darling; some other time we'll talk about it."

Uncle Robert was really Susan's mother's uncle, but he was a very special person in Susan's life. He was a short, plump man, with a rosy face, the kindest blue eyes, and a smile that won the heart of every child upon whom it was bestowed.

He and his sister Natalie lived in a beautiful home on the most attractive street in town. Susan lived in a small house on the edge of town. Her street did not have even a sidewalk and had none of the giant elm trees such as Uncle Robert's street had. Susan loved her home, as almost every little girl does, but she thought Uncle Robert's and Aunt Natalie's the most wonderful place in the world. Her greatest treat was to visit their home.

At last Aunt Natalie came to dinner. She looked lovely in a sheer, black dress, but she was very thin and her blue eyes seemed misted with sadness. Susan was always glad to see Aunt Natalie, but particularly so now because surely she could tell her about Uncle Robert!

As soon as grace was said, Susan asked, "Why doesn't Uncle Robert come to see us, Aunt Natalie? Is he sick? He hasn't been here for ever and ever so long, and no one will tell me why."

After a swift glance at Susan's pleading face, Aunt Natalie turned surprised eyes to Susan's mother.

"Haven't you told her yet?" she asked.

"I—I couldn't!" Susan's mother faltered. "I tried but I didn't know how to tell her! I will, right now, though! Uncle Robert is dead, Susan!"

Aunt Natalie raised her hand as though to ward off a blow. Susan drew a long breath and sat staring at her mother, her eyes wide with shock and incredulity.

"No!" she cried at last when she could speak. "No! No! Uncle Robert couldn't be dead—like Pudge?"

Pudge, their fat, wooly, black dog, had died of old age three months earlier. Uncle Robert had officiated when they had buried him under the mulberry tree.

"He is though, Susan," replied her mother sadly.

"No! No! No! cried Susan again, bursting into wild sobs.

"It's nothing at all like Pudge!" declared Aunt Natalie firmly, drawing Susan into her arms. "Your Uncle Robert has just gone to another home, Susan—to his Father's house."

"Is he coming back soon?" Susan asked, looking up eagerly.

"No, darling, he's not coming back. He's gone there to stay, but some day we'll go where he is."

"Soon?"

"Perhaps not very soon, but certainly some day."

"Is it a nice house where he lives now, Aunt Natalie—as nice as his house here?"

"It is quite different, but I should think much lovelier. And he will be very happy there, Susan."

"Who built his Father's house?"

"I can tell you only what the Bible says, Susan. The Bible is our Guide Book, you know. Get yours and we'll read John 14:1-3."

"We learned about that in Sunday school," said Susan, as Aunt Natalie finished reading.

Her eyes had all their old sparkle—even more—as she exclaimed, "It's a lovely place, isn't it, Aunt Natalie! From what Mother said, I thought something awful had happened to Uncle Robert, but he has just moved to another mansion, hasn't he?"

"Yes, Susan," answered Aunt Natalie, and as she spoke the sadness in her eyes gave place to a look of peaceful trust.

CHILDREN'S DAY AT CHAPEL HILL.

We observed Children's Day a bit differently this year. The Primary and Beginner children of our church school let us share in their regular church school program. This was possible because we transformed the rostrum of our sanctuary into a church school room, complete with piano, tiny chairs, pictures, and, of course, children. We sat in our pews and watched the children enter and call us to worship by singing: "I was glad they said unto me, Let us go unto the House of the Lord." Our minister called us to praise, and congregation and children responded to that exhortation with the familiar hymn, "Praise Him, Praise Him, All Ye Little Children." One of the Primary girls recited Mark's familiar version of the story of Jesus blessing the children. We all responded to this with the singing of "Jesus Loves Me." The Superintendent of our Children's Department then took over the service. After giving the story and thought-pattern behind each song, she led the children in singing familiar children's hymns. This was followed by a picture-interpretation story of "Jesus and the Nobleman's Son." The Primary Department then led us in prayer concerning these things, and ourselves as part of God's people, the Church. Then, while the children conducted their Offertory Service in the manner in which it is conducted each Sunday, we in the pews worshipped God through giving. The children concluded the Offertory Service with the song, "Can a Little Child Like Me Thank the Father Fittingly?" Then, as the congregation stood to sing the oldest of Christian hymns, "Shepherd of Tender Youth," the children took their chairs and returned to their regular meeting place to engage in their customary hand work and guided activity period. The congregation remained to listen to the sermon, "These Things We Teach Our Children." The general response to this "experimental Children's Day" service was good. We are happy to be able to share it with others through the columns of THE SUN.

this church and urge us to support our College at Elon. He believed in education and Elon College. He also was very mission-minded and for anything that was for the kingdom of God. He was always ready to lend a helping hand. I remember how he stopped me in the road one day and begged me to consider going to college. My memories are filled with the highest regard for him. This I am sure all will say who knew his good life. Men like him make beautiful history for their God, their Church and their community.

The record shows that many changes have taken place since the organization of Pleasant Ridge Church. At one time a person's conduct had to tow the line as they would say in those days or they would be churched. Here is an incident from the church record of a certain man who was churched for playing a violin. After his trial his name was retained as a member in good standing. It was also a custom to appoint delegates to attend revivals at neighboring churches.

We read between the lines of history and we believe our church has kept up to the times very well. Now the present generation sees the need of having a minister on the field to be a good Shepherd for God's children. Hence, we are making this possible by the erection of a new parsonage, just across the road from the church. This is a dream of a pastor of ten years ago, Rev. J. Frank Apple, and cherished by our former pastor, Rev. W. T. Madren. Whatever part we have in this venture will be history for the future generations. Let us hasten and complete this chapter of history.

In closing, let me tell this little story. A little boy was flying his kite on the sea shore; it was so high that it was lost to sight. A stranger came up and inquired what the little fellow was doing. "How do you know you are flying a kite when you can't see it up there out of sight," the stranger wanted to know. The little boy said, "I can feel the tug of the kite on the line." This is an illustration of the leaders of our church who set out with faith to build a church for the kingdom because they could feel the tug of God in their hearts. We would do well to have the reply of the little boy on our lips as we continue to keep faith with those who have given us this great heritage. The church waits for you and me to continue writing chapters of history. Let us make the chapters good for the kingdom of God as we work for the Pleasant Ridge Church.

MASSACHUSETTS AND THE MERGER.

At the 150th Annual Meeting of the Massachusetts Congregational Conference and Missionary Society held in Boston on May 16, 17 and 18 the following resolutions were adopted:

WHEREAS, Our Congregational Christian Churches for more than six years have been considering union with the Evangelical and Reformed Church under the name of the United Church of Christ; and

WHEREAS, The following votes have resulted from this consideration:

1. The Congregational Christian Churches of the country in a nationwide plebiscite have voted 3114 to 1165 (a percentage of 72.77) in favor of the Union.

2. In this plebiscite the Massachusetts Churches have voted 380 to 89 (81.4 per cent) in favor of the Union.

3. The General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches at its meeting in Cleveland, Ohio, February 5, 1949, voted 757 to 172 (81.5 per cent), to proceed with the Union.

WHEREAS, In the judgment of this Conference the Basis of Union and the Interpretations accompanying it safeguard the freedom and autonomy of the local church, and every Congregational Church in Massachusetts can be assured that its rights as to doctrine, worship, calling and dismissal of ministers and in other essential ways will be preserved; therefore be it

RESOLVED, That the Massachusetts Congregational Conference and Missionary Society at this 150th anniversary meeting, taking into account the historic Congregational attitude toward church union, believes it to be particularly appropriate to urge the Congregational Christian Church of Massachusetts to enter wholeheartedly into this Union and to do everything possible to bring about its success; and we further urge that no church of the Conference take precipitate action toward severing itself from our fellowship.

JESUS RISES FROM THE DEAD.

LESSON XII—JUNE 19, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thanks be unto God, who gives us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.—I Corinthians 15:57.

LESSON: Mark 16:1-8; John 21:1-17; I Corinthians 15:12-19.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Luke 24:21-32.

A Dead Man.

Jesus was dead. There was no doubt of that. The soldiers made sure of that before they allowed Him to be taken down from the Cross. And they later certified that fact to Pilate. Emphasis is placed upon this fact because there are those who say that Jesus merely swooned on the Cross, lapsed into unconsciousness, and later revived when placed in the tomb. Some folks will go a long way to argue around a stubborn fact. And the folks who hold this view still have to explain what eventually became of Jesus if He did regain consciousness and come forth from the tomb. It is all a lot of baloney. This fact is sure—Jesus was dead.

Broken Hopes and Utter Despair.

The fact that the disciples of Jesus knew He was dead blasted all their hopes and brought utter despair into their hearts. The two disciples on the Emmaus Road voiced this despair when they said, "But we trusted that it had been He which should have redeemed Israel." They had hoped . . . but their hopes had been blasted. No wonder they were sad and sorrowful. Here was the One Whom they thought was the Messiah, the One Who had frankly said He was the Son of God, the promised Christ, dying an ignominious death on the Cross, and dead and buried. The world had come tumbling down on their heads, the sun had been blotted out, all their hopes had been blasted, and despair filled their hearts and defeat paralyzed them.

A Missing Chapter.

Of the resurrection of Jesus itself, the Bible does not give an account. To be sure Matthew does speak of the event, but he does so vaguely, not stating that any one saw it. "And behold there was a great earthquake; for an angel (a messenger) of the Lord descended from heaven and came and rolled away the stone, and sat upon it . . . and for fear of him the watchers did quake, and become as dead men." That is all that we have of the event itself. For the other gospel writers simply start with the fact that the stone was rolled away. The fact is that we do not know just what happened, but we do know that something happened. And the fact that it happened is far more important than how it happened.

An Empty Tomb.

Every one of the gospel writers record the fact that when the various groups or individuals went to the tomb, they found it empty, at least so far as Jesus Himself was concerned. They saw the place where He had been lying, but He was not there. There was a young man arrayed in a white robe, a messenger from heaven, sitting on the right side, who asserted and insisted that their Master was not there, but that He had risen. And he pointed out the place in which the dead body of Jesus had lain. The fact of the empty tomb is crucial in Christianity. And it cannot be explained on any other grounds except that Jesus rose alive from the dead. If the enemies of Jesus had made some disposition of the body they would have produced it with fiendish delight when the disciples began to tell abroad the news that their Lord had risen from the dead. And that would have been the end of the story. On the other hand if the disciples had come at night and stolen away the body, as the enemies of Jesus intimated, these same disciples could never have gone out and proclaimed to the world that their Lord was alive again. Nor would the marvelous change have taken place in them that did take place if they knew in their hearts that it was all a lie, a ghastly lie. The simplest and safest thing for a man to do concerning the empty tomb is to accept it as a fact, even though he cannot explain it. There is evidence enough for the fact even though as has been said there is an incomplete explanation of the fact.

The Changed Disciples.

The disciples gradually became changed men. Not all at once. But gradually and eventually, they were changed. Hope again surged high in their hearts. Defeat was turned into victory. The sun shone again. Despair was banished. Courage was quickened. All doubt was dispelled. Certainty dominated their lives. And it was all because they became convinced that that Man who had been put in that tomb as a dead man was alive again. They became convinced against their own unbelief. At first they would not and could not believe it. But after a period in which again and again they saw their Lord alive again, and had fellowship with Him, as a group as well as individuals, they did become convinced and they became certain that Jesus was alive again. And they went out to tell all the world about it. This was the central theme of their preaching and of their witnessing. You cannot account for the change in the disciples apart from the fact that Jesus Christ rose again alive from the dead. They knew it was true, not because they could explain it, but because they had experienced it.

The Meaning of the Story.

It all has meaning for us—this fact that Jesus rose again alive from the dead. So much meaning that when Paul sat down to write to his Corinthian friends about it, and began to think about what a difference it would make if it were not true, his heart almost stopped beating, and there is a catch in his breath. "If Christ be not risen!!!!—there is no resurrection, for surely if this sinless Man, this Son of God did not rise from the dead, there is no such thing as a resurrection of the dead; then all preaching is vain for that is the heart of Christian preaching; our faith is vain, for that is the groundwork of our Christian faith; the apostles and the Scriptures are false witnesses, for they assert that God raised up Jesus from the dead; we are yet in our sins; and those who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished; indeed we are of all men most miserable if in this life only we have hope in Christ!!!! If Easter be not true—let your imagination run on that theme for a while and see what you have left if Easter be not true.

But Easter is true. Christ did rise from the dead. He is alive forevermore. That means that He kept His word and can keep His word. It means that God has vindicated His character. It means that God and Christ can be trusted. It means that the universe does conserve personality and personal values. It means that if a man dies in Christ he shall live again. It

CHANGES IN SUMMER CONFERENCE PROGRAM.

Since the program of our Young People's Summer Conference, to be held at Elon College, June 19-25, went to press, there have been some changes in the program which we think will be to advantage.

Dr. W. E. Wisseman's course will be "The Life of Jesus." We have made this change in view of the fact that most of our churches will be using the series on The Life of Christ this year in their Daily Vacation Bible Schools.

Rev. Tucker G. Humphries will be the speaker on Wednesday evening. This service was omitted by mistake on the original program.

In the afternoon study groups in Pilgrim Fellowship, Dr. Hardecastle will lead the group studying "Social Action," Fleta Moffitt will lead the group on "Personal Action," Melva Foster will lead the group on "Missionary Action," and Mrs. Mark Andes will lead the group on "Interdenominational Action." Each leader will meet a different group each afternoon and cover the same material at each session.

Reservations are coming in rapidly, and we look forward to one of our best schools, with a large enrollment.

JESSE H. DOLLAR,
Dean.

DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

We have a nice corps of workers going into the churches for Daily Vacation Bible School work during the summer. We have some open dates in July, and can furnish an S. S. S. worker for churches desiring schools during the latter part of the month and up to August 15. We are trying to send these workers into churches that could not otherwise have schools. Churches which can put on their own schools are requested to do so in order that our summer staff can go into small rural churches and make possible a school for them.

If any church in the Convention desires leadership during the period indicated above, for Daily Vacation Bible School work, please send your request to me immediately. We shall do our best to make possible a school for you.

In every case, we have planned that the worker will be in the church on Sunday morning, and spend the day meeting the people she is to work with, lining up local help and meeting with them in a planning session. This will mean that the schools can really start in full swing on Monday morning. The cooperation of all pastors is absolutely necessary, and we hope, where possible, the pastor will be present and give his leadership to the schools.

Remember that each church is to order the material it needs for the Daily Vacation Bible School from The Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts. Do it now.

JESSE H. DOLLAR, Chairman,

WESTERN N. C. SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The Western North Carolina Sunday School Convention will hold its annual meeting at Pleasant Hill Congregational Christian Church near Liberty, North Carolina, July 7, 1949, beginning at 10:00 a. m.

The theme for the Convention will be "Evangelism," and our goal "Reaching the Unchurched." In a recent article published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN we learn that there are over one hundred million people not affiliated with the Church. J. Edgar Hoover states, "The Bible school, church attendance and Christian influence and environment are the only real cure for all this." Therefore a great task is before our Sunday schools. But together we will be able to lessen this great number of people who know nothing about the joy of Christian living. I urge you to attend the Sunday School Convention that we may put our shoulders to the wheel together that our efforts may be strengthened.

This year an attendance banner will be given to the Sunday school that has the largest per cent of its enrollment present. Also a banner to the school for the most missionary giving per person for the year.

We desire a report from all Sunday schools in the Western North Carolina Conference, for it has been said that Sunday school records are the most accurate records the church has. I urge you to report in order to have a complete picture for our conference.

Looking forward to seeing you at Pleasant Hill on July 7, 1949.

S. H. PELL,
President.

A PROFITABLE SUMMER.

By MISS LELIA ANDERSON.

Summertime is just around the corner. It will be vacation from school for the children, but it should not be a vacation from religion for any of us. Freedom from the demands of school offers a real opportunity for added time and more effective work in religious training. What can we do? Here are some suggestions.

Plan for sharing of religious ideas and experiences in homes. Use the time when working together to share your beliefs and ideas. Take some time for play together—baseball, croquet, picnics, fishing, etc.!

Have a vacation Bible School in your church. You may wish to use one of the themes suggested by the Children's Committee: "Life of Christ," "Puerto Rico," or "China."

Instead of allowing a "vacation from church school" put extra effort into your church school session. The summer theme in Pilgrim Series is: "Early Founders of the Church." Through these courses you will learn how our church began and grew. You will live with great people like Paul, Wycliff, and our Puritan Fathers. Our heritage from the past will inspire and challenge us to carry on our work through the church in the spirit of these great leaders whom God has used in the past.

May all of you enjoy both a happy summer and a summer profitable because of the growth in Christian faith and living that you will make possible during these days ahead.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

means that we shall all have one another again. It means that the Kingdom of God will come. Wherefore let us be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord forasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Our family has been very upset this past week. We have a very ill little boy. It was first thought that he had Polio, but his illness has been diagnosed as meningitis. He is in Sternberger Hospital, Greensboro—not able yet to have company.

All precautions have been taken. The children have had shots and all known preventative measures. We are asking your prayers—for this sick child and that our other children remain well.

The Chairman of the Board, on his daily visit to the Orphanage, went through the kitchen one day this past week and found a most tempting looking dinner ready. The dessert made his mouth water—hot ginger bread with whipped cream! Our children are well fed!

You mothers with one, maybe two, children that often find yourselves swamped with duties and responsibilities—the many little problems that come up daily—how would you like them multiplied by 100? The Chairman of the Board who can be there for only part time is realizing more and more the responsibilities of a family of nearly a 100 children. Each daily visit presents weighty problems that he must help solve. He is learning daily to be more sympathetic with the conscientious parents of today.

Graduating exercises took place Friday night, June 3, at High School. In this graduating class were three of our girls of whom we are very proud. They will leave this week-end to make their own way in life.

We also had one girl to graduate from the Business Department of Elon College. This young lady made quite a reputation for herself, and after a tonsilectomy this Monday she will go to Greensboro on June 13 to do secretarial work. Dr. Wisseman promised to find her a home, for which we are most grateful.

Rev. Clyde Clayton Foushee was born in Sanford, North Carolina and was educated in the public schools of his state. He is an alumnus of Elon College and of the Presbyterian Seminary at Louisville, Kentucky. He is an active and productive minister in the Southern Presbyterian Church. He has a distinctively evangelistic message and is very successful in building up the membership of the church which he serves. He is an author and lecturer as well as a minister.

Mr. President, it is my pleasure to present the Reverend Clyde Clayton Foushee for the award of the Honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

There are always added expenses about the college campus during the summer months. Buildings are to be repaired and cleaned. The campus must be kept mowed and the shrubbery kept in order. The erection of the gymnasium requires additional help which, of course, means additional pay. It is urgent that our Sunday schools and churches take these facts into consideration and make their contributions accordingly.

Elon College is grateful for every dollar of assistance and will thank those who are interested for any contributions forwarded.

WARD.

The J. O. Atkinson Missionary Society of Liberty (Vance) sustained a great loss in the passing of Mrs. Lillie Grissom Ward. She was a woman of fine Christian character and was loved by all who knew her.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in her passing we have lost a faithful and loyal member.
2. That we are grateful for what she has meant to our church and missionary society.
3. That we will endeavor to practice the Christian principles she lived, realizing our loss was her gain.
4. That we extend our heart-felt sympathy to her bereaved family.

Mrs. R. J. NEWTON.

TURNER.

Whereas, God has in His infinite love, seen fit to call to his reward our beloved sister, Miss Lula Turner, and we, as a church and individuals, desire to record our appreciation and sorrow in our loss.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the Isle of Wight Christian Church of which she was a member, has lost one for whom they mourn.
2. That we extend to the bereaved family our heart-felt sympathy and earnest prayer that God's blessing may fall upon their sad hearts and give them comfort.
3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent the bereaved family, a copy spread upon the church records and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Mrs. W. J. DARDEN,
Mrs. H. M. WILSON.
Mrs. R. F. WHITLEY.

ALBRIGHT.

It is with deep sorrow that we, the members of the Albemarle Congregational Christian Church, record the passing of our much loved brother, J. W. Albright, on the tenth day of April, 1949.

He was a faithful and loyal member, and Deacon of this church for the past twenty-four years and was noted for his outstanding Christian character.

Be it therefore resolved:

1. That we let our will be lost in God's will in dealing with his children.
2. That we embody the goodness of his life in our lives, that his works may live after him.
3. That we extend our heart-felt sympathy to the bereaved family.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to The Christian Sun and a copy be recorded on our church record.

THE MYSTICAL SIGNIFICANCE OF NUMBERS.

From a very early period, certain numbers have been believed to have a mystic significance and were regarded by magicians as important when casting spells.

The number 7, so frequently mentioned in the Old Testament in connection with Jewish ceremonial, is still regarded as a divine and lucky number. The Pythagoreans called it the vehicle of human life, and it was venerated in religion and as a number of blessedness and rest.

The peculiar powers attributed to certain numbers are thus recorded in manuscript of the sixteenth century.

One, was regarded as the father of numbers and signified harmony. It was a fortunate and prosperous number.

Two, was the number of intellect and the mother of numbers. It was generally held to be an evil number bringing trouble and unhappiness.

Three, was a holy number and has even been looked upon as lucky. It was the number of the Trinity and signified plenty and fruitfulness. Thus we say, three times running is lucky, and the third day was venerated in ancient times.

Four, was regarded by Pythagoras as the root and foundation of all other numbers, and over it his followers swore their most solemn oaths. It was a square number, and the number of endurance, firmness of purpose and will.

Five, was a peculiar and magical number of importance to the magicians, and the pentacle, with its five points, was regarded as a powerful talisman against the approach of evil spirits.

Six, was regarded as the perfection of numbers. It was sacred to Venus and regarded as the ideal number of love.

Seven, was the most highly esteemed among sacred numbers, and was believed to be particularly lucky. The Pythagoreans called it the vehicle of human life, for there were seven days, seven planets, seven metals and the seven ages of man. It is called the number of an oath by the Hebrews and was so used by Abraham.

It has been termed the number of Royalty and a royal salute is thrice seven or twenty-one guns.

"Are there not some who cure by observing number?" says an old writer on witchcraft. "Balaan used magian geometriciam. There are some witches who enjoin the sick to dip their shirts seven times in south running water. Elisha sent Naaman to wash in the Jordan seven times. Elijah on the top of Carmel sends his servant seven times to look for rain. When Jericho was taken, they compassed the city seven times."

Eight, was regarded as the number of justice and fullness, but was also the number of attraction.

Nine, was a number of power, wisdom, mystery and protection, and was used by the early priest-physicians to cure sickness. It was the product of three connected with intellectual and spiritual knowledge.

Ten, was a holy and divine number, but eleven, was of evil reputation and signified violence and destruction.

Twelve, was a divine number, wherein heavenly things were measured. So there are twelve signs of the Zodiac, twelve months in the year, twelve tribes of Israel, twelve prophets, twelve apostles, and twelve stones in Aaron's breastplate.—From the Hand of Destiny by C. J. S. Thompson.

furnace which can be switched to a cooling system in the summer. The shrubbery surrounding the building is being furnished by the Garden Club of Elon College.

The purchase price of the building was $1,000.00. The cost of dismantling, trucking, reconstruction and finishing will be at a total cost of approximately $14,000.00. When the building was enclosed the payroll was stopped and with few exceptions the building was completed by the men of the church and community, and Dr. Dollar, the minister of the church, was "construction engineer" (Dr. Dollar put in endless hours of manual labor in the construction). The estimated value of free labor is $2,500. Dr. E. M. Conover of the Interdenominational Bureau of Church Architecture, New York, commented when he inspected the building near its completion, that on the present market the construction of the building would cost $35,000.00. The church will have a net debt of about $3,500.00 when all pledges are paid.

The Parish House was formally opened on Easter Sunday and it was consecrated on Sunday, June 5.

Dr. Dollar and the Elon College Community Church are to be commended on the splendid building which they have constructed. It will mean much to the community and will add strength to the work of the church.

Rural Church Makes Improvements

SHALLOW WELL CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Members of Shallow Well Christian Church, located on the Jonesboro-Lillington Highway, are justly proud of the attractive church building which has recently been enlarged and completely renovated.

To take care of the growing Sunday school it became necessary to enlarge the building facilities and so a movement was started in 1948 to raise funds for an additional five class rooms with full basement under them to be used as a recreational center and kitchen. There are also two rest rooms. The entire structure has been brick veneered and a vestibule made from the porch on the front of the old building.

Renovations on the inside of the church building consists of a new choir loft and painting of the whole interior. New pews have been purchased and will be installed during the summer, at which time the floors of the church will also be refinished.

The amount of money that has been spent on the addition and renovations is estimated at around $25,000. This consists of actual cash, donated labor and materials.

When the church was first organized in 1831 services were held under a brush arbor until a building could be erected. The present building was constructed in 1877 and in 1930 three Sunday school rooms were added.

The membership of the Sunday school is 298, the church 250. The Sunday school consists of nine classes, several of them being organized classes giving their support to the church project.

Another active organization of the church is the Missionary Society consisting of approximately 40 members.

Rev. R. T. Grissom is the pastor of this progressive church.

News Flashes

Rev. B. J. Earp continues seriously ill in the Hospital at High Point.

Dr. John G. Truitt reports twelve new members for the Suffolk Church during May. There were also three infants christened.

The Suffolk Church is holding a ten-day Daily Vacation Bible School under the direction of Mrs. William J. Baines. She has under her an efficient staff of teachers and helpers. What other church will report next?

The parsonage at Beleys Creek for this church and Salem Chapel is being built and it is hoped to be ready for occupancy by the middle of July. Rev. Allan Hurdle is anxious to get moved to the field where he can give his full time to the work.

Do not forget the Young People's Conference which will be held at Elon College June 19 to 25. Be sure that your Sunday School is well represented. A special fund to help with expenses might make it possible for some to go who otherwise could not. It will be money well spent by the Sunday School or Young People's organization.

"The Cloth of Sendony" was presented to the Winston-Salem Church by the young people of the Asheboro Church Sunday, June 5. Preceding the dramatic presentation, the Asheboro young people were given a weiner roast at a nearby park. It was good to have these two groups together and everyone enjoyed this fine religious drama.

Church membership in the United States has passed the 80 million mark and now constitutes 54.9 per cent of the total population according to a new census of religious bodies published in the 1949 edition of the Southern Baptist Handbook, Porter Routh, editor. The census showed a gain in membership of 3.1 per cent during 1948, compared to 2.3 per cent during 1947. Forty-eight Protestant groups, with memberships of 50,000 or more, report a total membership of 46,665,747. The Roman Catholic Church reported 26,075,697. Jewish congregations and smaller groups run the total figures to 80,246,124. There are 265,845 congregations reported.

DENDRON BOY SIGNALLY HONORED.

Joe S. Bage of Dendron, Virginia, has been signally honored by St. John's Methodist Church in Glasgow, Scotland. The Church erected a large stained-glass window in the edifice to commemorate the World War II services of the many young men and women from the congregation. American soldiers played such an important part in the war and in the life of the British Isles during the war years that the church included the figure of an American soldier in the window. It was to commemorate the spiritual fellowship of men and women of all the services, during the war, showing a group of Servicemen and Servicewomen, including an American soldier, gathered around the figure of Christ. It proved conclusively the cherished memory of war-time comradeships and appreciation for the servicemen.

When the time came for the selection of a representative U. S. Soldier to be included in the group of nine figures around the central figure of Christ, church officials turned to Joe Bage of Dendron, Surry County, Va.

Joe was, for all practical purposes, an adopted son of St. John's. He was stationed there for 16 months with the 5th Major Port. While in Glasgow he attended church regularly and became a member of the Homefires Club. He became well acquainted with the Rev. J. Brazier Green, the minister, and made many friends in the church. Rev. J. Brazier Green, the minister, is an unusual character, who has done much and is continuing to do much to cement the friendships between his country and ours. Mr. Green always extended a wonderful welcome and fellowship to the Americans and really fulfilled his personal vow which he made at the beginning of World War II—that no Serviceman would ever feel lonely in his midst as he having served in World War I had known all the desolation of estrangement from home, all the trials and loneliness that were the almost inevitable lot of those torn so suddenly from their normal daily life. This strong sense of fellowship ran like a thread of gold through the dark fabric of these war years.

He has corresponded with the minister since returning home. About a year ago Rev. Mr. Green requested a picture of Joe, explaining the purpose for which it would be used.

The window was dedicated at a reunion week-end service the Sunday after Armistice Day last November. Although Joe was not able to attend services, the minister sent him a photograph of the window and a complete program of the event. The window is a masterpiece of art. Central is the figure of Christ, surrounded by uniformed representatives of the armed services of the British Isles and the U. S. A. Most significant of all, perhaps, is the fact that the faces thereon are not the impersonal creation of an artist's hand, but the very true likeness of the real people represented. Rev. J. Brazier Green spoke on "Sir, we would see Jesus," a sermon on the symbolic significance of the Memorial Window. Vice-Admiral Troup unveiled the Memorial Window and expressed in his address memories that should never be forgotten in the cost of the preservation of our liberty.

Joe is the son of Mrs. J. W. Bage of Dendron. He is a member of the Dendron Congregational Christian Church. He was in the army for three years. After leaving Glasgow he was in France for three months and at Antwerp for a year.

GROWTH OF ECUMENISM BACKED BY AUSTRALIAN CHURCHES.

The Australian churches have pledged themselves "to maintain close relations with the World Council of Churches . . . (and) . . . to assist the growth of ecumenical consciousness in the members of all churches. . . ."

The churches amended the constitution of the Australian Council of the World Council of Churches, originally adopted in 1946, in February of this year. The Council is "to promote cooperation and the study of existing differences in such a spirit that the underlying unity may become clearer. . . ."

Members of the Australian Council are the Church of England, the Presbyterian Church, the Methodist Church, the Baptist Union of Australia, the Congregational Union of Australia, the Australian Churches of Christ, the Salvation Army and the Society of Friends.

IMPORTANT NOTICE CONCERNING VALLEY CONFERENCE.

The annual meeting of the Valley Central Congregational Christian Conference will be held August 9, 1949, at the Palmyra Church and not at Bethlehem as reported in THE CHRISTIAN SUN of an earlier date.

MACKAY TO VISIT FAR EASTERN CHURCHES.

Dr. John A. Mackay, president of Princeton Theological Seminary, will make a two-month tour of Christian churches in the Orient on behalf of the International Missionary Council in the fall of this year.

According to an announcement by the IMC, Dr. Mackay will leave the United States in mid-October for Tokyo and proceed to Seoul, Korea, Shanghai, China, Manila the Philippines, and Bangkok, Siam, where he will attend a joint meeting of the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council in December.

It is expected that the councils of churches in the countries Dr. Mackay will visit will be arranging lectures and preaching missions at universities and addresses before ministers' conferences and mass audiences.

Dr. Mackay, a former Presbyterian missionary in South America, is president of the Foreign Missions Board, Presbyterian, USA, a member of the Central Committee of the World Council of Churches, and chairman of the International Missionary Council. He is internationally known as a theologian and evangelist.

CAREER MISSIONARY NURSE APPOINTED TO TURKISH HOSPITAL.

Miss Mary Elizabeth Rowden, R.N., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Elmer Rowden of Woodsville, New Hampshire, has been appointed as a career missionary nurse in Turkey by the American Board.

Born in Woodsville, New Hampshire, 27 years ago, Miss Rowden graduated from Woodsville High School; studied at the University of New Hampshire and then took her nurse's training at Hackensack Hospital School of Nursing, New Jersey. In 1949 she secured her B. S. from Marlboro College, Marlboro, Vermont.

For a year Miss Rowden was Assistant Supervisor of the Surgical Ward and Surgical Nursing Instructor at the Hackensack Hospital, but in 1948 she went to Marlboro College to become the College nurse.

Miss Rowden will be assigned to Gaziantep, Turkey, and will work at the Azariah Smith Hospital, founded in 1880 in memory of an American Board pioneer missionary.

The hospital where Miss Rowden will serve is in an interior state where there are only about 200 beds available for the medical and surgical care of its more than 280,000 population. Sick folk come from hundreds of miles around to this center of health.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr. A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

CHILDREN TODAY AND TOMORROW

The observance of Children's Day in countless churches and a vast series of camps, conferences and vacation schools over the land are important events for the Kingdom. Superficial, trivial, inconsequential, some may say. To be sure, the lessons taught and learned may not be profound, but they are a part of the basic structure of religious experience. These shared experiences are formative, they become an indestructible part of religious heritage, the seed-bed of life's controlling philosophy.

We look with great hope to these embryonic churchmen. Perchance we may succeed with this particular group where we have failed with others. How tragically we of the Church have failed in many instances! We shall remember that religion is caught as well as taught. All holy influences may be used of God in developing a generation of Christians. No time must be lost, no opportunity for Christian nurture must be overlooked if our youngsters are expected to achieve religious maturity.

Let us thank God for the tools at our disposal: educational buildings with their facilities and equipment, a great variety of excellent literature, accoutrements for worship, camps and conferences, eager young minds and adventurous spirits. In view of these tremendous resources, how vivid and convincing are the words of the Master "Of such is the Kingdom of God!"

SOUTHERN REGIONAL MEETING

This is the new name for the Southern Provincial Council which met last week in Greensboro. The Council had not met for a number of years, since before the war. Dr. James H. Lightbourne and others assisted in its formation. Delegates or representatives from Conferences and institutions of the Southeast comprise its membership.

The Greensboro meeting was greatly stimulated by the brutally realistic presentation of Professor Howard E. Jensen of Duke University. The Reverend Professor (for he is just that!) expostulated on the backwardness of the south, and to our consternation and edification held before us the revealing mirror of statistics so that it was impossible for us to go away and forget what manner of people we were. He pointed to our incontrovertible lag in professional leadership, to our unenviable record of malnutrition, army rejectees, etc. We were reminded of our traditional alibis—"It is not true," "It is not important," "I do not care"—and urged to study our region with uninhibited, objective minds. The speaker called upon the churches to utilize sociological information, competent interpreters, to formulate universal validations, and demonstrate empirically the validity of its tremendous message.

Dr. Samuel C. Kinceloe of Chicago Seminary took cognizance of the amazing resources of the South: manpower, educational institutions, rapid urbanization and mechanization, professional and vocational resources, religious devotion and faith. The Congregational Christian Church and, please God, The United Church, is set in the midst of this dynamic region. Who knows but that we have come to the Kingdom for such an hour?

The purpose of the Regional Meeting is to get a comprehensive view of our era and determine the part we are to play in it. All of our churches do not conform to one specific pattern, but we may point to any number of instances in which a high degree of competency is evident, and witness examples of creative minorities. New patterns of service should be discovered.

Dr. Thomas Anderson of Atlanta is the new president. Under his able leadership a determined effort will be made to formulate an overall Protestant strategy in the Southeast. Commissions on Education and the Ministry, Church Extension and Evangelism, the Merger and Interdenominational Activities will engage in the study and formulation of regional goals. We await their findings and recommendations with deep concern and eagerness.

Dr. C. Rexford Raymond of Charleston presided during the Greensboro meeting with his usual grace and urbanity. Rev. Melvin Dollar served as the scribe. Representatives of the Home Boards—Messrs. Douglass, Tripp, North and Widenhouse—were present to add their experience and insight to the discussion. The superintendents of the Southeast—Messrs. Scott, Shepard, Stanley and Tuttle—assisted in the preparation of the program and enabled us to visualize our total regional responsibility. Dr. W. E. Wiseman, pastor, and the ladies of the entertaining church, had no small part in the success of this first session of the Southern Regional Meeting.

To find one's work in the world and do it honorably, to keep one's record clean so that nothing clandestine, furtive, surreptitious can ever leap out upon one from ambush and spoil one's life, to be able, therefore, unafraid to look the world in the face, to live honorably also with one's own soul because one keeps there no secret place like the bloody closet in Bluebeard's palace where the dead things hang, to walk life's journey unhaunted by the ghosts of people from whose ruin one has stolen pleasure, and so at last to be a gentleman, one, that is, who puts a little more into life than one takes out—gather up the significance of such character, forty years old, sixty years old, eighty years old—one may well celebrate the solid satisfactions of such a life.

—Harry Emerson Fosdick, D. D.

Frontiers for Forty-Niners

By CLARENCE W. HALL, Litt.D., Managing Editor of The Christian Herald
Baccalaureate Address, University of Tampa

In the Psalms, that strangely haunting book of poetic and prophetic insight, we come upon this statement: "Thou hast set my feet in a large place!" Just what soaring emotion prompted this praiseful outburst is not known, but it must have been a spiritual revelation and not a geographic survey.

Physically and intellectually, the Psalmist's world was both small and obscure. Today's college graduate, measuring the Psalmist's constricted world of 3,000 years ago with ours today, might be excused for exhibiting a small sneer. Certainly, by contrast, ours is an infinitely bigger world. Man has conquered the poles, thrust back the heavens until he is at home among the constellations, annihilated distance, and flung open the door of nuclear fission.

Standing amid the industrial and scientific progress of your times, you of the Class of '49 may well appropriate the Psalmist's phrase. For never in history was the world so large—large in challenge as well as achievement.

But while that realization will be inspiring to some, it will be dispiriting to others. It is common these days to hear youth wail that there are no more frontiers to conquer, no more worlds to discover.

If that were the case, there would be reason for pessimism. For we all love the glamor of a frontier, and youth immemorially yearns for the unknown, the unexplored.

Our eyes run to and fro throughout the earth, seeking the glow of some new horizon. And when we feel fresh out of frontiers, we turn our eyes backward and try to find satisfaction in contemplating the bravado of those who did tackle the glamorous unknown.

In California this year, they are celebrating the days and doings of the Forty-Niners—trying to recreate the flavor and spirit of those tough and rough-hewn adventurers who took over the state when it was raw and wild. But, we hear, they are having a little trouble. It seems it's a little difficult to conjure up an atmosphere of authentic frontier life and spirit amid the gilded glamor and soft living of the Golden West. (It takes more than buckskin pants and a week-old beard and a dime-store cake sieve to re-create an authentic looking Forty-Niner.)

But mock ceremonials to recreate a day long dead and gone are playthings of those with a past more inviting than their future. They are not the pastimes of youth with its future ahead—and with a daring and an imagination capable of finding new frontiers where old ones have been pre-empted.

"Thou hast set my feet in a large place!" cried the Psalmist.

The same thing was said to me, in revised version and with a GI accent, one memorable night four years ago. The man who said it made no claim to sainthood. But I canonized him in my soul, for he was—and is—a youth after my own heart.

He was a motor-pool driver assigned to the corps of war correspondents on Okinawa. A reporter for a metropolitan newspaper and I had gathered up him and his jeep one evening when there was some rather gaudy fireworks going on. A Japanese suicide pilot had just plummeted out of the sky into one of the huge ammunition dumps our forces had set up on the shore. For 48 hours we were treated to the terrifying sight and sound of some 300,000 tons of ammunition going up in flame and explosion. As soon as the blasts began to shake that already badly shaken island, the newsman and I decided to sit out the affair on a small hill overlooking the harbor, and so requisitioned the jeep and driver.

The three of us stayed on that hill all night. And during the course of that frightening vigil, we began talking, of all things, about the post-war world, and what we'd be doing in it—if we should live so long.

The reporter was bitter and cynical. "For my money," he said, "I want no part of your post-war world. Things are a mess now, and the world will be in more of a mess afterward. You know what I'm going to do? I'm going to head out West, find me a little ranch in some lost valley, and let the world go on to hell—it's going anyway!"

I looked over at the young GI. In the light of the flames his eyes were bright—and deadly serious. "Unhuh," he said slowly. "Not for me. When I got into this man's Army I sold myself on the idea that I was fighting to make a better world. Well, maybe the war will give it to us, and maybe not. But, whatever, for guys like me, there's going to be a whole world to wallop when this thing's over!"

It struck me then, and it strikes me now, that here in these two—the GI with the future in his eyes and the jaded newsman with hopelessness in his soul—were the two perennial types of man: the one who sees his world as a mess to mourn and the one who sees it as a world to wallop.

A world to wallop! That is the challenge confronting you and your colleagues of the Class of '49—clear across the world. The urgency of this era in time, not merely the accidental juxtaposition of this date with heroic events of a hundred years ago, lead me to think of you as "The New Forty-Niners." How you respond, or fail to respond, to the challenge of this grave but great hour in time will heavily weigh the decision as to whether civilization, as we now know it, will move onward and upward to new conquests or whether it will disappear one day in a cloud of atomic dust.

Is that putting it too melodramatically? Am I merely trading on the journalist's license to "flame up" the problem just to make a point?

Then let me refer you to men beyond suspicion of melodramatics, men who shun overstatement of any kind—the atomic scientists themselves. The outstanding physicists of the day—among them Urey, and Compton, and Einstein—have spoken recently in a vein that would do justice to the old-fashioned hellfire evangelists. A group of them called a meeting not long ago with some of the country's leading clergymen. In essence, here is what they said:

"Gentlemen, we're frankly frightened. In finally achieving nuclear fission, we've either discovered something that will greatly bless our culture, or thoroughly blast it. The threat is not in the explosive powers of the atom; we can control that. What we cannot control is the equally explosive power of human nature.

"The plain fact is," the scientists continued, "that man's skills have outstripped his morals; his engineering has leapt ahead of his wisdom. We can't cancel or call back scientific advance. But we can—and must, if the world is to survive—help men to close that terrific gap between men's morals and their cleverness. In God's name—if you still believe in God—tell us what you can do to help. Otherwise, we perish!"

I repeat, that warring was no emotional yelp from some crowd of hys-

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Nearly six hundred times I have been called to some Suffolk home to offer the ministry of the Church in the death of a loved one. In all those times I have not yet learned what to say, or how to say it. I feel very keenly the sorrow, and I prize very much the ministry of loving faith which is the Church's to offer. Varied indeed have been the circumstances. Everyone re-emphasized the mystery. And always there was the simple prayer, sometimes not much more than a sob, but always the faith that God's Spirit was near, and here His promise to be with one was well filled.

Having a natural penchant for poetry—that I mean to say, which is real poetry and written by real poets—I have occasionally felt the impulse to put some thought in rhyme at evening when a day of sharing in the sorrow of some home has passed. Once I wrote:

Our lives are His forever
Is a Christian's simple faith,
For He, our God eternal Shares that which He hath;
His love abides forever
As a true, eternal Friend—
He's with us at the sunrise
And His day has no end.

He is Alpha and Omega
And is with us everywhere;
And places us forever
In His eternal care;
He shares our waking moments
And watches through the night,
And gives us joy in knowing
All His ways are right!

Since I have been so greatly blessed by the faith and trust of the living as they have borne their sorrow I feel there is much more truth in the above than poetry. Such times are often times of great testing, and again lives have been lived so beautifully and completely they are times of triumph, too. Always they are times when the Christian can feel that the Lord is anxious to be near to give comfort and strength.

While thinking sometime ago of a friend who had gone on these words came to me:

Out of my window I look each day,
At a neighbor's garden across the way;
And there each spring the roses blow
On a bush she planted some years ago.

The neighbor is gone but the roses are there,
In bloom each spring so radiant and fair;
A living witness from the soft, brown sod,
To her noble life and her faith in God.

Oh! may we leave with our friends, so dear,
Some fragrant roses still others to cheer;
Some words of love, some deeds of worth,
To help and heal this sorrowing earth.

HOME COMING AT CAROLINA.

On Sunday, May 22, members and friends of the Carolina Congregational Christian Church met to observe the 23rd Annual Home Coming and Memorial Day Service. The speaker for the 11:00 o'clock service was Hon. William B. Umstead, ex-Senator, who was introduced by R. Homer Andrews. The service was concluded at the cemetery with a short talk by the pastor.

The afternoon service was given to special music. Those taking part in the special music were: Ladies Quartet of the Hopedale Christian Church, Glenhope Mixed Quartet, Mrs. Cecil Andrews and Miss Jean Abel, soloists. Mrs. Andrews was accompanied by her son while Miss Abel was accompanied by Miss Mabel Long. Also the local church trio and choir.

How Carolina Was Organized— After the Community Church burned in October 1922 the members met in a dwelling until Rev. S. J. Williams of the M. E. Conference and Mr. W. J. Jennings, superintendent of the L. Banks Holt Manufacturing Company, obtained the present church building.

In 1932 under the leadership of Rev. J. Frank Apple the Carolina Congregational Christian Church was organized with twelve charter members of which only one, Mr. William Glenn, "has lifted anchor and sailed to yonder shore."

At the present we are in the midst of building a hut with four rooms and a forty-foot auditorium which we plan to use as the Children's Christian Education Building and for various social activities of the church and community.

The church has just been painted inside and outside by the young men of the church. At this time the parsonage is being remodeled as the pastor is to soon move into the community.

The following pastors have served the church: Revs. Roy D. Coulter, G. C. Crutchfield, J. Everette Neese, O. A. Elmore, Melvin Dollar, Kenneth D. Register, W. Walter Hall, Chase Tappan.

The present pastor is Rev. Bland A. Leebrick, a student at Elon College.

LONG'S CHAPEL.

The Vacation Bible School was held June 6-10 with the closing exercises at the close of Sunday school Sunday morning which was greatly enjoyed by the parents and others. There were 59 pupils enrolled with an average attendance of 44. Twenty-six made a perfect record attendance. The school was conducted by local talent. The teachers were Mesdames J. T. Fonville, E. L. Rudd, S. S. Anderson, G. H. Veazey and the pastor. The school exceeded all expectations.

ALWAYS A LIABILITY.

A good deal has been said recently about establishing State hospitals for the care of alcoholics, to be financed by an additional tax on alcoholic beverages. The idea is that, since alcohol made the alcoholics, those who make money out of alcohol should be made to pay for the treatment of their victims. Still they would not begin to pay for the damage their product does nor would they be relieving the public of any appreciable amount of the expense these liquor stores cost the people. What about the families of the drunks that are looked after by the social agencies? What about the increased load all the courts have to carry? What about the automobile wrecks that send men and women to hospitals? What about absenteeism? What about the lost days from productive work? All these things, and more, must be provided for. And no State begins to collect enough in taxes to pay for the extra expense that is caused by the liquor stores and the beer joints.

That the alcoholics need hospitalization is not questioned here. And that the industry that makes the alcoholics should pay for the hospitals is not the point of this argument either. This is to point out the fact that, even though the booze industry should be made to pay for these hospitals, the general public would still be carrying much of the expense load made necessary by the places that sell alcohol.

Notwithstanding all this, the industry insults the intelligence of informed men and women by trying to talk to them about the tax it pays as if the tax were a net profit to the community. In fact they do not begin to pay their way.—Norman Lovein in The National Voice.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

PROGRESS MADE.

When it became necessary to provide a new heating plant for Elon College the Board of Trustees recognized fully its obligation in providing this necessary equipment and authorized by vote, not unanimous, that in the event that it was necessary the administration could borrow sufficient funds to complete this building and add this equipment. The church and friends of the college came along with the administration in such a fine way and contributed so generously that it was not necessary to negotiate a loan.

For years it has been evident that Elon College should provide adequate equipment for our physical education program. A gymnasium was badly needed. The Board of Trustees at its annual meeting in 1948 gave authorization for the Alumni Association, in cooperation with the building committee of the Board of Trustees, to proceed with the erection of the gymnasium provided the college was not obligated for any unpaid balance. In early spring 1949 building operations began. Prior to the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees on May 30, the foundation was laid and the walls were constructed up to the floor level. It was evident that the Alumni Association would need the assistance of the Board Trustees of the college and all who were interested. In view of the urgency of this undertaking, the Board of Trustees authorized the administration to negotiate a loan, if necessary, that the gymnasium might be completed at the earliest possible date and provided that the carrying charges and principal of the loan be paid out of the funds raised for the construction of the gymnasium. This authorization is for the encouragement of the officers and members of the General Alumni Association of Elon College. It was not necessary to borrow money for the construction of the power house. We trust and pray that it will not be necessary to borrow money for the completion of the gymnasium and it won't be, if the church, alumni and friends will make a contribution for this purpose. Don't refuse to contribute because you can't contribute a large amount. No one is expected to give beyond his ability but everyone ought to do his share in a magnificent undertaking such as this. Don't wait for someone to contact you. Send a check today. You will help in a worthy cause—one that will bear large dividends in body, mind and spirit of the young people who are enrolled as students in Elon College. The college has always depended upon the church, alumni and friends, and it is happy to rest its case now in the affections and generosity of our people.

REPORT TO BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

The following is the first part of President L. E. Smith's report to the Board of Trustees at its annual meeting May 30, 1949. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN may be interested in this statement:

The education of the masses seems to be the slogan and mandate of this age. Ignorance is a hinderance to the development of personality and to the proper conservation of human and material resources. Schools, secondary and higher, are the weapons that we have come to use against strongholds of ignorance. As the ones to be taught increase, schools, to be effective, must likewise increase. To build, equip and man schools is expensive business. It always has been and increasingly always will be more expensive.

It is difficult for those responsible for providing facilities and personnel sufficient for immediate and future demands to realize that more schools and more equipment are required and that these additions cannot be made without added cost.

Those educators responsible for an adequate program of education in our state or tax-supported schools and colleges must go before the proper political bodies with requests for funds. These requests are invariably for larger amounts. That must be since our school populations have increased. The privately endowed and church colleges find themselves in the same position. Enrollment has increased which requires increased facilities, increased personnel, and increased support. The real difference is that the privately endowed and church colleges do not have a political or tax levying unit to which appeals may be made for increased support. Their recourse is with the church, the alumni and the benevolent public.

Elon College falls in the last category. Elon College has grown and continues to grow. It is difficult to realize just how much it has grown. Elon College was chartered in September 1889. At the turn of the present century, the present campus of twenty-five acres and fifteen additional acres constituted the real estate holdings of the college. Thirty thousand dollars was about the extent of its endowment. There were two buildings on the campus valued at less than $100,000.00—total evaluations of the college's holdings were considerably less than $150,000.00 forty-nine years ago. Total annual student registration at the beginning of the present century was from one hundred and fifty to two hundred.

There is a different story today. Total student registration for the regular college year now closing is eight hundred and seventy-two. In addition, we have conducted a program of Adult Education in which there was an enrollment of fifty. This is a new adventure. The results justify the experiment and the continuance of the program.

Each year for the past sixteen years Elon College has conducted a twelve-week summer school. Last summer's enrollment was three hundred and sixty. This makes a total of one thousand, two hundred and eighty-two for the entire year, all sessions. The comparison evidences the college's growth in student personnel.

At the beginning of the present century, Elon College owned about forty acres of land. Today it owns more than three hundred acres. There are twelve college buildings on the campus and eighteen buildings off the campus. These figures do not include the veterans' housing project of twenty-three separate buildings with sixty-six housing units. These housing units rent for $15, $20 and $25 per unit, according to the number of bedrooms. The total income from this property received for the year is approximately $15,000.00. The income from other rental properties, not including dormitories, amounts to $8,240.00 annually. These properties have all been acquired in recent years. The total value of the holdings of Elon College, including its endowment of $375,000.00, is near three million dollars. This is no large amount when you consider this figure in the light of present and future needs but when it is taken in comparison with the college's holdings

COMMENCEMENT IN ANGOLA.

By HARRIETT SUMMERVILLE.

The past two months have been the busiest I've known in ages. Duties seem to press in from every side. But I'm having a glorious week-end rest. I came to the Ralph Collins home on Thursday morning. He and she with the two younger children went to Dailundo for the week so I'm playing "baby sitter" for the others until tomorrow. I confess I spent most of Thursday sleeping. Yesterday, I embroidered and today I went visiting. We are having a picnic this evening.

Last month we had the rare privilege of entertaining Dr. Reuling and Dr. McKeith. We all fell in love with Dr. McKeith who is the new Executive Secretary of the American Board. I had met him in Hartford where he was a pastor but never knew him very well. Dr. Reuling is a great man and is real help in every way to all of us. We are looking forward to his return visit in July when we hope that time will permit us to sit and talk through some of the problems he saw during this survey visit. We are sorry Dr. McKeith won't be coming, too, but we can't have everything. I hear Dr. Reuling has been sending some nice complaints around. I haven't seen the letter but you know he just might be a little bit partial to his new missionary, and maybe even lenient besides.

As many of you know all of our graduating girls spend a certain number of weeks in a small house which we call "practice cottage." Here the girls learn to take care of a home. I was in one of these houses recently for supper. The day before they sent me a written invitation. Then that evening two of them came for me with a corsage. We had a delicious supper of potatoes and cabbage soup (Caldo verde), mush and beans, cake and coffee. Then after supper we all played games. I don't know when I have been a guest when an evening was more carefully planned and carried out. We surely can be proud of some of our girls. At least of what they can do if not always what they do do.

The World Day of Prayer service for this area was held at our school this year. Some of our girls led in prayer and one of the teachers conducted the service. It was most inspiring and well done.

Right after World Day of Prayer I began working out a closing service for our students' Sunday School. We had been taking lessons from Pilgrims Progress. So the teachers selected some from each class. Then I met with this group and the girls worked out a play. We had no printed copies but each worked out her own part from the book. We really only had a week for rehearsals. These people have a special knack for acting so in a week's time they had a presentable play ready. The boys came over to worship with us that afternoon. The play was given on our outdoor stage which has a beautiful rock background and nothing could have made a better setting. There were 35 characters. We did only the simplest of costumes, but it was most effective. I was quite pleased with it. Then the fourth-year girls gave the 24th Psalm in choral speaking.

This week has been a nightmare. To think back on last Sunday it seems like a month ago. Sunday we had the Gilchrist family in to supper along with Harold Steed, Nancy Copithorne and Allen Knight whose birthday we celebrated. But the Gilchrist's baby was ill, so Frankie had to stay home with it. Then at two o'clock that morning we had to take one of our students to the train. That was one of the less pleasant events of the year. As we left with her and she looked back to the school my heart ached to help her. She had been caught with other people's property and when called before the staff was found in the course of the year to have taken a number of things including comb, basin, bag, hankies, beans, sweet potatoes—so we felt it necessary to send her home at once. We feel sure she must have been a kleptomaniac. Having had her in Bible for two years I do not believe she did it deliberately but rather that something was wrong so that she could not help herself. Believe me it hurt to vote for her to go home. And it hurt more to see her look back as we left. Now our hearts ached for her. But who knows how to cure such a thing. Not I! And we had the 160 other girls to consider as well.

Monday afternoon the Theological School had their commencement service. After the diplomas were given one of the teachers arose and said, "All of our students have come here for the same reason—to advance in the knowledge of God. Each one did what he could so there is no one who is better, none who is less and hence no awards, but we don't want them to leave us without some remembrance to take with them. Knowing the Ovimbundu are very fond of music and many have been brought into the faith by music we have decided to present each of you with a tune book." Now that tune book is in very limited numbers and few are the people who have it. The first man, Pastor Andre, to receive the book, placed it on his shoulder and returned thus to his place where he stood while the others received theirs. Men carry all heavy loads on their shoulders. His placing the book there meant it was so valuable and precious that was too heavy to carry any other way. It sent a thrill up and down your spine to see him.

Thanks to someone who is so kind as to send me THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I do enjoy it so much.

NEWS OF ELON COLLEGE.

forty-nine years ago, it is considerable.

As Elon College grows, and it must grow, its needs increase. Elon College is a greater institution today than it has ever been in its history. Consequently, its needs are greater. We need a gymnasium, a dining room, four dormitories, and at least three-quarters of a million dollars additional endowment.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

As a rule summer months are lean months for the college. Last week, we had a very pleasant surprise. Several contributions, not large ones, came in and when added they totaled $408.23 for the college. We could hardly expect every week to be as good. This week's report, however, is encouraging with a total of $118.57 for which the college is grateful.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

NOTICE!

A report of the Woman's Convention and School of Missions will appear in next week's CHRISTIAN SUN. If you could not be there, be sure to read about what happened and all the good things you missed.

SUNBURY, NORTH CAROLINA.

The Woman's Society of the Congregational Christian Church of Sunbury has been quite active throughout the year, with good meetings and interesting programs.

In October, we had a very impressive installation service for the following: Mrs. E. E. Parker, president; Mrs. Emory Rountree, vice-president; Mrs. E. A. Johnson, secretary; Miss Annie Lassiter, treasurer; Mrs. Isaac Pierce, Spiritual Life leader.

Our Annual Thank Offering service was observed November 14. This was our special public service. A nice collection was received.

World Community Day was observed with other churches of the community. We packed five towels for the pack-a-towel project, and used visual aids.

We have sent to Elon Orphanage three large boxes of clothing and have also continued the support of Raymond Harvelle.

Our study book, On Our Own Doorstep, was interestingly taught by Mrs. Roy Parker. We were invited to Eure Christian Church to hear the review of China—Twilight or Dawn, done by chapters by members of their group. This occasion was much enjoyed.

Our Bible Study has been taught at our monthly meetings by our Spiritual Life leader.

We enjoyed observing the World Day of Prayer on March 4, with church people of different denominations. This service was held in our church.

The penny-a-meal boxes were opened during the Lenten season with a good collection.

The spring rally at Berea (Nansemond) was attended by a nice delegation.

Our home project this year has been to furnish the electrical equipment for our new parsonage.

NEWS FROM DIFFERENT PLACES.

The Woman's Association at Winston-Salem recently voted to send a small offering to assist in the building of a parsonage for the Belews Creek-Salem pastorate.

—O—

At the May meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of Burlington First Church, Mrs. M. Z. Rhodes, the president, presented the new picture to be hung in the Ladies' Parlor. The picture, called "The Presence," and painted by A. E. Borthwick, is being given by the Auxiliary in loving memory of the women of the Auxiliary who have served and passed on. The two evening circles at Burlington, under the leadership of Miss Julia Woodson and Mrs. A. D. Cobb, Jr., served a delightful Sunday night supper to the Elon Singers who presented a beautiful program to a large audience in the church auditorium on Sunday evening, April 24.

FRONTIERS FOR 49'ERS.

terical alarmists. These were—and are—the foremost scientists in the world today. Some of them admittedly had had little preoccupation with either morals or religion. And some of them, in their lotus years, had ridiculed the religious ethic as soft, escapist, impractical.

But now that they had uncorked their genii, and had realized how disastrous it was in the control of the morally undisciplined, they turned to organized religion for help. And rightly! For the church, if it has no exclusive patents on the technique of getting men's thought and action straight, should at least be able to shed some light on the subject.

But preachers and priests and rabbis alone, however great in soul and persuasive in action, will not be able to save our world. The job depends upon all of us, where we are. The question is: are we realistic enough to face the fact of the situation, and are we virile enough to tackle the job?

I frankly have my doubts about my own generation. By schooling and by predisposition we have developed an artistry for going in circles. We're too like the dime-store clerk who, when asked by a customer for compasses, explained: "Maybe we can help you, maybe not. You see, we have compasses for drawing circles, but not for going places!"

Going in circles will never get you to a frontier!

When Henry Thoreau, you remember, was asked about frontiers, he replied: "The frontiers are wherever a man fronts a fact!" The scientists have forced up to front this fact of the vast and dangerous discrepancy between modern man's genius and his ethics.

And fronting that fact leads us swiftly to the most challenging frontier of this age—the almost totally unexplored and undeveloped frontier of man himself.

Beyond that horizon are the enormous areas of racial understanding, of world brotherhood, of international cooperation. In our opening attempts to reach those areas and apply ourselves intelligently to them, we have been most unintelligent so far. We have tried to reach them by by-passing Man—and now we know it cannot be done.

It is the "inner man"—and by that I don't refer to his stomach, his glands, his digestive tract—that must be our Target for Today, and Tomorrow.

Do you remember in the passage by Browning where, in pointing the way to a happy and useful life, he speaks of the necessity of "finding a way for the imprisoned splendor in us to escape"?

The imprisoned splendor! That's a thought-stopping phrase, is it not? One of the tragedies of life is that there is so much of good in us that never gets out. Unexplored, untapped resources!

Too many men and women fit Oliver Wendell Holmes' description of people "who die with all their music in them."

Have you never had moments when you knew that within you there's a finer, nobler—even smarter—self than has ever come to the surface? Have you never felt the banked stores of love, sympathy and compassion that never get full play?

The question is: how can we get the best out of a man—instead of the least or the worst? How can we release that "imprisoned splendor"—in ourselves and in others?

One way is: we can attach that life of ours to a great cause—and let the cause pull our best out of us! Have you ever noticed how that always happens? It is true, of course, that

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

LITTLE FRIENDS:

One night a few weeks ago a young couple came to visit in our home. They were very happy because the next morning they were to receive a little baby from an adoption service bureau. We rejoiced with them. New babies are always exciting and when a couple want babies so much that they go through all the questions, investigations and waiting connected with adoption services, they really love little babies. Sometimes I see a picture in the newspaper of a cat who in mothering squirrels, or a dog with kittens, and once a crow with a dog. Taking care of young without any mother seems instinctive in all of God's creatures.

As I write to you I am on the eve of departure for Elon. I am going to the Woman's Convention and School of Missions. It is wonderful to share with other women in the work of the church. I do hope that many of you girls are preparing yourselves for work in the Conference and Convention.

A verse of Scripture for early summer: "Awake, O north wind, and come, thou south, Blow upon my garden, that the spices of the garden may flow out."

I wish I could see you all in your Children's Day programs and in your Bible Schools. Have a happy time as you learn of God's works and love.

A PRESENT FOR GRANDFATHER.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Are you sure you can find something your grandfather would like?" inquired my friend, Ellen Bates, of her two small daughters as they were turning away from my desk in the children's library to go downtown on a shopping expedition. "If I did not need to stay here to attend a committee meeting with Miss Mallory I'd go along and help you."

"Oh yes, Mother," declared little Shirley, hopping from one foot to the other in her eagerness to depart. "We want to pick out Grandfather's birthday present ourselves!"

"Grandfather always likes what we send him!" added ten-year-old Nancy.

The mother's face was still clouded with anxiety. "Don't buy anything shoddy or useless," she cautioned. "Remember, Grandfather likes practical things. Get him something that will last a while. Two dollars is a large sum of money to spend."

Eight-year-old Shirley took a firmer grip on her pocketbook. "We'll find something nice, Mother, truly we will," she promised.

With a reluctant sigh, Ellen watched her daughters depart. "I really should have gone with the girls," she insisted. "Children are so irresponsible about money!"

"Children develop responsibility when they are given opportunities to make their own purchases," I told my friend. "You are giving Shirley and Nancy just the chance they need. Besides, it is their own money they are spending, isn't it?"

"Yes. They have earned part of their birthday fund and saved the rest from their allowances," Ellen replied. "They've learned that pennies mount up slowly into dollars."

"I'm sure they'll try to spend their money carefully," I continued. "Don't you remember, when you were a child, how much it meant to have money of your own to spend?"

Ellen smiled. "Yes, Lucia. I remember buying my mother a present with the first money I ever earned. I had picked strawberries for a friend who raised them in commercial quantities. Our family had extra expenses that summer and Mother could not afford a new hat, and she really needed one. Instead of asking her to go downtown with me to help find a hat that was suitable, I carried home what I thought was the prettiest hat in the store. Mother wore it proudly, knowing it was the selection of love, but even a child could see that the big straw sailor, weighted down with roses, looked top-heavy above the delicate face of my mother. That first independent purchase taught me a necessary lesson—to take much more thought and care before spending my money."

After the committee meeting was over, Shirley and Nancy came back to the library to meet their mother. I walked along with them as we all started for home.

"Guess what we found for Grandfather," said Shirley, holding up a tiny package for her mother's inspection.

"It looks like a pen or a pencil," Ellen answered.

Shirley could wait no longer. "It's a ther-mom-e-ter!" she declared, carefully pronouncing the big word. "It goes outside the window. You can see it from inside."

"Do you think Grandfather will like it?" asked Nancy. "You remember how he used to go out every morning to see how cold it was, when we were visiting him last winter."

"Yes, indeed," her mother answered. "Now Grandfather can put the new thermometer in his living-room window and read it without having to go outdoors. You have found a very desirable gift."

Across the children's heads we exchanged glances, and I knew from Ellen's smiling eyes she was quite satisfied she had made no mistake in allowing her little daughters to do their shopping independently.

YOUR GIFTS PROMOTE INTERNATIONAL RECONCILIATION.

Howard Schomer recently participated for two weeks in an ecumenical conference of thirteen French and thirteen German pastors in Chambon-sur-Lignon, France, where he and his wife Elsie are engaged in educational and church liaison work. Such conferences have always been rare, and none had been held for sixteen years. Howard wrote:

"Most of the group had never before known people from the other nation except as representatives of a deadly enemy power. For many, these twelve days led to the deep discovery that convinced Christians have far more unity among themselves across even most difficult barriers than they do with the mixed mass of their compatriots."

International reconciliation among children, young people, lay leaders—as well as among the clergy—is an important part of our Mission of Fellowship to Europe.

"In the kindergarten the child acquires the basic fundamentals of good citizenship which are essential for successful school life and general living. He learns how to associate with others and to assume responsibility for his own conduct. By the gradual adjustments from play to school work he gains confidence in his ability and a liking for school which might not be possible if he were precipitated into formal school work."—W. F. Youth at Work in the Church

ANN TRUITT, Editor; HELEN JACKSON, C. B. TWIDDY, Associates.

RETURN TO NAGASAKI—FOUR YEARS AFTER.

By WILLIAM KEYS, Secretary, Youth Department, World Council of Churches.

This summer American youth will be working side by side with Japanese, Korean and Chinese Christian young people clearing away the rubble that still remains—four years later—at Nagasaki, Japan.

Prior to the war, Chinzei Gakuin was one of the most modern schools in Nagasaki, but it was almost completely flattened out by the atomic bomb. Nearby there are today huge piles of rubble, crazily leaning twisted frames of factories, single staircases and walls jutting up from chunks of concrete.

In the midst of this destruction, Christian youth, American and Japanese, are planning to build. To provide recreation for Japanese children, they will be constructing an athletic field on the site of Chinzei Gakuin. They will also help build an animal husbandry building to house the livestock that is desperately needed for food and milk.

Other parts of Japan see another part of the war's cost. Thousands of Japanese, settled in Manchuria and other parts of the Far East, are being sent back to the home islands. At Hakodate, on the island of Hokkaido, a center for repatriates has been set up. The housing area is about a quarter of a mile square, with 250 families living one family to a room, no matter how many children. Each family must cook in the hall outside of the room, using bits of kindling that smoke everything up badly.

Here at Hakodate, other workcampers will construct a playground for the repatriate children and build them play equipment. With the help of the town authorities, they will also do some road improvement and shrub-planting.

At Itsu-ka-ichi, near Tokyo, still another group of workcampers will be building an ecumenical youth center for the United Church of Japan to use as a training ground for those young people who must carry the Christian Gospel forward. Those who were planning the project this spring were welcomed by the mayor and the city council, all dressed up in their best frock coats. There, as on the other projects, the town leaders promised full cooperation.

In all, some thirty American young people will be participating in the Japanese workcamp projects. They are planned for three weeks—July 17 to August 7. In addition to physical work, worship and prayer will have an important place in the life of these camps. Sponsored by the World Council of Churches, the Foreign Missions Conference of North America and the World Council of Christian Education, the camps will serve as centers of renewal for Christian life in Japan.

Here's what one of our youth leaders in Japan has to say about one of the workcamp projects: "There is no doubt that workcamp will have a terrific effect upon the people of Hakodate, for here is a hot-bed of Communist activity and propaganda—continually criticizing the American occupation and Japanese government for inefficiency in handling the repatriates, and the Christian Church for its complacent attitude. Here the workcampers will be doing much more than the Communist strategy calls for in meeting the great needs of this dislocated community of people who have almost nothing, and also will be assisting the Christian churches of this area to plan and carry out a continuous program of aid and social action among the repatriates.

"As we boarded the train in Aomori on our way to Tokyo, the train boy handed us two copies of the morning paper, with our pictures, and headlines telling of the workcamps and, most important of all, headlining the Christian spirit behind the workcamp program. It seemed to us that here is real evangelism at its best. . . ."

YOUTH RALLY AT PFAFFTOWN.

The young people of our churches in Forsyth County met on Sunday, May 15 at the Pfafftown Church for their regular meeting.

The young people of the Pfafftown Church were in charge of the opening worship, with James Cohn speaking on "The Key of Life."

Rev. Kenneth Register, pastor of Union Church near Burlington, spoke on I Samuel 3, challenging the young people to greater loyalty to the church and to Christ.

There was a business session with Bobbie Jean Kimball, president, presiding. We had a discussion on Summer Conference and camps. It was voted that we have our next meeting at Salem Chapel on the fourth Sunday in September. Miss Lura Neal of Belews Creek will be in charge.

A picnic supper on the church lawn was enjoyed by all.

Evening Vespers were held outdoors, with the young people of the Belews Creek Church in charge. Rev. Allen Hurdle, pastor of Belews Creek and Salem Chapel, speaking.

We adjourned until the fourth Sunday in September.

SOCIAL ACTION TOUR.

By REV. ERWIN A. BRITTON.

Wayne, Michigan,
October 25, 1948.

DEAR AUNT MARTHA:

I want to tell you about an exciting announcement our minister made yesterday in our Sunday School and Pilgrim Fellowship. We're going to get a chance to take a trip to the United Nations at Lake Success and to Washington, D. C., so we can see for ourselves how our own government operates and study some of the problems, first hand, of how the UN works. And we'll do the usual sightseeing, too. Our minister said that our church has offices in both New York and Washington which will help us with plans and arrangements. It's something about a Council for Social Action. I don't know what it's all about. I thought that churches just talked about religion and stuff like that and left politics to the politicians. In fact, I never knew before that we had a committee by that name right here in our local church. Anyway, I'm interested and I hope I can get to go.

Mom and Dad both think it's a swell idea, so I'm starting to save my money right now. The minister said it will cost $60.00 and some of the local businessmen will help us out with jobs so we can earn part of our expenses. He also told us that we would be excused from school, which is O. K. with me.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Cor. 1:1-9.

The Unified Task.

When Luke, the beloved physician, sat down to write The Acts of the Apostles he reminded his friend Theophilus that he had written the first treatise to tell him of "all that Jesus began both to do and to teach until the day that He was taken up. . . ." You will probably recall that this first treatise, Luke's gospel, closes with an account of the Ascension, the story packed with mystery, of how the Risen Christ withdrew from the physical world into the world of the spirit, how after He had been seen in various ways and by various groups He disappeared from their sight. It marked the end of His ministry in the flesh, the close of a chapter of His work. He would appear no more to them to be seen with their eyes, or to be heard with their ears. He had gone from the "Here" into the "There." He had finished His task which the Father had given into His hands.

How seemingly little He had accomplished, judged by human standards. He came proclaiming the Kingdom of God, but He had hardly made a ripple on the surface of the thought and life of His day. To be sure there were times when great crowds followed Him, but in the end they were unorganized and uninterested. He did, of course, gather around Him a small band of twelve men who lived intimately with Him for about two years and a half, to whom He communicated His ideas and imparted His spirit. But one of these twelve sold Him for thirty pieces of silver, and another denied Him, and finally in the hour of crisis, all of them forsook Him and fled. These men were in a way, ordinary, average men, without technical training, social position, political prestige, or wealth. There was no formal organization to carry on the work. And yet He had come proclaiming the Kingdom of God, and giving Himself sacrificially to establishing it. Here was a whole world without a knowledge of the true and living God, and untouched by the good news which He had come to proclaim. And He had gone from the world in the flesh. Talk about an unfinished task—here was one indeed.

Marching Orders.

He gathered the little band of eleven together again for a last word with them. It was by appointment—they went to a mountain in Galilee where He had arranged to meet with them. During the forty days when He had showed himself alive after His passion by many infallible proofs, He had been speaking to them of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God. It—the Kingdom of God—had been the central theme of His preaching. He came preaching the Kingdom of God or heaven. His teaching and preaching centered in it. And now, risen again from the dead, it was the major emphasis of what He had to say to them. It must go on. The unfinished task must be finished. Somebody must carry on the work. A mere holding operation would not be enough; there must be an advance all along the line. Somebody must be found to carry on the work. Who would it be? To what group or organization would He look to finish the unfinished task of carrying the good news to the whole world and of making disciples of all nations? Surely not to these eleven men with all their limitations and with their lack. What impression could they make upon a whole world? What could they do against such overwhelming odds?

But it was to this little group of men that our Risen Lord did look to carry on His work and to finish this unfinished task. To them, and to men like them. It was the only way He had. And it was the only way He needed. Accordingly when He met with them on the mountain in Galilee, He gave them their marching orders. "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you"—that is the way Matthew records it. Mark puts it in practically the same words, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." Luke says that the disciples are to be "witnesses . . . unto the uttermost part of the earth. There is some difference in the form of the words; there is unanimity in the fact of the commission—they were to evangelize the whole world. No ifs, buts, and ands—there it is in black and white, a world-wide mandate for these men, and their kind.

One of the significant words in what we call the Great Commission, is the comparatively insignificant word "Therefore." The reason why they were to go into all the world was because "all power in heaven and in earth" had been given to our Risen Lord. Because He was the Lord of heaven and earth, therefore they were to go into all the world. Back of the divine commission there is the unlimited power and authority of the Lord Jesus Christ. God had given Him a name that is above every name in heaven and in earth. Missions is not something that men have thought up. Missions is a divinely ordained and empowered movement in history in the fulfilment of the wisdom and love and power of God Himself.

Mobilizing for Action.

As men under marching orders they were commanded to do a seemingly strange thing by way of preparation. They were simply to wait until they were endued with power from on high. This thing was not to be done by organization, although later there had to be reorganization. It was not to be done by money, although it takes money and lots of money to carry on the missionary enterprise. It was not to be done by might or by power, but by the Spirit of the living God. Before they could work they had to wait. That was much harder than working. But the waiting was absolutely necessary if the work was to be done. One suspects that the modern church would do much more effective work, if there were a little less working and more waiting. There is a place of course in church work for mechanics, for ways of working and for organization, but the greatest need is for dynamics, the release of power.

Workers Together With God.

They were not to go out alone. They were not to do the task in their own wisdom or their own strength. "Lo I am with you always," said the Master. If they undertook His work they could be assured of His presence and ATTENTION JUNIOR HIGHS.

Here's some more information on the Junior High Camp at Camp Crabtree, No. 3, July 10-16, 1949:

All campers are asked to bring their picnic supper for Sunday evening, July 10. The drink will be furnished for the meal.

Also, here is a message from your Dean, Rev. W. J. Andes, about what to bring:

"The camp furnishes only bed and mattress. Bring sheets, pillow, two or three warm blankets, towels, soap and flashlight. Also bring rainy day necessities, warm coat or sweater, and comfortable shoes for hiking. Sport clothes of modest styles are most comfortable for camp use. Bring your Bible, fountain pen or pencil, and notebook. For the sake of health, campers are asked not to bring candy, and boxes of "eats" from home are not recommended. The dietitian will provide an entirely adequate diet. The camper's health will be carefully guarded."

Registration blanks for the Junior High Camp were sent out last week to pastors and Sunday school superintendents. Send in your registration blanks early—we can take only a certain number of campers and right now our slogan is "first come, first served."

We'll be getting together to study and plan for our trip several times this winter. We are supposed to go some time after Easter.

I'll write you more about it later.

Batavia, N. Y.
April 24, 1949.

DEAR AUNT MARTHA:

It's been a long time since I last wrote you about our trip to the United Nations and Washington—and a lot has happened since—but we're on our way. It doesn't seem possible for I thought today would never get here.

We left Wayne, from the church, at exactly 8:55 a. m. today. There were twenty-nine of us; nineteen high school boys and girls and ten adults. We are traveling in five new cars—and three of them were provided by local auto dealers so we could be sure to get there and back in comfort. We travelled from Detroit across the Ambassador Bridge to Canada, through customs and immigration. For some of us it was our first trip outside the United States. We arrived at Niagara Falls around four o'clock, had a look at the Falls, took some pictures and then drove on to Batavia where we had supper and are spending the night in tourist homes. We don't try to keep the cars together on the road but we all arrive about the same time—even the women drivers.

We are all excited about the trip—I'd better sign off now since we have to get up tomorrow to be on the road by six. More later.

SUSAN.

New York, N. Y.,
April 26, 1949.

DEAR AUNT MARTHA:

Have we been having a good time! Our drive Monday was beautiful—through the Finger Lakes to Albany—down the Hudson River, across the Bear Mountain Bridge and into the very busy city just at supper time. We went to the Congregational Service Center on East 29th Street where we were met by Miss Droms who assigned us our rooms. All the boys and men were sent to the Sloane House (Y.M.C.A.) on 34th Street. Like all visitors to New York we were impressed by the tall buildings and the taxicabs. After supper most of us went to Radio City Music Hall, where they were still showing their Easter pageant and a Bing Crosby movie.

The next day we went by chartered bus to Lake Success where the UN is meeting. There we got to see one of the Committees in action discussing the problem of freedom of the world press. I was especially interested in how they understood each other. Well, it's this way: every delegate has a pair of ear phones and a microphone. When anyone speaks, it can be heard in his own language—or by turning a dial in any one of the other four languages of the UN. We were allowed to listen in on this translation system. Then there were a couple of movies on the UN and we heard a couple of members of the secretariat explain the function of the UN. We had luncheon at the cafeteria. Since it was a bright day, we were able to get a lot of pictures. There was a pile of visitors there from all over the U. S.

After we got back to the city, some of us took the Elevated to the Battery and the Staten Island Ferry for a view of the harbor and the sky line. It was thrilling. We rode back in the subway, had dinner in an Automat and went to a radio broadcast. Some of our group took a tour of Rockefeller Center and had dinner in one of the foreign restaurants at the Center.

After the broadcast we just walked around Times Square—and a bunch went for a buggy ride in Central Park. I'm ready for bed right now. We are leaving for Washington tomorrow morning.

Washington, D. C.,
April 29, 1949.

DEAR AUNT MARTHA:

The days are going fast. We are having a marvelous time on our trip—perfect weather—no mishaps or disappointments—every day filled with so many things I can hardly remember them all.

After we left New York, driving through the Holland Tunnel and down New Jersey, we stopped in Philadelphia to visit Independence Square. Some stopped at the Betsy Ross house—others went on to Annapolis.

On Thursday morning we met Mr. Keehn. He explained to us some things about the layout of the streets (we were always getting lost), what was going on up at Capitol Hill, and why our church has a representative in Washington. He turned us over to his associate, Mrs. Maynard Catchings, who took us first to the Senate office building, where we sat in for nearly an hour on the Foreign Relation's Committee hearing on the Atlantic Pact. Warren Austen, U.S. Representative to the UN was testifying. We were thrilled when our Senator Vandenberg asked some questions. We saw a lot of people about whom we had read.

We visited the Supreme Court Building and had lunch in the Cafeteria there. What a crowd! In the

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

You will rejoice with us in knowing that our little boy in Sternberger Hospital is improving rapidly now. We are very thankful that the other children have remained well. Such dread diseases bring a fear that only time limit can dispell.

Since this is harvesttime you want to know how our crops are turning out. Well, the hay has been mowed and is in the barn. The oats and wheat are now being cut. It seems that they are turning out very well. You know the weather was not too favorable last spring so we are very pleased to see how much we will harvest.

The repair work planned for the present will soon be finished. We hope when it is complete as many of you as can will pay the Orphanage a visit to see what has been done.

You have been posted as time has gone on and know something of the needs and how we are striving to meet them. The time has come when we must ask you to help us all you can; not only with your interest, but your means. Many people have thought that the Orphanage has built up a large fund and that money is not needed. This is not the true picture. If the Institution is modernized and the necessary improvements made, a large sum of money will have to be raised. We have done a great deal, but there is so much improvement needed. Won't you begin now to help?

Dr. Truit writes us that he plans to move in July, and will be ready for work by the first of August. We are deeply grateful for Dr. Truitt. We realize how reluctant his Suffolk people are to see him leave them. Our Orphanage needs him sorely and we hope his family will be happy in their new home.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

His power. It is always thus. When God calls a man for any task, great or small, or asks a man to do anything for Him, He gives the man divine resources which enable him to do the task. Mark has some very significant words in his gospel concerning this fact. He says that in obedience to the Lord's command, the disciples or apostles "went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following." God is not slack concerning His promises. We can believe His word and trust Him everywhere and always.

The Unfinished Task.

There is still an unfinished task. And there is still the "Great Commission" of our Lord. And as in the days of old, it comes directly to us, to every one of us who names the name of Christ. You and I can do something, in fact we can do much. Some can go in person, some in prayer, some in purse. But every one of us can bear our witness right where we are, we can speak to the one next to us. We can do such simple things as invite others to Sunday school and church and thus fulfil the "Great Commission."

Were I to pray for a taste which should stand me in good stead under every variety of circumstances and be a source of happiness and a cheerfulness to me during life and a shield against its ills, however things might go amiss and the world frown upon me, it would be a taste for reading.

—Sir John Herschel.

PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

afternoon we visited both the Senate and the House in session and then took a jaunt to Mt. Vernon, Arlington Cemetery and Lee's Home. That evening we had dinner at the First Congregational Church and a session with Mr. Wendell Hayes, a Congregational layman, who is in the U.S. State Department. We discussed Foreign Affairs.

Friday we spent in sightseeing around Washington—the Washington Monument, Lincoln Memorial, Library of Congress, Smithsonian Institute, etc. We were supposed to have an interview with our Congregational representative, Mr. Lensinski, but because of the debate on the Taft-Hartley repeal he had to be in the House.

That night we met with a group of young people from New Jersey. Our leader was Mr. Frank McCullough, formerly of our Council for Social Action, now administrative assistant to Senator Douglas of Illinois. We had a lively discussion on domestic issues, especially labor and race.

We are leaving tomorrow morning for Pittsburgh. We'll stop at Gettysburg on the way. Then on Sunday we'll get to Oberlin, Ohio, in time for church, have dinner at the College Inn, and be home by late afternoon. It looks like we'll travel about 1,700 miles before we are home.

It's been one of the most interesting things I've ever done. Our government and the UN won't seem so remote now. And I'm glad to learn that our churches are interested in these political and world affairs.

See you soon and tell you more.

SOMETHING DIFFERENT IN CLOTHING DRIVES.

All of us are familiar with appeals which are made for used clothing to be distributed in devastated areas at home and abroad. Such clothing drives say "Do not send evening dresses, silver slippers or sheer silk scarves." Such instructions are quite understandable because most evening dresses would not keep anyone from freezing.

The Interdenominational Religious Work Foundation of Virginia is making an appeal for discarded evening gowns, evening slippers, wraps, etc. These materials are needed in our girls industrial schools. These garments are carefully kept by the schools and are used again and again as each new generation of students come and go. Dresses for parties and dances, costumes for plays and pageants are largely supplied by this means.

Don't throw away discarded evening clothes, send them to the Interdenominational Religious Work Foundation, 1444 East Main Street, Room 209, Richmond 19, Virginia.

GOVERNMENT MUST ACCEPT RESPONSIBILITY.

Once again, liquor in the Armed Forces is messing up the international situation. Complaints from Mexico City. Armed recruit in Germany leaves barracks under the influence of alcohol and kills three Germans. Another, suffering from alcoholic inspiration, knocks down six or eight Russians in a public place. Many Americans will probably think this was a good idea, but after all, our relations with the Bolsheviks are pretty ticklish, and if we are able to edge by without a war, it will certainly be appreciated by the citizens of this country, who have had just about enough war to last them until the next time. The truth is, that the Government will simply have to face up to its responsibility for these embarrassing and dangerous incidents. It has been industriously teaching young Americans to drink for years, and won't, under any circumstance, be caught advising them to let that mischievous stuff alone. There are millions of Drys in this country, believe it or not, but the Federal Government doesn't know there is a single one.

Sunday, June 19, is Father's Day. Have you made any special plans for that day? A good way to celebrate is by the whole family attending church in a group.

FRONTIERS FOR 49'ERS.

"great men make great causes." But how often it happens that a great cause makes a man great!

Think of all the heroes of history—and of the cause each stood for, fought for, died for. Detach them in your mind from that cause, and see how small they look.

If you still read the ancients in college these days, perhaps you may remember this statement by William James: "The great use of a life is to spend it for something that will outlast it." Write that down on your heart! We have but one life to live. When that is gone, our last chance to count is gone.

Our lives are like flagstuffs, which get their glory from the banners they fly—not from anything inherently worthwhile in the flagstuffs themselves. Without a banner, a flagstaff is just another pole. But with a flag flying bravely at its top, it becomes a glorious thing. A staff is known by the flag it flies—and so is a man. "The great use of a life is to make it stand for something that will outlast it!"

Another technique for making your life count is this: Let it be moved and motivated by a great faith.

With a world to wallop, we surely must know by now that faith—faith in ourselves, in our country, in our God—is not only the strongest weapon in our arsenal. It's virtually the only one that will win.

The generation in which I grew up was distinguished largely for its faithlessness. In my college days, some years after World War I, it was smart to be misanthropic. It was smart to identify ourselves with F. Scott Fitzgerald's Lost Generation. Like the Whiffenpoofs, we were "lambs that had lost our way, ba-a, ba-a, ba-a."

We were especially scornful of Patriotism . . . Love of country . . . Democracy. The inner meaning of our national heritage was lost to us. We began to suspect our history books. We got great amusement out of authors who de-bunked our national heroes. And faith in America we regarded as a silly fixation of silly people. Cynicism was our God, and Henry Mencken his prophet.

It was fun to paraphrase the "land of the free, home of the brave" into "land of the spre, home of the knave." We even manhandled our hymns and made one stanza to say: "They climbed the steep ascent of heaven through peril and toil and pain. O God, to us may means be given to follow—by the train!"

We have a world to wallop. Providence has indeed set our feet in a large place. If we are to release the "imprisoned splendor" of America upon the world, it will not be with the force of guns and bombs (God forbid) . . . not with the trickeries of diplomatic maneuverings . . . not with the crushing might of superior economic resources.

It will be only by vigorous implementation of our faith in the inner character and genius of the American way of life!

But whether we wallop our world will depend not alone upon our faith, but on how and where we implement it.

In June 1945 we correspondents in Manila were given the official word that Borneo was to be invaded. We were flown down to join the U. S. Fleet at Morotai. And on the evening before the landings, while steaming in to the attack, we were briefed by General MacArthur and Admiral Royal.

Great maps were unrolled, and the whole strategy of the operation was carefully explained. On the big maps we saw clearly why Borneo had to be taken—its relation to the Pacific war, and to the entire Allied effort.

The operation looked vast and complicated—yet deceptively easy.

But when we hit the beaches at dawn, war was not the expansive thing it had seemed on the big maps. It was very personal, very concentrated. War became for each of us just a few feet of jungle growth, a tiny piece of beach, a 6-foot foxhole.

Yet every man of us knew that this—for us, and for the whole effort—was the war. And that the outcome of the operation actually did depend upon how well every man carried out his assignment, no matter how small.

Your place and mine in the great life-operation facing us may not be as strategists of world strategy. But where we are, from now on out, is the very essence of the battle. And on whatever constricted or expanded beach we find ourselves, we must wage the battle according to the faith that is in us. Global idealism only becomes globaloney when we limit it to the stratosphere.

Whatever or wherever your future, Forty-Niners, Destiny has set your feet in a large place.

With the help of God—and moved by abiding faith in yourselves, your country, your world, and your God—I believe you will be equal to it!

Barbershop Quartets

The eleventh annual conclave of the SPEBSQSA, holding forth this week in Buffalo, prompts some doleful observation on the sad state of singing in this land of us. That noble organization, the Society for the Preservation and Encouragement of Barber Shop Quartet Singing in America, is one of the last tottering strongholds of a once mighty art. Outside of opera and some of those now inside opera ought to be on the outside the country hasn't produced half a dozen singers in the past ten years who can belistened to without an itching urge to give them a blood transfusion or a box of vitamin pills. Practically all of our radio singers, as John Croby observed of one of them recently, sing as if they hurt all over. Take away their amplifying equipment and you couldn't hear 'em in a shower.

Time was, before anyone with a guitar and a bandana could make a thousand dollars before breakfast, that America could boast some mighty sweet singing. A soprano in those days could be heard six blocks on a clear afternoon; the lady soloists at political rallies would fall upon that high F in the Star Spangled Banner with a full-bodied brrr that made a man's scalp tingle. The male quartets, innocent of bebop and rebop, would work over new arrangements of the old harmonies until they could take "I Want a Girl" through 28 variations, all as smooth as so many butterscotch drops without doing it in the same way twice.

Then everything fell apart at once. Rudy Vallee made a million dollars through his nose, and a host of youngsters whinnied a few times and headed for Nooyawk to do likewise. In the radio studios, sound engineers tinkered around with their little black boxes until they had every high school girl as loud as Helen Traubel. The business of quartet singing broke down when a lot of convention drunks, made sentimental by the pickle juice of prohibition days, insisted on horning in with a low, growling bass. With the ascendancy of the Hillbillies, the art was done for. In a jukebox near The News Leader today is a record which for inhuman punishment ranks with the thumbscrews and rack.

We wish the SPEBSQSA every good fortune. That 3,200 persons turned out for the organization's convention is an encouraging sign. There must have been hundreds among them who yearned desperately for a revival of the day when a sweet-voiced quartet would strike up a tune on an August evening, and across the backyards would drift the lilt of a tenor reaching above the background harmony—"When you were suh-weet sixteen. . . ." Today a man is stuck with Frank Sinatra and Vaughan Monroe. Civilization, as we have had occasion to observe before, is not an unmixed blessing.—Editorial in Richmond News Leader.

The CHRISTIAN SUN

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials, Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CI.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY JUNE 23, 1949.

NUMBER 25.

Missionary Executive Retires

During nineteen turbulent years Dr. Fred Field Goodsell has served as the Executive Secretary of the American Board. In this exalted capacity he has directed the policies of one of the greatest mission boards in Christendom. Prior to taking this post in 1930, he served 23 years in the Near East under the same Board.

DR. GOODSSELL

This internationally known missionary leader was honored Tuesday evening of last week at a Testimonial Dinner in Old South Church, Boston, Massachusetts.

A list of distinguished representatives from abroad and America were present, including the Right Rev. Sabapathy Kulandran of Ceylon, a Bishop of the Church of South India; Rev. W. Cecil Northcott of London, England, representing the 154-year-old London Missionary Society; Rev. and Mrs. T. K. Chiu of Kunming, representing the Church of Christ in China; Dr. Norman Goodall of London, Secretary of the International Missionary Council; Dr. Michio Kozaki of Tokyo, Moderator of the United Church of Christ, Japan; Rev. Synesio Lyra of Brazil; Dr. Alberto Rembao of Mexico, and over 200 others.

During his years of service in the Near East, Dr. Goodsell lived in Turkey under three regimes—that of Sultan Abdul Hamid, The Young Turk movement and the present Republic. He also worked in Bulgaria, Greece, Syria and, during World War I, in Russia and Siberia.

Closely connected with the ecumenical movement of the world Christian Church, Dr. Goodsell is a member of the Ad Interim Committee of the International Missionary Council and of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

He has made two comprehensive world tours, a special visit to South America, and numerous briefer trips to Europe, Great Britain and the Near and Middle East. A leading member of Boston Rotary, when he went to South America he was the fraternal representative from Boston Rotary to some 30 Rotary Clubs in South America.

Born in Minnesota 67 years ago, Dr. Goodsell was educated at the University of California, Hartford Theological Seminary (William Thompson Fellow), the Universities of Marburg and Berlin, in Germany and holds a D.D. from the Pacific School of Religion.

Dr. Goodsell will be succeeded by Dr. David McKeith, Jr.

News Flashes

Convention Office material will be found on page 15 this week.

The next issue of THE SUN will be that of July 7. There is no paper published the last weeks of June and December.

We learn with regret that Mrs. Leon Edgar Smith has recently been ill. We hope that ere this she is convalescing.

Rev. R. A. Whitten, our Valley Conference reporter, writes: "We rejoice with the members and friends of the Antioch-Linville, New Hope and Beulah Churches in at last securing a pastor. The Rev. Emerson J. Rohart, pastor of our Second Welsh Church, Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, for the past eight years, has accepted the pastorate and will move into the parsonage at Linville and take up the work toward the last of June. Mr. Rohart served for some time as the pastor of the Brethren Church at Winchester and the present Brethren Church was erected under his leadership. He later became pastor of our Wilkes-Barre Church and a minister in full standing in our denomination where he is still serving. We believe that under the leadership of Rev. and Mrs. Rohart these fine churches in Rockingham County will take on new life and be a strong force in Kingdom building in the Valley Conference. Our earnest prayer is that God will bless both pastor and people in their labors together and give them many precious souls for Christ."

A REVIVAL SCHEDULE.

The schedule of revival meetings in the Virgilina Pastorate of Congregational Christian Churches is as follows:

Liberty (Nathalie, Virginia) — July 3-8. Rev. W. J. Andes, guest minister. Bible School each morning.

Union (Virgilina, Virginia) — July 10-15. Dr. H. S. Hardecastle, guest minister.

Hebron (Nelson, Virginia) — July 17-22. Rev. W. M. Stevens, guest minister.

Rev. W. M. Stevens was the guest minister for the services at Lebanon, Semora, North Carolina, from April 17-22.

DEAN WEIGLE RETIRES.

The Rev. Luther A. Weigle, noted minister and educator, will retire on June 30 as Dean of the Yale Divinity School, a position he has held for twenty-one years.

Dean Weigle, one of the foremost religious educators in the country, has been prominent in many national and international Protestant organizations. From 1940 to 1942 he was president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, and since 1928 he has been chairman of the executive committee of the World Council of Christian Education.

Following his retirement, he will concentrate on his work as chairman of the Revision Committee for the Standard Version of the Bible. This committee, which consists of eminent Bible scholars from America and Great Britain, has been working since 1930 with headquarters at Yale.

Dean Weigle has been head of the Yale Divinity School since 1928 when he succeeded the Rev. Charles R. Brown. He had joined the Yale faculty in 1916 as Horace Bushnell Professor of Christian Nurture and in 1924 he was appointed Sterling Professor of Religious Education, a teaching position that he still holds.

In addition to his work at Yale, Dean Weigle has been active in many organizations that have worked toward improvement in religious education and toward unity of action among Protestants.

His leadership in the Federal Council of Churches had been evident many years before he became its president in 1940. From 1928 to 1932 he had been chairman of the administrative committee of the Federal Council. When the World Council of Churches met at Utrecht, Holland, in 1938, he was one of the American delegates who attended to devise a constitution for the Council.

His term as president of the Federal Council covered the years of the outbreak of World War II, a crucial period for all churches that threatened the very existence of any unity movement such as the Federal Council. Dean Weigle at that time expressed his views that "the function of the church is to prevent men from taking anything less than God as their ultimate concern."

His interest in religious education has not been confined to the classroom. One of his favorite interests has been in the Christian education of young people. In 1909 he wrote a text book for training Sunday school teachers, entitled "The Pupil and the Teacher." The book became a "best seller" and close to one million copies have been sold.

As chairman of the executive committee of the World Council of Christian Education, he has presided at meetings in Rio de Janeiro, Oslo, and Mexico City. The next meeting of the Council, which was formerly known as the World Sunday School Association, will be in 1950 at Toronto. Dean Weigle has already indicated he will retire as chairman at that time.

In conjunction with his work on Sunday school teaching, Dean Weigle has for many years criticized the lack HAPPY HOME.

Children's Day and Cradle Roll Day were observed in Happy Home Church on Sunday, June 5. The theme for the service was "We Would See Jesus." Scripture readings, songs, poems and recitations portrayed beautifully the life of Jesus. Frankie Ann Cross sang a verse of "We Would See Jesus" intermittently throughout the program. Some of the poems were recited by members of the Cradle Roll.

The Sunday school superintendent, Mr. R. J. Hudson brought greetings to the Cradle Roll department. The pastor, Rev. Thurman F. Bowers, presented certificates to the thirty-six Cradle Roll members.

Plans for the entire service were conceived by Miss Ruth Helen Gunn, children's worker and Cradle Roll superintendent.

Careful! You'll Blow Up!

By REV. SAMUEL LAWRENCE JOHNSON, Chicago, Illinois

It is quite possible that no words have had a greater effect upon man's thinking than those found in the fifth, sixth and seventh chapters of Matthew, known to us as the Sermon on the Mount. Christians as well as non-Christians have recognized this sermon. For example Mahatma Ghandi, the great Indian mystic, although non-Christian, saw embodied in this Sermon on the Mount some of the greatest truths ever revealed to man. It has often been said that, were all the rest of the Bible to be lost the name of Jesus, the author of these few words, would be remembered through all time.

According to best authority, three and one half per cent of the total population of the United States suffers from high blood pressure and hardening of the arteries. According to the statistics of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, every other individual in this country past the age of fifty years, dies of heart disease.

High blood pressure, it is recognized, is the greatest problem of middle adult life, not even excepting cancer, in the United States. Seven million five hundred thousand people are disabled by heart disease in any given year, and another 500,000 by diseases of the circulatory system. About 7,000,000 are disabled by rheumatism and arthritis. These illnesses account for loss of more than 250,000,000 days annually out of a total of 800,000,000,000 days lost through illness. It is estimated that 23,000,000 people in the United States have some kind of chronic disease.

Now, what's all this got to do with the Sermon on the Mount? Just this: It has been very definitely established that an almost unbelievable number of these illnesses may be traced to fear, worry, guilty feeling, anxiety, lack of adjustment to home or society. In other words, the failure of many people to live the word of Jesus Christ.

Physicians who have studied large numbers of patients with high blood pressure particularly and various heart diseases, have made some rather unusual discoveries. They have found the majority of their patients are interested primarily in world things, in materialistic endeavors, in material accomplishments. They have found that many of their patients are people who have lost all interest in religious values. Many of them are addicted to the use of large quantities of coffee, cigarettes, and various kinds of narcotics, particularly alcohol. They have tried through these material things to relieve their anxiety. You are familiar with the customary explanation for smoking: "I do it just so that I can have something to do, something to do, something to play with in my hands, something to put in my mouth that helps me to be at ease." People who offer such an excuse would be hard to convince that they are exposing their neurotic tendencies, but the truth is that they are.

Food, for many represents the last defense against depression. Consequently, a large percentage of patients with heart disease are fat.

Often, the outset of heart disease is preceded by some mentally or spiritually wounding experience, such as the death of a loved one, great financial stress and strain, or a sudden change in vocation. The disease may have been developing for some time, but is not noticed until aggravated by some specific experience.

A considerable percentage of people suffering from heart diseases, unconsciously want to disown any responsibility for their condition or for their cure, and having that attitude, often think that it is their doctor's responsibility to bring them back to health.

One of the problems pertaining to this whole matter, is the difficulty we have in articulating our anxieties.

It is absolutely no use going up to a person and saying: "Are you worried about something?" for nine times out of ten such a person will answer, and quite honestly and sincerely—

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

MISSIONS CALLING

As we come to the last Sunday in our Convention Mission Period, the words of the late George W. Truett come to mind: "By ten thousand voices louder than the mighty thunderings of breaking seas, God is calling now to humanity to face world tasks, not with tiny dribblets of love and life and service, but to face them with all we can lay on the altar for the redemption of mankind."

Some people think our asking for missions is too high. Perhaps we need to ponder the slogans of Southern Baptists: "Every Baptist is a tither." "Fifty-fifty by 1950," and "That the World May Know." Dr. Theron Rankin says that "churches in Southern Baptist territory are getting apologetic about splurging on themselves; they feel guilty if they spend more than half of their regular receipts in their own church community."

It is easy to be sentimental about missions. But realism presses the question: What have you given to missions this year? How does missionary giving compare with current expenses in your church? Sunday should be the day of atonement for all who failed to make a worthy offering at Easter.

Missions is one of the very great enterprises of our day. Creative minds, dynamic personalities and sacrificial spirits comprise the stock in trade. All of us can share in this redemptive ministry. Missionary giving is stewardship at its best.

No one can feel that missionary giving is unimportant now. Our giving should receive fresh impetus in the realization new recruits are preparing for and reaching the missionary fields. Here is the announcement that Rev. and Mrs. Harold Delbert Bodle of East Bridgewater, Massachusetts, will serve under the American Board in the Philippines. His post in the Philippine Islands will be as a minister and teacher and he will be working in a new Christian High School established by the Christians of the whole island of Mindanao and located at Midsayap, in the province of Cotabato.

What kind of a man is this new missionary? During World War II Mr. Bodle served in the U. S. Navy Intelligence and was stationed in Washington, D. C. At that time he was able to do some rehabilitation work in a Washington Rescue Mission. Before going to Bridgewater he was Assistant Minister in the Roxbury (Massachusetts) Presbyterian Church. Born in Columbus, Ohio, twenty-seven years ago Mr. Bodle comes of Scotch, Irish and German ancestry. He was educated at Wheaton College, Illinois (AB 1944); Princeton Theological Seminary; Gordon College; Boston University and Bridgewater State Teachers College (Accredited AATC, Ed. M.). In college he was active in varsity athletics, The Public Affairs Forum and literary societies.

Miss Cynthia Mixsell Smith, Mt. Holyoke College, Class of 1949, and daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Dwight C. Smith, has also been appointed by the American Board for a three-year term as a teacher of English and Bible in the Baika Junior College, Osaka, Japan. Dr. Smith is pastor of historic Mt. Vernon Congregational Church, Boston, Massachusetts.

Although born in Seattle, Washington, twenty-one years ago Miss Smith's ancestry includes such distinguished Americans as Jonathan Edwards, Timothy Dwight and Elbridge Garry. She spent her early life on the Pacific Coast where her father was a Congregational pastor in Olympia and Bellingham, Washington.

"Although I believe that a Christian can find a need for service anywhere, I am particularly interested in Japan because possibly there I may be a part of constructive Christian work, counteracting the negative, destructive forces," says Miss Smith.

Active in the Pilgrim Fellowship, Miss Smith served as an officer in the Washington State Fellowship. In 1945 she was given the National United Christian Youth Movement Parshar Award, an annual presentation to young people active in church and international affairs. "Parshar" is an Indian word meaning "Gift of God."

Yes, it is a great privilege to share in the work of such missionaries. We are able to reach redemptive fingers into many lands. Just think what some individuals and churches are doing! The Easter offering for missions in our Winchester Church was $4,600. Park Street Congregational Church in Boston has raised $116,047 for missions this year. So the thrilling story goes. Are you participating—fully, joyfully, sacrificially?

A TRIP TO THE MOON

Again we see in our daily paper an argument about the practicability of a trip to the moon. We are told that liquid hydrogen could send a ship to the moon at the rate of 30,000 miles per hour. If the moon is only 240,000 miles away, as some one has told us, a man could take an early breakfast and get there in time for dinner. At 30,000 miles an hour the ship would soon get beyond the gravitational pull of the earth, and the ship would soon be there. An Ohio professor says all we need is a ship to put liquid hydrogen in, "and that's coming." We believe we've seen a statement to the effect that green patches have been seen on the moon, a proof that vegetation is there. At the proper season we might find ripe apples on a tree in the garden, and have plenty to eat. Why doesn't somebody who sees how easy it would be to get there tell us how we could get back? We would be subject to the gravitation of the moon while here. If we had used up our liquid hydrogen getting there, how would we get back? If we had not taken our wife and children along, we would soon be lonesome. After mature consideration, we have decided not to take this trip to the moon. We have friends and relatives in Oregon who expect a visit from us if we go anywhere at all.—The Good Citizen.

Christian Education in India

By LOU MACKIBBIN

The challenge to Christian missions in India today is so pressing and, withal, so promising, that a doubled and redoubled acceptance of responsibility for expanding the work is now imperative. This is the impetus of lay leaders and clergy alike who are planning for a more effective use of the resources of 108 members of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America since the upward spiral of inflation has reached such fantastic heights overseas, causing serious problems at home.

India Christians today, the third largest religious group in the nation, are unquestionably a powerful cultural and educational forces. Though their seven to eight millions are small, numerically, in comparison with 100 million Moslems and twice and a half that many Hindus, the general educational status of the Christian group is so superior that they have already had a significance for surpassing their numbers in India's first step towards its national future. With realization of independence came a feeling of responsibility among the small literate group such as had not been possible, apparently, among these same people so long as they felt themselves under a foreign yoke. A spontaneous movement arose in many parts of the country to teach the people to read and write, and in hundreds of villages individual literates, under their own stimulus, set about doing this. The results were soon impressive. And, since literacy is so much higher in the Christian group than elsewhere, the Christians were an outstanding force in this movement.

Figures on such things for India are largely estimations. It is estimated that literacy among Christians is 25 per cent, while for India as a whole it is certainly less than 10 per cent. Among women only two per cent are literate, and of these two per cent many are in the Christian group, and a great many more are the product of the Christian primary schools, high schools and colleges. These few figures alone indicate how much responsibility rests upon a very few people until a generation is educated sufficiently to enable compulsory education laws to become more than a gesture.

One of the fortunate aspects of a century's missionary effort in India is that, as a group, the Christians are representative of the people as a whole. They demonstrate that Christianity, and education as it has been fostered under Protestant auspices, can accomplish with all types of India's people in two to three generations.

So one of the questions which faces many hundreds of local church groups this fall is not whether to continue missionary enterprise in India, but whether we are to meet the increased opportunities which are before us today in the 39 Christian colleges of India and Pakistan as Government takes more and more responsibility for lower schools. For it is inconceivable that Americans who have long been back of this type of educational effort and who know something of the situation there today should not be stimulated by the challenge which the ideological conflict sweeping over Asia now creates for Christianity. The Communist-Capitalist, totalitarian-democratic issues which grapple with each other elsewhere in Asia are to be found in India, too. True, Christians differ among themselves on these and other issues. But Indian Christians know this well—Christianity thrives on opposition; nor can it be encompassed within any one political or economic form.

An unfortunate aspect of missionary effort as India faces the problems peculiar to India is that that, especially in the colleges, there has been a great degree of freedom as to whether students accepted Christianity or clung to their own religion. This does not mean that Christianity has not been presented challengingly—it has, but extreme compulsion in any form has not existed. Yet because of this Protestants are not feared as proselyters and are welcomed today in all kinds of newly organized efforts.

Especially in education problems where Christians have had a type of practical experience lacking to those whose work has been with groups composed largely of higher-caste students, the Christian group is a stabilizing force. Add to this that so many of the non-Christians have received their education in Christian colleges, and it will be realized that the extent of the influence of these colleges is much wider than the numerical strength of their student bodies may indicate.

In numbers they are not great: the figures show a total student strength in the 39 colleges of slightly more than 60,000, but the calibre of their work has been constructive—surely it is not exaggeration to say that at times it has been magnificent. Take, for example, the Vellore Christian Medical College. Founded in 1918 by Dr. Ida Scudder (but now with a Hindu Christian Principal: Dr. Hilda Lazarus) this college with its hospitals and School of Nursing, has been supported by the united effort of scores of Protestant groups in the United States, Great Britain, Canada, Sweden, Denmark and Australia. It gives a degree equal to our own American M. D., and is affiliated with the University of Madras.

Founded originally to train women, it has become co-educational in an attempt to fit better into India's present educational program. This does not mean that it has reached the place where it begins to fill the need for women doctors. It was never big. Even yet its graduates number only a few hundred. Ten times as many women apply at Vellore as can be accepted. Four hundred tried for the ten openings available last year when the college was first opened to men. Here is a Christian college without which India would be infinitely poorer. In this college, incidentally, the student body is preponderantly Christian.

The work of the Nurses' Training School at Vellore is no whit less important to India today than is the Medical School. It is difficult for Americans to visualize the practice of medicine without nurses as a co-operating group far outnumbering doctors. Yet in India there is still but one nurse to every six doctors or Licensed Medical Practitioners. With only two per cent literacy among Indian women, and with the inhibitions under which they have lived, the reason for the dearth of nurses is not hard to find.

Despite the many fortunate aspects of a country's missionary effort in India, there is a very sad aspect, too. No matter what prodigious effort is made to advance the work this year, it will be all too little for the needs. This fact must be faced. In full acceptance of the truth it will be possible for hundreds of American church groups, then, to set about their fund-raising campaigns knowing that contributions in the past have been woefully inadequate, too, yet they are bearing unmistakable results in creating indissoluble brotherly ties between people of the East and West in building for world peace, if the world is ever to have peace.

Maybe there are special virtues in

SUFFOLK LETTER.

These sixteen Suffolk years have become sacred to many of us. In them Ann has grown to nineteen, John to seventeen; and their father and mother have put in a slice of their best years. The Suffolk Church has grown, too. It has held firmly to its harmonious spirit, and studiously avoided divisions and splits. It feels the fifty years of the late beloved Dr. W. W. Staley still. And it grows in the strength of the ten strong years given it by Dr. H. S. Hardeastle. It stands now at the threshold of unusual strength and growth. With the coming of a new administration which will organize the church on the basis of a more systematic ministry to all the homes of the church, and larger service to the children and youth of the Sunday school by someone trained to give full time and thought to that work, there will be greater progress. The church is willing to provide such help and is to be commended for the same.

It needs a pastor, a full time assistant, a parish visitor and a full time secretary in addition to the part time financial secretary which it now has. It is well able to have same. It has a full time minister of music, and four choirs and a paid soloist. It has a large number of most loyal volunteer helpers. If the church were staffed as above suggested it has the possibility of surprisingly great growth and progress.

It has loyalty. It has devotion to the whole church. It has its rootage in one of the finest small cities of the South, surrounded by large and prosperous rural churches of the same denomination, rural churches made up of people of real leadership in church and state. It has a very large number of children and young people. Today, the third Sunday in June, with many families away for the week-end, out of the city at their parents' old home, and elsewhere there, there were sixty-one cradle and nursery babies actually present; seventy-eight beginners and primary pupils—one hundred thirty-nine little folks actually present on this hot Sunday, with a total present of four hundred sixty-one.

During these years we saw more than two hundred of our young men in the service during World War II, shared deeply the anxiety of their families, visited them in hours of sorrow, and wrote these young people hundreds of letters. But with all this, as we look back across these sixteen Suffolk years, it is what these dear people have done for us that stands out in our hearts. They have stood by us in days and months of sickness in our own family. They have never let us down. They have kept laughter and song in our souls, and have multiplied our joys beyond measure. They have given our children love and have caused them to feel that there is nothing odd about being a preacher's children. They have given us a place to serve and have been patient with the sort of service we could render. All told they have made these sixteen great years, and we can now say with simplicity of words and singleness of heart we love them everyone.

REV BEN JOE EARP IMPROVING.

Those who know Ben Joe Earp will be delighted to hear that his condition is improving. He is still in the hospital, room 208, Boulevard Unit, High Point, North Carolina, and can not yet sit up, nor feed himself, but he has been taken out from under the oxygen tent.

Friends who slipped into the hospital during those days in late May and early June know the seriousness of this illness. The doctor seemed to realize that only a miracle could keep the weak, greatly enlarged heart beating.

Back last October, the doctor had warned Ben Joe to take things steady and above all not to worry about anything. Conscientious preachers, however, all plan to die in their pulpits, and so Ben Joe kept going right on, in spite of physical warnings; in spite of the doctor's anxiety.

The heart attack was accompanied by congestion in both lungs. Injections of digitalis to give the heart needed strength and anesthetics to ease pain kept Ben Joe in a semi-conscious sleep most of the time. The doctor did not spare him the truth about the seriousness of his condition and Ben Joe spoke quietly to close relatives about necessary funeral arrangements.

But, you know, many people were praying fervently for Ben Joe. Neighboring churches in High Point had special prayer during worship services; members of his own congregation prayed for their minister; sorrowing, tearful pleas accompanied petitions which trembled near God's throne; churches formerly ministered unto asked that their former pastor be restored to his health.

Then suddenly the miracle did happen! People marvelled at the change.

Many people have shared in making Ben Joe's stay in the hospital a little easier. Get-well wishes have poured in from many states; the hospital room has stayed bright with flowers; visitors have clasped the hand of the sick man and whispered quick words of love.

During the time that Ben Joe has been away from his church in High Point, many instances have come to light which show the fruitfulness of his ministry. His pastor life included much of the work-a-day world in its work-a-day week: a garbage collector knocked at the back door of the parsonage to ask about the preacher. "I don't go to his church," he explained, "but I miss seeing him around. He's a good man." The church janitor explained, "I used to have to replace those back church windows on the average of once a week where the boys knocked them out. But since Preacher Earp came, the windows don't get broke no more." Two little girls came to the door. "Here's a flower we grew ourselves. We want the preacher to have it." One lady remarked, "If he'd just get well and live among us—that would mean so much. He makes us feel steady." Nurses in the hospital are hurt to have to go into his room because he has visited others there so much. A young bride—pianist at Albemarle—whose marriage Ben Joe was prevented from performing interrupted her wedding trip to visit the hospital and sent a white floral arrangement from the church decorations.

Various leaders of our conference have showed their appreciation of Ben Joe's work by sticking close to the family during these days of anguish. Ben Joe's pulpit has been occupied each Sunday, and the people of the church in High Point have done a wonderful job of carrying on

THE STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FUND.

Perhaps you thought that you had heard the last of the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education at Elon College. Not so. In fact, you will never hear the last of this memorial. It is a permanent fund established by the church in recognition of three of our great souls. True, you may hear the last of efforts to build the fund to $100,000. We hope that you will, and that this appeal will be silenced at an early date. More than $100,000 has been pledged for the establishment of this memorial but only $85,512.88 have been paid in cash. The college has advanced the remaining $14,487.12 to complete the fund so that it might begin to work for the students enrolled in our Christian Education Department in the name of the college. The $14,487.12 in unpaid pledges have been pledged by individuals and churches. Money may be a little scarce and harder to get hold of than usual. Should this be true with the individuals and churches that have made their pledges, don't think for a minute that it is not true with Elon College. The college is dependent upon student fees paid by individuals and contributions from churches that are likewise paid by individuals, and when individuals fail to give as generously as usual, it is inevitable that the college suffers.

Our expansion program is in full force and it does cost money, a lot of money, to keep it going. At present, we face the necessity of repairing and redecorating Whitley Auditorium. This will be an expensive job. Miss Ruth Jahnsen of Raleigh, North Carolina, has sent a voluntary contribution for this purpose. It was certainly thoughtful of her and expressed an interest in an improvement that is need badly. I wonder if there are not many others throughout the church who would like to follow Miss Johnson's example. These repairs must be made during the summer months. The plan is to begin Monday, June 27. It will be necessary to start this early if the work is to be completed by September 1.

In addition to these repairs practically every dormitory, on and off the campus, will of necessity be renovated before the opening of school. If we had new dormitories the expense of upkeep would not be so great.

Work on the gymnasium is progressing satisfactorily. Indications are that it will be completed by early fall. It will be necessary to raise a minimum of $100,000 in cash by the time this building is completed. We hope to complete the gymnasium and dedicate it, to the physical training and health of the students of Elon College, without debt. This is a high stake and will be a difficult job but it can be done and we are the folks who can do it. It will be done if every individual will do his share, no more or no less. Elon College has a great constituency. As the operations, the efficiency, and the progress of the institution are known to its constituency, the constituency will respond to the needs of the college generously.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The Southern Convention has undertaken to give definite support to the college through the Sunday schools and churches of the Convention. Each church is asked for a definite amount. The amount may be paid monthly, quarterly, semi-annually, or annually. Of course, whenever contributions are received by the college the college is grateful but if the support could be given monthly, it would mean much more to the college. Its bills are made during the month but are expected to be paid at the end of the month. If our sources of support could be realized monthly the program would go much more smoothly. I know that our Sunday schools and churches are anxious to give their support to the college when it means more provided it is convenient for them to give such support regularly and in advance of the close of the conference year. Elon College appreciates greatly the support of the Sunday schools and churches of the Southern Convention.

of religious education in the public schools.

"We must keep sectarianism out of our schools, but that does not necessitate the stripping them of religion," he has frequently commented. "When the public schools ignore religion, it conveys to our children the suggestions that religion is without truth or value."

Lack of proper Christian education for adults has similarly drawn his criticism. He once told a meeting of the New Jersey Synod of Presbyterians: "Our problems today are problems of adult education. . . . The Christian adult education we need is such a radical transformation that it warrants the name of conversion."

The son of a Lutheran minister, he received his earliest theological training in his father's church in Pennsylvania. At the age of eleven he was a special newspaper correspondent to write reports on his father's sermons for the local paper.

He graduated from Gettysburg College in 1900 and for the next two years attended the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Gettysburg. In 1903 he was ordained a Lutheran minister with his father participating in the ceremony.

His first pastorate was the First Lutheran Church of Bridgeport, Connecticut, and he divided his working week between Bridgeport and New Haven where he was doing graduate work at Yale. In 1904 he resigned this pastorate to permit the church to obtain a full-time minister, and in the following year he received his Ph.D. degree from Yale.

He had an ambition at this time to be both minister and educator. The problem was resolved quite simply by combining the two professions, and he has been in the field of religious education ever since.

From 1905 to 1916 he was professor of philosophy at Carleton College in Minnesota, and for the last five years of this period he was dean of the college. He started a department of education at Carleton and in 1913 he was president of the Minnesota Educational Association.

When he came to Yale in 1916, he transferred his ministerial standing to the Congregational Church, remarking at the time that "I am glad that the freedom of the Congregational fellowship can embrace a Lutheran in theology."

But writing about the different de-

PROTESTANT MISSIONS.

Protestants in mission areas have increased over 200 per cent in the past 23 years, a report issued by the International Missionary Council, with headquarters at 156 Fifth Avenue, has revealed.

The report is the first since 1936 on the status of the churches in missionary areas, as well as in other parts of the world. The survey, covering 120 countries and island groups outside the United States, Canada, New Zealand, Australia and Europe, showed that Protestant numbers jumped from 6,517,697 in 1925 to 25,341,283 in 1948.

At the same time, the report said that Catholics in similar areas now number 130,135,533 as compared to 11,595,803 Orthodox Church members.

Numerically, Protestants showed the greatest gains in South Africa and India-Pakistan, where over the 23-year period they increased from 714,013 to 5,467,281 and from 580,212 to 4,100,224 in the respective countries.

In South America, the largest gains were reported in Brazil, Argentina and Mexico. In these countries the increases were from 69,527 to 1,657,524 in Brazil, from 3,350 to 259,056 in Argentina and from 31,138 to 265,148 in Mexico.

Missionary activity in the southwest Pacific islands was recorded in the Solomon Islands, where Protestants increased from zero to 54,173 in the 23-year period, in Micronesia, from zero to 141,911, and in Indonesia from 300,529 to 1,737,866.

According to the report, the entire Protestant missionary staff now numbers 192,987. This includes 25,989 ordained ministers, 128,713 laymen and 38,285 women. Ordained ministers from foreign countries numbered 8,883 as compared to 17,106 nationals. The report revealed a much higher percentage of national workers as contrasted to foreign employees.

Countries with the largest number of mission agencies and churches were South Africa, with 82 mission groups and denominations, India-Pakistan with 101 plus 37 theological seminaries and 79 Bible schools, and China with 81 mission groups including 50 theological seminaries and 160 Bible schools.

The total number of worship places in the areas surveyed was 141,169.

The only country to show a loss in the Protestant population was Turkey, where Protestants declined from 15,283 in 1925 to 2,900 in 1948. Other countries in the Near East all showed increases, including Syria and Lebanon, where Protestants went from 3,735 in 1925 to 21,527 in 1948. During the same period, Palestine and Transjordan registered an increase from 3,136 to 16,115, Arabia from 7 to 52, Egypt from 41,006 to 163,190, and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan from 244 to 19,442.

In the Far East Korea showed an increase from 201,063 to 743,773, Manchuria from 245 to 54,938 and China from 594,086 to 1,404,178.

The survey will be available in book form this summer. Prepared by E. J. Bingle, joint secretary for survey of the International Missionary Council, London, it will be known as "The World Christian Handbook." The Survey will be presented in three sections, including 100 pages of text, 100 pages of statistics, and 100 pages of a directory of mission agencies, churches, and international organizations. It will be published by the World Dominion Press, London, and distributed in this country by the Friendship Press, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City. It will sell for $7.50.

ANNUAL MISSIONARY CONFERENCE AT NORTHFIELD.

More than a score of outstanding missionary leaders from Europe, Asia, Canada and the United States will take part in the annual Northfield Missionary Conference to be held at East Northfield, Massachusetts, July 5 to 13.

The conference is sponsored by the Foreign Missions Conference, the Home Missions Council, the Missionary Education Movement, and the United Council of Church Women.

The program this year will include seminars, workshops and formal meetings for women and girls between the ages of 16 and 24, as well as program chairmen, missionary leaders, and presidents of church societies.

Topics to be discussed include "Cooperating for a Christian America,"

"Japan," "World-Order," and special workshops devoted to audio-visual aids, along with informal gatherings with missionaries and nations.

Discussion leaders include Miss Edith Lowry, of the Home Missions Council; Dr. Ray Oshimo, Dean of Doshisha University in Japan; Dr. E. Fay Campbell, of the board of Christian Education, Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., and Mr. Roger Arnold of Union Theological Seminary Music Department.

Other scheduled speakers are the Rev. Dr. Gilbert Q. LeSourd, of the Missionary Education Movement; Miss Sue Weddell, of the Foreign Missions Conference, and Miss Mabel Head of the United Council of Church Women.

Special programs for the girls' department will be directed by Miss Marion Van Horne, youth leader of the Reformed Church in America.

Mrs. E. E. McClintock, secretary of the National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women, is general chairman of the conference.

Registration fee is $4.00 for girls and $5.00 for adults. Board and room for the conference ranges from $23 to $35 per person. For registration blanks and complete information, write to Miss Edith Lowry, co-executive secretary of the Home Missions Council, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

EVANGELISTIC PROJECT IN JAPAN.

The Rev. Dr. Luman J. Shafer of New York, secretary for Japan, China and Africa of the Board of Foreign Missions, Reformed Church in America, left New York on June 15 for a six-month stay in Japan.

The announcement was made by the Interboard Committee for Christian Work in Japan, an interdenominational Protestant agency composed of eight major denominations.

The announcement said that Dr. Shafer will assist the Church of Christ in Japan to develop a program aimed to take full advantage of the present opportunity for evangelism, adding that "while every indication points to Japan as the most promising country for Christian work, the situation demands not only greater missionary zeal, but a vastly increased missionary staff."

Dr. Shafer, who spent 23 years in Japan as a missionary, was a member of a four-man delegation of leading church men to visit Japan shortly after V-J Day. The group which in-

WOMAN'S CONVENTION AND SCHOOL OF MISSIONS A SUCCESS.

From 2:00 p. m. Monday afternoon until 12:00 noon Wednesday, women from North Carolina and Virginia were spiritually and mentally fed and refreshed, at the biennial session of the Woman's Convention and the annual School of Missions, held at Elon College.

Elon College is certainly the place to have such a meeting. The campus is beautiful at this time of year, and even our Moderator, Miss Helen Kenyon, remarked about the fine appearance of our college and campus.

Enrollment.

Enrollment was 150. This included five guests, 16 from the Valley, 59 from Eastern Virginia, and 70 from North Carolina. From the Valley, nine churches were represented by nine delegates and five holding Life Memberships (this makes him or her an official delegate). In Eastern Virginia, 21 churches were represented by 16 persons holding Life Memberships and 38 regular delegates. In North Carolina, 28 churches were represented by 13 holding Life Memberships and 34 regular delegates. There were 25 officers of Convention or Conference and 105 delegates not holding office. The largest number was from Suffolk (10) and the next largest from Elon College (7).

Helen Kenyon Speaks.

An unforgettable experience came Monday evening when Miss Helen Kenyon, Moderator of the General Council, spoke. Miss Kenyon held her audience at rapt attention as she told about being "A woman in the pew," not knowing much about our Mission Boards when she first became a member and how much she had to learn. She impressed us all with the fact that we can all learn about these things and it is possible for any woman in the pew to be a national officer, even Moderator.

Miss Kenyon spoke of the merger and also of the suit being brought by those in opposition. She stated that the merger will be a stronger one because of those against it. She said that these against the merger have made those for it study even harder and learn more about what we should do to make our merger a good one.

Speaking on "Freedom and Fellowship," Miss Kenyon spoke of the responsibilities of freedom in the church and the joys of fellowship. "There is no must in Fellowship," she said. "We can agree to disagree if only we strive for the Spirit." In conclusion, she spoke of the Moderator's Cross, which she showed to the audience, and told of her being commissioned as Moderator. When the cross was put around her neck, she was told, "If you will carry the cross, it will carry you." "The cross," she said, "is love, and we should achieve a higher quality of thought and spirit that we may love one another."

Bible and Mission Studies.

Miss Mary Frances Thelen of Randolph-Macon College, Lynchburg, Va., gave some highlights of the Gospel of John, our Bible Study for the coming year, on Monday afternoon. All thought this was both inspiring and enlightening. She did a very fine job of interpreting the Gospel and comparing it to other gospels, pointing out spots for us to look for various things.

Our Mission Study for 1949-50 was explained by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill. Miss Coghill was introduced by Dr. W. T. Scott, who announced that she will soon become the new Educational Secretary for the Southern Convention, assisting with women's work, young people's work, and general promotion of Christian Education in the Convention.

Miss Coghill did a splendid job of presenting the mission studies for the coming year, recommending books best suited to the subjects. Her recent travels in Europe and Asia and her intimate acquaintance with our missionaries made it even more interesting.

She gave as our theme for home study "Cooperation for a Christian Nation," and stated that we need this in America more now than ever before because we need to get together and cooperate more at home in order to be more effective in other countries. Our foreign study will be "Japan." She explained that we are able to have books of such good quality for our study material each year because 34 different denominations cooperate in planning and writing them.

Mrs. Ould Speaks.

Mrs. E. R. Ould, of Roanoke, Va., was probably the most entertaining of the speakers. She had her audience in such gales of laughter that some were still holding their sides when she finished. She was such an artist in presenting her ideas that the women were thoroughly entertained while they were receiving valuable instruction in the art of home-making. Mrs. Ould, mother of three and grandmother "seven times," has

SUMMER STUDIES.

To put into action on a world scale the principles established by the Amsterdam Assembly, over seventy members of the Central Committee of the World Council from the five continents will meet at Chichester, England, July 9 to July 15.

Making the announcement, Dr. W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the Council, declared that the delegates would be called upon to state what their member churches expected of the newly-formed Council, particularly in the field of international relations.

"Churches throughout the world have been deeply affected by the east-west cleavage and restrictions of religious liberty," Dr. Visser 't Hooft said. "At Chichester we must strive to discover some common lines of action that will lessen these corroding tensions."

In view of the grave social issues which need to be faced by the churches, the Central Committee plans to inaugurate a study of "Christian Action in a Secular Society. This study will revolve around that key concept—The Responsible Society—a community of persons responsible to God and to each other," Dr. Visser 't Hooft explained. "What are the principles of such a society, and how can it be achieved?"

The Central Committee will also receive reports from study commissions on "Evangelism in Modern Mass Society," an inquiry endorsed by the Conference of USA Member Churches of the Council at Evanston, Illinois, in March, and another on "The Biblical Message to the Modern World." These study commissions will meet at Oxford, England, from June 29 to July 5.

Other meetings held at that time will be the Council's Commission on Faith and Order (Chichester, July 15-20), an executive session of the Commission of the Churches on International Affairs (Oxford, July 4-6), and a joint meeting of executives and delegates of the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council (Oxford, July 2-4.)

CONFERENCE FOR ADULTS.

"Leaders of leaders" in adult work and missionary education will meet for a special interdenominational conference at Conference Point Camp, Williams Bay, Wisconsin, July 24-31, according to Rev. Richard E. Lentz, conference director and director of adult work and family education of the International Council of Religious Education.

Dr. Frank Laubach, literacy expert and missionary statesman, and Dr. Paul H. Vieth, Yale Divinity School professor of Christian education, are among the outstanding speakers and leaders.

Also included are Miss Genevive Brown, Disciples of Christ; Miss Mabel Head, United Council of Church Women; Dr. Harry S. Myers, United Stewardship Council; Rev. Donald Pielstick, Home Missions Council; Dr. Karl Quimby, Methodist Church; Dr. Leslie C. Sayre, Missionary Education Movement; Dr. Gilbert Schroer, Evangelical and Reformed Church.

Dr. Walter Spangler, St. Luke's Lutheran Church, Park Ridge, Illinois, is program chairman. Miss Dorothy Stevens, Department of Missionary Education, Northern Baptist Convention, New York City, is dean.

Courses and addresses will be given on "Cooperation for a Christian Nation," "World Order and the Churches," "Stewardship," "The Use of the Bible with Adults," "Japan," "Methods and Materials in the Christian Education of Young Adults," "Community and Christian Education," "Evangelism," "The Dynamics of Religion in the Family," "The Philosophy of Our Mission," "Missionary Education Methods," and "Adult Work Field Program."

Other special features include a Japanese festival, a panel on the topic "Behind the Iron Curtain," literature and visual aids exhibits, creative worship experiences, denominational meetings, interest groups, and fellowship and recreation.

"The conference will offer a preview of methods, courses, conditions, and literature that will be used popularly in the churches tomorrow," Mr. Lentz announced. "State, district, regional, county, and city leaders of men's work and women's work and missionary secretaries and pastors are especially urged to attend."

Further information may be secured from Mr. Lentz, 206 S. Michigan Avenue, Chicago 4, Illinois.

money which has come from such free and uncompelled acceptance of responsibility—in the Christian democratic way—as has been the way of foreign missionary societies which have supported Christian education in India for several generations. Sophisticated people have laughed, sometimes, at the way pennies were gathered and counted. Yet count as you will, the sums that have poured into Asia by lump sums of tens of thousands—even by the millions—by other groups for other purposes, and they do not exceed, if indeed they approximate, the effect of the cumulative effort and often genuine love which have poured bit by bit into a piece of work in international good will such as exists in India today as a result of foreign missionary work.

The type of luke-warm Protestant who once slyly laughed at this effort, and rationalized his refusal to put his own ten dollar bill on the collection plate by saying we have no right to impose our religious beliefs on others, is now an Old Look mind in a New Look age. Enough of us are acquainted with the facts to know that, although there have been missionary enterprises where the promise of materialistic advantages was implied as a price of conversion, that type of missionary work is now distinctly out of date.

The truth is that in the missionary group of past years there were both progressive and unprogressive elements just as there were in groups at home. The progressive element in India has contributed so well that Indians welcome missionaries still. It may well be that business, as is often charged, has followed the missionary and, in many cases, nullified the Christ the missionary taught, but a progressive educational seed has been planted wherever Protestant missionaries have lived and worked. And, education added to religion is the hope of the world today.

Ever strive to treat everybody, everywhere, as though nothing unpleasant had ever taken place.—Selected.

Youth at Work in the Church

INTERDENOMINATIONAL CONFERENCES.

More than a thousand Protestant young people will attend seven regional interdenominational conferences this summer to secure further training for cooperative church activities in local communities, according to Rev. Dennis Savage, director of youth council services of the United Christian Youth Movement, which sponsors the conference.

"Now eight years in their present form, the conferences are among the most significant projects in American church life," Mr. Savage stated.

"Thousands of young people have made and strengthened friendships with other young people across denominational lines. They have gone back to their churches and communities with a real vision and understanding of the ecumenical church. These conferences have had a significant influence on many of the promising church leaders of tomorrow."

The conferences are scheduled as follows:

Southern Conference, Kings Mountain, N. C.—June 26-July 2.

Southwestern Conference, Camp Crusis, Tex.—July 10-16.

Pacific Northwest Conference, Seabeck, Wash.—July 25-August 1.

Pacific Southwest Conference, Big Bear Lake, Calif.—August 1-7.

Rocky Mountain Conference, Geneva, Colo.—August 7-14.

Eastern Conference, Lake Winnepesaukee, N. H.—August 8-20.

Central Conference, Lake Geneva, Wis.—August 15-27.

Outstanding church youth leaders have been secured to lead seminars at the conferences. Program highlights include Bible study, worship, recreation, interest groups, and denominational and council meetings.

Seminar subjects include: Christian Vocations, Intergroup Relations, Evangelism, High Points of Protestantism, Christian World Citizenship, Christian Witness in Education and the Ecumenical Church. Each conference will have two or more workshops in organizing, promoting and program-building of local and state youth councils.

Young people between 16 and 25 years who have been active in denominational or interdenominational youth work are eligible to attend. A few adult leaders of youth will also be accepted. Further information may be secured from Mr. Savage, 206 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago 4, Ill.

CAREFUL! YOU'LL BLOW UP!

ly, that insofar as he or she knows, they haven't a worry in the world, except worries as they pertain to their own blood pressure, heart disease and over-burdened kidneys. Generally this is of course simply a projection of worries towards these physical manifestations.

However, such an individual often finds it quite easy to talk about himself in the presence of his minister, not as a medical case, but as an individual. Often this will permit some insight into conflict situations, and lead to real relief of those anxieties which are closely related to his hypertensive cardiovascular condition.

This will be considered in such an interview that an individual would have difficulty in relating to his condition. He is aware nevertheless that after putting certain facts into words, he feels relieved.

Mr. Benson has high blood pressure—he's been doctoring for over a year now. He has been given every common type of treatment for his disease, but he is still a sick man. He goes to the doctor every week and says: "Doctor, can't you do something more for me?" His doctor invariably replies: "There is only one thing you can do, Mr. Benson, and that is—take it easy, don't get yourself upset." Excellent advice, this; it's a shame it cannot be administered as a capsule or a pill, for that is what his physician is particularly trained to do.

Doctor Edward Weiss wrote for the Medical Doctor regarding this problem: "We are too much concerned with physical measurements in hypertension—the blood pressure figure, the percentage of renal function, the size of the heart, the electrocardiographic tracing, the amount of retinal sclerosis all of which are essential in the study of the hypertensive person, but give incomplete information from the standpoint of the total evaluation of the patient. They should represent the beginning, not the end of the study. We are too little concerned with emotional life, which may hold the key to the satisfactory management of the hypertensive patient."

What are some of the anxieties which may have so much to do with certain apparently purely physical ailments?

In referring to sin the "general confession" says: "We have left undone things which we ought to have done, and we have done those things which we ought not to have done, and there is no health in it." The man who first penned those words had a remarkable insight, for guilt feelings or the desire for revenge, or fantasies of revenge or guilt, are often found to be underlying and aggravating many physical disorders.

Social maladjustments or the inability to assume what one may consider to be his rightful place in the community; thwarted ambitions; desires unsatisfied for public approval may be the spark which sets on the fire, or may add fuel to an already fiercely burning fire of disease.

Many times the person who is unable to control his anger and strives to repress strong impulses finds his whole being racked by the conflict. How many times have you heard people say: "I try to control myself," "I just have to take hold of myself and use every ounce of energy to refrain from saying things that I know I should not" or, "I always give in, but afterwards, I am furious."

Reproach or resentment is apt to arouse tremendous emotional conflicts in an individual. The major problem for these people is the working off their rage on the one hand, and on the other the doing of things well enough to keep themselves liked and admired in their own social community.

Fear of failure upsets many individuals. They may be quite adequate in what they are doing, but always there hangs over them an intangible feeling that somehow they are going to fail. Perhaps you have said to such people, when you have become aware of their feelings: "For goodness sake, don't get your blood pressure up . . ." and haven't realized how close you were coming to the actual fact.

A mother was recently admitted to her local hospital with a blood pressure in the vicinity of 290/170. That may not mean anything at all to you, but medically it indicates that she was almost at the point of blowing up. Within a day or two after she had

THE SONGBOOK OF THE BIBLE.

LESSON I—JULY 3, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Serve the Lord with gladness, Come before his presence with singing.—Ps. 100:2.

LESSON: Psalm 1, 33:12-15; 67; 100.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ps. 145:1-10.

The Songbook of the Bible.

The Psalms are just that—the songbook, or the hymnbook of the Bible. Here is a collection of poems—the Psalms are in poetic form in the original—to be set to music and to be used in the worship of God. The Psalms run the whole gamut of human experience, all the highlights and the shadows, all the victories and defeats, all the hopes and the fears, all the joys and the sorrows, all the sin and the saintliness, all the doubts and the faith, all the passions and the purity of human nature, are to be found in this great collection of poems and songs. There are a number of national songs included in the one hundred fifty in the total collection, but for the most part the psalms are personal. Indeed the psalms are essentially personal. If one wants to find Old Testament religion in its most personal and most intense form, let him read the Psalms.

Like the hymns in any hymnbook, some of the authors are known, and the authorship is shown in connection with the psalm. But like many songs and poems in modern books, many of the authors are unknown. It is generally admitted that David wrote or composed some of the psalms, perhaps many of them. But there are many, many psalms that were not written by David. As a matter of fact, like any great piece of literature, it does not make any difference who wrote the psalms. Their value is independent of their authorship. Perhaps the best known of all the psalms is the Shepherd Psalm (23) and it is quite likely that David wrote that. These nameless and unknown and unknowable men have left a priceless heritage not only for the Jewish people, but for Christians and for humanity at large. Those of us who follow this quarter's lessons will find much to enrich our inner lives and to strengthen our spirits.

A Song of the Godly Man.

The first psalm contrasts in a striking way, the difference between the godly and the ungodly man. It sets forth the characteristics of the godly man, not only in what he does not do, but in what he does do. There is significance in the order of the devolution of the ungodly man. First of all "he walks in the counsel of the ungodly," then he "stands in the way of sinners," and finally he "sits in the seat of the scorner or the scoffer." He first of all gets into the wrong company, then he shares their wrongdoing, then he becomes cynical and scornful of the good life. There are the steps by which many a man and woman, young and old, has finally walked into the way that leadeth to destruction. Evil companions corrupt good manners. People who go with the gang find it difficult not to do as the gang does. And when one gets into the way of evil he creates a defense mechanism, he becomes cynical and scornful of good and the godly. "Walking, standing, sitting"—there you have it.

The life of the good man, like a tree planted by a river, is rooted deeply, and draws nourishment from the unseen. "Like a tree planted by the rivers of water—what a picture. Here is a landscape in which everything is brown and bare because of the summer heat or the drought. Vegetation is dead or dying. And here stands a tree, fresh, green, alive, fruitful. It is planted by a river. Its tap root and its feeder roots go deep and far, and steadily, silently it draws its life from deep and unseen resources. One reason why so many people have so little fruitage is because they have so little rootage. In the case of the godly man, his life is nourished by the word of Jehovah—it is his delight and on it he doth meditate by day and by night. And because there is inner life there is abundant fruitage. He brings forth his fruit in his season.

But the ungodly are not so. They are like the chaff which the wind bloweth away. It was a familiar figure to the people of that day. Here is a man separating the wheat from the chaff. He has a threshing floor, a flat place on top of a hill or a high piece of ground. He takes a forkful of straw and throws it high in the air. The stiff wind does the rest. It catches the chaff and the light waste straw and blows them off to the side, while the good grain falls back to the floor in a steadily increasing pile. Life is a winnowing process. The ungodly cannot ultimately stand. They will be doomed at the judgment—they will not be able to stand. Nor will they have any part in the congregation of the righteous.

A Song of Thanksgiving and a Missionary Hymn.

Psalm 67 is a combination of a missionary hymn and a song of thanksgiving. The writer in happy mood calls upon all the people of the earth to bless Jehovah and to praise His name. For this great God will make his salvation known unto all the nations, and He will judge them with justice and with equity.

Furthermore there is a call to thanksgiving. The earth has yielded its increase, crops have been abundant, there is enough and to spare for all. Let the people praise God who hath so generously and graciously blessed the peoples of the earth.

A Song of Praise and Thanksgiving.

The notes of praise and thanksgiving are recurring and constant notes in the psalms. Indeed the psalms come out of the overflow of life. Again and again the writer invited his people to join with him in praising God for His goodness and in thanking God for His generosity. It is significant, too, how much of a universal element there is in the psalms. The psalmists had a great God as well as a good God. He was the God of all the earth. He was the Creator of the whole earth. He was the Shepherd of His people.

We need to read the Psalms. Too many of us are sighing Christians. We ought to be singing Christians. And as we read these songs of these men, many of whom wrote out of even tragic experiences, but who in these tragic experiences found that God was a very present help in trouble, perhaps there will be a song in our own hearts, and a song on our lips. It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord and to sing praises unto his name.

The spectacle of a nation praying is more awe-inspiring than the explosion of an atomic bomb. The force of prayer is greater than any possible combination of man-controlled powers, because prayer is man's greatest means of tapping the infinite resources of God. Invoking God's might and mercy is our most efficacious means of guaranteeing peace and security to the harassed and helpless people of the earth.—J. Edgar Hoover.

proved herself a very popular lecturer in other places, and she certainly upheld her reputation at Elon. She said, "It is not easy to live as a Christian in a family with the same people. Christian home-making is an art." "The greatest artist in the world," she said, "is the one who can live artistically as a Christian in a family." "It is not 'contented' home-makers we need," she said, "but home-makers who are interested in whether their homes are functioning as they should." "We should send boys and girls out from our homes with an inside compulsion which helps them make the right decisions," she said. "Nothing is good simply because it is old, and nothing is bad simply because it is new. Old time religion was good enough in principle, but it will not work today in practice. The best way to make a family Christian is to be a Christian yourself," Mrs. Ould said.

Committees and Personnel.

Committees appointed for the Convention were:

Nominating—Mrs. R. T. Bradford, Miss Verdie Showalter, Mrs. M. T. Garren, Mrs. R. L. House, Mrs. W. J. Andes.

Finance—Mrs. J. G. Truitt, Mrs. Kenneth Register, Mrs. Garland Spratley.

Recommendations—Mrs. R. A. Whitten, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Mrs. W. V. Leathers.

Publicity—Mrs. M. W. Andes, Mrs. W. J. Andes.

Business Manager was Mrs. W. B. Williams; Registrar was Mrs. F. C. Lester; Hostess was Mrs. Wallace Truitt, and Dining Room Hostess was Mrs. R. W. Powell.

Resolutions in regard to the Staley Memorial Scholarship offered by the Woman's Convention to a college student were presented at the Wednesday morning session and adopted.

The report of the Finance Committee stated that our goal for the next biennium is $35,000, divided as follows: Eastern Virginia, $16,500; North Carolina, $16,500; Valley, $2,000.

Timothy Chang Speaks.

One of the highlights of the Convention came on Monday evening, when Timothy Chang of Duke University spoke to the group. He was greatly appreciated and enjoyed and the women were greatly pleased to see the results of our Life Memberships and Memorials money. Timothy brought news of our Shaowu mission and told some interesting details of the members of his family. Timothy is attending summer school at Duke.

Social—Business.

On Monday afternoon, the delegates were entertained at a reception given by Dr. and Mrs. L. E. Smith, though they were sorry to learn that Mrs. Smith could not attend because of illness. On Tuesday evening, the group inspected the new superintendent's home and were entertained by Dr. and Mrs. W. T. Scott. Again, the women were glad to see the results of their work.

Of course, the usual round of reports were made by the proper Convention officers and adopted, and some new policies were made. The report of Superintendent of Young People suggested that we consider a new plan of combining Young People's organizations of the Convention and Woman's Board into one organization. The report of the Superintendent of Children suggested that we consider the advisability of combining our Children's Department with the Children's Division of the Board of Christian Education of the Convention.

Music was furnished by Fletcher Moore, Mrs. J. L. Foster, Mary Lee Foster, Mrs. W. T. Scott and Mrs. W. N. Huff. Especially inspiring was the playing of Mrs. Foster, president of the Elon women. When Dr. F. C. Lester led the very inspiring and consecrating service of installing the new officers, Mrs. Foster gave the finishing touch to the service by playing, "Take the Name of Jesus With You," as all stood with bowed heads.

Morning worship services were led by Mrs. Charles Howell of Catawba College, Mrs. Tucker Humphries, and Mrs. Mark Andes. Evening vespers were led by Mrs. John G. Truitt and Mrs. R. L. House.

Mrs. M. T. Garren spoke of her trip to the National Assembly of the United Council of Church Women and gave an inspiring account of the happenings.

The offering on Monday evening went to buy sustaining memberships for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The amount was over seventy dollars.

On Tuesday evening, the Communion Service was held, and Miss Thelen gave the Communion Sermon. She was assisted in administering the Communion by Dr. Jesse H. Dollar.

As Dr. F. C. Lester gave the final charge to the new officers, and the audience stood to pledge their support of the officers for the coming biennium, the Woman's Convention and School of Missions came to a close and the women headed for home.

cluded the Rev. Dr. Walter Van Kirk, noted religious news commentator of the Federal Council of Churches, was sent to establish contact with Japanese Christians long cut off by the war, and to survey the status of the Church.

Dr. Shafer, who has played a leading role in promoting the idea of a Christian University in Japan, is actively associated with the Federal Council of Churches, the Foreign Missions Conference of North America, and the Missionary Education Movement.

The group sponsoring Dr. Shafer's tour includes The Methodist Church, the Reformed Church in America, the Evangelical and Reformed Church, the Evangelical United Brethren, the Disciples of Christ, the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., the Congregational Christian Church, and the United Church of Canada.

MISSIONARY PASSES.

Mrs. Henry Harrison Riggs for 26 years a missionary of the American Board in Turkey and Syria, died suddenly June 1, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. George Alan Rice of Waltham, Massachusetts.

Mrs. Riggs, who was 63 years old, was born in Hillsboro, New Hampshire, and educated at the Hartford School of Religion. She went to Istanbul, Turkey, as a religious education worker under the American Board in 1920 and there met and married the late Rev. Henry Harrison Riggs on May 7, 1920. Mrs. Riggs was the former Annie M. Denison of Hillsboro, New Hampshire.

Mr. Riggs died in Jerusalem in 1943 as he was en route to his post under the American Board in Syria. Since this was during the war Mrs. Riggs remained in the U. S. A. and since 1945 has been serving as hostess of Barton House, one of the units in Auburndale, Massachusetts, of the Walker Missionary Homes.

A memorial service was held on Sunday afternoon, June 5, at 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon at the Walker Missionary Home, 144 Hancock St., with Rev. Chauncey Blossom, minister of the First Congregational Church in Auburndale, officiating.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

For nearly four months we have been coming to the Orphanage practically every day and spending Wednesday afternoons endeavoring to fill the shoes of the late Charles D. Johnston. At times it has been a sacrifice trying to keep this Institution moving along and my own business going, too. But by these visits we have learned to love the Orphanage and its work more dearly.

The people of our church have gotten into their minds that our treasury is over-flowing and no money is needed. It is true when we have made reports to the Convention we showed nice balances. But when we take time to investigate we find that the money is mostly ear-marked and we can only use the income derived therefrom. To be exact, money has been given for certain specific things; thus we cannot use it except for that for which it was given.

From time to time we have acquired additional lands, but in each case the money was given by some interested party or parties for the purchase of such tracts of land. When Mr. Johnston came to the Orphanage we only had approximately 100 acres of land; today we have about 275 acres, and could use more if we had it. To raise enough food and have adequate grazing pastures for our dairy cattle, it just takes land.

The repair program is going nicely. We have spent approximately $5,000, the larger part of this on one building. If we are to modernize this plant and give to our incoming Superintendent, Dr. John G. Truitt, what he needs to bring this Institution up on a par with like Institutions in our area, it is going to take money, and a lot of it. We have enough faith and friends and constituency in our Church people that when we are able to tell you of more of our needs, that the money will be forth-coming.

We wish to extend to each of you a personal invitation to visit this Home and see what we are trying to do.

entered the hospital, a chance for the better was noted in her condition. After a time, she was dismissed and went home. But she had not been there very long until she was readmitted.

This woman's personal history was one of continual anxiety and emotional stress. She had eloped when she was sixteen, which aroused the concern of her parents. She disapproved of her husband's work, she was constantly fearful of her eldest daughter's behaviour, thinking that she might repeat her own mistake. Her son was part of a gang of boys whom she very much disapproved, and her mother, who had come to live with her, was constantly attempting to exercise parental authority.

Now, much anxiety can be aborted by merely verbalizing, talking things through with someone who has insight and understanding as to how destructive these anxieties can be. Unfortunately, it does not help much to just talk these things over with anyone. In fact, this may only serve to increase one's anxieties.

One of the greatest contributions of the organized church has been to provide trained personnel which can serve as good listeners. This listening is dignified today by the title of "the listening ministry." Jesus introduced this type of ministry for did He not listen to Zaccheus, did He not listen to the woman at the well? Over and over again, we find Him trying to relieve the pressure of anxieties. He indicated His faith in this method in the words:

"Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life what you shall eat, or what you shall drink; nor yet for your body, what you shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body more than raiment?"

nominations, he said "Our agreements are far more important than our differences. To be a Christian is a great thing and a hard thing."

During his administration as Dean, the Yale Divinity School experienced its greatest expansion. In 1928 there were about 150 students studying for the Bachelor of Divinity degree. By 1948 that number had increased to 250. Even more impressive is the list of men who studied for their Ph.D. degree in religious education under Dean Weigle. More than 100 of these men are leaders of other schools and religious organizations.

Dean Weigle's work in improving theological education has not been limited to Yale. From 1930 to 1948 he was chairman of the executive committee of the American Association of Theological Schools. In 1936 this Association worked out standards of accreditation for theological schools, a policy which has brought on significant improvements in the professional education for ministers.

In 1935 he visited China at the invitation of the National Christian Council of China to study the facilities for theological education in that country. Accompanying him on that trip was his son, Richard D. Weigle, who had at that time been appointed executive secretary of Yale-in-China. Dean Weigle himself has been a member of the Board of trustees of Yale-in-China since 1930 and at present is its vice-president.

The eyes of America are on the future; but what use is that if those eyes are blinded? Unless we build our social structure today upon a more permanent foundation than the past it will not last beyond the lifetime of those who founded it. Charity, the realization of our brotherhood in God, is the only enduring foundation.—Robert E. Weeds, D. D.

A PULPIT PRAYER

Suggested for Use on the Fourth of July

By WILLIAM R. CATTON

Almighty God, thou hast taught us that righteousness exalteth a nation, and sin is a reproach to any people; that except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it. We pray thee this day that we, in all our building, may build righteously. Help us to lay the foundations of our national life on justice and truth. Help us to rear a structure that shall be a safe and happy home for all the people. May there be wise learning, a prosperous and fruitful industry, a free, a contented and joyful people within its walls.

Help us, help all the people of this land to know and love thee, who art the author of our liberty, the God our fathers honored. Through the long history of our nation thou hast been with us, guiding, instructing, inspiring. In difficulty, thou hast been our strength; in times of peril thou hast been our refuge. Through our doubts and confusions thou has lighted for our feet the way of truth. Even in those days we have forgotten thee, and have followed after strange gods, have worshipped Baal and Mammon, still thou hast not forgotten, nor forsaken us.

Can it be we are thy chosen people! Here we have so splendid a land for our inheritance. Here we dwell secure, while elsewhere, all about us, war and poverty and disaster immeasurably afflict our neighbors. Who are we to merit such good fortune! If, in the midst of all the sordid squalor, the sufferings and struggles of the world we are aloof, complacent and at ease, rebuke us, O our God for our indifference to the woes of needy people. Yea, we are thy chosen people. We are chosen to be thy servants. To whom much is given, of them, indeed, much shall be required!

Thou hast given us this rich land. Thou hast made us free. We have been secure. May we be the leaders of the nations! Not leaders in the old and sorry ways of selfish struggle for our own peculiar gain, but leaders in the ways of righteousness and peace. In all our ways may we be just. In all our ways may we be kind, and generous and good. Let it be our high ambition to outstrip all others in obedience to thy will. More than any other people may we help thee to bring humanity, through all its blindness and its wanderings, to the light of the knowledge of God, and to the security and splendor of God's way of life for men. Let us this day rededicate ourselves to the service of our nation; let us reconsecrate ourselves to its high ideals; above all, let us renew our devotion to thee, our God, our Heavenly Father, in whose service, and in whose service alone, is perfect freedom for the sons of men. Amen.

An Unusual Daily Vacation Bible School

NEW HOPE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

New Hope Christian Church is located in Franklin County, North Carolina, near Louisburg. This is the first year that there has been a Bible School held at the church. The total enrollment was 110, with an average attendance of 86. One of the projects for the Bible School was an offering for "Morning Star VI" and the sum of $9.55 was received. A bus has been contributed by a member of the church, and it enabled 40 or 50 children to come who would not have otherwise been able to be present. A picnic was held Saturday, June 18, and also a closing program given by the children. These young people are faithful in their attendance at Sunday school, church and Wednesday night prayer services. Many of them are developing their talents to serve their church and community. Miss Ruth Dunn of Lynchburg, Virginia, S. S. S. worker, was director of the school. She was assisted by twelve teachers and young people of the church and Sunday school. Rev. Thomas D. Sutton is pastor of the church. The picture is the group on one day of the school. The church bus and truck are in the background.

News Flashes

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, minister of our Durham Church, is conducting a study of the Book of Galatians at the Wednesday evening services of the church.

Thirty-five children were enrolled in Bible School at Winston-Salem and forty-two were enrolled at Pfafftown. Both schools were well attended and much work was done.

Those from North Carolina attending the National Conference on Christian Education at Lakeside, Ohio, this week (June 28-July 1) are: Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Dollar, Miss Dorothy Foltz, Mrs. W. E. Wisseman, Rev. Kenneth Register and Mrs. W. J. Andes.

Those attending Junior High Camp at Crabtree should not arrive before 4:00 p. m. Sunday, July 10. Each should bring their own sandwiches along for the evening meal and the camp will furnish the drink. Camp will close Saturday morning, July 16, following breakfast.

Rev. and Mrs. Ford Coffman of Webster Groves, Missouri were guests in our Winston-Salem Church, June 19. Mr. Coffman is assistant minister of the First Congregational Church there and he spoke at the morning service at Winston-Salem. Mrs. Coffman originally came from Winston-Salem.

Vacation Bible School was held at Shallow Ford June 20-25, with a total enrollment of 37 and an average attendance of 28. William P. Tolley and Rosser Lee Clapp, Student Summer Service workers, were in charge of the school, with the assistance of seven volunteer workers from the Shallow Ford Church.

Rev. Bernard Munger of our Chapel Hill Church served last week as seminar leader in the United Christian Youth Movement Southern Regional Planning Conference at King's Mountain, North Carolina. He conducted a seminar twice daily on the general theme: "The Church and the Changing South."

Apple's Chapel Vacation Bible School and revival meeting were held the week of June 13-20. There were 134 in the Vacation Bible School, and five new members were received in the church during the special services with Dr. W. E. Wisseman of Greensboro, visiting minister. Rev. H. E. Crutchfield is pastor of this church.

Eighty-five American young people from 27 states and 14 denominations sailed for Europe and Japan between June 14 and June 22 to join 600 young people of other countries in the 14 workcamps sponsored by the World Council of Churches. The young people sailing for Europe will join 11 camps in England, Finland, France, Italy and Germany, including one in Berlin.

Mrs. Hazel T. Williams reports that the Rosemont Church, Norfolk, had a Bible School with an average attendance of 72. Teachers were: Beginners—Mrs. Ada Gladstone, Mrs. Norma Morrison, Mrs. D. Dudley, Mrs. Grace De Long, Mrs. Elsie Hewitt, Mrs. Jean Adama, and Jackie Gallup. Primary—Mrs. John Swink, Mrs. L. L. Milteer and Mrs. Evelyn Morrison. Junior - Intermediates—Mrs. Mary Rowland and Mrs. Hazel T. Williams. Rev. Herbert G. Council served as general superintendent. During the week a movie, Peter's Denial of Christ, was shown. The Bible School closed July 1.

The laymen of the Durham Church had an organizational meeting on Sunday afternoon, June 26. George D. Colelough, chairman of the Convention Laymen's Fellowship, gave an inspiring address and Superintendent W. T. Scott outlined the objectives of the Laymen's organization. Officers were elected as follows: Chairman, O. J. Kimry, 807 West Club Boulevard; vice-chairman, W. H. Penny, 1004 Carolina Avenue; secretary, Edgar Brock, 2114 Englewood Avenue; treasurer, George W. Boone, 1823 Washington Street. The officers, together with three persons to be named, are constituted to be a Policy Committee which will present program suggestions to the Laymen's Fellowship of the Durham Church.

INTRODUCING PIEDMONT'S PRESIDENT.

Dr. James E. Walter, the new president of Piedmont College, Domerest, Georgia, is forty-two years old and has been for the past twelve years a member of the national staff of the Missions Council, and for several years a Secretary of the Project Department. In this capacity he has visited hundreds of churches to counsel with ministers and lay leaders on adopting their own missionary as a practical means of personalizing and vitalizing missions.

Dr. Walter was Chairman of the Morning Star Committee of the American Board of Foreign Missions which sponsored and launched the dramatic little missionary ship being used for travel among the people of the Marshall and Caroline Islands in the South Seas. He was Chairman of the Thanksgiving Offering, a nationwide program for completion of the Post-War Emergency Program of the Congregational Christian Churches.

Dr. Walter has been the Director of Study Tours for the Missions Council traveling the Southeast in particular and the nation in general.

In commenting on his election to the office of President of Piedmont College, Dr. Walter says, "All over the world, including the United States, Communists are offering materialistic promises to people who deserve a better chance in life. At Piedmont College a group of devoted faculty members are actually giving youth a high quality preparation in the skills of their chosen vocation, and a general education in the arts and humanities. I feel that Piedmont College is playing a creative and inspiring role in American and world history by putting the ideals of educational democracy into action. I am thrilled with the opportunity of linking my energy with theirs."

Nearly all of the boys and girls who go to the red clay campus at Domerest come from Christian homes of meager finances, points out Dr. Walter. He believes sincerely there is no better way to answer the false claims of Communism than to live the ideals of American democracy among young men and women who are able to discern true values. The students that will be under his guidance are hard working boys and girls who know that the four years at Piedmont offer them the chance of their lives and they intend to make the most of it.

Dr. Walter was born and grew up in Toledo, Ohio. His first thought was to become a chemist and he spent two years at Toledo University following that line. He was also in business for a year before he decided to enter the ministry. He is a graduate of Otterbein College, Class of 1929, and Yale Divinity School, Class of 1933.

Southern Convention Office

REV. WM. T. SCOTT, Superintendent

MIS: COGHILL ACCEPTS POSITION WITH SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

The Executive Board of The Southern Convention has obtained the services of Miss Pattie Lee Coghill to fill the vacancy in the field staff of the Convention created by the resignation of Miss Elizabeth Chicoine last year. Miss Coghill's official title will be Educational Secretary, with the responsibility for promoting the general work of the churches, conferences and the Convention, but primarily in the field of Christian Education, Young People's Work and Women's work. She will begin her services in September or October.

Miss Coghill served the Convention some years ago through the Board of Christian Education. Following that time she was extension worker in Florida and Georgia, where she was associated with Superintendent Scott. Eight years ago she became Educational Secretary in The Missions Council of the Congregational Christian Churches with offices in New York City, which position she has held with distinction. She has been a popular speaker in the promotion of both Home and Foreign Missions throughout the country. In 1945-46 Miss Coghill was a member of a special deputation under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions to visit India for a study of the work in that land.

Miss Coghill is popular with young people and will be an effective worker with them, and she has distinguished herself in service with the women of the churches. She has a fine spirit of cooperation, and since she knows well the churches of the Convention, she will make a valuable contribution to their life and work. We are most fortunate in obtaining Miss Coghill's services.

The National Boards have been reluctant to have Miss Coghill leave their service, but her broad and sympathetic understanding of the nation as a whole will bring added strength to the Convention. Miss Coghill is a native of North Carolina and is a member of Fuller's Chapel Church, near Henderson. She graduated from Elon College and from Boston University. We welcome Miss Coghill "back home" and wish for her every success in her new undertaking with the Convention.

BEREA (GREAT BRIDGE) INTRODUCES NEW PLAN FOR USING THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Mr. Ernest E. Waterfield, superintendent of the Sunday School of Berea (Great Bridge) has introduced a plan for an excellent use of THE CHRISTIAN SUN—a plan which may well be followed by other churches.

The Worker's Council of the Sunday school resolved that the adult department be supplied copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for the next six months in lieu of the regular Sunday school quarterlies. Mr. Waterfield writes, "It is thought that the Sunday school lesson notes written by Dr. Harcastle are sufficient for our people, and with the information in THE CHRISTIAN SUN about our Convention, conferences and churches, our people will not only be informed concerning the Sunday school lesson but will become more interested in the program and aims of our church in general. The plan should bring greater loyalty and support to the work of the church."

This new use of THE CHRISTIAN SUN offers excellent possibilities for our church paper, our Sunday schools and our churches. Mr. Waterfield sent us 52 new subscriptions.

SUSTAINING MEMBERSHIPS.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

BIBLE SCHOOL.

It is a privilege to teach in Vacation Bible School. New and closer friendships with children are formed. These friendships may be life-long and fruitful. One learns, even in teaching children. Out of the window must go all abstract teaching. Praying, teaching and Scripture reading must be made concise.

Dear Lord,

Help our lips to praise Thee,
Our hands to serve Thee,
Our hearts to love Thee,
Always. Amen.

There is great joy in helping these very young Christians to use their Bibles. A rich life of Bible study and appreciation lies ahead of them. So it is important that they be properly established in their Bible reading.

And withal, work with children should be conducive to a becoming humility. Ever and again our own haughtiness and superciliousness may be deflated in the presence of childlike qualities. These stanzas come to mind:

Last night my little boy confessed to me
Some childish wrong;
And kneeling at my knee
He prayed with tears—
“Dear God, make me a man
Like Daddy—wise and strong,
I know You can.”

Then while he slept,
I knelt beside his bed,
Confessed my sins,
And prayed with low bowed head,
“O God, make me a child
Like my child here—
Pure, guileless,
Trusting Thee, with faith sincere.”

E-L-O-N

For many youngsters, this Summer Conference was their first visit to Elon College. The majority expressed the conviction that it would not be their last. During this busy week, boys and girls became acquainted not only with their Church College, but with representatives of churches which they had not known previously. Creative friendships were formed. The churches of the Southern Convention are now a more closely knit unit as a result of these mutual acquaintances. Appeals from and for Elon will have more significance hereafter.

Under the leadership of Dean Jesse H. Dollar and the supporting faculty, a fine conference was held, and these young Christians were drilled in the rudiments of Churchmanship. They should be given a reasonable opportunity for leadership in their local churches. Utilize their ideas and enthusiasm in planning for recreation, stewardship, worship and teaching in your church. Pity, indeed, some of our churches were not represented!

YOUNG PREACHER LICENSED

William T. Scott, Jr., was licensed to preach at the concluding session of the Elon Summer Conference. Rev. Kenneth Register, president of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, presided. Charges were given by Dr. F. S. Reynolds and Dr. L. E. Smith. Dr. H. S. Hardcastle offered the prayer. The right hand of fellowship was extended by the ministers present.

We congratulate Supt. and Mrs. Scott on giving a son to the Christian ministry and wish for William, Junior, a long and fruitful ministry. Since so few of our young people attend the annual conference, it is reasonable to infer that few have witnessed a service of licensure. This service came as an appropriate climax of the Young People's Conference. Who knows, some of those very young people may seek licensure and ordination within a few years? God grant it!

SUSTAINING MEMBERSHIPS

It is gratifying to realize that we have a plan by which subscribers may share more adequately in the support of our publication. It is obvious that a uniform subscription rate does not meet the financial needs of publication, nor does it provide any flexibility for the more grateful and generous subscribers.

The provision for sustaining memberships enables one to give tangible expression of gratitude for blessings received through the church paper. While we give to benevolent and missionary causes, we have been content to pay for a subscription. Now the door is open for modest contributions in the form of Sustaining Memberships.

This plan should usher in a new day for The Sun. We salute the charter members whose names appear in this issue, and trust that many, many others will become a part of this reasonable, adequate plan of sustaining our church publication.

LAKESIDE

A host of young people and adults met last week at Lakeside, located on the south side of Lake Erie in the State of Ohio, for four great days of fellowship, study, recreation and worship. Since this was a National Conference on Christian Education, attendance was large and representative of our total fellowship. In many ways it was similar to a meeting of the General Council.

This conference was a milestone—and a very successful one—in Christian education and Christian union, since it was a major cooperative venture with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. It was evident that The United Church is a reality already. In it there is great educational leadership.

The E & R people believe in summer camps and conferences. They have "that old conference spirit." Attendance is not an elective; it is a must. Here their leaders are trained and brought up to date in educational procedure. Here they receive new ideas and inspiration to rejuvenate the program of the local church. Herein is a partial but important explanation of their strength. It is worthy of attention and emulation.

You will be reading the reports of the delegates from our Convention: J. H. Dollar, Kenneth Register, John Gwyn, Carey Andes, Dorothy Foltz and Graham Wisseman. The Editor was happy in the privilege of attending and earnestly covets for others the privilege of attending next year.

The Call of Congregationalism

The Sixth International Council of Congregational Churches assembled at Wellesley College in the United States of America wishes you grace, mercy, and peace in the fellowship of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Since God has permitted us to reassemble in World Council following the most disrupting war in history, we invite you to join us in thanksgiving for His merciful goodness to us, and to all men, in repentance for those sins which separate men and nations, and in prayer for wisdom and courage to find and follow a more Christian way which shall lead into a just, creative, and lasting peace in all the earth.

I.—Christ, the Foundation of the Church Universal—

We live in a world of broken fellowship, unrealized hopes, and widespread despair, seeking a way of belief and action which offers worthwhile personal living and strength sufficient for the construction of a human society competent to satisfy the basic needs of men everywhere.

We therefore call upon our churches and members to bear witness to the saving act of God in Christ, who offers the world the answer to its needs and to affirm their oneness with those of every nation, race, time, place and creed to whom Jesus is Saviour and Lord. We rejoice in the contributions to our common life made by all branches of the Church of Christ. We rejoice in the growing awareness of unity manifest in the ecumenical movement, in common Christian work by groups of denominations, and in those church unions wherein God's Spirit dwells. Let us ask God's forgiveness for the differences which keep us apart and dedicate ourselves anew to the service of Christ as the one Head of the Church Universal.

II.—Congregationalism and the Church Universal—

It is our responsibility as Congregationalists to bring to the service of the Church Universal those principles and practices through which God has blessed us and our forefathers.

We therefore call upon our churches and members to seek, trust, and follow the leading of God's Spirit with fearless disregard for the consequences in personal life, business, in church government, or in relation to the state. We shall have no worthy contribution to make to the Church Universal without a re-birth of concern for God and His will in our local church meetings and wider church councils. Let our church meetings on all levels purge themselves from over-absorption with ecclesiastical mechanics and decision by expediency, and let us re-emphasize the sharing of Christian experience until we are aflame by the Spirit of God. We cannot bring our offering to the altar of Christ's Universal Church if we have lost it.

The unity of a fellowship held together by common love and loyalty Christ as the sole Lord is our Congregational contribution to churches of all the world. Let us dare to trust ourselves entirely to the leading of God's Spirit and begin again to practice our own principles with the unreserve of those who feel God's hand upon their shoulders and His presence in their midst. Thus shall we bring to the Church Universal an inspiration and a power far beyond any contribution of organization, creed, or custom.

The winning of the world waits for the re-birth of free and spontaneous spiritual fellowships whose example of Christian community shall be contagious, whose forthright faith shall declare the Christian message to a confused age, and whose joyous Christian desire shall be to join hands and heart with all who acknowledge the authority of One Lord and Master, Jesus Christ.

III.—Church Government and Spiritual Re-birth—

Because the organization of the church visible is the body through which Christ's Spirit speaks and acts in the world, Christian people have become concerned about church government, the authority of church councils, the relation of the church local and the church universal, the use of statements of faith and orders of worship, the nature of the ministry, the meaning of the sacraments and the ways by which God makes His will known to men.

We therefore call upon our churches and members to pray and work for the day when all Christian Churches shall have come close enough to God to find a pattern of church government inclusive enough to leave room

(1) for freedom of conscience in the individual and in the local gathered company of Christian people.

(2) for the kind of authority which depends upon persuasion, contagion, example, and divine inspiration.

(3) for a relationship of mutual trust and esteem between the church local and wider church bodies, each recognizing the Christian character of the other.

(4) for varieties of Christian experience which may use but cannot be confined to creedal affirmations or set forms of worship.

(5) for unfettered study of the Scriptures and Christian history.

(6) for the conception of the ministers as equal with other members, called in conscience, approved in council, and sealed in Christian life and work.

(7) for the conviction that God's Spirit speaks to us in sacrament or holy rite, and makes God's will known wherever men worship, pray, confer or think in receptive sincerity.

IV.—The Church and the New Order—

A new order of civilization is emerging in the twentieth century. If that new order is to provide men with a more abundant life and a destiny worth desiring it must find a religion by which to live and die.

We therefore call upon our churches and members to speak out forthrightly concerning God's supreme message to us in the living person of Jesus, in the power of prayer, in the cleansing quality of forgiveness, in the renewing experience of worship, and in the buoyant freedom and utter joy of Christian living.

PROFESSOR L. L. VAUGHAN RETIRES.

Dean J. H. Lampe, of the School of Engineering of North Carolina State College, Raleigh, North Carolina, announced on May 16 that Professor L. L. Vaughan, Director of Instruction of the School of Engineering, retired at his own request on July 1, 1949, after forty-one years of service on the institution's faculty. Tribute was paid to Professor Vaughan for his service at a dinner meeting at the S. & W. Cafeteria, Friday night, June 10. The dinner was attended by more than 100 persons—colleagues, former students and friends—who presented a sterling silver service to Professor and Mrs. Vaughan. Former Mayor W. H. Sullivan of Greensboro, chairman of the State Board of Licensing Plumbing, Heating and Air Conditioning Contractors, praised Professor Vaughan for his work in the main address at the dinner. Earlier, Professor Vaughan was honored at the annual banquet of the student branch of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, who presented him with a traveling bag, and by Tau Beta Phi, National Honorary Engineering Fraternity at the college, at their spring banquet. Professor Vaughan, who has been treasurer of the fraternity since its organization, was presented with a silver pitcher.

Professor Vaughan was born April 5, 1884, in Southampton County, Virginia. He has been associated with State College since he entered as a freshman in 1902, with the exception of two years, 1909-1911, when he was engaged in study at Columbia University where he earned the degree of Mechanical Engineer. On December 20, 1911, he was married to Miss Lula Olive Brewer of Raleigh, and for a number of years the Vaughans have made their home at 11 Enterprise Street.

During his tenure at State College, he worked his way up from the rank of instructor to Head of the Mechanical Engineering Department. Under his direction the department was brought to a foremost position in the South and nation. From 1942-1945 he served as Acting Dean of the School of Engineering. In July, 1947, he resigned as Head of the Mechanical Engineering Department and since that time has served in the capacity of Director of Instruction for the School of Engineering.

Most of Professor Vaughan's professional work has been in the field of heat power. He has specialized principally in heating and ventilation and is largely responsible for the present plan and general arrangement of the college power plant and heating system. In 1947 the North Carolina Association of Plumbing and Heating Contractors established the "L. L. Vaughan Professorship in Mechanical Engineering," and Professor Vaughan was the first person to occupy the chair in 1947-1948.

In 1947 he was honored by the North Carolina Society of Engineers who bestowed upon him the society's annual award for "outstanding engineering achievement." The citation accompanying the award said in part:

Professor Vaughan is an outstanding teacher and a man of broad civic and religious interests. He is an ideal combination of the theoretical teacher, research man, and practicing engineer. As a heating and heat power engineer, he can instruct students by pointing to his own handiwork.

Recently, the General Alumni Association of State College presented Professor Vaughan with its "distinguished service" award for his efforts on behalf of the organization during the past year.

Professor Vaughan is a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education, North Carolina Society of Engineers, Raleigh Club, and past chairman of the Raleigh Section of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers. He is listed in Who's Who in Engineering, American Men of Science, and Who's Who in American Education. A registered Engineer in North Carolina, Professor Vaughan also holds membership in Tau Beta Pi, Sigma Xi, and Phi Kappa Phi, scholastic fraternities, and Pi Tau Sigma, professional fraternity. He is an alumni member of Sigma Chi, social fraternity, a charter member of the Pine Burr Society, an ex-member of the Civitan Club, a past high priest of the Raleigh Chapter No. 10 of the Royal Arch Masons.

Professor Vaughan has been affiliated with the United Church of Raleigh during virtually the entire period of his long residence in the city, joining it when it was the First Christian Church. He is one of the finest examples of a Christian layman this writer has ever known. He has served in nearly every capacity or office in the church and at present is Chairman of the Board of Deacons and a member of the Business Board. He has said facetiously that the only two jobs he has never held are those of organist and choir director. He has worked tirelessly, unobtrusively, and conscientiously for the best interests of the church. He is esteemed by his fellow members as the most valued counselor in the church, not because he has ever claimed the honor, but because of his selfless concern for the church's welfare demonstrated over many years and in a multitude of ways. Not only has he served the local church, but he has been active in the affairs of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, serving as its treasurer for a number of years. At present he is a trustee of Elon College, and a member of the Mission Board. Again, in the judgment of the writer, if the former Christian Church had produced only one man like L. L. Vaughan it would have been sufficient to justify the church's long and honorable history.

Professor Vaughan's many friends throughout the Southern Convention will wish him happiness in the leisure of a well-earned retirement, and many more years of active service in behalf of those interests, personal, religious, and civic, to which he is devoted.

FRED B. EUTSLER, Minister,
The United Church,
Raleigh, N. C.

CONGREGATIONALISM.

Finally, we call our churches and members to leave their low-vaulted ways for ampler temples of Christian belief and endeavor in the assurance that the God who created us and our universe is able to sustain that which He has made, and that in Him and in Him alone, we can become the person we ought to become and the human society we ought to be. Let us therefore commit ourselves anew to Him and pray that His thoughts may be our thoughts and His way our way.

THE INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL.

The International Council of the Congregational Christian Church met at Wellesley College, Massachusetts, June 17-24. It is not the writer's intention to give an account of this historical occasion but merely to indicate some personal impressions. It was my privilege to attend the International Council held at Bournemouth, England, in 1930. The 1940 session scheduled to be held in America did not materialize on account of the war. The British and other European countries could not participate. The Bournemouth Council was much more largely attended and in some respects more inspirational.

Wellesley College, one of the more influential institutions for the education of women in this country, was a perfect hostess to the Council. It is beautifully located among the hills of Massachusetts and partially surrounded by a lake constituting an ideal situation for a college. The weather was uncomfortably hot during the day but the buildings were certainly comfortable during the evenings and nights. The food was excellent and served in abundance. No group of Christian churchmen could be more satisfactorily entertained than were the members of this Council.

The program as published was carried out from day to day on time and with effectiveness. There were speakers from many foreign countries as well as from the U. S. There were not, at any time, two Americans that followed each other on the program. An American speaker was either followed by a speaker from some other country or he followed a representative of another race or nation. Speakers from war-torn countries sounded a different note and created a different atmosphere. As a rule, the American speakers spoke as advocates. They were philosophical, logical, and meant to be spiritual. Speakers from Britain, Scotland, China, and Japan spoke as those bearing witness arising out of experiences that had driven them to God. They seemed not to be concerned with so-called liberal Christianity but were glad for the opportunity to bear witness to God's love expressed in mercy and divine protection when they, as His servants, were helpless and utterly dependent upon Him for the preservation of their lives as well as for food, shelter, and clothing. Their experiences had wrought something in their lives that comes only from a feeling of human helplessness, a sense of God's presence, and a realization of His protecting care. As you experience the changing atmosphere in a meeting of this character, you are made to wonder if we in America must add to the price of redemption, want, and suffering before we find God in His fullness and that we must learn by experience our utter and absolute dependence upon God before we can realize fully that He is after all our All in all."

By vote, the Council is to meet in five-year periods rather than ten. An organization for this International body was formed with our own Dr. Horton as Moderator and Richard Fagley as Treasurer.

It was a pleasure to attend this meeting and I shall always be grateful for the experiences that were mine.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONFERENCE.

The Young People's Conference of the Southern Convention, under the leadership of the Board of Christian Education, met at Elon College from June 20-24. There was a total enrollment of 134. This included faculty and officials of the school. The young people took their assignments seriously, were faithful in attendance, and from all reports did excellent work. The officials and faculty are to be congratulated. It was a pleasure to welcome this fine group of our church people to our college campus and to offer to them the facilities of the college and the best hospitality that we are capable of giving.

The closing session, last night, was a very impressive service. It consisted of testimonies from individuals giving evidence of their appreciation of the school and the fellowship that they had had in this type of Christian service. Rev. John R. Peeler of the E. & R. Church, presided. Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, pastor of the College Church, gave the sermonette and issued the appeal. There were two fine young women who on profession of faith gave themselves to Christ and to the church. Mr. William Tate Scott, Jr., was licensed to preach the gospel. Rev. Kenneth Register, president of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, presided and licensed Mr. Scott. Mr. Scott was presented by Rev. James Hailey, a student at Elon College. Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds of the college faculty spoke words of counsel and admonition to Mr. Scott. Dr. L. E. Scott, president of the college, spoke to the audience urging the ones in the pews to give generously of their time, thought, and all for the church and thereby encourage the one administering unto them. Following the licensing service, Holy Communion was administered with Dr. W. T. Scott, Superintendent of the Southern Convention, in charge. The feeling of all was that we had a good service and that our fellowship during the hour was inspirational and meaningful to everyone.

We were glad to have the young people with us and trust that they will return.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It costs money to run a college, more money than the average institution could possibly charge its students. Colleges, state or church-related, must be liberally subsidized if they are to present a complete and effective curriculum for the training of young people. State schools receive their subsidy from taxes levied by the state and voted by the legislature. Church schools receive their subsidy from the church or generous individuals. The subsidy may be in the form of endowment or by annual contributions or by both. Elon College has only about $380,000 endowment. It takes more than the income from these permanent funds to supplement student fees and tuition sufficient to meet the financial demands of the school. Our church realizes this fact and has apportioned to each Sunday school and church definite amounts to be raised and forwarded to the college for its support. During the summer months, the college needs increase rather than decrease. Buildings must be repaired and put in condition for the opening of the regular term in September. Grounds must be kept in order and additional salaries must be paid for summer instructors. If our churches and Sunday schools could keep these facts in

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SUMMER CONFERENCE AT ELON.

The Young People's Summer Conference held at Elon College, June 19-25, had a most successful session. Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, dean, and a corps of splendid associates worked hard to make this one of the most successful conferences held in recent years. Approximately 135 young people and their leaders spent a grand week together.

The conference was officially opened on Sunday afternoon, June 19, with a rally of young people, followed by a picnic supper. Approximately 300 were in attendance at this rally. The rally was concluded with a message by Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds of the Elon College faculty.

The response of the young people to the various courses was enthusiastic. These courses were: "Personal Religious Living," taught by Rev. Tucker Humphries; "Life and Work of Jesus," taught by Dr. W. E. Wisseman; "Christian Stewardship Living," taught by Rev. John C. Peeter; "The Program of My Church," taught by Rev. R. A. Whitten; "How to Plan and Lead Worship," taught by Rev. R. L. House; "Youth Program of Recreation," taught by Dr. H. S. Hardeste. Other attractions included the daily assemblies when Dr. Andrew Chen of China told of the problems and experiences there; a program of recreation led by Rev. Johnson L. Griffin; the vesper services in charge of the class on worship. The Challenge to Youth services held in the Community Church Building each evening rounded out a full program and yet one of great benefit to all who participated. The afternoon discussion groups on Missionary Action, Social Action, Personal Action, Interdenominational Action and Program Planning, gave the young people an opportunity for self expression and planning for services in their local churches.

The attendance at the classes was exceptional. There were only two absences during the week, and illness was the cause of these.

The closing evening of the conference was indeed a high moment for the young people. The Challenge to Youth service that evening was begun with an opportunity for the young people to express themselves concerning their experiences during the week, followed by an address by Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, "The Door is Open," a consecration service during which two young women accepted Christ and indicated their desire to unite with their church back home, the licensing of William T. Scott, Jr., for the Christian ministry by the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, and the Communion Service.

Congratulations and thanks to everyone who helped to make the Young People's Summer Conference a great inspiration and help.

EXPRESSIONS OF APPRECIATION.

The unanimous expressions of appreciation from the young people attending the Summer Conference held at Elon College, June 19-25, cause us to print the following testimonials from some of the young people concerning their impressions of the conference:

Julia Agnes Brittle, Wakefield: "After having attended two conferences, I can truly say that this has been the finest ever. I don't remember seeing such spiritual, friendly and cooperative young people before. I plan to return next year."

Christine Griffin, Wakefield: "I have gained a lot to take back to the young people of my church and community."

Sally Winn, Liberty, Vance: "I have gained many things from the conference which have helped me personally and which I hope to take back to my church. We have worked hard, but it has been fun."

Patricia Cotten, Wake Chapel: "I am sure everyone who has been here this week will want to come back next summer."

Frances Clark: "Dr. Dollar has helped very much to make this a happy week and no one could have done a better job."

Jean Powell, Wake Chapel: "Every teacher and counselor I liked very much. I hope to take lots of things back home to my church that will help everyone there."

Elsie Scott, Union (E. Va.): "The devotions at night and the group singing made us young people realize that we can play a large part in the work of our church. Elon is a wonderful place for a conference."

Emma Ramsey, Mt. Bethel: "I have been taught many things about worship. When I finish school I want to come back to Elon College to study to be a missionary."

Frances Shelton, Mt. Bethel: "The week at Elon will ever stay in my memory as a Christ-like example in doing the work of the church."

Virginia Grace Maifield, Waverly: "I do not think that we stayed in classes too long, but it seemed that the day was just not long enough to do all the things we would like to do. I say 'keep up the good work.'"

Walter O'Berry, Liberty Spring: "The Challenge to Youth services each evening have been grand. I enjoyed every minute of the conference."

Jessie Sheffield, Waverly: "I have thoroughly enjoyed my stay here at Elon College. The campus is beautiful, the food wonderful and the directors grand. The subjects were informative and I know we will all have something worthwhile to take back to our homes."

Fern Hess, Antioch (V.Va.): "Everything has been enjoyable: the food has been wonderful, the recreation was fun. Our counselors have been swell."

Evelyn Tate, Antioch (V.Va.): "I have gained a great deal through the spiritual teaching and friendships."

Sue Pegram, Belew Creek: "The faculty made the conference most interesting. The campus at Elon was very beautiful and the food was delicious. I hope to return to this college sometime."

"Norma Coggins, Sanford: "I've had a wonderful week and hope I can come back next year."

Elsie Somers, Burlington: "Mr. House and Mr. Peeler are good teachers. Thanks for such a wonderful time."

Mary Ellen Copeland, Holy Neck: "I am looking forward to the conference next year."

"George Barron, Franklin: "The word Elon has its own meaning for me now—it means friendship. Knowing hardly anyone before coming here I didn't expect to have an extra good time, but everyone was so friendly

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

NEWS FROM LOCAL SOCIETIES. UNION (SOUTHAMPTON).

We, the members of the Women's Missionary Society of Union (Southampton) Christian Church feel that we have had a very successful year so far. Our devotional leader has presented the most inspiring program every month of the year. We have had a regular meeting every month. We also observed our Thank Offering service, World Day of Prayer, a Youth Fellowship Supper, and a May Fellowship program.

Besides our mission work, which we feel has been a real accomplishment, we have tried to work through our community and for our church. Community suppers and Ruritan suppers contributed generously to our church needs.

Our mission work is up to date so far, and the cooperation of our members has been outstanding.

We trust that through the prayers of every Christian we may go on to higher standards of Christian living.

MRS. STAFFORD BLYTHE,
Secretary.

LYNCHBURG (VA.).

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Lynchburg Church has held all the regular monthly meetings this year, using the materials in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the packet provided for them.

The Radio Skit, "All-America Broadcasting," was used in November.

The pastor, Rev. James B. Allan, reviewed the book on China, also used the film strip, "China's Tomorrow."

Dr. Mary Frances Thelen reviewed the book, America—Frontier. She also gave a series of lectures for the Episcopal group on Prophets of the Old Testament.

The Bible Study of Galatians was led by Mrs. S. R. Gay—most interesting and helpful.

The Thank Offering service was held in the church and a splendid offering received for CWVR.

In November the ladies entertained in their homes and prepared meals at the church for the North Carolina and Virginia Conference.

The Society, a member of the Lynchburg Council of Church Women, en, cooperated in World Community Day, sending towels overseas, and also in May Fellowship, stressing the importance of Christian homes.

In January, one of our sick members was showered with Sunshine Gifts.

A meal was furnished for an interfaith, interracial meeting held in the church, the speaker being Kirby Page.

The Society contributed to the expenses of four displaced persons of Europe coming to a local hospital for training.

Miss Brinkley's program, "News from the Mission Field," was used.

The highlight of the year was the Family Night program on May 26. We had a picnic supper at the church, fun and fellowship around the table, closing with a splendid talk on "The Christian Home," by Mrs. John H. Davis, a prominent leader in the Methodist fellowship here.

Mrs. Harold Brooks, Cradle Roll Superintendent, also head of the Beginner and Primary groups of the Sunday School, did a fine job with the Cradle Roll this year. She held two appropriate programs for the children and their mothers at Christmas and Easter and sent in her offering.

MRS. J. W. TOLLEY,
Secretary.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

I'm two weeks behind in my writing. After I returned home from the Women's Meeting at Elon I wrote you an account of my travels and it got lost. Maybe it got mixed up with some of the papers we had at Bible School or something, but the printer never found it. Then we skipped a week publishing and here it is the month of July!

I do want to tell you a little about my trips to Elon. I went first with some friends from Newport News. Mrs. W. B. Williams drove her car and Mrs. James Duling, Mrs. Chandler Hopkins, Mrs. G. G. Givens went, too. We thought the whole session was good and that it was a joy to be there. While there a kind lady from Haw River told me to stop sometime and she would get me the key to enter her church. She remembered that when I wrote about the White Pilgrim that I expressed a desire to see the memorial window in her church. And so, on our way home we stopped. Miss Areta Uoole very kindly let us in and we saw the beautiful window. It is to the right of the congregation and shows the Rev. Mr. Thomas who became known as The White Pilgrim. He had long hair and his clothing was the purest white. I thought of Mrs. Peters in Ohio who so thoughtfully wrote to tell us what she knew about this minister's life.

One of the high spots of our Women's Meeting was the communion sermon and service conducted by Dr. Mary Frances Thelin. She did it so graciously and reverently. We do not have enough ministers to serve our churches now and we shall have to use women or many of them will have to close. Miss Thelin showed us, I think, that women can serve so high an office in a quiet, beautiful way. Our denomination ordains women to full standing and I think we should be very proud of that.

After returning from the women's meeting I spent two days in our Richmond Bible School. Sunday afternoon I left with my husband to go to the Young People's Conference. It was good, too, although a bit more lively than the week before! The dormitory was always quiet at night when the women were there, but when a hundred girls moved in—things hummed a bit! That doesn't mean that they were bad—just lively. I helped tuck them in a night—counselling we called it, and they sometimes took a long time for their tucking!

The spirit of Elon is contagious and I marveled again and again at how well these young people conducted themselves away from home. I believe it is because of their Christian training.

Dr. Scott is our superintendent and on Friday night his son, Bill, Jr., was licensed to preach. That is the first step toward ordination. Just as I was happy about Miss Thelin, I was happy about Bill. I remember when he was younger and playing with his brother Jim and sister Lois. As I sat there during the service and saw the youthful congregation I prayed that many more—boys and girls—would join him.

One night was talent and stunt night. That was great! Dr. Harcastle presented a bass quartet consisting of 1, 2, 3 basses and a short stop! (They couldn't sing very well.) Some of the young people gave good musical and speaking presentations. The highlight—I think, although I could be prejudiced—was a meller-drammer given by the faculty. Dr. Harcastle directed this, too, and it was indeed a sad tale. I think the cast had as much fun giving the play as the youngsters had watching it.

Timothy Chang who is our Shaowu student at Duke came to the licensure service and added his charm to the evening. He has spent nearly a year with us now and how rapidly he has learned our ways. I trust that soon some of you will be old enough for happy days at Elon!

TOYS FOR JUVENILE GUEST.

By RUTH PECK McLEOD.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Mother, I don't want to go over to Mrs. David's House. She keeps saying, 'Don't touch that, dear,' whenever I just look at anything," protested little Johnnie. "I like to call on Mrs. Sams—she has a whole boxful of toys that she wants me to play with."

"But I'm obliged to see Mrs. David," was the answer. "However, suppose you choose a toy of your own to take with you."

It is unfortunate that there are not more women like the motherly Mrs. Sams—women who provide toys for their juvenile guests. If we analyze the situation, we find that Mrs. David has had no experience with children; tiny tots make her nervous. She considers every child destructive. She fears they will break her bric-a-brac. It has never occurred to her that the natural disposition to investigate will necessarily urge any child to handle her priceless antiques unless she provides proper playthings for him. Probably no one has pointed out to her that a few suitable toys would mean peace of mind for her and for the mother. For, as it is, mothers who call with little ones are usually too anxious about their children's behavior to carry on a connected conversation. To expect a child just to look at all the interesting things in a room and not to touch even one of them is unreasonable, and, too, the hostess and the guest mother are pretty likely to develop into "don't" personalities.

In direct contrast to Mrs. David is Mrs. Sams, who has grown children. She realizes that a youngster should not be expected to remain motionless and quiet while the hostess and the visiting mother carry on a conversation uninteresting to the child. She, too, has a few antiques here and there, but the children who come to her house are content with the toys that have been provided for them.

Mrs. Sams explained to a friend that some time after her children had all left home she had given their toys to the Salvation Army at Christmas. Later, when she had a child guest one day, all she could contrive for the toddler to play with was an empty baking-powder can with a clothespin in it for a rattle. Before the next child came to her house, Mrs. Sams had bought some toys.

This thoughtful hostess happens to live in a sooty city, where carpets are none too clean in winter, and so she has provided a large, old, discarded, India-print table cover which is kept clean and which she spreads over the rug where the child is to play. This cloth furnishes an attractive surface on which the child may safely sit, and it is very convenient, too, in case the little one is given a cracker or an apple, and usually a juvenile guest expects a treat of some kind.

After all, we plan teas and other forms of entertainment for our adult guests, why should we not extend our

Youth at Work in the Church

ANN TRUITT, Editor; HELEN JACKSON, C. B. TWIDDY, Assoiates.

YOUTH PLAYS A MAJOR ROLE IN INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL.

For the first time in history, youth has gained a voice in the international councils of the Congregational church. Seventeen countries answered the first roll call as the youth section of the Sixth International Council was called to order by the Rev. Henry David Gray of South Pasadena, California, in Wellesley College's Sage Hall Sunday afternoon, June 19.

Youthful delegates from five continents, officially appointed by the Congregational unions of their countries, began consideration of the general problems and concerns of their church and means by which Congregational youth may establish and maintain permanently an interchange of ideas and methods.

As the conference convened, Mr. Gray said that youth would ask for representation on all major committees of the International Council and the establishment of a youth department in the world headquarters in London, England.

Mr. Gray said that a major purpose of the youth assembly will be the adoption of a message to its own generation of Congregationalists throughout the world. It will embody the sense of the meeting on subjects of major concern to youthful Christians. Prominent among these, he pointed out, are the maintenance of a stable Christian life in a disturbed world. Mr. Gray specifically mentioned one of the problems facing all youth—how to buttress marriage religiously so that it will stick in an age when so many end in the divorce courts.

The youth section was established by the International Council as a result of an informal youth meeting at Cambridge, England, last July. Youth from a half dozen countries joined in asking the Council to give youth a greater voice in its official deliberations.

The young people not only held their own sessions but also participated in the general sessions of the Council.

A short time before the sessions opened at Sage Hall 27 youthful delegates from Mr. Gray's Oneonta Congregational church in South Pasadena arrived. They made the transcontinental trip in a special bus, visiting many cities en route, including the national capital. Many of the same group with Mr. Gray as their mentor attended the Cambridge sessions last year, and toured European countries.

Youthful delegates generally agreed that the church nationally as well as globally was responding to pleas for a more responsible role for youth. This encouraging view was shared by three youth leaders—Enid Lewis of Sydney, Australia, Joan Tanner of Swindon, England and the Rev. Russell Chandran, of South India.

Chandran who has been studying in England and will attend Union Theological Seminary in New York, expressed the hope that the message to youth will deal realistically with the relations between the East and the West.

The Indian delegate cited the difference in the attitude of the East and the West towards Communism. He said that the dominant thought of the West is that Communism is "anti-Christian." In the East, he said, communism now is being weighed as a factor in solving the economic problem, and is not necessarily shunned because of its opposition to Christianity.

"We must make sure that the Christian fellowship throughout the world is maintained despite the divergent viewpoints on communism."

Youth is described as those from 15 to 30 years of age.

The assembly definitely approved plans for a permanent international youth section and authorized its standing committee to work out details.

Countries represented include Australia and New Zealand, North China, Ceylon, England, Finland, North India, South India, Ireland, Japan, Mexico, Netherlands, Scotland, Wales, Canada and the United States.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION OF WESTERN N. C. CONFERENCE MEETS THIS WEEK.

On Thursday of this week the Annual Sunday School Convention of the Western North Carolina Conference is being held at Pleasant Hill Church, near Liberty, North Carolina. A well-prepared program is being presented, using as the central theme for the convention, "Evangelism." The program includes routine reports and business. There will be work shops on "How to Reach the Unreached," led by Vance Dorsett, Mrs. Hilda Allen and Dr. F. C. Lester, and followed by an address by Superintendent W. T. Scott.

After luncheon, there is a skit to be presented by the Pleasant Ridge Sunday School: "Is This My Sunday School?"; an address by Rev. J. I. Kiser of the Ramseur Baptist Church; miscellaneous business, and installation of new officers by Rev. Clyde Fields.

The convention will adjourn after a Communion Service led by Rev. W. T. Madren.

The present officers are: S. H. Pell, president; Rev. M. A. Pollard, vice-president; Miss Bettie Robbins, secretary, and Mrs. Everett Caudle, assistant secretary.

PILGRIM MARCHING SONGS.

LESSON II—JULY 10, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go unto the house of the Lord.—Ps. 122:1.

LESSON: Psalms 120-134.

Pilgrim Marching Songs.

The faithful and devout Jew regularly made the journey to Jerusalem for the appointed feasts, especially for the Passover Feast. This was true not only of the faithful who lived in Palestine, but of those who lived at greater distances. And in many instances it involved a long and tiresome journey. Of course the journey was made on foot. And because of the extreme heat in the middle of the day in that part of the world, the pilgrims usually did a lot of marching at night, and then rested during the day. Inasmuch as the Passover was always held when the moon was full there was light for the journey.

It was a colorful picture, great throngs of men and women, and of older children, with their colorful head-dresses and their flowing robes, marching along in an informal procession. There would be stops by the road for food and water and for rest. There would be the buzz of conversation as the people moved along. And the stream of traffic would be swelled all along the way as other pilgrims would join the procession, always moving toward the Holy City, the heart of the Jewish nation and the home of the Temple. It was a time when old friendships were renewed and new friendships were formed.

Then, as now, marching on hot dusty roads was not easy. In spite of the fact that there was good company there were times when feet lagged and hearts were heavy. But in that far off day and in that far off land, these people had discovered the power of music to lift the spirit and to give new strength to the tired body. Thus it was that in their hymnbook, the Psalter or the Psalms, there is a collection of songs or hymns called "Pilgrim Hymns." Inspired writers put in words which could be sung messages of hope and cheer and inspiration. And somewhere along the line, some full-throated, sweet-voiced singer would begin a song, and the crowd would catch up the song all the way down the line of march. Tired bodies would be renewed and drooping spirits would be revived again. Or again as the people sat around the campfire, or ate their simple meals, they would join in these songs especially adapted to the occasion. Thus it was that these processions were not only colorful, they were tuneful and musical. During the last war, the boys sang songs as they marched along the hot and dusty road on maneuvers, and found inspiration in singing on many occasions.

The lesson for today includes a whole section of these marching or pilgrim songs—fifteen of them. They are, of course, too numerous to consider in detail or even in general outline. But only two of them are printed as the lesson text and they can be considered. They are Psalm 120 and Psalm 134.

Psalm 120.

"I was glad when they said unto me, let us go unto the house of the Lord." This man looked forward eagerly and joyfully to the worship of God. He went with eager step and expectant spirit, gladly and thankfully. How much in contrast he was to those who look upon church-going as a stern duty, and who go laggardly and unwillingly to the house of God. To be sure church going is a duty, but it ought to go beyond a duty to a high privilege. What a difference it would make if we would come into the sanctuary with a joyful spirit and with a smiling face, if we gave some evidence that we were glad we had the privilege of worshipping God.

The sight of the beloved city awakened strong and tender feelings within the man. From the Mount of Olives the city of Jerusalem presented one of the most magnificent scenes to be found anywhere in the world. There lay the fair city, "compact together," the place whither the tribes went up to give thanks unto the Lord. There also was the place of judgment, not only between individuals, but where the judgment of God itself was proclaimed upon all wrong doing, whether by individuals or by nations. The thought of all this created in the heart of these pilgrims the urge to pray for the peace of the fair city, and to offer his prayer both for the city and for his brethren and his companions in the city. And in the spirit of consecration and dedication he gives himself to seek the good of the city. The eagerness to worship, the thankful spirit, the spirit of intercessory prayer, the dedication of one's self to the welfare of one's nation—these are some of the elements in worship at its best.

Psalm 134.

Beginning with Psalm 120, these "pilgrim songs" run a gamut of various emphases and experiences. There is the ecstasy aroused by the sight of the beloved city, a city set on a hill, in all her grandeur and glory. There is the joy which came when at long last the pilgrims stood within the sacred gates. There is the thanks of a nation which has been rescued from disaster, there is the prescription for the cure of worry and tension—trust in the Lord. There is the thought of the lovingkindness of the Lord toward his people, and finally in the 134th Psalm there is the greeting of the night-watchers in the Temple. It is an appropriate psalm to be read in behalf of those who work and watch while we sleep, firemen, policemen, nurses, doctors, telephone operators, watchmen, milkmen, scrubwomen in large office buildings, and a great host which no man can number who serve through the night to maintain the community's service for our health and welfare.

What part of the Bible in the average home is most used? Which part shows the greatest wear? Perhaps the gospels. But next to the gospels the most used part of the Bible is probably the Psalms. Here are the songs of the heart. Here are all the hopes and fears of the human heart. Here are the heart throbs of humanity. We will do well to read them and to hide them in our hearts that we might not sin against Him, and that we might be strong in the Lord and in the strength of His might.

At the entrance to the harbor at the Isle of Man there are two lights, which guide the mariner into the harbor. One would think the two signals would confuse the pilot. But the fact is he has to keep them in line, and so long as he keeps the two lights in line his vessel is safe. And it is just as we keep our eyes on the two signals—the love of God and the love of man—that we keep the channel, and are safe from the rocks on either hand.—W. L. Watkinson.

E. AND R. LEADER APPOINTED TO NATIONAL POST.

The Rev. Dr. I. George Nace, general secretary, Board of National Missions of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, St. Louis, Missouri, has been named co-executive secretary of the Home Missions Council of North America. His appointment is effective October 1.

Dr. Nace succeeds the Rev. Dr. Mark A. Dawber, who will retire this fall. Dr. Dawber has been co-executive secretary of the Council—an international Protestant agency composed of twenty-three major denominations—since 1937.

In his present post, Dr. Nance is in charge of the national missions program of his denomination throughout the United States and has administered an annual budget of over one-half million dollars.

For seven years, he was executive secretary of the Council of Churches in Portland, Oregon, where he succeeded in tripling the Council program. Under his direction, the Council sponsored the first servicemen's center, opened Sunday schools in federal housing projects before even the grocery stores were established, and instituted a bureau for returning veterans months ahead of V-E Day.

In Portland, he served on the Board of Directors of the YWCA, the Board of Directors of Goodwill Industries, the Governor's Committee on Juvenile Delinquency for the State of Washington, and the Portland Traffic Safety Committee.

From 1920 to 1933, Dr. Nace was a missionary in Japan. During the war, he assisted the U. S. Government in the Japanese relocation program on the Pacific Coast.

A firm supporter of Protestant unity and inter-creedal fellowship, he has been associated with the Federal Council of Churches, the Home Missions Council of North America, and the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Ordained in 1918, Dr. Nace has served as a pastor in the Trinity Reformed Church, Connellsville, Penn., and St. John's Evangelical and Reformed Church, Tillamook, Oregon.

In 1940 he was awarded the doctor of divinity degree by his alma mater, Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pa. He received his theological training at Theological Seminary, Lancaster, Pa., and Union Theological Seminary, N. Y.

Dr. and Mrs. Nace have five children—George, a student at the University of California at Los Angeles; Margaret, of Webster Groves, Mo., a child welfare worker; Robert, a recent graduate of Union Theological Seminary; Theodore, a faculty member at the American University, Beirut, Lebanon; and Rebecca, a student at Springfield College, Springfield, Mass.

He was born in Hanover, Pa., in 1892.

EXPRESSIONS OF APPRECIATION.

that I have had a wonderful time. Through our leaders I have found a better understanding of the church's work."

Emily Eaves, Liberty, Vance: "I have really had a wonderful time here and I hope that every young person in the world will have a chance to attend a summer conference such as the one I have attended here at Elon."

Patsy Fuller, Liberty, Vance: "For a good time, thanks."

Edna Earl Bunch, Cypress Chapel: "I had heard and read a lot about Elon, but I thought it just a little old college. It is small, but it is as nice as it can be and I hope to come back again."

Stanley Walker, Waverly: "I believe that this Summer Conference has made me a better Christian."

Elizabeth Simpson, Bethlehem: "I have learned a lot about my church and about living the good life. I am going back home to tell my church about it."

Jean Taylor, Liberty Spring: "We didn't stay long enough."

Carolyn Neese, Second, Norfolk: "I have decided to make Elon my college and also to come back for another conference next year."

Meryle Mauldin, Winston-Salem: "I think this conference offers a great opportunity for young people. It offers not only a chance to learn about Jesus Christ, but it also offers a chance to have fellowship with many wonderful people."

Phyllis Barnes, Bethlehem: "I place Elon on top for my ideal of a wonderful college to attend and for a summer conference."

Arthur Olaisen, Newport News: "The food was swell. Well, I think it was extra swell. I hope we can have another conference at Elon next year and I hope I will be here."

Dorothy Steele, Windsor: "An interesting and helpful program was planned for us."

Grace Jackson Darden, Isle of Wight: "What's tops at Elon? Fellowship of students, Rev. Mr. Humphries' address, Dr. Cheng's addresses, Dr. Hardcastle's work. Many thanks for the people who worked so hard to make the Young People's Summer Conference a great success."

Joree Crabtree, Palm St., Greensboro: "The summer conference at Elon helped me to learn more about worship and the work of Jesus. I would like to have the privilege of coming back next year."

Patsy Ann Saunders, Palm Street: "The summer conference has been wonderful. I sincerely hope that I can return next year."

Group of Young People: "We liked the Challenge of Youth services held each night, with messages from Dr. Reynolds, Dr. Fesperman, Mr. Humphries, Mr. Griffin, Mr. Register and Dr. Smith, and the Communion Service conducted by Dr. Smith and Dr. Scott."

A Member of Mr. Whitten's Class: "Mr. Whitten's course, 'The Program of My Church,' gave me a new appreciation for my church."

A Member of Conference Faculty: "The vesper services, the class on worship and the conference choir, all directed by Mr. House, did much in providing for our worship services."

A Counsellor: "There has been so much said about the merits of the conference, the college and the faculty, that I think I would like to add my word of praise for the conference members. You were a swell bunch of people to work with. Your eagerness and enthusiasm inspires us. We hope to work with you again."

Mrs. Henry Huff, College Dietician: "They were certainly a nice group of young people. I enjoyed having them here."

hospitality to our younger visitors? A few toys, purchased for a small sum, will work wonders in giving pleasure to little boys and girls. Playthings that have proved practical for such a purpose are building blocks, a nest of blocks, stuffed animals, an unbreakable doll, picture books of cloth, books for older children, large beads on a string, a wooden train, a set of unbreakable dishes, and one or two puzzles. If it is desired, they can be collected one by one.

Children should be encouraged—though, of course, little guests cannot be required—to return one plaything to the box before taking out another. By this procedure, appreciation and enjoyment are increased.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Quite a bit of activity seemed to be in progress last week when a visit was paid to the Orphanage.

The big, black Bookmobile from the May Memorial Library was parked out in front, and children could be seen all around making their choices of books to read until the next visit. The Bookmobile comes around regularly once a month and is always welcome.

Mrs. Black had taken another group of little girls berry picking. One little girl the day before had picked two quarts and sold them. She came bouncing home with 50c in her little berry-stained hand.

Vacation time has come, too. All of the children are allowed two weeks for a vacation. Some of them have wonderful places to visit, but others are not so fortunate, and so they cannot participate in this privilege. The exodus, though, has begun.

A group of Boy Scouts, ten in all, left on Sunday for a week at Camp Cherokee.

Four children already have had their tonsils removed, and we have six more to go.

The matrons were expecting visitors from the Young People's Conference at the college, so the three buildings had been freshly swept, scrubbed and dusted. They were really looking good.

Quite a few of the women from the Woman's Conference paid the Orphanage a visit. We hope they were pleased with the development of the institution.

Well!! If it isn't one thing, it's obliged to be two more!! We are having trouble with the well again. This dry weather is drying up the water, and the supply is very low. That causes trouble with the pump. A good, big rain would help, no doubt. Let us hope this is only a temporary problem.

ENRICHING WORSHIP. A. J. William Myers, Compiler and Editor. Harper and Brothers. New York. 1949. 293 pp. $3.50.

The problem of finding the right poem, thought, or saying with which to enrich a service of worship is one which every leader knows.

From his years of experience as pastor, teacher and counselor, Dr. A. J. W. Myers has recognized the need and has given a rich source of material in his latest book, Enriching Worship. As he says in the introduction, "The materials here presented are not just another collection brought together for sale." They "have been sifted again and again . . . to retain only what is good literature, in keeping with scientific knowledge, and rich in Christian content."

The result of this careful selection is a wealth of selections from Poetry, the Psalms, Prose, Great Prayers and Aphorisms. The book consists of quotations from ancient and modern writers: there is the depth of the philosopher and the song of the poet: within its pages are messages of comfort for the sorrowing, and the songs of joy and aspiration for youth: food for personal meditation and a wealth of helps for public worship . . . all are found within its pages.

The use of this book cannot help but fulfill the purpose of its title which is Enriching Worship.

THOUGHTS OF GOD. Edith Frances Welker and Aimee Angus Barber, Editors. Harpers. $2.

This is a well-edited book of devotional materials rich in value for homes where growing children are found. The book will not only be welcomed by Christian parents but also by Christian teachers in the Primary, Junior and Intermediate Departments of the Church School. There has long been a great need for just such a book as this. One can scarcely conceive how a better selection of materials could be made or how a more effective job of marshaling the materials in book formation could be possible in meeting the needs of those desiring to help childhood and youth worship God understandingly.

lina, May 29, 1949. We believe this rally was the most successful one that has been held in several years.

The opening devotion of the rally at 3:00 o'clock was conducted by the Youth Fellowship from Hanks Chapel, Pittsboro, North Carolina. Mr. Harold Boone, president of Hanks Chapel's Youth Fellowship, was in charge of this devotional.

Immediately following the devotional exercise, a debate on the question, "Should Bible Be Taught in High School?" was performed by representatives from four different churches. Pittsboro and Asheboro were on the affirmative side, while Albemarle and High Point were on the negative side. Each speaker gave a very interesting talk emphasizing the merits of his side. Each one was given ten minutes to give his points on the question, with a rebuttal of five minutes. The affirmative side won this debate.

After the debate, everyone joined into a singing period which was enjoyed very much. During the singing, duets, trios, quartets, and an octet participated.

At five o'clock the rally entered into the business meeting. The minutes of the last rally were read by Miss Louise McClough, secretary of the WNNC of the Youth Fellowship. All of the young people were waiting for the roll call because a trophy was to be given to the fellowship which had the most members present, excluding the host church. Asheboro Church won with 20 members being present. They were very happy indeed to win this achievement trophy. If they do not hold this record at the next rally, they will have to turn the trophy over to the fellowship having the most members present. We are sure that all of the churches will work hard to win this attractive trophy.

At five thirty o'clock we had supper, after which we had a report from the president of each fellowship, telling of the things their fellowship groups have done in the last year. Many different projects were reported from each group that will make the older people proud of the young people and should encourage them to help the young people in their efforts.

The young people then had a fellowship together in the church yard, meeting old friends and making new acquaintances, thus binding together the cooperative spirit among the different churches.

Everyone then returned to the church auditorium at seven o'clock at which time Rev. W. W. Hall was in charge of the devotional program. At seven fifteen o'clock a very impressive play was given—"The Lost Church"—presented by the Youth Fellowship of Albemarle. The rally was then adjourned.

The young people are looking forward to the next rally that is to be held July 31, 1949, at Pleasant Ridge Church.

Some one tells the story of an artist who was once asked to paint a picture of a decaying church. To the astonishment of many, instead of putting on the canvas an old, tottering ruin, the artist painted a stately edifice of modern grandeur. Through the open portals could be seen the richly carved pulpit, the magnificent organ, and the beautiful stained glass windows. Within the grand entrance was an offering plate of elaborated design for the offerings of fashionable worshipers. But—and here the artists idea of a decaying church was made known—right above the offering plate there hung a square box bearing the legend, "For Foreign Missions," and right over the slot through which contributions ought to have gone he had painted a large cobweb.—Northern Christian Advocate.

A PASTORAL PRAYER

Suggested for Use on a Summer Sunday

By WILLIAM R. CATTON

Eternal God, our Father, who art revealed to us in all that is good and beautiful and true, we thank thee for this beautiful day; for the arching skies above us, for the green of the trees and the grass, and the colors of the flowers all about us. We thank thee for the joy and hope a bright spring day brings always to our hearts. The warm, clear sunlight has dispelled the shadows and the gloom. This day, we pray thee, let the warm, clear light of truth dispel the clouds of doubt and the fogs of falsehood that have darkened our minds, that we may see clearly, and love thee more dearly, and follow thee more truly, in all our ways.

We thank thee for this place, of prayer and song. We thank thee for the fellowship of prayer, for the exaltation of our spirit on the wings of prayer. We thank thee for the companionship of friends and neighbors who are with us in our common quest. Wilt thou hear our praise? Indeed, we know thou dost! Wilt thou send down an answer of peace to our souls? Wilt thou speak to each one of us the word we need? May we abide in thee, as the branches in the vine, drawing life and health from thy life, and able thus to bear much fruit, as we reach out into all the common ways of life.

As thou art our heavenly Father, the God of Love, the Divine Companion of our spirits, wilt thou this day sustain all who may be in any way oppressed, by sorrow, by any burden that may seem too heavy to be borne? Have mercy on our weakness and pity our infirmities, we beseech thee. Have mercy on us, too, we pray thee, who have sinned, against heaven and in thy sight. Create in us clean hearts, O God, and renew a right spirit within us.

Then send us to our homes and to our work in this new week to live our lives and try to do thy will with greater earnestness and zeal. Match our courage, O our God, to our destiny! These are fateful days thou hast called us to confront. We are living, we are dwelling in a grand and awful time. Help these Christian people to be brave, and to be true. Make us wise, to see the right: let us dare to follow it. And in all our tasks, whether small or great, whether the immediate duties here at home, or the large responsibilities of world import, work in us, and through us, to bring justice and peace in all the ways of men. We would make this indeed an honest and a friendly world.

We pray in Jesus' name.

Amen.

Take Your Family to Sunday School

By DR. GRACE SLOAN OVERTON

Want to be a good parent? Of course, there's only one answer.

Here's your family. So much with you. Forever "on-the-go," also "on-the-grow."

And here you are right at the center of it all. Trying to make ends meet, squeezing past one tight place after another. No let up. Don't you ever get tired? If I could pass out orchids!—but that's something else. Let's put it this way: you fathers and mothers do a perfectly grand job. Considering the toughness of the times. Considering the rocky time you have keeping up with your youngsters. Considering how everybody feels free to jump on you and blame you for almost anything and everything.

Being good parents isn't easy—not this year!

You have some time felt the restfulness that comes in church? Bowed down when others did? Helped swell the volume of song? Listened to the words from the Book? Felt the jangling nerves go quiet? Forgotten some of the worries? Grown strong? Built up fresh courage? Felt good?

But—just suppose now for a moment that you had never been given that chance!

Not a nice thought. Not true to the facts either. For somebody saw to it in your early years—they gave you this. And now—this week and every week—you can give this to those who belong to you.

Want to be a good parent? Take Your Family to Sunday School!

NORTH CAROLINA COUNCIL WORKER RESIGNS.

Miss Frances C. Query, who has served as Consultant for Weekday Religious Education in North Carolina for the past three years, under the auspices of the North Carolina Council of Churches recently resigned her position with the council.

Miss Query resigned in the interest of the total program of the Council. The budget would not permit the continuance of a specialist in the field of Weekday Religious Education and also adequately sustain other interests and activities.

In addition to her work as Consultant in Weekday Religious Education, Miss Query has assisted in the organization of the North Carolina Council of Church Women. She served as Acting Director of the Council of Churches for four months, following the resignation of Rev. Ernest J. Arnold and until Rev. Carl R. Key, the present Director, assumed his duties.

In making this announcement, Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, the President of the Council of Churches, said: "It was with great reluctance that the Executive Committee accepted the resignation of Miss Query. Her services have materially advanced the teaching of the Bible in the public schools. Her going will be a distinct loss to ecumenicity in North Carolina. The Weekday Program will be continued under the Weekday Religious Education Commission and the Director of the Council of Churches."

Mrs. Bettye Davis, Secretary, to Miss Query will complete her work with the Council as of July 1. Mrs. David Andrews (the former Miss Ruth Elliott), Overseas Relief Consultant for the Council, has gone to work with The Christian Rural Overseas Program full time.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

TESTIMONY and PROPHECY.

"The testimony of the Lord is the Spirit of Prophecy." This inscription is found over the entrance to the huge auditorium at Lakeside, Ohio. The source of the quotation is not given, but the truth and force of it are obvious.

Think how impressive these words must be for every speaker who enters that vast auditorium to stand before thousands and offer witness. If, indeed, "The testimony of the Lord is the Spirit of Prophecy," then his own testimony should sound the prophetic note, and the testimony should be of the Lord and not merely of himself. Speaking in this vein would be inevitably of a high order.

Perhaps such an inscription as this would not be inappropriate over some of our church doors, or behind our pulpits. Preaching is testimony, and preaching should never lose the prophetic element. This truth is eloquently emphasized and illustrated in the accompanying article by Dr. Leslie Cooke.

MAGNAMONIUS, SUH!

Mr. Walter A. Graham, executive secretary of the Laymen's Fellowship, announces the fact that a new word has been coined. According to Mr. Graham, "Representatives of the Laymen's Fellowship and the Churchmen's Brotherhood met together at Lakeside, Ohio, June 25-27, to discuss plans for future cooperation, after the merger approval. There was a wonderful spirit of understanding, a give and take attitude, and even the creation of a new word, 'Magnamoni-us,' by E. and R. Robert T. Johnson of Burlington, N. C., friend of Southern Convention Chairman George D. Colclough."

Three cheers for Mr. Johnson and "Magnamoni-us." Perhaps this is just what we have been waiting for—a word that fits the occasion, one that adequately expresses ecclesiastical fitness and exuberance. It is a pleasure to vote for "Magnamoni-us" and to commend it to all of our ecclesiastical councils.

And if not the word, the spirit assuredly is commendable. A healthy enthusiasm, an unreserved affirmation, a jubilant endorsement for some constructive proposal—these are the experiences needed to tone up the life and spirit of many churches. "Magnamoni-us," may his and/or her tribe increase!

Things are happening today which call forth our finest adjectives and expletives. Church Union is Exhibit A. But examples abound. Who could read the list of Sustaining Memberships in our last issue (seventeen from Burlington!) without crying "Magnamoni-us"? Who could read the records of Amelia and New Hope—two churches in the Eastern North Carolina Conference—which have busses to bring children from the community to the Sunday school and Bible school, without shouting, "Magnamoni-us"? Who could participate in the enthusiastic group of young people at Elon or witness the throng of Christian educators at Lakeside without exulting, "Magnamoni-us"?

Thanks, Messrs. Graham and Johnson for that expressive word. It will be a boon to many who delight in the gentle art of circumlocution.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS REFLECT NATIONAL GROWTH.

Substantial increase in the number of United States Sunday schools, teachers and officers, and pupils was made between 1945 and 1948, according to statistics just released by the International Council of Religious Education.

"The population of continental United States has not increased as rapidly during this period, according to United States Census Bureau estimates, as Sunday or Sabbath school enrollment," stated Miss Helen Spaulding, associate director of research of the I. C. R. E., who made the statistical survey. The figures reported cover the calendar year 1947, or the church year ending early in 1948, according to Miss Spaulding.

During this period the following increases were made: 19,060 more Sunday or Sabbath schools; 786,949 more officers and teachers; 5,135,577 more pupils; 23,641 more vacation church schools; 1,648,713 more vacation school pupils.

There are now 232,672 Sunday or Sabbath schools, 2,569,965 officers and teachers, and 29,745,580 pupils.

The International Council has recently issued a new pamphlet containing statistics from 246 religious bodies, including Catholic, Jewish, Orthodox, Protestant and other groups. The price is 25 cents.

The Methodist Church ranks first in number of church schools and officers and teachers, but second to the Church of God in number of pupils. The Southern Baptist Convention, the National Baptist Convention, the Disciples of Christ, the Presbyterian Church USA, and the Northern Baptist Convention, rank high in these three categories. There are 4,707 Congregational Christian Sunday schools with 70,345 officers and teachers, and 517,117 pupils.

A preacher whose congregation regularly spurns seats in the front of the church was surprised to see one man, a stranger, in the very first row. After the sermon, the minister asked the man why he sat down in front. The man replied that, being a bus driver, he wanted to find out how the preacher got people to move to the rear.—Exchange.

Like a start that makes not haste, that taketh not rest, be each one fulfilling his God-given best.

—Goethe.

Prophetic Religion

Excerpts from an Address by REV. LESLIE E. COOKE, London, England, at the Sixth International Council of Congregational Churches, Wellesley College, Wellesley, Massachusetts, Friday, June 17.*

Jeremiah 37:17 reads: "Then Zedekiah the king sent and fetched him; and the king asked him secretly in his house and said, Is there any word from the Lord? And Jeremiah said, There is."

On July 8, 1930, the late Bernard Lord Manning addressed the meeting of the Fifth International Congregational Council. His subject was "The Place of Congregationalism in the Catholic Church—Our Distinctive Contribution." It was a most remarkable address, and to read it after nearly twenty years is to acknowledge that this son of our Congregational Churches, who adorned them with his scholarship was also a prophet. At the beginning of his address he issued a warning about the use of word contribution, claiming as he always did that Congregationalism is a part of the great Catholic Church, and Congregationalists are heirs by true sonship of all the Church's rich heritage.

"On Mount Zion we are neither strangers nor sojourners but are fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God, built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus Himself being the chief Cornerstone."

He concluded with this delineation of our Churchmanship: "Orthodoxy without legalism, Churchmanship without clericalism, that is our distinctive contribution to a situation in which orthodoxy and Churchmanship are suffering for the faults of legalism and clericalism, while the world is feverish for want of what the Church alone can give. To convey this treasure to a dying world and a living Church, that need it as they need few other things—that I believe to be the call of this Council to us."

The events which have intervened between the Council in Bournemouth in 1930 and this Council in Boston in 1949 have only served to sharpen the relevance of that declaration. This holds true of political events. If a dying world needed this treasure in 1930, how much more does it need it now, where the false equation of religion and clericalism, which the Church by its own failure and faithlessness has done much to justify, has led to a studied, deliberate, ruthless, efficient political campaign, if not to abolish the Church, at least to subjugate it.

It holds true of events within the life of the Church itself. The growth to self-consciousness of the younger churches, the development of the Ecumenical Movement, the adventures here and there in Christian unity, in which we rejoice—and none more rightly, holding the conception of the Church which we do—make more important the conveying of this treasure to a living Church. As the Church restates and re-establishes its claim to exist in the new society which is emerging from the social revolution, it is imperative that it should learn how to maintain orthodoxy without legalism, and Churchmanship without clericalism.

If we were to state in a simpler sentence what it is we stand for specifically in the Church and before the world, then we should say that it is for prophetic religion. For us, the age-long tension between so-called priestly and prophetic religion is resolved in the conviction that no man is a true priest except he be a prophet, and no man a prophet except he be a priest. Our answer to those who permit a difference in function to be transmuted by the alchemy of pride and the love of prestige into a difference of office, thus claiming for themselves a privilege and authority which they deny to others, is that these ministries of priest and prophet belong to the whole Church. There is a priesthood of all believers and there is a prophethood of all believers, and both derive from the free and unfettered activity of God's Spirit Who calls whom He wills to serve Him.

Traditionally, at any rate, we have been led to run all the risks of uncertainty, and to deny ourselves all the temporary advantages of authoritarianism to be true to this faith. To uphold it we have refused to set up safeguards, either for orthodoxy of belief or for regularity of churchmanship, and we have foregone the temporal benefits of State patronage. When we have been at our best we have ever "accounted the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt."

That specific and peculiar witness entrusted to us has, I repeat, a sharpened relevance both in the Church and in the society of our day.

I

It seemed to me fitting therefore that I should invite your meditation upon this episode in the life of the greatest of the Old Testament prophets whom God called from the quiet obscurity which he loved, to exercise a prophetic ministry to a dying nation, and upon whose sensitive spirit God brought to bear the pressure of His own, and in whose bones God made His words to burn like a fire.

The people of Judah were in the midst of the events which sealed their fate as a nation. Jerusalem was encompassed. A futile and abortive revolt had brought a great punitive campaign by Babylon against Judah and Jerusalem. The hour of judgment which Jeremiah had long foretold had struck. The blockade had been temporarily lifted, to deal with a relieving force from Egypt, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem read this temporary relief too optimistically.

The prophet, however, warned them that the campaign would be resumed. He himself sought to take the opportunity of the temporary respite to leave the city to deal with some personal business, perhaps in his native Anathoth, but he was arrested at the gate of the city as a deserter, thrown into a dungeon in the house of Jonathan the scribe, and left to languish and to die. Zedekiah the king, however, was anxious both about the city and about his own future, so he sent secretly for Jeremiah and interviewed him in the palace. "Is there any word from the Lord?" asked the king. "There is," replied the prophet. "Thou shalt be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon."

If Scripture were to yield to interpretation as allegory, what a message could be read here! I can imagine what Origen, for example, might have made of this story, by equating the prophet with the Church, rejected, persecuted, despised, imprisoned, and yet at the same time secretly approached by an anxious and trembling world, represented by Zedekiah, concerning the truth about its destiny. "Is there any word from the Lord?"

We need not thus handle the incident, however, to appreciate the relevance of the question. It is, in fact, a modern question. There is a famine in the Church and the world of hearing the Word of God. The hunger for leadership the contemporary

CONVENTION PERSONNEL: JESSE H. DOLLAR, Chairman; JOHN L. GWIN, ROBERT LEE HOUSE, BERNARD V. MUNGER, KENNETH D. REGISTER, H. SHELTON SMITH, LEON EDGAR SMITH; MESDAMES W. J. ANDES, J. D. STRADER, W. E. WISEMAN.

I ATTENDED THE NATIONAL CONFERENCE AT LAKESIDE.

On Monday morning, June 27, we started out from Winston-Salem—Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Dollar, Rev. Kenneth Register, Mrs. W. E. Wiseman, Miss Dorothy Foltz and I. Our destination was Lakeside, Ohio, where the National Conference on Christian Education was to be held jointly by the Evangelical & Reformed Church and the Congregational Christian Churches.

As we passed through Fancy Gap, our spirits were in high gear, anticipating the fine things yet to come. We wound around the mountains of West Virginia, and in spite of a lot of trouble caused by a place named "Crows," we finally arrived at a tiny burg with a hotel, where we spent the night. Tuesday morning Dr. Dollar had us all up bright and early and on our way. Columbus, Ohio, the capital, took up a great deal of time, as we were passing through, but we finally began to see flat land and indications that we were nearing water. For a few breathless moments, we entertained fears that Lakeside would not be near the water, but we soon learned that the water was all around and in abundance.

After arriving, we stood in line for a long, hot hour to get registered, choose our seminars, and find a hotel room. After much persuasion, we had a cot put in our room (Graham Wiseman and I) so that Dot Foltz could be with us—where we practically swam in perspiration for the rest of the time. We were more burned up than ever when we paid our hotel bill. Dot paid $3.00 and Graham and I had to pay $4.50.

There were approximately 1300 delegates registered from the two denominations, with the E. R.'s having about twice as many as the C. C.'s. Situated on Marblehead Peninsula, on Lake Erie, Lakeside is a beautiful site for a conference. It is owned by the Methodist Church, and is about 650 miles from Elon.

The conference began Tuesday evening with an address and ended Friday evening with a consecration Communion Service. Each morning we had two seminars lasting an hour and a half each. In the afternoon we had group assemblies (I attended the one for Children's Workers) and skill shops, where we learned to use our hands. In the evenings we had a sing at 7:15, worship and an evening program. On Tuesday evening a very impressive pageant was presented, depicting the history of Christianity beginning with the Creation by God, and the beginnings of each branch of our two denominations. It showed the beginnings of the Congregational Church with the Pilgrims from England, the Reformed Church with Zwingli, the Christian Church in America from three branches—Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian—and the Evangelical Church, which sprang from German peoples oppressed and fleeing to America. The two mergers were shown and the scene closed with the idea of reaching all around the world with missions, using a real life tableau of the Last Supper as a background. This pageant was recommended for use in our churches.

I attended the seminar on Young Adult Fellowship, taught by Dr. Paul Reynolds, director of Adult Work, Congregational Christian Church. My second seminar was on Children's Work, taught by Mildred Widber and Bernice Buehler. All of us from the Southern Convention divided up so we could be taking different seminars. Others who went from the Convention were Rev. R. L. House, Rev. John Gwin, and Pattie Lee Coghill.

The skill shops were all good—the only trouble was that we couldn't take them all in. We had instruction in finger painting, spatter painting, blue printing, puppetry, choral reading, dioramas, children's music, folk singing, folk games and others. I liked finger painting best.

As Dr. Dollar had a wedding for Saturday evening, we left early, after the first seminar on Friday morning. We kept looking for cooler weather all the way back, but didn't find it until we were in the West Virginia mountains again. We stopped at one of these West Virginia places for the night, but I can't remember the name. Dr. Dollar never would tell me where I was, and I was always afraid someone would try to get in touch with me and wouldn't know where to call.

When we arrived in Winston-Salem early Saturday afternoon, I was glad to be home and glad to see my family. It was a very fine conference and I feel that I learned many useful things. I appreciate that the Board of Christian Education made it possible for me and the others to attend such a gathering. The fellowship with the people of the Evangelical and Reformed Church was very fine, and we made some good friends. If this is an indication of things to come after the merger, I am all for it.

BIBLE SCHOOL AT LONG'S CHAPEL.

A week of successful Bible school was completed last week at Long's Chapel Congregational Church. Enrolled were 59 pupils, and the average attendance each day was 44. We had 26 that had perfect attendance.

Mrs. Elton Rudd and Mrs. Jamie Fonville were teachers for the Beginners. The theme used was "Jesus Our Friend." Mrs. Sam Anderson and Miss Margie Warren were teachers for the Junior girls and Rev. Guy H. Veazey, pastor, was teacher for the Junior boys.

The school was held in the afternoon from 2:30 until 4:30. Each day some member of the church served the entire school with refreshments. On Friday afternoon we had our annual Bible school picnic. Each child brought a lunch and we had a picnic supper.

We held our commencement exercises Sunday morning. It was an occasion enjoyed by everyone. We also had a display of the work each child had been doing. We feel like we had a most successful school and an enjoyable one also.

Mrs. Veazey acted as superintendent.

EASTERN VA. S. S. CONVENTION TO MEET.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention meets at Oakland Christian Church, Tuesday, July 19, beginning at 10:00 a. m. Oakland is located near Chuckatuck, Virginia, eight miles north of Suffolk on Route 10. Mr. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., is the president of this convention.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

THE ELON COLLEGE ALUMNI MEMORIAL GYMNASIUM.

The college has not undertaken a project in the last seventeen years in which there is such enthusiastic interest as there is in the new Memorial Gymnasium now in the process of construction. This keen interest is due to several facts. First, is the great need of such a building and the facilities that it will offer. The fire that destroyed the old dining room in the early morning hours of January 17, 1942, also destroyed the girls' gymnasium. Since that time, the boys and girls have been compelled to use the boys' gymnasium in North Dormitory. This arrangement is inadequate for a progressive program of physical education.

The type of building that we are constructing has contributed greatly to the enthusiasm that is backing this project. We are not only building for today, or for five years hence, but we are building for many, many years to come. The building will be of brick and slag construction—fire proof in every detail. It will have a seating capacity of 4,200 for basketball games and 6,000 for assembly purposes.

This building is to be a memorial to the young men and women who lost their lives in World Wars I and II. While they were in camp and at the front enduring the hardships of war and the dangers of battle, many of us were at home leading a comparatively quiet and safe life, taking advantage of unusual opportunities created by the war to accumulate money. The Elon Alumni who gave their lives for their country and for the world deserve to be recognized by their Alma Mater. We are the only ones to do it. This is our responsibility as well as opportunity. Let no one fail to do his part in this commendable undertaking.

Another thing that adds to the interest and enthusiasm of this undertaking is the fact that everybody is asked to contribute. Those who can give largely should give largely. Those who can only give small amounts should give in small amounts.

This is an effort on the part of Elon College, her alumni, the church, and friends to build a memorial that will not simply be a shaft of stone but will be in the form of a building that will be of great value to the members of the faculty, students enrolled in college, the alumni as they return, and our friends as they may visit the campus. It is a building in which everyone may have a part in constructing and may share in its use in many ways as the years come and go.

The construction is progressing satisfactorily. The foundation has been laid, the structural steel has been set, and the brick and stone layers will begin the week of July 4. As the work progresses, labor and bills for materials must be paid. This is a fine time for everyone to express interest by forwarding a contribution.

KEEP THEM COMING.

The increase of student enrollment in Elon College has been gradual over the past seventeen years beginning with less than two hundred students. It has reached a total of more than eight hundred twenty-five. With these increases, the budget has been correspondingly increased. In fact, the increase in expenses, in most instances, exceeds the increase in income resulting from an increase in attendance. The opening of summer school in another factor in the conduct of Elon College. Many question the advisability of conducting a summer school. Others contend that the buildings and grounds are here, we have the investment, and the facilities should be used to accelerate the training of young men and women for life. At the close of the war and up to the present, the summer session has been a necessity. The enrollment for the first six weeks of summer school is 299. This is slightly less than last year but almost three times the enrollment of summer school prior to the war.

It is interesting and somewhat disappointing to observe that the increase in enrollment through the years has come from non Congregational Christian Church homes. As the school advances, it should, of course, attract a larger number of our own young people. The purpose of this citation is to arouse, if possible, a new interest in our college on the part of our own church people. A comparison of the offerings of other schools and the products of these will indicate the efficiency and quality of the work that Elon College has done and is doing. If we were not in a position to offer first class advantages to our own church people, I would advocate one of two things, either improve our curriculum and corp of instructors or close the school. Our church cannot afford to operate a college that does not offer first class advantages to its young people. It is admitted that living conditions fall below the living conditions of many other colleges but not our instructional facilities and classroom work.

If there are those who wish to enter Elon College, application should be made at once. At this time, we have but few more rooms for boarding students. We are anxious to be able to accommodate the high school graduates of our own church.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The ladies' School of Missions was quite largely attended and brought to our campus a very splendid program. The Young People's Conference followed with more than one hundred twenty-five young people in attendance. A number of these young people were of college age or will be in another year or two. We were glad for them to see something of the college, its equipment, and varied facilities. We hope that they will be interested in selecting Elon College as their college. In order that we may be able to provide adequately for such meetings—representing the various interests of our church, we must have sufficient funds for improvements and additions. Contributions from our Sunday schools and churches help materially in providing such accommodations.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

OAKLAND REPORTS.

The Oakland Auxiliary (near Suffolk, Virginia) has had an active and very interesting year under the leadership of Mrs. J. E. Gayle.

Our Years Books were a credit to the committee. They were given out in our October meeting, so that we could look in them and see our work planned for the year.

Mrs. W. B. Simpson, our Spiritual Life leader, has made our Bible study inspiring and helpful.

We sent delegates to the Missionary Conference and the District Rally. We sent our president to the School of Missions. Two other members also attended, and they brought us full reports.

Mrs. Ray Knight taught our study book China—Twilight or Dawn. Mrs. Leland of Newport News talked on Hawaii and Alaska. We have a native of Puerto Rico coming the 24th to talk on Puerto Rico. Different members of the auxiliary have talked on the Canal Zone and the Virgin Islands. We now think of these different places as neighbors and want to share with them not only our worldly goods, but our Christian experiences.

The World Day of Prayer was observed with four other churches in our community. We enjoyed this fellowship with other denominations.

A very interesting program was given on World Community Day in our church with the aid of records.

Our Thank Offering amounted to $60.00.

The real high point of our year was reached at our May Fellowship Luncheon prepared in our new church kitchen, and served by the auxiliary members. Mrs. Galt spoke on "Fellowship" during the morning program. Mrs. Frank Beard spoke on the "Fellowships that Jesus had in His Life," at the afternoon meeting. Both speakers were from the Methodist Church in Newport News.

It was a real pleasure to give the youth of our church a supper during Youth Week and to have so many present, and to give the cradle roll a party at the close of our first and very successful Bible school.

We increased our gifts 10 per cent this year. We bought one Life Memorial and sent gifts to the Orphanage in December.

Our Family Life program will be held the 24th of July. We plan to bring gifts for both Home and Foreign Missions.

The flower committee has been active sending cards and flowers, and visiting.

New members have been added to the roll, and we are working for more subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Yes, a busy auxiliary we are, happy in the Lord's work. Our prayer for the next year is, "God help us to help others."

MRS. R. W. BRADSHAW.

TIMOTHY CHANG'S SISTER ILL.

Those of you who attended the Convention and School of Missions at Elon College this June will remember the lovely talk that Timothy Chang made on Monday evening, when he described the members of his family. We also remember his speaking of Ya-Ying, his sister, who is studying in Fukien Christian University, taking premedical courses.

Ya-Ying is seriously ill now with tuberculosis and must have hospital care. Her hospital bill will be approximately $30.00 per month. Timothy is very anxious to help his family and has asked permission of Dr. Scott to take a part-time job. Dr. Scott has granted this permission, but additional help will be needed. Dr. Scott says: "We feel that if churches, groups and individuals knew of this emergency they would wish to help. We do not want to urge anyone to give, but we do ask that you let the people of your church, your woman's organization and other groups know about this urgent need. Their gift will bring a four-fold blessing. It will help a Chinese girl back to health, it will ease the burden on her brother, Paul, it will lift a load from the heart of a lonely Chinese boy here in our midst—Timothy, and those who contribute will experience the joy of a satisfied feeling like they have never known before over being able to render this direct service."

All contributions should be sent direct to Supt. W. T. Scott, Elon College, N. C.

In order to understand Timothy's feeling for his family, everyone should read this letter which Dr. Scott received from Timothy:

"Dear Dr. Scott:

"I hope to have some more news from home, shaowu or Fooshow, last two weeks. Finally I got a letter from Paul, Foochow, last Saturday, and he tells me so much about their bad luck and living.

"My younger sister, Ya-Ying, was serious sick and she has been in Union Hospital since last February and still there. Doctor said that she needs a long time for recovery. Poor is she because she was studying too hard for her premedical courses in Fukien Christian University and lacking of the nutritive food.

"Paul's wife was also sick last two months and still weak now.

"Shaowu was turned over since eighteenth of May. We did not hear any more since April 30th. The last letter of April 30, my sister wrote from Shaowu, says my mother was very sick than ever. I don't dare to think about it.

"Paul's family, one of my younger brother and younger sister, are in Foochow. Paul says that he is not possible to support his own family, my brother's school expenses and my sister's hospital expenses. I am ashamed to see them in the difficulties and I know that my brother Paul would not tell me if he is possible to help them. He himself lost twenty pounds already because of worry.

"In this case, I have to get a part-time job for helping them. I asked myself that how can I help others later if I can't help my own family now. This is my duty. I already had a guilt feeling for my parents before (The children have to take care of parents). Now, I need to help them anyway.

"Dr. Scott, please give me the permission to get a part-time job if I can, and I like to help them as I can and I'll not fail my courses.

"I know that you are always kindness to me and I have bothered you too much. Therefore, I tried not telling you about it yesterday but finally I did. I appreciated your consideration to me yesterday, but I still think I better have a part-time job. Will you not mind my foolishness.

"Pray for them, please. Thank you.

"Sincerely yours,

"TIMOTHY CHANG."

WHY THE HURRY?

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN,
Mason City, Iowa.

"And the driving is like the driving of Jehu, the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously."—II Kings 9:20.

Our text tells the story of a young man in the long ago who was recognized at a distance by the way he drove the horses which drew his chariot. He was a fast driver, a furious driver, and no doubt a dangerous driver, for fast driving is always dangerous—so many things can happen. No doubt the young man was in a hurry!

The question, "Why the hurry?" is a simple question that any child of ten might feel prompted to ask as he sees his parents and neighbors rushing here and there in the performance of their daily tasks. However, this is a question that applies to 99 per cent of us.

Some people may not be in any hurry about their work—no doubt many employers would agree on that. Nevertheless even most of those who loaf on their jobs make "much ado about nothing" when going from place to place after working hours—in a hurry for quitting time to come—in a hurry to get off the job—in a hurry to get home and then in a hurry to get away from home.

The question, "Why the hurry?" should be put by most men and women to themselves. If some people would seriously ask themselves the question, "Why the hurry?" then the entire course of life might be changed for them. When hurrying to get somewhere—when excited about doing something—just to ask the question, "Why the hurry?" would cause some people to realize the foolishness if not the silliness of always being in a hurry. "Hurryitis" is a disease characteristic of thousands of Americans who are no more conscious of their being victims of the malady than many people are conscious of having a spot on their lungs. Thousands do not realize that they are always in a hurry. It has become second nature to them always to be in a hurry—in a hurry to start—in a hurry to go—in a hurry to get out of church—in a hurry to eat—"hurry, hurry, hurry" characterizes their lives, and thus they cheat themselves out of knowing the full joy and satisfaction of living, because they fail to possess the strength and fortitude of composure.

A reasonable amount of hurrying in the performance of one's duties and in general life is stimulating to life and a safeguard against decrepitude; but intemperate and needless hurry militates against both efficiency and output in every line of human effort.

The Jehu of the text lived in the Far East some three thousand years ago, but most people obsessed with a mania for speed and for furious driving now reside in the Western Hemisphere. One can hardly conceive of "a Far Easterner" driving furiously in this age. It is in the West that speedsters are found today.

People who are afflicted with the malady of "hurryitis" should change from "the rush and hurry" type of life to a life of poise and deliberateness, for their own sake and for the sake of those with whom they associate. The Gospel of Repentance might well be applied to the lives of a lot of us on this score. Though we may not be sinners above others in our driving on the highways, it is possible to be offenders in the matter of "hurrying here and there" without purpose in our daily conduct of life.

One man of the Jehu type stopped in a shoe shining parlor to get his shoes shined. When he saw that one of his shoes was finished, he started to get down out of the chair and on his way. Then the shoe shiner called out, "What's your hurry?" What was? That experience set the offender to thinking. As he got back in the chair to have his other shoe shined, the man asked himself the question, "Why the hurry?" There was none—in fact he was simply going to go home to read the evening paper—and kill maybe two hours of time before retiring. He asked himself another question—Was that an illustration of the way he had been living his life, doing things by halves, overlooking important things in order to do something less important? As a result of the experience he resolved then and there to do what his wife had told him to do so many times, without any effect, "to calm down," "not to be in such a rush" all the time. His whole life was changed from then on—a new viewpoint, new habits characterized his life.

Another man obsessed with "hurryitis," a man strangely afflicted with the malady whenever he was on the public highway in his car—a man of the Jehu type of driver—always drove his car like mad whenever he was on the highway no matter where he was going or what he was going for. Sixty, seventy and even eighty miles an hour was his general speed in his high powered car. But one day while hurrying needlessly, he barely escaped hitting a small boy who was riding on his bicycle. There would have been no danger if the man had been driving at a reasonable speed with his car in control. But it was a hair-breadth escape. The possible tragedy set him to thinking. He then made the resolution that regardless of how urgent his business might be, he would never again drive faster than fifty miles an hour. And twenty years after making that resolution, as one of the most successful business men of the entire East, he bore joyful witness of the fact that never for once in all those years had he failed to keep that resolution.

No one knows how much better off a lot of us would be and how much longer some would have to live if a lot of us would make a resolution like the one my friend made and then keep it as did he!

One of the major reasons for the world's holocaust of misunderstanding, confusion and suspicion today is the fact that humanity in general has been in too much of a hurry—going too fast both figuratively and literally.

Speed and dash, hurry and rush, characterize Americans in general. One was explaining to a prominent Chinese Diplomat who was visiting our country how to save three minutes' time in getting from Madison Square Garden to his hotel in New York City. The Chinaman thanked the American kindly for the information, and asked him, "But what will I do with the three minutes?"

Just so—there are thousands of people who hurry to get to this place or that, and when they arrive don't know what to do with "the three minutes" or with themselves.

Hundreds of people lose their lives on our public highways every day by trying to save time for which they have no definite or particular use in mind. Others lose their immortal soul in their rush and hurry through life, failing to take time out to become acquainted with God and with their

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

CHILDREN HAVE AN IMPORTANT PART IN BUILDING CHURCH.

You may be familiar with the building program of our Sanford Church, which involves an investment of approximately $35,000. Since our congregation is small and consists largely of wage-earners, contributions for the building fund have been coming in very slowly throughout the four-year period that we have been working on the fund. Recently, however, new interest in the project and increased contributions have been evident. We attribute this favorable trend largely to a new plan together with one particular incident which I shall relate.

As an experiment, we listed the entire cost of the project by items, on a large board, naming the items and the cost of each one separately and leaving blank spaces for the names of the persons pledging their responsibility for payment of the various items.

As soon as the huge sign was prepared, and before it was presented to the congregation, I slipped away to Hot Springs, Arkansas, for a rest. While out there far away from home and church, I had plenty of time for thought and meditation. Frankly, I was discouraged. Having been the first one in our church to suggest the idea of a new building and having furnished the first dollar with which to start a building fund, I felt the full responsibility for the success of this undertaking, but somehow I did not seem to have the ability to "put it over." The interest I had created was insignificant compared with the size and the cost of the project I had dreamed of and sponsored for my church. On one of those bluer than blue days when I was "feelin' mighty low," I received the following letter:

Dear Mr. McIver,

Sister and I have chosen for our part of the Church Building Program buying the Spire and Cross. I talked with Mr. Dollar about it and he says that it will be all right for us to pay $100 per year until we get it paid, but I think we can pay it off sooner because I am planning to use all the money I make mowing lawns and working on the farm this summer, and Sister is going to have rummage sales.

I am studying about Church Steeples and would like for you to tell me how ours will look.

Sincerely yours,
TRUBY GROCE PROCTOR.

This letter came from Truby Groce Proctor, Jr., who is thirteen years of age. His sister Patricia is eleven. They are both members of our church and have attended Sunday school and worship services regularly since they were tiny tots. No one ever thought of them being interested enough to even be impressed with a building program. Certainly no one, not even their parents, expected them to volunteer to take such an important part and assume an obligation of such proportions as that of providing a Steeple and Cross for their church.

I later learned that Truby and Patricia were not persuaded or influenced to make a pledge by anyone. They discussed the matter with and received the approval of their parents. It was made unmistakably clear that they expected to earn and pay the amount themselves. Any contribution their parents wished to make was to be distinct from their own.

On the same day I received Truby's letter, I replied as follows:

Dear Truby Groce,

It was good of you to write me a letter. When anyone stays away from home and friends as long as I have been away this time it is a real help to get mail.

The news that you and Patricia have decided to provide the Spire and Cross for our church is the best news I have had since I left home, and is the most encouraging thing that has happened since we first thought of modernizing our church. It is such a fine thing to know that we have a boy and girl in our church that are interested enough to make a sacrifice such as yours to make it modern and adequate for the section of Sanford in which it is located. If I did not already know something of the interest and love that you and Patricia have for the church, it would be hard for me to believe that you really mean to undertake such a task and obligation. I am sure though that it will give both of you much pleasure to know that you are helping to build a beautiful church that will be helpful in teaching and persuading boys and girls, and older people too, to accept Jesus as their Saviour, and thus let his teachings and example guide them in the Christian way of life. Because of the sacrifice we make now to build such a House of God, this good work can go on for many generations to come.

I shall be glad to see you and Patricia soon after I return home and talk with you about the style and type of spire and cross best suited for the church. In the meantime, I suggest you write to Mr. Kincaid Newman, Church Building Society, 287 Fourth Ave., New York City, and ask him to send you some pictures and suggestions for our spire. Be sure to tell him that you are planning to provide this feature, together with Sister's help of course, and make it known to him that it is the Congregational Christian Church of Sanford that you are interested in. I think this is important as he has some snapshots of our church and he can refer to them and suggest something suitable for our particular needs. I believe you will get some help from him.

Give your Mother and Dad and Patricia my best regards.

Sincerely yours,
A. H. McIVER.

Upon my return home, I discovered that Truby and Patricia were collecting pictures of church steeples and information concerning them which was being assembled in a scrap book purchased for that purpose. It was revealing and inspiring to me to observe their knowledge of church buildings, especially steeples. I also learned that they had made a substantial advance payment on their project, the major part of which was taken from their savings.

Later, on Monday, Mrs. McIver informed me that I was wanted on the telephone by someone who sounded like an excited little girl. It was just that. It was Patricia calling. She said, "Mr. McIver, guess what, brother and I have just received a lot of pictures of church steeples from Mr. Newman in New York." I suggested that they study them carefully and meet with our building committee and the building superintendent at my home the following Thursday bewilderment and prevalent despair, the widespread disillusionment about the beliefs in which men put their trust, the panic they show as they contemplate the awful possibilities of the future, to say nothing of the evidence here and there of renewed hope and expectation that may be after all the answer is with the people of Christ—all constitute a new articulation of this ancient question. "Is there any word?"

Nor is the onus upon the Church of Christ less than to reply, "There is," even though the reply be a word of judgment and doom.

Sometimes the approach made out of the sheer pressure of physical adversity and economic necessity has been despised by the Church. It has resented being turned out of such base and mean motives; but a realistic understanding, an understanding as realistic as the New Testament itself, does not thus turn away. If men, having proved the bankruptcy of all else, turn, in their sheer emptiness or even in their self-pity to seek again "a word from the Lord," who are we to refuse them until they show a more serious intention and give evidence of nobler motives.

The truth is that this is God's world, and men must live in it in God's way. It is the kind of world in which bread winning and soul saving are one process, and not two. In the Divine economy if men get off the rails with God they get off the rails with one another, and therefore what we are pleased to call their economic bankruptcy, or their political chaos, are the primary and painful evidence of their spiritual need. "Is there any word?" "There is."

II

No one can look at the lives and message of the prophets without realizing that they could be consistently wrong explicitly in their judgment about events, and yet consistently right implicitly about their judgment of situations. Often their declarations of an immediate doom proved to be wrong, as also did their pictures of a final restoration and a final liberty. There seems little doubt, for example, that this prophet at first read the violent activity of the Scythians on Judah's northern border as evidence that this savage people were to be used by God to execute His judgments upon Judah. Jeremiah was wrong. That particular threat drew near and then retreated. It was the mightier empire of Babylon that was to bring about the destruction of Judah. In reading the trend of events the prophets were subject to human fallibility, but their essential judgments were valid. Their interpretations of the significance of the corruption in society, the formalism of religion, and the time-serving, man-pleasing conduct of their leaders, was unerring. The false balance, the exploitation of the poor, the perfunctory performance of the ritual of religion, the self-indulgence of the princes—these were the evidence of the imminent nemesis, and in their reading of the significance of these things the prophets showed unflinching judgment.

Nor must we be discouraged because our interpretation of political events has sometimes been mistaken. There have been times when the Church has been too optimistic, when it has shared and encouraged the false hopes of humanism—proclaiming with confidence that education and the spread of culture, the application of psychology, or the technical achievements of human ingenuity, would bring in the Kingdom. There have been times when the reading of events has been too gloomy, when the Church has spoken too pessimistically about the fate of civilization, or the total and hopeless depravity of men. Errors of judgment in these matters, however, do not exonerate us from the necessity of continuing attempts to read the signs of the times.

The prophetic ministry of the Church, however, is neither validated by its correct judgments nor invalidated by its erroneous ones, in these realisms. The Church, too, may be wrong explicitly and right implicitly.

On what, then, does a prophetic ministry rest? Whence comes its validity? It derives from a certain belief that God is active in history for righteousness. History is His workshop and His battlefield. If all events are not His ordained Will, all events are within His absolute will. Oppression and even adversity may have their place in His purpose Who makes the wrath of man to praise Him and turns to good the things men mean for evil.

The prophetic message of the Church in these days, then, will put current events in this context. It will ask why at this juncture has God been pleased to reveal to men the secrets of nuclear energy. It will ask what is the meaning in God's purpose of the challenge to Christian faith of the current secular philosophy. And it will ask these questions, not in a mood of pessimism or despair, but in the confidence and lively hope that they are within the compass of the Will of God, Who sees the end from the beginning and Who is working out His purpose to its ultimate victory.

Our answers may be wrong explicitly, but the faith that prompts the questions and declares the answers in terms of the Sovereignty of Good is always right implicitly.

III

Against the background of this, let me indicate the words of the Lord which it seems to be the Church is being called upon to speak.

"Is there any word from the Lord?" "There is," and it is a word that the Church must speak to the world. The Old Testament expression of it is this. "I will send unto Nebuchadnezzar my servant." That is one of the most startling declarations in the whole of the Old Testament. It is a daring assertion that this pagan emperor of a pagan empire, whose power and policy were changing the whole contour of the ancient world, and who was to bring the nationhood of Judah to an end, was yet an instrument in the Divine Hand. He was a servant of the purpose of God.

That is the prophetic word which the Church must speak to the world. The message declares about all political rulers, the word it speaks about all scientists and all whose philosophy is shaping through and conduct, is that they are under the mighty hand of God Who raises them up and casts them down.

That, of course, is the word of comfort, that in the last resort the destiny of man and nations does not hang upon Stalin's nod or a scientist's experiment, but with God, that at the last it is He who reigns and rules.

But of course it is also a word of stern judgment, which unless we can bear it we cannot be comforted, for it admits the possibility of the loss of all the things we cherish, and of untold suffering. It means that we must face the fact that in the economy of God, much that we have valued may have to die to live.

Speaking of the movement away from Christianity, Dr. Brunner asks, "Is not a cause to be found within the presentation of the Christian revelation by empirical Christianity? The Christians of almost all the centuries have been guilty of a one-sided false spiritualism which neglected the daily bread for the spiritual bread, and by a false monastic or puritan SONGS OF THE TEMPLE.

LESSON III—JULY 17, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION:

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord?

And who shall stand in his holy place?

He that hath clean hands and a pure heart;

Who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity,

And hath not sworn deceitfully.

—Psalm 24:3-4.

LESSON: Psalms 24; 84; 95:1-7b.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 96:1-9.

The lesson for last Sunday dealt with songs which pious pilgrims sang as they made their way to Jerusalem to worship. They expressed something of the joy which these pilgrims felt as they went toward the Holy City, as they went into the Temple, and as they wended their way home again. Today we consider some of the songs which have the Temple itself as the central theme, but which go beyond the Temple to the living God whose presence gave the Temple meaning and power.

Beyond Duty to Privilege.

Psalm 84 presents in poetic form something of the delight which the Psalmist had in the true worship of the Lord of hosts. He had a great love for the Temple or as we would say in the language of our day, for the church. He almost envied the birds that had built their nests around its eaves and hence dwelt there continually. He felt that it was better to spend one day in the courts of the Lord than to spend a thousand days elsewhere. He felt that he would rather be a humble doorkeeper in the house of the Lord than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. It was because he had found worship to be a great experience, because he had come, through it, into fellowship with the living God. There was strength and peace and power to be found in true worship. He looked forward with eagerness to his visit to the Temple.

Alas, for how many moderns is church-going a duty that never passes over into privilege. People feel that they've "got to go to church," instead of rejoicing that they are going to "get to go to church," to put it in language that is not elegant but which is expressive. To be sure, church-going is a duty, a duty which all too many moderns are neglecting to the hurt of their souls. But it is more than a duty; it is a privilege. And happy is that man who, although he began it as a duty, has passed beyond that stage and who has found it a great privilege and a source of blessing and benediction.

An Invitation to Worship.

It is perhaps wrong to "keep picking at folks to get them to go to church," but it is just as wrong not ever to invite folks to join us in going to church. In Psalm 95, one of the greatest Psalms in the Hebrew song book, the Psalmist invited his fellowmen to join him in singing unto the Lord, and in making a joyful noise unto him. Furthermore, he suggests that the note of thanksgiving be a dominant note as we come before his presence—we are to come before his presence with thanksgiving. There is a good reason.

He is a great God, and a great King above all gods. He made the earth. In his hands are the deep places of the earth, the vast and unfathomed depths of the sea are held as it were in his hands. The Psalmist did not know, of course, of the vast expanse of the oceans of the world with their abysmal depths, but his God was the God who made all the deep places of the earth. And then he looked at the hills and the mountains, and God took on new dimensions—the strength of the hills was his also. The valleys and the hills alike told of the power and strength of Jehovah. His hands formed the dry land—it is pictorial language, God as it were taking into his hands a handful of earth and making the whole world. His hands also formed the sea—it is his and he made it. What a miracle the seas are! They are the great sewage disposal plants of the whole world. Think of the amount of refuse and filth that is poured into the sea by the cities of the world through rivers and streams, and yet the waters of the sea are antiseptic in themselves. Think of the edible and delicious food that comes out of the sea, which is the receptacle of so much filth and garbage. It takes a great God to make the world, the mountains and the valleys and the sea. The thought begets in the heart of this man a spirit of awe and reverence; he bids others join him in bowing down and worshipping the God who has made it all.

Ah, but more. This same God who made the world in its infinite variety and its vast dimensions, also made man. That is the crown of creation. That is the miracle of first importance. "The Lord, our Maker." On another occasion the Psalmist cried out in awe and amazement, "I am fearfully and wonderfully made." There is nothing that is more amazing, nothing that so manifests the infinite wisdom of God, than the human body, not only in its physical aspects, but with its mental capacities and its spiritual nature.

But there is still more cause for reverence and praise. This God who made the depths and the heights, the sea and all that there-in is, this God who made us, this God who has such infinite power and wisdom, is also our Shepherd. "For he is our God, and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand. Jesus put it even more meaningfully when he said that God was a Father. God is not only wisdom and power; God is love. This thought awakened in the Psalmist a sense of awe and reverence and thanksgiving and joy. As he thought about God as the Creator and as the Shepherd of the nation, he bursts forth into songs of praise and joy. He did not know, of course, of God as revealed in Jesus Christ. How much more ought we to kneel before this blessed Son of God, who is the image of the invisible God, in whose face there shines the glory of God, and in whom it pleased the Father that all the fulness of God should dwell.

Alas for those who never lift voice or heart in adoration or thanksgiving or praise, in whose lives there is no place for worship, who are too busy to go to church, who do not have time for religion. Alas for those who do not see in the world in which they live, on every hand indeed, evidences of the wisdom and power of God. Alas for those who do not know this great God and King above all gods, as the Shepherd of their souls and the Father of their spirits.

Worship really means worth-ship. The God of the Psalmist and the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is worthy to be praised. God has given his Son a name that is above every other name. Come let us magnify the Lord, let us exalt his name together.

disparagement of the body and its impulses brought about the revolt of an ill-treated human nature." It is true. We have offered benevolence as a substitute for social justice. We have offered charity in order to remain secure in our own privileges. The rejection of Christianity has its deepest roots in the infidelity of Christians to their faith. The modern Nebuchadnezzars rise against us as servants of God for our chastisement and punishment. These very enemies of the faith bear inwardly testimony to its truth. The true Gospel is in fact being preached even by those who disclaim it. When the Church recognizes that, and has received into itself the sorrow of such judgment, then it may rise out of its humiliation to cry with confidence that even Nebuchadnezzar is a servant of God, or that Assyria is the rod of His anger. This is the prophetic word the Church is given to speak to the world.

IV

"Is there any word from the Lord?" There is, and it is a word which the Church must speak to itself. "All things are of God, Who reconciled us into himself through Christ, and gave to us the ministry of reconciliation." That is the word of God to the Church—reconciliation.

That is a word which has been sentimentalized, equated with peaceableness—expressed in a pretence that divisions do not exist or are not deep. In our preaching of it we have often conveyed an impression dogs lie, or a concentration upon narrow grounds of agreement. "Blessed are the peacemakers," we have taken to mean "Blessed are the peaceable." But peace making is a surgical operation. It involves going to the roots of difference, and into the sources of resentment and bitterness. It involves exposing them and acknowledging them; and, not in spite of them but because of them, finding the grounds calculated to guarantee its privileges of relationship at a new level.

I know of no word that the Church needs more to speak to itself than this. Rapidly Christian thinking is being driven into an obsession with an exclusive alternative between Christianity and Communism. The West is being identified with Christianity and the East with anti-Christ. Confronted with dilemma, the Church is tempted to escape into other worldliness or to yield itself to alliance with those forces which would seem most calculated to guarantee its privileges and its survival as an organization.

Now no doubt it is the Church's task to expose and resist the attacks of anti-Christian philosophy, but it is called to do so in the knowledge that its mission is to reconcile and in the full cognizance that for Russians and Czechs and Bulgars and the rest, Christ died. It can only do this insofar as it recognizes that these now political alignments are the full flowering of those teachings and practices which the Church has permitted to flourish in the society where it has had power and influence, and even within its own fellowship.

The prophetic task of the Church is to find the third way and to take it at the risk of misunderstanding and consequent suffering. No doubt it will be accused by the Left of reaction, and by the Right of untrustworthiness and failure of patriotism, but it will in fact be offering the only way of hope which can possibly transcend the present conflict.

"Is there any word from the Lord?" There is, and that word is a word to the individual. "No man having put his hand to the plough and looking back is fit for the Kingdom of God." Commenting upon the political activity of Jeremiah which led to his insistence upon the doom of Judah, his advocacy of surrender to Babylon, all of which seemed to reveal a lack of patriotism, John Skinner, in Prophecy and Religion, wrote: "The political activity of Jeremiah was rooted in the deepest religion of personal experience. He had learned that religion is independent of national institutions and legal forms. He had learned that these things were positive hindrances to that knowledge of God in which true religion consists. He had found the secret springs of religion in his own soul in fellowship with the God Who searched him and knew him Whose Word was the joy and delight of his heart. Hence the new community of religion must be composed of men in whom their direct relationship to God is a living reality, who have His revelation in their inward parts and written in their hearts."

This, which was true of the prophet, is corroborated and fully revealed in the person of Jesus Christ.

Ultimately it comes to this—the personal response and obedience of the individual. For you and me it means to go our way, taking every step in reliance upon the adequacy of Divine resources and meeting the demands of Christian discipleship by faith that God will give us strength to be loyal.

To look back, either to the authority of a religious institution or to that of a Christian Gospel reduced to a code of moral behaviour, is in fact to deny the Christ we claim to follow, and to destroy the Kingdom we seek to serve.

Now all this is not speculation. This is the truth which has been brought out in the plane of history and worked out in the language of human life. This is the truth to which incontrovertible testimony is borne in the Incarnation, Atonement, Resurrection, and the gift of the Spirit. These are the evidences of God active, in His Sovereignty, in His work of reconciliation, and in His personal and gracious dealings with men.

"Is there any word from the Lord?" There most certainly is. It is not lack of knowledge which keeps us from speaking it, but lack of obedience. It is not failure of comprehension but failure of courage which keeps us from living by it. For this there is no remedy save in the acknowledgement that He Who in His grace gave us the Word, will, by His Grace, enable us to declare it.

own best self and to discover the perfectly amazing amount of good that is in their fellow-men.

If America had spent one-tenth as much time, money and thought on promoting principles of character in business, in industry, in education and in politics as she has spent in developing speed, both our nation and the world would have been far more greatly blessed. We can get to places much more quickly today than our parents did when they were our age, but are we living better lives? Are we honoring God and blessing humanity with our lives and our possessions in our day of rapid transit by air, train and auto more than they did with their lives and their possessions in their day with ox cart, covered wagon, horse and buggy, and trains that broke all previous records by going 20 miles an hour? Are we honoring God more in our day than did they in their day? That is the question of questions. With our advantage, we ought to be surpassing them—we ought to be doing far more for God and for mankind than they did! But are we? As we think of the cities they laid out for future gen-

The Orphanage

Dear Friends:

It's vacation time, and about half of our children have been or are on vacation. Some at church camps, some visiting their own people, and others either in homes of their sponsors or under their supervision. Vacation time is a happy time for them, too!

Our repair work on the Baby Home is now completed with the exception of the basement. The living room is really dressed up. One friend sent two beautiful new table lamps. Another sent a handsome picture which now hangs over the mantel. Still another has contributed venetian blinds for the windows. We have new furniture, all of which makes our living room an attractive, liveable one.

During the Young People's Conference held recently at Elon College, we had many visitors. We were delighted to have them and to be so assured of their interest. They came, however, in the midst of our repair work, and we invite and urge them to return soon. We want them, and any others who are interested, to inspect this renovated building; to see what they have had a share in doing by contributing to a good, wholesome background for rearing children.

These hot days have brought forth another need: porch chairs for each building. Our porches are large and cool, and chairs would make them comfortable and useful.

This week a house-cleaning job is to be started in Johnston Hall. Our buildings are homes and must be clean ones. So, windows are to be washed and an over-all cleaning job to be done by a professional cleaner.

WHY THE HURRY?

erations, of the churches built and endowed for the blessing of posterity, we can but ask the question, "How did they do so much?" And our observation must be that after all, "loving concern" and not "high speed" is what counts for the most in the realization of human progress.

The speed mania and the disposition always to be in a hurry which characterizes the present age reacts upon the daily lives, the mental attitude and the spiritual fortitude of both the young and the older folks. People eat in a hurry, read in a hurry—merely skimming the pages—in a hurry all the time and without a reason. Some folks, I am told, are even in a hurry to get out of church—thousands of people often being in too much of a hurry even to be polite.

By the time we live to be "a hundred," we will have learned that "haste always makes waste" both literally and figuratively. We all ought to learn a long time before we reach "the Century Mark" that constant hurry is a menace to our happiness and an enemy to our peace of mind. This "Jehu business" is all nonsense. We are all guilty, but most of us are sincere in wanting to learn how to quit it.

Thousands of men and women are hurrying through life trying "to make their break," or to make their fortune, others to squander the fortunes left them, others to find thrills and excitement—and while thus hurrying here and there through life they make so much confusion that they cannot hear the need of their own soul calling them to take time to think upon the thoughts and purposes of God, their debt to God, and to worship and believe. In this hurry, scurry, worry age in which we live, we need to stand aside and watch ourselves go by with the rest of the crowd of folk—hurrying—we know not what for or why—on our daily round of work and contacts, and seriously ask ourselves the question, "Why the hurry?" For our own soul's welfare, we all need to pause and give time to become acquainted with God, the Author of life and of time, so that we may experience for ourselves that "God will keep in perfect peace those whose minds are stayed on Him," and that "In His presence is fullness of joy."

Wouldst thou walk life's brighter way,
And know the power of peace and poise?
Then do not rush and hurry through the day,
But go in a calmness with neither show nor noise,
And thou shalt find the joy that is sublime.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

night, at which time we would decide together just what kind of steeple we would build for our church.

Some interesting discussions took place at that meeting. Many suggestions and proposals were made. All of these appeared to be important. But the most important statement of all was one that revealed the unselfish spirit of these two lovely children. Both of them had enough of the Spirit of Jesus in them to want to do more than their full part in building a beautiful Temple dedicated to the service of God. With pictures of many beautiful steeples before us, it was only natural for us to be inclined to choose from the more expensive ones. When informed that our ideas were greater than the amount set up for the purpose, Truby and Patricia suggested that even if it should cost a little more than originally planned, we should build a nice steeple and cross that would be in keeping with our church. Their only reservation was, "Give us a little more time, and we will pay the bill."

This is indeed a concrete example of what can and often does take place in the hearts and lives of children when their parents acquaint them with the church at an early age, when they are constantly reminded that the church must play an important part in the shaping of their characters and that they should give a portion of all their earnings to God through His Church.

We of the Sanford Church are agreed upon the fact that the love and sacrifice demonstrated by Truby and Patricia for their church is indeed a challenge we cannot ignore. We must "rise and build."

Take Your Family to Sunday School

By ROBERT S. KERR

United States Senator from Oklahoma

What doth it profit a parent if he accumulate vast wealth—wield great power and exercise much influence, yet lives to see a son or daughter become an economic failure or a prodigal in character?

A dear friend of mine once said to me: "I have guaranteed the security of every child I have forever. None of them can ever suffer want or poverty." He was sincere. He thought he had achieved unbounded success. He thought no storm could ever damage—nor danger threaten any child of his.

How foolish he was! He does not have a child able to manage what has been given to him. Not a single one could earn his or her own living. Each of the four drinks to excess—one is a definite alcoholic—another is on the verge of becoming one.

Today in his old age the parent, humiliated and shamed, knows that he is not a success—but a failure. Today he would do differently. Now he would teach them to know and honor God instead of creating trust funds. If he had another chance, he would show them the truths of the Bible and encourage them to worship their Saviour rather than depend alone on material wealth.

He now knows the anguish that wrenched old Isaac's heart and caused him to cry out in misery, "When a man is bereaved of his children, he is bereaved."

There is a sure way to avoid this tragedy. There is a certain way to success in the happy rearing of worth-while youth. Teach them to know and honor God. Show them the way to salvation through a resurrected Christ.

This can be done in the home and the Sunday school. Every child is proud to go to Sunday school if the parent takes him.

Every child is eager to learn of the power and glory and grace of his parents' God.

If properly taught, our children will learn to breathe with reverence the name of their "Father's God."

There is nothing more dear to any of us than our children. There is no finer thing that we can do for them than to take them to Sunday school and teach them God's Word. Therein is our finest opportunity. Thereby is their greatest happiness and blessing.

ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

In Essentials Unity — In Non-Essentials, Liberty — In All Things, Charity

VOLUME CI

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, JULY 21, 1949.

NUMBER 28.

Do You Believe?

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN

1. That your church is an important factor in your community;
 2. That its mission, its message and its program merit your loyal response and your hearty cooperation;
 3. That attendance at its services of worship is a Christian responsibility as well as a divine privilege;
 4. That everyone should realize that every church is in the biggest business there is, and that churches depend on good business methods as well as on good people;
 5. That you are expected, as a church member, to support your church according as the Lord prospers you;
 6. That every member of any church is honor-bound to recommend his church to unchurched friends and to welcome them to its services;
 7. That as long as a church carries on its roll your name as "a member" you are required by a sense of duty to pray for its welfare, boost its program and support its endeavors;
 8. That we can bear witness of our love for God by our daily conduct, by our financial support to His Church and to all Kingdom enterprises—and by our presence in His sanctuary at Divine Worship on the Sabbath Day;
 9. That your church depends upon you and its other members for its spiritual strength, its social vision and its influence and prestige in your community;
 10. That religion should be man's highest interest and his major concern?
- N. B. If you believe these things, what are you doing about them?
"It is later than you think!"

News Flashes

Dr. H. S. Harcastle has been assisting Rev. Mark Andes in evangelical services at Virgilina during the past week.

Rev. Clyde Fields, pastor of Pleasant Ridge (R) Church, is assisting the pastor, Rev. W. T. Madren, in a revival at Flint Hill this week.

Dr. F. C. Lester is teaching in the Evangelical and Reformed Junior High Camp at John's River, near Blowing Rock, this week and next.

Rev. S. E. Madren is assisting his son, James W. Madren, in revival services at Fancy Gap, Carroll County, Va., July 10-24. He was on the field there from 1927 to 1931 as minister. Bible School is also being conducted.

The women of the Asheboro Congregational Christian Church are sponsoring an evening service on Sunday, July 24, at which time Mrs. F. C. Lester will review the home mission study book, "On Our Own Doorstep."

Asheboro Congregational Christian Church will broadcast its morning service on Sunday, July 31, at 11:00 over Radio Station WGWR, which is found at 1240 on the dial. This church invites you to share in their service via radio, if you are not attending church services elsewhere.

Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds, head of the Department of Religion at Elon College, has been asked by the Divisions of Christian Education of both Congregational Christian Churches and the Evangelical and Reformed Churches to prepare the lesson materials for the Senior-Young People's Quarterly for the first quarter, 1951. This quarterly is a joint enterprise of the proposed Church of Christ.

Vacation Bible School was held at Liberty Spring Church, June 20-24, with a total of 102 pupils enrolled and an average attendance of 96. Six new members were received into the church on their confession of faith by the pastor, Dr. I. W. Johnson on Sunday night following the sharing program. Mrs. William R. Lowe served as the director of the school. The offering for the Chinese Blind Association amounted to $28.18.

SPECIAL SERVICES HELD AT REIDSVILLE.

Sunday July 3rd was a Banner Day at the Congregational Christian Church of Reidsville.

At the morning service the new organ of the church was dedicated in a beautiful service.

Rev. Joe A. French, former pastor of the church, returned for this dedication and brought the morning message upon the theme "Exalting Christ."

At 8:00 o'clock Sunday evening Mr. Clyde Fields was ordained into the Christian Ministry. Mr. Fields has been a member of the Reidsville church from childhood and a goodly number of his many friends were present for the ordination service.

Rev. Kenneth Register served as the presiding officer, and Rev. Bland Leebrick read the scripture lesson and offered the evening prayer. Rev. Tucker G. Humphries preached, using the theme, "If I should die before I live." Dr. D. J. Bowden gave the charge to the candidate and Rev. Joe A. French offered the prayer of ordination in the laying on of hands.

After the right hand of fellowship was extended to Mr. Fields by his brothers of the clergy, the congregation adjourned to the social rooms of the church. Delicious refreshments were served. Various friends responded to the invitation of the pastor of the church in a word of greeting. "Blest Be the Tie That Binds" ended an outstanding service and a fine day.

LAYMEN'S FELLOWSHIP SPONSORS MEETING ON EVANGELISM.

The Laymen's Fellowship of the Western North Carolina Conference is sponsoring a meeting on Evangelism to be held in the Asheboro Church on the Fifth Sunday (July 31) from two to four o'clock. Mr. Sybrant Pell, chairman of the fellowship, is making plans for this meeting in cooperation with Mrs. E. P. Boroughs, superintendent for the women's work of the Asheboro District.

Plans include an opening worship service by the Asheboro Church, an inspirational address on Evangelism, a group for laymen and another for women discussing Evangelism, and a closing joint session at which the groups will report. A devotional message will close the afternoon's program.

RESOLUTION CONCERNING DR. JOHN G. TRUITT.

WHEREAS, Dr. John G. Truitt, our eminent and beloved pastor of these past sixteen years, has been called to a very high position of service in the Church organization as Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, at Elon College, North Carolina, a post for which he is notably well equipped by reason of his fine background of education and culture, his experience of thirty-three years as a Christian preacher, and a place in which his excellent executive ability, human understanding, and diversity of talents will have full use in the training of youth, and a place from which he will be in close touch with the Church College, which he has served faithfully and well through the years, as President of its General Alumni Association, and in many ways, and a place from which he can serve the entire Southern Convention; and,

WHEREAS, Dr. Truitt's services to this Congregation have included one thousand, seven hundred and thirty-six sermons, four hundred and seventy-two baptisms, receiving eight hundred and sixty-nine new members, receiving four hundred and thirty-four new members on confession of faith, conducting five hundred and seventy-one prayer meetings, delivering eight hundred and forty-two addresses and Sunday School class lessons, making twenty-two thousand, two hundred and eighty-seven personal visits to our members, performing four hundred and eighty wedding ceremonies, and conducting five hundred and sixty-five funeral services; and,

WHEREAS, these services have touched and enriched our lives in so many ways; and

WHEREAS, he has contributed most ably to the work of completing our building payments, to the conducting of three campaigns for Elon College, by which the sum of about seventeen thousand dollars was raised, to the establishment of our memorial to Dr. W. W. Staley, the Staley Scholarship, to the erection of the Wellons and Staley Tablets, to the acquisition of the Smith property and the Boothe property, to the obtaining of substantial private bequests for the Church, to the plans for the rebuilding of the church organ, and the effecting of many improvements inside the church building and on the church grounds; and,

THE ADMINISTRATION FUNCTION OF THE STUDENT WORKER (OR COLLEGE CHAPLAIN).

In the past we have said things about the importance of the intellectual and spiritual life of the worker with students, and now I wish to talk about him as an administrator.

When the student worker feels that he has too much to do, that he is spending every waking hour doing something, but for the life of him he cannot tell what—then he should ask himself, "Am I wasting my talents and strength because I am not doing a good administrative job?"

And the answer is likely to be "Yes, I am wasting my time." Administration has no other purpose than to make the best use of what is available. Take a look at a typical student worker: He doesn't have a lazy bone in his body; he is keenly interested in his job and in his students; he is a highly trained person who can do many things—from teaching a Bible class to running a party, from counselling to firing a furnace. And he does them all. He thinks that is the way he earns his salary. In his kind of a job, where there is no chance to get away from his duties, he will burn out in a few years if he carries the burden of it all on his shoulders.

Every successful organization has an esprit d'corps, that is, it is not a one-man show, but everyone is interested in it and proud of it. This is the case with student work. No matter how hard the student worker labors, he meets disappointment after disappointment unless he succeeds in building a sense that his Guild or Fellowship is a going concern, and "all of us are interested in it."

He has to be an administrator to do this. He doesn't do it by asking people to do things for him, but rather by setting a goal that attracts people so that they will want to get in on bringing it about. He must also provide a framework within which people can work successfully and happily. It is futile to try to get work done by asking people to do what they do not enjoy doing, so his success depends upon setting up tasks that give satisfaction in the doing, which means that they must serve a definable purpose in which the doer himself is interested.

One has to trust people, and usually, if the responsibility is really laid upon them, they will produce. Of course the student worker likes to give the speeches and teach the classes and chair the meetings, but there are other competent people, who can do those things, and if they do, there are several good results: (1) The student worker has time for other things; (2) The student who does the job grows intellectually and spiritually; (3) The student who does the job feels more responsible than before, and therefore further strength is given to the total work; (4) The initiative and talent of one more person has been enlisted.

Now all of this is elementary, yet so many folk wear out on their jobs without accomplishing much of anything. There is potential power in every situation sufficient to make it a power house of achievement. If any of us who have been on a job for a while have not set loose enthusiasms and activities which need to be held in check lest they go off the deep end, then we need to take stock of the way we are carrying on our jobs, for perhaps we are forgetting our administrative function.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.
Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE VALUE OF A SEWING MACHINE.*

What is the value of an old sewing machine? The commercial value may be slight. Since the advent of electric machines, the old foot-pedal models have depreciated to negligible value. Many of them have been discarded. A few people, unable to sell theirs, have camouflaged them in order to use them simply as items of furniture.

Now the philosophers distinguish between intrinsic and sentimental values. Intrinsic value is that which inheres in an object or product, which is independent of human appraisal. Such is the intrinsic value of truth, recognized or unrecognized. Sentimental value may have little relation to commercial value. The souvenir, the memento, the gift, the coveted prize, may have and often does have value out of all proportion to their original cost.

This writer wonders how many preachers began preaching as he did, at an old fashion sewing machine? It served at least a dual purpose as machine and pulpit, and neither value is to be depreciated. There before this make-believe pulpit and audience the gospel ministry had its inception.

Thank God for that old sewing machine! Good for nothing now, its dual purpose is remembered vividly and gratefully. There was no more valuable article of furniture in the home. Every child must have a physical setting for his dreams, and in the providence of God some day dreams become life dreams. Many a youngster who pounded on a table or machine is now expounding in the pulpit.

Junior pulpits or pulpits for Juniors are indispensable items in Christian civilization. Preachers will be needed in succeeding decades—perhaps more desperately than we now realize, but the seminary and the Church must look to the sewing machine or its counterpart in the American home for the young preachers of tomorrow.

THE SOUL OF A CHURCH.

Have you ever heard of Tom Johnson of Cleveland, Ohio? Well, neither had the writer until recently. There is a great educational value in visiting Cleveland with Supt. James H. Lightbourne. Two profitable hours were spent there recently while waiting for a train on our return trip from the Lakeside Conference.

After supper, we loitered in the great Public Square. And on our way to see the home of the Cleveland Indians, Supt. Lightbourne led us to the statue of the Hon. Tom Johnson. The inscription is brief, but eloquent:

In memory of the man who gave his fortune and his life to make Cleveland, as he often expressed it: "A happy place to live in—a better place to die in."

He found us striving each his selfish part.
He left a city with a civic heart.
And ever with his eye set on the goal—
The vision of a city with a soul.

Since Cleveland is one of the great cities of America, it appears reasonable to speak of it as a city with a soul. That is to say, it is a city with a great tradition, notable characteristics, with varied features characteristic of a progressive city. Yes, it seems quite appropriate to speak of the soul of a city. But remember, it is man who makes the city. The soul of the patriot becomes the soul of the city.

And has it not occurred to you that a church has a soul? It is unmistakable. Not in the absolute sense of being to be sure, but in the sense of being distinctive, unique. Charles E. Jefferson said in his Yale lectures, "A congregation possesses a disposition as pronounced and characteristic as any of its members."

Is there Scriptural warrant for this reference to the corporate soul? There is. It is stated that the Children of Israel "journeyed from Mount Hor by the way of the Red Sea, to compass the land of Edom: and the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way" (Num. 21:4). Again: "David was greatly distressed, because the soul of all the people was grieved" (Sam. 30:6).

Churches do readily acquire discernible qualities, obvious characteristics, predictable patterns of behavior. To speak of the soul of the church in this sense is no misnomer.

Those who are nominally acquainted with the churches of our Convention are cognizant of this truth. Each church has a personality, a soul. Some churches are progressive, others are conservative; some are victims of schizophrenia, while others are unified around a common program; some are easy to serve while others are difficult; some are perennially loyal to the institutions of the Church while others may be loyal in spots or not at all. When conference apportionments are raised or askings are made in the interest of the Church at large, it may be predicted with a remarkable degree of accuracy the number of churches which will respond. Inevitably the Church acquires a soul, but the qualities of that soul may be determined by pastor and people.

Read Revelation 2 and 3: "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches." The spirit had a message for the seven churches. Each had its own peculiar character and diagnosis. Each was instructed in no uncertain terms to strengthen its assets and to remove its liabilities.

A minister could desire no greater tribute or epitaph than this: "He found us striving each his selfish part; He left a church with an unselfish heart. And ever with his eye on the goal—The vision of a church with a soul."

The Tradition of Western Civilization

An Address by SIR OLIVER FRANKS, British Ambassador to the United States Before the International Congregational Council at Wellesley, Mass.

My title to speak to you tonight is really that my father, grandfather and three uncles have all been Congregational ministers. I was brought up in the Congregational tradition and my boyhood was spent on the campus of a theological training college for Congregational ministers of which my father was the principal.

When I look back, two things seem to stand out from the traditions and the teaching I absorbed. Congregationalism, it seems to me, lays a particular emphasis on the responsibility of the individual in religion and gives an ethical interpretation to the relationship of God and man, and consequently to that of man with man. I do not of course mean that these beliefs are in any way special to Congregationalists among Christians. That would be quite untrue. But it has always seemed to me that the tradition in which I grew up laid a consistent and perceptible emphasis on these beliefs.

The Congregationalist, I think, has not usually been so other-worldly in his outlook as to see in this life no more than doleful pilgrimage. He has remembered the striking affirmation in the first chapter of Genesis, where after the creation of the world has been described, it is said that "God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." He has believed that the world was full of opportunities to realize the good life and he has interpreted that love of God which is enjoined upon him as requiring for its full expression a relationship to his neighbors which in its active quality reflected, so far as was possible, the same outflowing of the personality and soul. He has not pushed the arguments of the Via Negative so far as to lose sight of another ancient element in the Christian tradition, that men were created in the image of God.

In this way there has resulted a natural, though not at all exclusive, emphasis on the freedom and responsibility of the individual Christian in this world. He has things to do in it, opportunities to grasp, and ideals to realize. He can choose whether he will so act. He is free to try to live up to his tradition and beliefs, or he can refuse. He can ask to be upheld in his endeavor by the Divine Grace or he can close the avenues of his spirit. He carries about with him under God a responsibility for what he tries to make of himself and his relationships to his fellows.

Every member helps shape the soul of his church, brings disease or health into its soul, makes it warped or whole, lean or robust, puny or strong, narrow or world-wide in its concern, miserly or magnanimous, ugly or beautiful, earth-laden or heaven-centered. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches today.

For these reasons, I thought it might be of interest this evening to look for a few minutes at those broader traditions of western civilization which inform our minds and see how far they allow for such an attitude to life.

We are all conscious, you as citizens of the United States and I as a citizen of Great Britain, that we are inheritors of the western tradition. This tradition is old; its roots go back to Jerusalem, Athens and Rome. A civilization has grown out of it, deriving its original inspiration from the ancient civilizations which flourished around the shores of the Mediterranean. We are all members of this western civilization and in recent years we have become increasingly conscious of the fact.

Our civilization is not very old. By comparison with the life of men on the earth, it is very young indeed. It is youthful even in relation to that short period of the story of mankind which falls within recorded history. It is an affair of the last 400 years. Yet, if young, it has had more than the usual share of the vigor of youth. Its impact upon the whole world has been far greater than that of any other civilization. In all other periods of human history of which we have knowledge, the peoples of the world, while in touch with their neighbors, knew little or nothing of life in continents other than their own.

At a time when the Roman Empire was at its height and to its citizens seemed to gather within its borders all the peoples of the known world, there existed in the East a great Chinese Empire which similarly gathered many peoples within its borders and seemed to span the inhabited world. These two great empires existed side by side. They had no relations or contacts with each other. The most that ever happened was a whisper borne on travellers' tales that there might be another center of life and civilization far away.

Until the emergence of western civilization, our one world was many worlds to the peoples who lived in it. It is the peoples of the western tradition who, in the last few centuries, have made it, irrevocably, for better or worse, one world.

The process started with the great voyages of discovery of the Portuguese and the Spaniards. It was continued by the French, the Dutch and the British. The seaways of the worlds were opened up and trade began to move between all five continents. And then the inventive genius of our civilization discovered new means of communication and transport, so that today we all live together in the same world. The radio and the aeroplane have brought the ends of the earth into contact; men, ideas and things can be transported in a matter of days from America to Asia or to Europe.

What is the special quality of our civilization which has so altered the relationships of the peoples of the world? A civilization is not an easy thing to define or describe. On the contrary, it is complex and elusive; a complete way of life instinct with many traditions of the past which live on in it, and built up from many interests, beliefs and practices which by their inter-play create its peculiar flavor and quality.

There is one mark, however, which it is comparatively easy to recognize and identify. Almost all other civilizations have looked at the future with one of two beliefs in mind. The first belief is that the golden age of man lies in the past. The aspect of the future must arouse melancholy for it holds no promise of anything but stages of life further removed from the past ideal. Such a view is common in the literature of the ancient world. It is found in Hesiod, whose picture of history is a retrogression from the age of gold to the age of iron. Listen to Horace: "What a race the golden sires have left, worse than their fathers, and their offspring will be baser still." It is found even in the beginnings of the Modern Age, as when, for example, Rousseau harks back to the life of the noble savage distinguished in its simplicity and worth from later forms of society.

The second belief sees the history of man as cycles of growth and decline. Any society, mankind as a whole, even the whole inhabited universe, comes into being, matures and decays. The pulse of the universe beats in an alternate expansion and contraction. History endlessly repeats itself. That which hath been is that which shall be. This view, too, is common. It echoes down western tradition ever since it was put forward by Virgil, who thought that with Augustus the great age of gold returned.

Western civilization has never believed either that the future must be worse than the present or that the future must be a repetition of the past. It has never viewed the future with sadness or with resignation. Its mark is hope. We believe that the future can be better than the present; that what men do can affect their prospects. The world in which men live and work is of such a nature that it is reasonable to look forward with confidence, and back that confidence with enterprise. Because it has been hopeful, western civilization has also been restless and dynamic. Change could be for the better; it was man's business to make it so.

This note of hope derives from the beliefs of the Middle Ages from which western civilization sprang. The Middle Ages, too, were hopeful, though not about this world. In those centuries men rested their hopes upon a future state of happiness beyond this world. Their hope was a religious hope. The very use of language by the great masters of mediaeval thought bears witness to this belief. When they spoke of man and his destiny, they called him viator, the traveller whose goal reached beyond the confines of this life. Their concern was with the duties of the traveller and how he might best prepare himself as he made his journey for the life that lay beyond it.

Nor was this belief confined to the learned. At the beginning of the Modern Age it received immortal embodiment in the writings of a tinker. John Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" sets down the trials of a pilgrim as he travels, and yet it is full of hope, as all who have read the immortal allegory know. Every chapter of the "Pilgrim's Progress" is vibrant with hope, but this world seems a valley of shadows full of perils; true happiness lies beyond the celestial gates.

It is characteristic of our civilization that it has extended the notions of hope and confidence to man's dealings with this world. Both in the relation of man to nature and in the relations of men to each other, improvement is possible and attainable. It is not often remembered that the idea of progress is a comparatively new idea in the history of thought. It first came into existence about 200 years ago. Today we are apt to take it for granted. We argue about progress; we hold differing views about what constitutes progress; we are pleased or disappointed with the amount of progress made in any particular direction. But we normally assume that progress is possible.

It is the element of hope and confidence which has made it possible for the idea of progress to arise. It is true that the reality of progress is at times more unquestioningly accepted than at others. When the first World War broke out in 1914, my father was approximately the age that I am now. Contrast the 40 odd years through which he had lived with those that have been my lot. He lived in England under the reigns of Queen Victoria and King Edward VII. No great war marred the succession of the years. Material wealth seemed steadily to increase. It seemed reasonable to suppose that health and happiness were steadily increasing too. The order of society seemed to become increasingly stable and pacific. The nations had largely learned to settle their problems without recourse to war. In short, it was a progressive age. To doubt the reality of progress was unreasonable.

In my own lifetime I have lived through two great world wars. I have also experienced the wreat depression of the early 1930's and the troubled uncertainties of these post-war years. My 40 years' view is very different from that of my father. It is not nearly so easy for me to assume that progress has its automatic yearly increments. It is not as clear as it seemed a generation ago that human society is steadily improving in the methods by which it solves its problems.

Yet, though by contrast I am not so sure about the reality of progress; though I am much more open to argument about what real progress consists in; though I think of progress in human society as something to be achieved painfully and with effort rather than coming almost unsought; I believe with my father that progress is possible and that it is worth human effort and human work to achieve it. Western civilization has received severe jolts in the 20th century, but because it is western civilization it still has hope and confidence about the future. It still believes men can progress if they will.

In the hard school of experience the 20th century has learned what the 19th century was in danger of forgetting; that progress is not automatic. In the 19th century, men in their over-confidence proclaimed an inevitable law of progress. Huxley said: "Progress is not an accident but a necessity," and Herschel announced: "Man's progress towards a higher state need never fear a check but must continue till the very last existence of history." Our Victorian grandparents often muddle up progress with evolution. They often failed to see that the survival of the fittest did not necessarily mean the survival of the useful or the good; they confused a scientific theory with a non-existent metaphysical law.

Why should it have become reasonable for men to believe in progress? What further condition made it possible for the peoples of Western civilization to extend that hope and confidence about the ultimate destiny of mankind which they inherited from their mediaeval forefathers to the actual processes of living here in this world? At this point there emerges another mark. It is this civilization which has given birth to the industrial revolution.

We have only to look beyond the modern age to see how vast that revolution has been. Before it, men had inventions such as the use of the wheel, the controlled use of fire, and the making of metals and tools. Now new sources of power never before dreamt of have been harnessed to the needs of men; coal, oil, electricity and soon, we are told, there will be atomic energy.

With these new sources of power at their disposal, men have devised machines which in numberless ways multiply the productivity of human effort. As a result our whole way of life has changed. Our great cities, with their elaborate services of light, heat, water and sanitation, are products of the industrial revolution. So, too, are the new means of transport and communication which have now shrunk the whole circumference of the globe to the dimensions of a short journey.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

KEEP THEM WORKING.

Work on the Elon College Memorial Gymnasium is progressing nicely. The grading has been done, the foundation has been laid, the steel has been set. When you look at the framework as it now stands, it looks almost like a steel forest standing against an invading army. The walls are going up. We are having quite a bit of rain right now, which hinders the workmen, but when the weather is favorable, they are putting the bricks and stones in place, and it is beginning to look like a building.

The one big factor now is to keep the workmen on the job so that building operations will not need to stop until the building is ready for use. There is only one thing that could possibly take the workmen off the job and that is the lack of money with which to pay them. Laborers have a way of wanting their wages when the work is done. It is right and proper that they should. They cannot be expected to work without pay or to work now and permit us to pay later. They and their families must have the necessities of life as the days pass and as the work goes on.

The Alumni of the College are undertaking to erect this gymnasium as a memorial to the Elon College men and women who lost their lives in World Wars I and II. They gave their lives for their country and the freedom of all mankind the whole world over. Their fellow alumni do not intend that their names shall ever perish on this campus or on the pages of history. They have written their records in blood. We shall re-write them in stone with such firmness that time in its sweep shall not erase them but that these names shall stand there as a symbol of devotion, of patriotism, and sacrifice. When we consider the sacrifices that they made in comparison with the lives that we have lived, the erection of this small building should be a mere token of our appreciation and could hardly be classed as a sacrificial effort. Have you made your contribution? If so, could you add to that contribution immediately, or within a few days? If you have not made a contribution, won't you please consider it now and forward that contribution to our Alumni Secretary, Jimmy Darden, at the college within a day or so? We have sufficient funds for the payroll this week but we need money at the end of next week. Won't you be one of many who will keep the workmen on the job and help to see that the building is completed?

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS.

This week, three of our conferences are holding their Sunday School Conventions: Eastern Virginia, North Carolina and Virginia, and Eastern North Carolina. The Sunday School Convention in this section used to be a great occasion. Literally great throngs attended the State Sunday School Convention. Our local conference's Sunday School Convention, such as we are having this week, was largely attended. I have known as high as seventeen hundred to be present. They did not all get in the house. Evidently, they didn't intend to but there was something about the occasion that attracted wide attention and brought people together in great numbers. It is rather generous to think that there will be as many as three hundred in attendance at a Sunday School Convention now. What has brought about the change? In answering this question, there of course, will be differences of opinions but certain factors do enter in. First of all, everybody knew that there would be a magnificent spread of delicious foods, plenty and to spare, for everyone. Second, those responsible for the program always sought to have attractive speakers and at least one who would be considered a drawing card. The program would deal with the Sunday school, its organizations, its materials, and methods of instruction.

I have attended Sunday School Conventions in these recent by-gone days that had very little to do with the work of the Sunday school. There was an attempt at a certain kind of philosophy underlying the principles of education and an attempt at an explicit psychological approach to the pupil himself. Special emphasis was placed on the freedom of the child with an avowed opposition to any restraint of his purpose, desires, or acquaintances. The principles of so called progressive education were insisted upon in dealing with the developing child, even in Sunday school classes. These technical approaches to problems in connection with the work of the Sunday school have neither been inspirational nor very profitable. If we could outline a program whose main purpose it would be to acquaint the ones taught with the essential facts of the Holy Scripture and the introduction of the individual to Christ as his Savior with the salvation of the individual and the ultimate members help in the church as a principle end in mind. I am convinced that there would be more interest and much more accomplished than we seem to have gotten done in these recent years. At any rate, there has been a decline in interest in our Sunday schools in attendance and in additions to church membership resulting directly from the Sunday school. It seems that it is time for pastors, church officials, and Sunday school workers, to take stock and determine what might be done to change the picture and make the Sunday school the dynamic force in Christian Education that it should be. Our church is indebted to the work of the Sunday school and we should not permit it to lag in any respect.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Every part of the church's program requires money if the work is to be done efficiently and on time. This is true with the Convention's institution of Christian Education. Provision has been made for partial support of the college on the part of the church. Each local church has been apportioned a definite sum to be paid within the calendar year. Until the recent Convention met, these payments were to be made within the church year. Then the church year was changed so as to coincide with the calendar year. Time is passing, I fear, more rapidly than the funds are coming. A little interest, a little effort, and a little concern on the part of pastors and superintendents will result in a series of contributions coming from the Sunday schools and churches to the Convention office for the college. Whenever you send a contribution for the support of the college, the college is under obligation to render greater services to the church and to the cause of Christian Education every year.

Our report for the past week is as follows:

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

Mrs. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

GETTING READY FOR FALL.

"Now is the time to come to the aid of"—your woman's group. Our materials, packets, study books, Bible study books, etc. are all ready. Now is a good time to take the steer by the horns and get down to a little real concentration to plan your programs for the coming year.

The Program Committee, as soon as it is elected, should begin to study the literature in the packet and decide when each program can best be planned to suit your group. Do not wait until you elect your officers to order the material for next year. Order it now and have it in hand so you may begin with the program for October. It is a good idea for the President and perhaps the Vice-President to look over the material for the year and know what we will be studying.

Our Home Mission Study will be "America's Peoples" and our Foreign Mission Study will be "Japan." The Bible Study will be on the Gospel of John. All of these make for interesting reading and studying and certainly our programs for this coming year should be anything but dull if we but put a little work and study into them.

The packets for this year cost $1.25. The cost of the Japan study book is 60c and the book "Missions at the Grass Roots" (home study) is $1.00. The Bible Study book is 25c, and all may be ordered from the Convention Office at Elon, or Pilgrim Press, 14 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. Perhaps a list of books for all groups and all ages can be published later, but now is the time to get the packet and begin planning your programs for next year.

SANFORD WOMEN HAVE SPECIAL MEETING.

When the covers were taken from the dishes at our covered dish supper held, Monday evening, May 9, at the Sanford Congregational Christian Church, there was a variety of food that might be seen on any banquet table. The women of the Missionary circles, meeting jointly, found places at the small tables scattered throughout the assembly room and after a blessing had been given for such a bountiful meal, sat and enjoyed both the meal and the fellowship.

At the conclusion of the supper, Miss Emma Hart, in her usual manner of dignity, presented a short devotional entitled "A Moment of Worship." Then Miss Stella Stout, who is President of our Woman's Missionary Society, introduced Mrs. F. C. Lester, President of our North Carolina Woman's Conference from Asheboro, N. C.

While Mrs. Lester talked to the group on the topic "Horizons Unlimited," she gave a perfect illustration of the hardships and challenges we would meet in obtaining our goals—through the thunder, wind and rain which took place on the outside. We were told, though, that in setting our goals high and obtaining them, our hardships would seem petty indeed to the joy we would receive. This was further illustrated by the dying away of the thunder and wind. To realize our unity in working for our unlimited horizons, we stood and sang together "Bless Be the Tie That Binds."

MRS. PAUL L. WICKER, JR.

BETHEL WOMEN MAKE YEARLY REPORT.

As we draw near the close of the year, we, the women of Bethel Missionary Society (near Burlington) feel that we have spent a most wholesome year. In addition to having a program at each meeting with good attendance, we have visited, sent cards, flowers, and gifts to the shut-ins. Other highlights of the year are listed.

Last year we lost one of our most beloved members, who left behind two infant daughters. Feeling maybe we could help in some way, we all met in one of our homes to sew for the babies, each bringing a picnic lunch and materials for sewing. An enjoyable day was spent together and many clothes made for the babies.

A special offering was taken at one of our meetings to help bear the expense of an operation for a lady in our community who was very ill in a sanatorium.

An educational movie was planned for the young people of the church during Youth Week. The movie was shown in the local school with games and refreshments enjoyed afterward.

Nearby churches were invited to observe World Day of Prayer with us at Bethel. The service was most inspirational with five other churches taking part in the program.

We invited two other women's groups to join us for a book review, On Our Own Doorsteps, given by Mrs. W. W. Sloan. Likewise, we joined another group for Bible Study and an evening of fellowship.

During Vacation Bible School we served refreshments to the children during their recreation period at mid-morning.

PROUD OF THE GOSPEL!

A Sermon

By DR. BOYNTON MERRILL
First Congregational Church
Columbus, Ohio

Paul, the great apostle, had a rare gift with words, and he generally said exactly what he meant. He spoke and wrote, as he lived, in forthright, unforgettable fashion. He did not stroll through life. He rather strode through it; he almost raced through it, for he knew exactly where he was going and what he had to do. "This one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, I press on toward the mark." He fastened the teeth of his mind onto his convictions as a bulldog fastens his teeth onto a stick. You can twist, and turn, and wheel and swing him quite off the ground but you can't shake him loose. "I am persuaded that neither life nor death can separate us from the love of God." "I know whom I have believed."

This fully persuaded man, this first century Jew who became the most ardent and fearless proclaimer of the infant faith must have been, I sometimes think, like "tough, old Thomas Carylye"; he said it, and you either took it or left it: and that was that!

Now it is almost impossible to take the words of such a blunt, forthright man and make them any more emphatic than he did himself. However, I have just come upon a modern rendering of one phrase of Paul's which seems to be nearer to what Paul probably meant than what he actually did say.

Let me bring it to you. Paul was writing to the Church in Rome. It was then a little handful of people at the citadel of the world, seeking to live, some of them in Caesar's own household, in the light of the teachings of Jesus. To them he wrote, "Many times I have purposed coming to you in Rome; but again and again I have been prevented; but I want you to know that I am ready and eager to preach in Rome, for 'I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ.' I am not ashamed to place my Christ, the slain Galilean and his Gospel, alongside even Caesar and the imperial religion."

"I am not ashamed of the Gospel," says Paul. Now what does James Moffett, the great modern translator of Paul, do with the same phrase? How does he make it bolder and probably nearer Paul's own spirit than even Paul himself did? "I am not ashamed of the Gospel," says Paul. "I am proud of the Gospel," suggests Moffet.

How much more clean-cut and positive is "I am proud of the Gospel" than is the negative, "I am not ashamed." Instantly it sets the passage aflame. It seems to hint at bugles and banners. "I want to come to Rome," Paul really said, "because I am proud of the Gospel of Christ; because I want to put the cross of Christ, on which Roman might crucified him, alongside the imperial standards of Caesar's legions. I want, in that city of great names, to lift up the name of Christ. I am proud of him and of his Gospel. I have no fear of the comparison or outcome." "I am proud of the Gospel of Christ."

Now what was this Gospel, this good news (for that is what Gospel means) of which Paul was proud, and to which he later did bear witness at Rome not only with his lips but with his life? If it was something he could proudly hold aloft and place over against the worldly powers and the pagan gospel of his day, is it, or is it not something of which we too can be proud in our day? If the cross of Christ took over from pagan Rome, is there truth and power left in it to take over from the hammer and sickle, from the twisted swastika, and from the dollar sign of our own day?

To try to tell you what the Gospel of Christ is in a few minutes is a difficult and, perhaps, even a ridiculous thing to try to do. I would, however, like to try to tell you two reasons why I, too, am not ashamed but am proud of the Gospel, and why I think we, you and I, here in this Church and in this age should be proud of it. We will do well, too, to weigh its worth and if it is still as true and as full of power as it has been we might well seek more earnestly to lift it aloft. Let's dare to search our hearts and ask ourselves if we are bearing witness to it as those who are truly proud of it.

The Gospel of Christ is, first of all, a disclosure and a declaration about God; made, not only in words, but in deeds. What Christ said was, and could do for and through men was underlined, illumined and proven true by what he himself was. He practiced what he preached. He proved the truth of what he said. He demonstrated what he declared and so men had to believe him and they did. They believed him not only because the teaching appealed to their minds as true, but even more, because the life appealed to them as strangely wonderful.

When he taught that God was a spirit and could be worshipped anywhere and always, in the quiet of a man's own heart, as well as in a temple, he was doing a new thing. He was teaching an idol-loving, emperor-worshipping age that God was no idol in a grove, no Caesar on a throne, no Zeus on Olympus, no Bacchus whirling in a drunken revel. God, said Jesus, was as close to a man as his own thoughts, and fears and hopes, as mysteriously present to help a man as his own swift cry for help. But he did far more than say that God was a spirit close by. He proved it, by the very calmness and courage with which he lived, by the accents of authority with which the truth fell from his lips. "I can of mine own soul do nothing." "The words that I speak are not mine, they are the words of him that sent me." "I and the Father are one." God's power worked in him; God's light shone through him; God's will was done by him; and so, men looking at him marvelled and queried, "Whence hath this man this wisdom? Whence hath he this power?" There was only one answer. It was God working in him: and, said Jesus, he is likewise in you but you have hardened your hearts and not let him fill, sway, and lift you.

Here then is the first thing about this Gospel of which Paul was not ashamed and of which, better, he was proud. It was a proclamation of God as a very present spiritual help. He was not a mythical giant on a mountain, not an emperor, his hands red with blood, on a throne. This Gospel was then, and still is, a Gospel for man; of God and man linked, leagued and fused: of man, by God's indwelling spirit, made sufficient for every day's most level needs. The Gospel was not so much a teaching about God, as it was a demonstration of God. Christ himself was the Gospel. In life he proved that it worked. So men came to believe at once both in what he said and on what he was. The early Christians were Christ's men. They had fallen in love with him. They were devoted, not to a

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

What are you going to be when you grow up? I know you hear that many times because grownups are always asking growing-uppers that all important what.

Last week I heard a three-year-old say, "My brother wants to be a doctor but when I grow up I'm going to be a mama and then I can wear lipstick, but new hats and spank my children!" Being a mama involves a little more than that, but wanting to be a mother is a good thing.

There are many professions for men: teaching, law, medicine, preaching. For girls there are careers in teaching, medicine, law and even preaching.

There are not enough ministers in our country or enough church workers. Here are some jobs that both men and women can do:

Missionary. One can train for educational, medical, agricultural or evangelistic service.

Minister of Music. Usually it is a man, but a woman can serve. This means having charge of the organ, choirs, all the musical program of the church. Special talent is required for this field.

Parish Visitor. This is usually done by a woman but men surely can visit. This person visits the sick, new babies, visitors and those families that should come to church.

Minister. Both men and women are ordained in our Church. Sometimes a minister serves as an evangelist travelling over the country speaking to different churches and giving inspiration to the people. No greater choice could be made than that of serving the people from the pulpit.

If you do not make Church Work a full time career you can teach in Sunday school, help with the young people's program, be a deacon or deaconess, serve on committees, learn the fundamentals of the church and really help your minister.

BENUMBED POLITENESS.

By MARION ELLIOT.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Robert was an only child. The good things of life came to him with little or no effort. Alone with his parents he was obedient and responsive, but the pressure he felt, when with outsiders, seemed to seal him up. With them he refused to participate in even the common courtesies. Mrs. Smith's friends were beginning to notice a constant apologetic manner on her part whenever her son was with her. She was taking on the responsibility of Robert's politeness as well as her own.

"Shake hands with Mrs. Brown, Robert, and say 'How do you do?'" Robert stared straight ahead and move not even a finger. "How do you do?" asked the mother, intense interest in her voice, as if hoping her own extra courtesy might atone for the child's lack.

At another home, where Robert had been taken by his mother to an afternoon tea, his elbow inadvertently brushed a beautiful jar from a table. The crash of porcelain on the polished floor was followed by a monment of horrified silence. "Robert," said his mother with tears in her voice, "tell Mrs. George how very sorry you are—and pick up each of the pieces." Robert neither opened his lips nor moved a muscle—just stared at a picture on the wall, while his mother picked up the fragments and made profuse apologies.

"I can only hope and pray," said Mrs. Smith, relating the unhappy incident to her husband, "that something will soon occur to show me the key to our child's attitude in such matters. I cannot publicly make him say 'thank you', nor force him to bend to pick things up. And I fear that if I keep him from the company of others, the habit of aloofness will strengthen. He says 'thank you to us, but never have I heard him say it to anyone else.'"

One day, soon after, Mrs. Smith and Robert were in a candy shop. Piles of chocolate bars stood on a counter. Robert loved chocolate bars; yet he was allowed but few. Again and unconsciously, while reaching for something else, his elbow brushed the top bar, causing it to fall to the floor.

"Pick it up, dear," said his mother gently, but Robert only gazed at the treasure. Just then a little urchin bent over, retrieved the candy and was about to put it back in place when the proprietress said to him "You may have it." Robert's eyes flashed with interest. "Mother," he said, would she have given it to me if I had picked it up?" To this she answered, "Why yes, I'm sure she would." Robert turned to the little boy, who was eagerly tearing off the wrapper. Mrs. Smith was sure she had never seen her son regard any object with such longing before. Suddenly the little stranger broke the bar squarely in two and, with a friendly smile, offered one half to Robert. It was readily accepted. "Say th—" began Mrs. Smith from habit, but her son's voice preceded hers. "Thank you!" said he, clearly and sincerely.

"I think," she said to Robert's father that night, "that for the first time 'Thank you' really meant something to our boy. He was not actually as stubborn as I had thought—only truly honest. Probably, to him proffered cakes at a party were but part of the program and meant little; why make an exhibition of gratitude which he did not feel? I must point out to him, most carefully, that grownups are usually more interested in other grownups and that it is really a kindness when they offer him any attention at all." She sighed happily, "I begin to see daylight. Henceforth I shall try to help Robert more wisely—and with fresh hope. But," she added after a moment, "what about the broken jar?"

"My dear," answered the father, "your conclusions, I think, are only half right. I have been pondering our child's behavior for some time. Whenever attention has been drawn to Robert, while away from home, he has, it seems, suffered from a kind of stage fright. This reaction has become a habit. Today, his appreciation of the other boy's generosity was, evidently, far stronger than the grip of fear. To prevent that fear from again controlling him, why not try keeping hands off his 'How-do-you-do's' and 'Thank-you's' for a time?"

salvation, but to a Saviour. They were concerned not with redemption but with a Redeemer.

Christianity can never be just a set of true teachings, never merely a code of good ethics, never purely a system of logical, philosophical arguments or of impressive, difficult-to-understand theological doctrines. These are often substituted for the simple, terrific Gospel because these can be looked at in the abstract. These do not take a man and shake him. They can be as lifeless as a frog in alcohol or as a butterfly on a pin. But, that is one thing the true Gospel cannot be, lifeless. If you can separate your religion from your life, then you may have a religion, but you have not got the Christianity which Jesus taught and lived. To the extent that we separate it from life, we are making a mockery of the Gospel. Yes, God is God in life. Jesus was the revelation in life of what God could do when a life is utterly committed and obedient to Him. What Paul was declaring was this: "I am proud of the Gospel, proud that I know through Christ what God waits to do in, for and through me and in, and for, and through men. I must tell the good news of it."

So you see, the Gospel was not only good news about God, it was also good news for and about men. The Gospel came proclaiming the essential dignity of all men, not of rulers, and princes, and wise men only. Here is where we are in at the birth of democracy. Jesus came announcing not the inevitable limitations of men, but their illimitable possibilities. Man was to many only a creature of the field; life was cheap; to some this still seems so. How many lives, I wonder, the lives of young men dear to us, are we moderns going to let Mars take in exchange for Arabian oil wells? To many man was a tragic beast elevated enough above brutedom so that he is doomed to pitiful hoping and certain defeat. Some still think that that still is his destiny. It was not so to Jesus. To him man was a child of God; and God was spiritual power inside his children. He was love running all through life and out past death. Some day enough other men will really believe as did he and then God's way will be given the right of way. But until this good news about God and man is given the right of way we will go on talking about Christ but living like pagans.

The Gospel came calling men up out of slavery into freedom, up out of bondage and ignorance into knowledge of the truth; up out of defeat at the hands of the animal side of him into victory over it; up out of weakness into strength; up out of fatalism and despair into purposive living and even purposeful dying, too.

Wherever the good news of the life and teachings of Jesus and of this possible greatness of man has gone, man has begun to hate racial and economic slaveries, has begun to elevate woman-kind, has begun to care deeply about little children, has begun to search after the truth that saves, to glory in and create beauty, to catch glimpses of righteousness being done, to suspect that he was not put here to dream idly, and die meanly.

Yes, as God comes alive in man, man, also, comes alive. The Gospel has opened men's eyes to see, and love and pursue new values. He has dreamed that he would some day organize mankind into a brotherly fellowship of mutual service. This has become an ideal which has grown with the centuries; but it began very simply with the Galilean. May I urge, in connection with this dream and effort toward peace and brotherhood, upon this Congregation and upon all within the sound of my voice carefully to read and earnestly to study Cord Meyer's book, Peace and Anarchy? I beg you seriously to study the World Federalist Movement. I am not certain of the entire wisdom of it. I do believe it has in it glimpses of a way that men who care for the Christian dream of brotherhood must look at. We must survey it carefully lest we run the risk of saying, "Thy Kingdom Come" and then fail to look with open minds at what may be one of the paths which may lead us, even in our own time, nearer to the day of its dawning. If our threatened, confused and greed-cursed world is to be saved, it will be saved by this Gospel which declares that God is in the midst, that man is his child, and that we are meant to labor as conscious co-workers with Him.

"I am not ashamed of the Gospel!" No, let's put it this way, "I am proud of the Gospel!"

RESOLUTION CONCERNING

WHEREAS, he has found time to hold the highest offices in our Eastern Virginia Conference, and in the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches; and,

WHEREAS, he has been a civic-minded person in the finest sense of the word, serving in the highest capacities various community, fraternal, charitable, and ministerial organizations, thereby representing our Congregation with honor in this and many other communities; and,

WHEREAS, he has done fine work in the field of Missions, on all our Church publications, and in the writings of papers and poems, and in his public addresses over radio networks; and,

WHEREAS, Dr. Truitt's wife, daughter and son have served the Church in all its activities, particularly in its musical programs, Sunday School classes, and societies; and,

WHEREAS, this fine family has exemplified Christian living at its fullest and best; and

WHEREAS, our feelings at this time are those of profound regret in losing our ministerial family, pride in their accomplishments, and interest in their new opportunities;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED:

That we express our feelings of deepest gratitude to Dr. Truitt for his outstanding services, to our Church and our denomination, for his ministry to our entire community, for his living example of good will to all men, his understanding of us, and his inspiration to us; and,

That we express our appreciation of all the fine and generous efforts of the Truitt family in behalf of our Church, and all its activities; and,

That we express to Dr. Truitt and all the member of his family our affection of their associations with us, and extend to them our sincerest good wishes in their new fields of Christian endeavor; and,

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED:

That this testimonial be spread upon the records of this Conference; that copies thereof be delivered to Dr. Truitt and his family; and that copies thereof be transmitted to the Secretary of the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, to the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and to the Secretary of the Eastern Virginia Conference.

PRAYERS OF CONFESSION.

LESSON IV.—JULY 24, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: For Thou, Lord art good, and ready to forgive, and abundant in lovingkindness to all that call upon Thee.—Psalm 86:5.

LESSON: Psalms 32, 51, 86, 130:1-5.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I John 1:5-2:2.

Words Hard to Say.

There are three simple words, so simple that even a very small child can say them, which are among the most difficult words in any language to say. These words are, "I have sinned." If that sounds strange, thing for a minute how difficult it is to get people to acknowledge that they have done something wrong, that they are guilty of a crime, that they have sinned. Folks will do almost anything before they will admit that they have sinned. They will say that it was not their fault, that it was their heridity, that it was their environment, that it was their companions, that the thing they did was not wrong, that they are no worse than other people, that they are better than most people, and so on ad infinitum. We not only rationalize, we erect defense-mechanisms. Let it be repeated, the words, "I have sinned," are hard words to say. And thereby hangs a tale. There is nothing that modern men and women need to do more than to make a full and frank confession of their sins. Back of many a nervous breakdown and underlying much nervous tension is the stress and strain of guilt due to un-forgiveness, because of unconfessed sins.

The Saints and Confession of Sin.

It is a striking fact that as a rule, the best people feel most keenly their need for forgiveness, and most freely and fully confess their sins. A sensitive spiritual nature will shrink from sins that others make light of, he will feel the need of forgiveness, and experience the joy of forgiveness for deeds that others may not even call misdeeds. Growth in grace is marked among other things by increasing sensitiveness to sin. People who feel no special need for forgiveness are in a bad spiritual state.

A Song of Penitence and Confession.

We have today, as the Scriptural background for this lesson the major part of two psalms, both of them penitential or confessional. The first is one of the truly great psalms, a spiritual masterpiece—Psalm 51. Scholars believe it was written or spoken by David after his sin which involved Bathsheba. It might well have been, for it comes from an anguished heart, a heart conscious of a great sin against a good God. It is a cry for mercy according to the lovingkindness of the Lord, and not by virtue of any merit on the part of the man himself. David confesses his sin without any ifs, ands, or buts. Furthermore, he frankly states that it was against God himself that he had sinned, although his fellowmen would have said that it was against Bathsheba or her husband that he had sinned. All sin ultimately is against God. He does the only thing that a man can do with sin that has any value—he frankly acknowledges and confesses it. Until he had done that he could do nothing. After he had done that, he needed not to do more, except to accept the divine forgiveness. But he does more than simply pray for forgiveness, for cleansing from the stain of guilt, he prays for a new heart and a new spirit. He cries out in earnestness of spirit, "Create in me a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within me." He has not lost what we would call his salvation, but he has lost the joy of it, and he prays earnestly that God would restore unto him the "joy of thy salvation," and that God would uphold him with a "willing spirit."

But forgiveness for him is no cheap matter. It does not mean that he can go about as if nothing had happened. With the burden of guilt taken away, and with the joy of salvation restored, he promises to teach transgressors the way of God, and predicts that as a result of what has happened to him, "sinners shall be converted unto thee." If a man has the idea that he can do anything he pleases after he has been forgiven, he lacks the elemental spirit which is the basis of the kind of penitence on which forgiveness is based.

Another Song of Confession and Forgiveness.

Psalm 32 is another classic of the tolerable burden which unconfessed sin binds upon the human heart, and of the inexpressible joy which confession and its consequent forgiveness brings. In picturesque language the Psalmist tells about how he felt when he kept his sin hidden deep in his own life. His bones wasted away through his groaning all the day long—he really suffered physically because he had not confessed his sin and had not received divine forgiveness. God's hand was heavy upon him, both day and night.

And then there is a note of inexpressible joy and gladness in his song. The old burden is gone. The sense of guilt has been taken away. The tension has been relieved. The broken harmony has been restored. How? What has he done? Had he bought all this by paying a sum of money? Had he done some special work of grace or merit? Had he simply denied the reality of it all and decided to forget it? No, he had simply confessed his sin unto the Lord, acknowledged his transgression, admitted his guilt, and in simple faith, he had claimed the forgiveness which God had graciously promised. But more than that, he had experienced that blessedness which the frank and full confession of sin brings through the grace of God. In that long ago day, centuries before the New Testament was written and before Christ was known, he had experienced the confirmation of the words of one of Jesus' disciples "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just or righteous to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." "I will confess my transgressions unto Jehovah" he says, "and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin" he adds.

It is as simple as that. So simple that we can hardly believe it. But it is the heart of the gospel, that Christ Jesus receiveth sinners, that men who have sinned, no matter what they have done, may turn to Him in sincerity and in honest confession, and may have the assurance that their sins have been forgiven. This does not mean that the penalty of sin is taken away. It does not mean that as far as possible restitution must not be made. But it does mean that the broken relationship has been restored, that we have been reconciled through Christ, that God will remember our sins against us no more.

It costs too. The Cross of Christ is a dramatic expression of what it costs God to forgive the sins of men, to impute to them righteousness, to take their sins upon himself. Thus it is that when a man has experienced forgiveness of sins in Christ, he does not think of it as the green light to go ahead and sin as much as he pleases, but as the greatest possible deterrent from sinning. The relief from the overwhelming burden of sin, the restoration of the personal relationship, the joy of forgiveness, these are the results of the confession of sin and its consequent forgiveness, and incentives to the good life.

PSALMS OF TRUST.

LESSON V—JULY 31, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and fortress; my God, in whom I trust—Psalm 91:2.

LESSON: Psalms 34, 37, 46, 91, 138:3, 7a; 143:8.

Public Enemy No. 1.

What is Public Enemy No. 1? The Liquor Traffic? Well, that's bad and becoming increasingly so. The "Numbers Racket" and Gambling of all kinds? That too, is an insidious enemy which is taking so much of the life-blood of America, and is a real enemy to sound economic life in the nation. Killer Diseases, such as cancer, tuberculosis, pneumonia, etc., even venereal diseases? These and other diseases take a heavy toll of life and health in our country today in spite of rapid progress in scientific medicine and new ways of treatment. But none of these, or other things that might be mentioned, are Public Enemy No. 1. That title goes to a simple word of four letters, fear. It is quite within bounds of sober truth to say that whereas these things mentioned above slay their thousands, fear slays its tens of thousands. Not always suddenly of course, in fact very seldom does it act thus. But fear and its ilk destroy peace of mind, cause worry, undermine health, break down the mind, and even bring about ultimate death. If there is a need for a cure for a deadly thing in modern life, if is a cure for fear. Is there any remedy, any specific, any cure?

The Cure for Fear.

Faith is the antidote or cure for fear, faith and faith alone. But not faith in the sense of simply believing an intellectual statement, or of accepting a man-made creed. Faith in the sense of personal trust, faith in the sense of appropriation of spiritual resources, faith in the sense of response to the living God—here is the one and the sure cure for fear and worry. And lest it be thought that this is simply the pious bromide of a weak-minded parson, it should be added that it is the unanimous declaration of the leading physicians and psychologists and psychiatrists, at least of Christian psychiatrists. Even so great a psychologist or psychiatrist as Jung, a man not especially religious by orthodox standards frankly and boldly stated that of all the patients who came to him among the middle aged, practically every one of them had nothing wrong with them which religious faith could not cure. And this same thing is being said by many, many specialists in human ills and ailments as they concern the mental and emotional illnesses of modern men and women.

An Old Prescription.

But of course this is no new prescription. It is as old as the Bible. But modern folks like new things and new names, so they pay great sums of money to get the same results that they can readily and more surely get from the Bible itself. To men and women obsessed by fear, the Bible offers a cure for fear, simple, sincere, personal faith in God. It is all summed up in the words of Jesus "Have faith in God." Always Jesus was urging men to have faith in the sense of personal trust. There is nothing anywhere in the world which brings such relief from fear as faith in God as revealed in Jesus Christ.

Psalms or Songs of Trust.

But this was not original with Jesus. These songs of the Hebrew people which we have been studying this quarter are full of invitations to an affirmation of faith. But not by men who were living in a vacuum, or by men who were living easy or sheltered lives. These songs come from the hearts of men, who in the midst of trouble and trial had what the New Testament refers to as the peace of God which passeth understanding, because they had faith, because there was a personal trust in their hearts as concerning the goodness and the grace of God. We have several of these songs of faith in today's lesson. They make good reading for troubled and anxious minds and hearts. Many a worried mind would find relief, and many a heavy heart would find rest if these songs of faith were read and remembered as a cure for fear.

A Great God.

"O come and magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together." That was the basis of their faith—they had a great God.

They magnified him, we minimize him. We cut him down to our human size; we limit him. We do not believe he really can meet our deep human needs. We do not think of him as a very present help in trouble. We do not think that religion has any relation to mental health or peace of mind. We think of God as concerned only with the souls of men, and do not realize that he is also the Great Physician to the bodies and minds of men. Here was a man who found "deliverance from all his fears" through a simple faith in God.

Faith and Works.

"Trust in the Lord and do good." Faith is not simply waiting with folded hands. Faith is trust with its sleeves rolled up going to work. "I believed, therefore have I spoken" said the Psalmist. "Faith without works is dead," said the brother of our Lord, and he has the mind of our Lord. But works are the fruitage of faith.

From Experiment to Experience.

"O taste and see that the Lord is good." God is fair-minded. He is willing to be judged by the scientific test. "Come and see," said Jesus—put the thing to a test for yourself. Don't take my word for it, said the Psalmist, but taste and see that the Lord is good. Go from experiment to experience. Have a reason for the faith that is in thee. All too many people wait for the results of Christian faith before they take the step that brings the results. For instance, they say that they do not feel a certain way, when the trouble is that they have not taken the step which would give them the proper emotion or feeling tone of the experience. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them," said Jesus.

Asking, Appropriating or Claiming.

Two men are engaged in prayer. One says, "O Lord, help me. Take away my fear. Give me peace. Give me trust. Fill me with hope." The other prays, "O Lord, I rest in thee. I take peace, I belong to thee. Thou art my dwelling place and underneath are the everlasting arms. In thee I live and move and have my being. I give myself to thee." Do you get the difference. There is all the difference in the world. Faith not only asks, faith appropriates.

"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble," therefore, because he is our refuge and strength, we will not fear. Faith in God is the cure for fear.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

The wonderful rains we had this past week have given new life to our garden. Now the vegetables are growing fast and soon we expect to serve many of them on the table. We hope to can some, too, for winter use.

Many children are or have been on vacations. However, we always have a group of boys and girls with no place to go. They have neither family or sponsor. We try to send these children to church camps or to boy and girl scout camps. There is, of course, a fee for these outings, and we need $50.00 now to finish out paying for these camping trips.

In the past three weeks eight of our children have had their tonsils removed. We try at all time to care for the children's health and to give each child personal attention. All of these children got along well and have recovered from their operation. Some already are showing signs of better health generally.

Request to take in children, especially from broken homes, grows daily. Most of these cases are for children ranging in ages from three to ten years. We are overcrowded now with children in this younger age group. This brings about a problem of care. It gives us fewer older boys and girls, and that means that we must hire more help to take care of the younger children.

Our repair work goes on. We have spent in repairs and modernization approximately $8,000, and it seems there is no end to needs. This past week the old wood and coal cook stove gave out and we had to buy a new one. We found a modern commercial type gas range with two ovens and ten eyes. That meant we had to have a gas heater. The cost of the two, installed, was about $450.00. What Sunday school or church will be the first to send us a contribution on this project?

We are expecting Dr. John G. Truitt before August 1st. We are looking forward to his coming and having him with us.

WHAT HARVEST WILL THEY REAP?

In the 1930's, John Steinbeck's "Grapes of Wrath" made a nation indignantly aware of the poverty and travail of its migrant agricultural workers.

In the decade and more between, public opinion and economic changes during the war brought some progress in developing a program to meet the needs of these workers.

Today, however, the federal government program has been withdrawn.
Rising unemployment across the nation is expected to send additional thousands into harvest work, swelling the ranks of migrant farm workers to a post-war high. This summer the men, women and children who follow the crops may too easily slide back into the misery of the 1930's.

Steinbeck wrote of the people who fled the dust bowl in the West. But every year there is a tide of migrants and their families moving north: from Florida and Georgia up the eastern seaboard to Virginia, New Jersey, New York and the New England States; from Texas as far up as the orchards of Michigan and the beet fields of Minnesota; from southern California to the fruit harvests of Washington State.

They work in at least 40 of the 48 states, and their number is estimated at two and a half million.

The migrants' seasonal labor is essential to the national economy. Yet they share pitifully little in the "American Way of Life" they help make possible.

Creating a better Christian America for these disinherited human beings is a test and a challenge to all of us as citizens and Christians. Cooperative church action can do a great deal to meet the challenge.

Churches of many denominations have been cooperating in work with migrants for over 25 years. Today 23 denominations, working through the Home Missions Council, carry out a program of recreation, education, child care, counseling and worship for the migrants in 23 states.

A permanent staff of 15 ministers and community workers is augmented each summer by a growing number of college and seminary students who work as ministers, teachers, child-care specialists and social workers.
These students, many of whom expect eventually to become full-time missionaries, include Anglo, Negro and Spanish-speaking men and women.
Last summer's seasonal staff of 150 included an exchange student from France and a graduate student from Liberia. This summer over 200 church workers will go out from annual training institutes held in various states.

Six station wagons, called Harvesters, have greatly increased the effectiveness of the migrant ministry. Equipped with portable organ, folding altar, sports equipment, medicine kit, books, record-player and sound movie projector, the Harvester travels from camp to camp, a symbol to the migrant of a church that cares what happens to him and wants him in its fellowship.

By sending your local church contributions to your State Council of Churches; by supporting the World Day of Prayer; by becoming informed about migrants in your own communities; in these ways you can help create a better Christian America for these disinherited people.

Moses and His Rod Bible Story in Rhyme

"And the Lord said unto him, "What is that in thy hand?"—Exodus 4:2.

The question here asked was first addressed to Moses, by God, we can see Just after that he'd been declaring to God how helpless and useless was he.

*Though God in His power could manage alone from time immemorial His plan
In true condescension and pity to use the talents and gifts of a man.*

The fullness of time had now really arrived the bondage of Egypt must cease And out from in under oppression and wrong His children must have a release.

*To Pharaoh the King, the word must be sent demanding the people now go,
And failing compliance with Jehovah's demand a series of judgments should know.*

To Moses this offer of honor was made, but he like the rest of our race Thought nought of the glory to God he would bring but only the trials he'd face.

And so with a modesty foolish and false, nor talent nor gift would he claim, Enslaved by the fear that is common to man he wouldn't go forth in His name.

*Then answered the Lord and said unto him "What holdest thou there in thy hand?"
He answered, "A rod," and God said again, "Then follow my word of command.*

*Throw down on the ground the rod that thou hast," and Moses complied as was said
The rod in a moment a serpent became and Moses before it now fled.*

*"Seize hold of its tail and don't be afraid and follow my word of command"
He did as he was told and lo! once again he's holding the rod in his hand.*

*And here at this juncture, I am going to pause, and the question I'm going to propound
Do you know why the "Harvest of God" is delayed, 'cause too many like Moses are found.*

*When asked to deliver a message for God or some work for the Master to do
They almost invariably make the reply, you see I'm not gifted like you.*

I really don't think I could ever do that, I'm afraid if I try I should fall They've excuses for this and excuses for that, in the end they do nothing at all.

*We may deceive men, we can't deceive God, He knoweth us 'all thru and thru
He pities our weakness and only will ask the thing that He knows we can do.*

*Did we have but the time, we would follow this tale and read of this wonderful rod,
And see the miraculous things that it did when offered in service to God.*

*Ten talented men have ever been scarce, and not very many have five
But the two's and the one's profusely are given to every good mortal alive.*

*So use what you have, you cannot do more, and you really should never do less
For the man who has fully surrendered his all, is the man whom Jehovah can bless.*

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Bill HR 2945, now under consideration by the United States Congress, providing for increases in postage rates, if passed will greatly penalize church-owned and affiliated institutions, organizations, and publications. The postage increase will greatly affect THE CHRISTIAN SUN and other communications put out by our Church, Elon College, the Orphanage, etc. We earnestly request that our constituency write to our Congressmen to ascertain the facts in the case and to urge our Congressmen to make an exemption in the postal rate increase of public and charitable institutions, non-profit church-owned and affiliated institutions and publications. The work of the Church will be greatly hindered if the proposed bill is passed.

REIDSVILLE BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Daily Vacation Bible School of the Congregational Christian Church of Reidsville was held from June 27 through July 1. There were 120 children enrolled with almost perfect attendance. Miss Genevieve Underwood headed a fine group of teachers including Miss Bronza Dockery, Miss Frances Stone, Mrs. Nannie Abel, Miss Caroline Abel, Miss Marian Foust, Mrs. Tucker G. Humphries, Mrs. Effie Chilton, Miss Betsy Ware and Reverend Tucker G. Humphries.

On Friday evening commencement was held. Certificates were awarded and various prizes were given. At this service each class participated and their hand work was displayed which included book marks, scrap books, prayer books, daily banks and various other interesting and useful items. Reverend Humphries announced that these articles together with the evening offering would be sent to the three missionaries of the church on foreign fields.

This was a most successful Bible school and Miss Underwood and her staff are to be congratulated.

W. N. C. CONFERENCE MEETING AT ASHEBORO CHURCH.

Next Sunday afternoon, July 31, the Laymen's Fellowship of the Western North Carolina Conference and the Asheboro Women's Missionary District are sponsoring a meeting on Evangelism at the Asheboro Congregational Christian Church from two to four o'clock.

Following the opening worship, Dr. W. W. Brown of Elon College will speak on "Where Do I Fit Into the Evangelistic Program of My Local Church."

Mr. George D. Colclough, president of the Southern Convention Laymen, will speak on "Me, in My Church."

For part of the afternoon the women will have a separate session which will be led by Mrs. O. H. Paris, president of the Southern Convention Women.

The program is planned by Sybrant H. Pell, president of the W. N. C. Laymen's Fellowship and Mrs. E. P. Borroughs, superintendent of the Asheboro Missionary District. Men and women from every church in the Western North Carolina Conference are urged to attend this meeting on next Sunday afternoon.

PROGRESS AT MT. ZION.

It was indeed a pleasure to have been with the pastor, Walstein W. Snyder in a series of services, June 26-July 1 at Mt. Zion Church, near Mebane, North Carolina, and to observe the progress of the churches in that pastorate. The Mt. Zion Church has been beautifully decorated on the outside with brick veneer, a second story added to the Sunday school rooms, a vestibule added to the front of the building and, more recently, new light fixtures installed. The young people of the church, assisted by the Missionary Society, have built for themselves a lovely meeting place. They purchased an old Army building in Greensboro, and the young people themselves went to Greensboro and took the building down. A friend in the community hauled the materials without cost to the young people. Aided by some older people of the church and community these groups erected the building near the church, then refinished it inside and out. This social hall will provide a comfortable place for numberless meetings of smaller groups and is a distinct improvement to the church in general.

Brother Snyder's pastorate includes Concord Church where a new edifice of worship is nearing completion. The new building is of brick veneer and appears to be designed to meet the growing needs of the community. Bethel Church, also in this pastorate, has recently been renovated, improved and decorated inside. Successful Daily Vacation Bible Schools have been conducted in these three churches with Wm. P. Tolley of Lynchburg, as director.

There seemed to prevail a fine spirit of cooperation among the people within this group. The pastor is working hard to increase the usefulness of these splendid rural churches in Kingdom building. Truly with the united efforts of both pastor and people the church of the living God can make itself felt as a power for good in our distorted world.

REV. WM. T. SCOTT, Superintendent

LEADERSHIP AMONG OUR LAYMEN.

The churches of the Southern Convention may well be proud of the splendid work which is being done by our Laymen. I have had the occasion recently to observe the leadership of five splendid Laymen in the Convention and wish to commend them for their excellent work. These men are:

Mr. H. E. Liskey, President of the Valley Sunday School Convention, is to be commended on the splendid session held at Winchester, Virginia, on June 30. The reports were indicative of working Sunday schools in the Valley.

Mr. S. H. Pell, President of the Western North Carolina Sunday School Convention, presided over a very successful session held at Pleasant Hill Christian Church, July 7. More Sunday Schools were represented than at any last two of the Conventions. The emphasis was on Evangelism and extensive plans were made for work during the coming year. Mr. Pell was re-elected to the office of President. Mr. Pell is also chairman of the Laymen's Fellowship.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention was held at Oakland on July 19 and President Mills E. Godwin, Jr., is to be commended on the splendid attendance, excellent program and forward looking of the Convention. Mr. Godwin is most active in the Southern Convention, being a member of the Executive Board of the Convention.

Mr. Rex. G. Powell of our Wake Chapel Church was re-elected President of the Eastern North Carolina Sunday School Convention, which met at Henderson on July 20. Mr. Powell has given most unsparingly of his energy and time in the promotion of our Sunday schools and like the other Sunday School Conventions held the Eastern North Carolina shows signs of improvement.

Mr. Algie G. Blalock, President of the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School Convention, presided over the session held at Reidsville on July 21. A large and enthusiastic crowd gave us encouragement. There were more than 50 Sunday school teachers present, 18 superintendents, 20 pastors, together with over 100 other persons interested in the work of the Sunday schools.

These five Conventions are encouraging evidence of the splendid leadership in our churches among the Laymen. More such men are needed in the church for there are responsibilities in the church which can be performed by our Laymen which will bear much fruit.

We salute these five church Laymen—Liskey, Pell, Godwin, Powell and Blalock—may they be an inspiration to other fine Laymen which are towers of strength in the Southern Convention work.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF SIGHT

"As long as I live and God gives me sight," one man testified, "I expect to read the Bible through every year." How commendable! The stewardship of sight, like the stewardship of possessions, should not be left to chance, but should be organized, scheduled, programmed.

The stewardship of sight should include a rigorous study of the Bible and books designed to aid one in an understanding of that which he reads. It should include a systematic study of religious literature. Otherwise that talent is surely buried in a napkin.

Superintendent Scott declares that one main reason some of our people do not like our denominational literature is the fact that they are not willing to study it thoroughly in order to understand and appreciate it. One wonders if the same condition is not true with reference to our church paper.

There comes the appalling realization that the eyes of so many people are devoted almost wholly to secular purposes, primarily to work and leisure, both of which are basically selfish. After the day's work, millions turn to the newspaper and the movie. And this is true, even on the Lord's Day. Comics, so-called, take precedence over the Sunday School lesson.

God, in his wisdom and providence, gave us eyes, but he will hold us responsible for the way we use them. God Almighty wants to use our eyes, as well as our hands and our dollars. We can never be his students, his disciples, until our eyes have been devoted to his high and holy service.

Open my eyes that I may see Glimpses of truth thou hast for me
Place in my hand the wonderful key
That shall unclasp and set me free.

SUNDAY SCHOOL IN EASTERN VIRGINIA

Oakland Church was filled to capacity on Tuesday of last week by delegates to the annual Sunday School Convention. Dr. N. G. Newman, an honored member of the church, was present throughout the session and gave an interesting account of the growth of the church under the leadership of Dr. I. W. Johnson.

"The Sunday School is the brightest spot in the week," declared the president, Mills E. Godwin, Jr. Supt. Scott called attention to the wealth of literature provided by our denomination and the Committee on Resolutions urged the Sunday Schools to give "intelligent and sympathetic consideration to our denominational literature." Discussion indicated that schools may enjoy a choice between or a combination of the uniform lessons, closely graded materials, and the Pilgrim Series.

Two ministers, Earl Farrell of Sunbury and William Grissom of Franklin were introduced as newcomers in the Conference. Mr. Farrell appeared on the program and counseled Sunday School workers to lead their pupils into competent Biblical knowledge, Christian stewardship and experience, Church membership and Christian service.

Lay speakers included Jack Byrd of Cypress Chapel, Mrs. Ray Gordon of Suffolk and Mr. L. B. Waldo, Jr., of Holland. Mr. Waldo, Superintendent in our Holland Church, emphasized in a very effective way the importance of adequate equipment and personnel. Dr. Will B. O'Neill declared that we must give more adequate time and serious thought to religion in the midst of a secular society. Devotional messages were given by Revs. Johnson Griffin and Luther Grice. The present slate of officers was re-elected. The next meeting will be held at Cypress Chapel.

LEARNING AT LAKESIDE

No adequate report on the National Conference at Lakeside could be made in one editorial or one issue. It was too vast, too comprehensive. Christian education, we must keep reminding ourselves, is like that. It cannot be reduced to an epigram or an easy formula.

The scope and magnitude of our Christian education is suggested by the seminars offered at Lakeside: "Understanding Children," "Children's Worship," "Planning for Children," "Adult Leaders of Junior High," "Adult Leaders of Youth," "United Student Fellowship Program," "Ministry to Students," "Young Adults," "Adults," "Church School Administration," "Audio-Visual Materials," "Drama," "Worship," "Christian Marriage," "Christian Vocation," "Camps and Conferences," "Recreation," "Christian Family Life," "Evangelism," "Missions," "Message of Jesus for Today," "Personal Religious Living," "Social Action," "World Peace" and "The Story of Our Churches."

The list is long, but not exhaustive; so long that some will not read it, much less make a detailed study of each subject. The imposing list should suggest the danger, yea, the sin of over-simplification.

Too many of our Sunday Schools invest a bit of money in lesson quarterlies, engage in superficial study and criticism, and feel that they are real schools. Any school that is a real school must include far more than the Sunday morning class session. The entire school should be undergirded and supplemented by studies such as these seminars. Workers conferences, class meetings as well as training schools should be used with foresight and skill in bringing the full impact of Christian education upon the lives of our people.

"The Retreat" is a device which has come into wide usefulness. Fortified with ample materials (an achievement of no slight significance, by no means universal in our churches) the officers and teachers get away for protracted study and planning. The total program of Christian education is charted for a given period. Subjects, themes, courses of study, essential presentations or reviews, projects and goals are established and assigned. This gives the entire school a comprehensive and yet a unified program of Christian education.

This is the way to overcome the familiar taunt: Question—"When is a school not a school?" Answer—"When it is a Sunday School."

First Days of "Liberation"

By DOROTHY POTTER JACKSON

It will be a long time before I forget Mother's Day, 1949. Yes, I thought often of my mother and Dick's, trying to send them thought messages not to worry as they heard of the Communist advances in Fukieng. For, though Dick and I were separated by my flight to the mountain village, we were all quite safe.

Tears did come to my eyes as I bade Dick good-bye, wondering what was going to happen; and my ludicrous position, lying on a stretcher with the baby on top of me didn't feel as funny as it looked. You see, there were no carrying chairs available and few carriers since so many people were evacuating the city. But those stretchers and the strength of the men who carried them enabled Leona, Lewis, our Chinese girl helper, and me to cover the twenty miles and three thousand steps up to ErShihTu. We took turns "riding" and walking; for neither mode of transportation was comfortable under the circumstances.

About that weird word, ErShihTu. Pronounce it Er (rhymes with her) Sher Doo. That's the mountain village, or rather series of villages, where Dr. Ed and Nurse Frances are establishing their home-clinic. When we arrived Fran had not been there three weeks; she was in the midst of painting floors and woodwork with tung oil. Between times, she was helping Ed see patients, when Ed wasn't gone for supplies. Both were constantly busy and our refugee party filled their little home to bursting.

The Riggs' load carrier-messenger made frequent trips to Shaowu for news and supplies; so we were well informed by Dick's letters concerning rumors and soldiers. Then came word Shaowu had been "liberated"; and Friday, May 20, in came Dick himself tired from his long walk but excited at the prospect of having us all home again in Shaowu.

After days of cloud and rain, that Friday evening sunset in the mountains promised good weather for our trip down to Shaowu.

Though we had chairs, each carried by three men, I was determined to walk a good bit of the way. The seven miles down the mountain went fairly well; so later in the day I tried again. I hurried to catch up with Dick; but never reached him. Thunder clouds were gathering around the Shaowu hills as I neared them, pressing my tired feet in a steady fast pace. The rumble of thunder seemed to warn of more than just rain. A few li from the city wall I saw a familiar figure; it was not Dick, but our carpenter. He had already met Dick and told the bad news which sent Dick into the city faster than he dreamed his blistered feet could go. Real Communist soldiers, not just turned-over local ones, were in our compound trying to take over our house in addition to all the other buildings.

We waited for the others with the load carriers, dismissed the chairs and anxiously hurried through gathering rain. The downpour came before we reached home; but wet clothes and mud meant little as we saw and heard soldiers all over our compound. Mr. Chang Wen Wei, worry, fear and relief on his face, told us how he and the pastors had tried to convince the soldiers we foreigners had not fled and would want to use our home that very night.

Dick, his anger only partly cooled by his walk into the city, had provoked their officer by saying they weren't polite and remarking that the Nationalist soldiers had not entered our home.

Now, three days later, all is settled and relations are very smooth. Of our home, they are exclusively using our dining room and sharing the kitchen. We eat upstairs with Leona and keep Lewis up there most of the time, since everywhere outdoors are soldiers.

One must not expect much privacy outside of America anyway. Our voyage to China on the Marine Lynx began the process of accustoming us to lack of privacy. The "dormitory" life in crowded Hong Kong and the half-interested stares of curious people in Foochow continued it. Any traveling we've done since has driven the lesson home. In ErShihTu, a more isolated community, the curious crowds have invaded the Riggs' privacy to a painful degree. In that mountain there probably are not even wandering beggars much less puppet shows or circuses to brighten the monotony of the days. Naturally, a foreign home with tall white-faced inhabitants is the biggest event of those people's lives. When a little white baby came, that was amusement for all the unwashed children and bound-footed little women who could come and look. And that helped keep Lewis entertained, too, as he played on the pleasant upstairs porch smiling down at his brown-skinned visitors.

Always, before this last bit of traveling, I resented the crowd of carriers rushing into the house, scrambling for loads and inspecting everything curiously. But this time when the load carriers came into the house with us, I liked it. We were wet and tired; and despite their being accustomed to walking far with heavy loads, they were no doubt tired and wetter.

Since our bedroom had been least disturbed by the soldiers, we all gathered there to weigh loads and reckon accounts. I would not have minded at all if one of those men had stretched out on our bed; so warm was my feeling toward them now that new faces were pressing around with curious but less friendly stares.

And that, too, was worthwhile education for a missionary. Now it is easier to remember that under that cap and red arm band is a fellow-human, not just a Communist soldier. Though the faces are still new (and the language, too, of course) they might be friendly after a while.

There was the older soldier whom I almost bumped into one day as I was carrying Lewis from the bathroom to his bedroom. I hid my surprise in what I hoped was a smile and went on tending to Lewis as though soldiers appearing out of nowhere was old stuff to me. I believe his face showed no response and I couldn't understand what he said as he felt of Lewis' bed. Since I had closed the door to the bathroom, he made no attempt to go in that direction; but went back into our bedroom and the rest of the house.

"Upstairs for you now," I said to Lewis and hurried up to Leona's, walking almost into a soldier there in her dining room. "Goodness," I thought, seeing only his feet in my confusion, "Do all these fellows wear crocheted shoes?" But later, I realized it was my caller of a few minutes before. His particular Chinese soft

THE TRADITION OF WESTERN CIVILIZATION.

By SIR OLIVER FRANKS.

This is the industrial revolution which has opened up the prospect that through the increase of the means of living a fuller and more satisfying life can be found. The industrial revolution forged the instruments which are the conditions of the possibility of progress.

There is a difference between the conditions of progress and progress. The existence of the conditions is no guarantee of the existence of what they make possible. The astonishing increase in material wealth in the last two hundred years and the transformation of human living this increase has brought with it have often blinded men to this fact. They have been tempted to identify material development with progress and to see in each scientific discovery, its technical application and proved utility evidence that human society is progressing. They have fallen into the state of mind satirised by Disraeli in his cool ironical way: "The European talks of progress because by the aid of a few scientific discoveries he has established a society which has mistaken comfort for civilization."

The very closeness of the connection between the material conditions of progress and progress itself makes a false identification easy. One of the ways in which we should all believe that there has been progress in the countries of western civilization in the last 150 years has been in the spread of responsible democratic government, not just in the sense that the number of peoples who have adopted and practiced constitutional democracy has increased, but much more that in our countries the base of democratic responsibility and decision has been broadened to include virtually the whole adult population. For the first time in history it has been possible for the people as a whole to have an effective voice in government and to grow in dignity, responsibility and freedom.

But this real progress that the western democracies have made is not solely due to their increasing insight into the worth and dignity of the individual. It has been made possible by the tools and services provided by the industrial revolution. Full democracy presupposes a number of things we nowadays take for granted. It involves a certain standard of literacy; a certain ability to decide; a reasonably rapid and accurate service of information and news; the dissemination of responsible opinion. In a word it involves a certain standard of living.

The false identification of progress with material development conflicts with the basic beliefs on which western civilization has been built. . . . The belief in power for its own sake is no part of western tradition. The relation of power to progress depends upon the use made of it. The standards of western civilization require that progress should be judged by the extent to which men use their possessions and their power to realize and express their hope and confidence in the world. What is the source of that hope and confidence? It derives, I think, in the end from a religious view of the universe.

Men can have hope for the future and confidence in their activities in the world only if they also believe that the universe is not indifferent to man and his efforts. It must have a character such that what he does can make a difference and is not a meaningless scribble on the sands of time. It must be possible for his activities to have significance in the sum of things. But if this is the case, the world in which he lives and acts is so constituted that it does not frustrate the use of his faculties.

What is involved in such a belief about man's relation to his environment? When he tries to acquire a knowledge of it he is not stopped short by its sheer unintelligibility. When he tries to create beauty, he is not frustrated by the irredeemable chaos and disorder of what he encounters. When he pursues happiness and goodness, he is not prevented from the realization of his ideals by the intractable indifference of his surroundings.

We have hope because we believe that in this world it is possible through human effort to gain knowledge, create beauty and realize good. It is a condition of the hope and confidence which characterize western civilization that the constitution of the universe includes those values by which men think, create and act. Belief in progress ultimately depends on the religious view of the Christian tradition. . . .

In these remarks I have not nearly exhausted the content of the great civilization we have inherited. I have not tried to give you a full delineation of its character. My attempt has been to expose two or three of the fundamental ideas which inform it, to describe them and trace their relationships, for it is these ideas, as they have become beliefs and as the beliefs have issued in action, which have sustained and nourished the astonishing performance of our western peoples over the last four centuries. They are still active today as you may see from the preamble of the Atlantic Pact. It is now our turn to carry forward the tradition and build further on what we have inherited. If we are to do this effectively we must understand the tradition and appreciate the inheritance. Western civilization was created and has progressed through intelligent effort. This in turn is now required of us.

In the last resort our outlook on life depends upon a religious insight. In this regard I believe that Congregationalism has a contribution to make. The emphasis it lays on the responsibility of the individual in religion means that each member of the Congregational Churches must attempt to find his way to that insight, deepen it and use it as the ultimate standard and touchstone of thought and conduct in social life. No one can take that responsibility from him, though others can help him to see more clearly.

It is his business, too, in interpreting that insight as a guide to the complicated and tangled issues of life to hold fast to the emphasis his traditions suggest on the ethical relationships of men to one another. He will insist that in the end a materialist judgment of conduct and progress is not valid because it is inadequate to his understanding of human nature. He will conceive of his fellows as created in the same image as himself and therefore judge his behaviour to them by the values expressed and revealed in the Gospels. He will believe that religion and life are not separate and that life takes on its real significance only as inspired and illumined by religion.

MARRIED

WHITT-CONNER.

Mr. James Thomas Whitt, son of James David and Elizabeth Whitt, and Miss Mary Louise Conner, daughter of Allen and Molly McCulloch Conner were married at my home in Virgilina, Va., June 25, 1949 at 6 p. m. The double ring ceremony was used.

Mr. Whitt is a prosperous farmer of Nathalie, Va. Mrs. Whitt is a graduate nurse and is very successful in her profession.

A large number of relatives and friends witnessed the ceremony. These were from Richmond, Charlottesville, Elon College, Nathalie and Volens. After a brief bridal trip Mr. and Mrs. Whitt will be at home to their friends at Nathalie, Va.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

ELON COLLEGE'S NEW DEAN OF WOMEN.

The Dean of Women in co-educational institutions is a very important individual, important from the standpoint of the curriculum of the college, conduct of the students, and the whole atmosphere of the campus. Young people in college today are socially inclined. They have had advantages and opportunities at home before they entered college. There are certain things other than studies that have become a definite part of their lives. To insist that they drop all of these so-called extra-curricular things and dedicate their entire time and energies to scholastic requirements would be erroneous. The thorough and complete development of personality depends upon other advantages than the classroom. Of course, the student is in college primarily for his own mental development and to secure an education but these achievements alone will not fit him for life in the complex and exacting society of today. After all, a college education and college experiences are meant to fit the individual for wholesome, successful, and happy living. It is the business of the college to administer to the whole of life or seek to develop equally and completely the different traits of personality that the individual possesses.

No one person in a co-educational institution has responsibilities equal to or more exacting than the Dean of Women. At Elon College, we have had some very admirable characters to serve in this capacity. Some have rendered excellent services and have meant much to the students. Miss Christina Hardy has served as Dean of Women for the past two years and has done a very good job. At the beginning of the last college year, Miss Hardy gave notice of her desire to retire from administrative work and give her entire time to teaching.

The Administration has sought with considerable care someone to serve as Dean of Women at Elon College. After due consideration and thorough investigation, Mrs. Sadie Drummond Liles of Spartanburg, S. C., was elected. Mrs. Liles has accepted. She is a graduate of Converse College and is the mother of two daughters. She is working, not of necessity but of desires. Last year she served as house mother and Dean of a dormitory at Florida State University, Tallahassee, Florida. Mrs. Liles comes highly recommended and with a splendid record. We feel that the college is fortunate in securing her services. It will be a privilege to present her to the student body and to the church at large.

MRS. SADIE DRUMMOND LILES.

THEY ARE STILL WORKING.

If you were on the campus at Elon College and could see how the walls of the gymnasium are going up, you would be inspired and I am sure you would feel that you should have part in it. This is exactly what we would like for you to feel. If everyone who reads this note would have that feeling, sit down immediately, make out a check for what he could easily spare and mail, the walls would keep on going until they are completed and be paid for. You will be interested to know that enough money came in the morning mail to finish meeting the payroll today. We have not yet borrowed money. We hope that you will be interested in this very fine project for the college and that you will express that interest by sending a contribution to help along. If you are able to send a sizeable check, fine. If you are able to send only a small contribution, don't withhold it. Just think, if 1,000 or 2,000 people would send what they are able to give, what it would amount to. This is not only a college project—this is a community project. This is a Convention-wide project and by everyone putting forth his efforts and pooling his contributions we will get the job done before you realize it and everybody will be happy. Make your contribution without delay. You will be greatly compensated.

SECOND SIX WEEKS OF SUMMER SCHOOL.

For the past fifteen years, Elon College has been conducting two periods of summer school of six weeks each. The last period has been very poorly attended until the last three years. The administration felt that the enrollment for the last six weeks of this year would be comparatively small. To our surprise and gratitude, we have an enrollment of 278 which is a very good school. By conducting school twelve months in the year, this accelerated program makes it possible for veterans and other students who wish to earn sufficient credits for graduation quickly and to graduate in three years. The college is happy to cooperate with such students and offers its facilities freely and gladly.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Summertime seems to be the time for vacation. People take vacations but, unfortunately, debts, expenses, and obligations do not vacate. They are always with us. Let us hope that our Sunday schools and churches, so far as the support of Elon College is concerned, will not take a vacation this summer. The bookkeeper has just presented me some facts and figures. They are not encouraging. The condition of the treasury prompts me to urge our churches to put forth special efforts to see that their apportionments for the college are paid, at least, paid in part.

The one in the Convention Office who handles the funds for the college is on her vacation. She has worked hard and deserves some freedom from responsibilities. Let us hope that when she returns, there will be an accumulation of contributions for the college that will mean much to us in these days of stress and need. The Convention Office is prompt in discharging its responsibilities and co-operative in all interests of the church.

WOMEN AT WELLESLEY.

It was my good fortune, for which I am very grateful, to be one of the women of the United States present at the International Congregational Council which met at beautiful Wellesley College, June 17-24. About 75 women delegates and visitors from the United States and other countries were present, including our National Moderator, Miss Helen Kenyon.

A gracious welcome was given by Mrs. Douglas Horton, President of Wellesley. Some of the men said that it was the best speech given by an American. Her striking personality and wit was felt by everyone present. In her welcome Mrs. Horton said, "Welcome thrice, welcome to Wellesley, 1,700 undergraduates are happy you are here, because they aren't. Twenty thousand graduates or former students of every nationality have attended Wellesley and I am sure you will find a welcome here, a women's college, but let no man feel himself unwelcome."

The outstanding personalities and speakers for the women's session of the Council were: Mrs. Agnes W. Guild, Scotland; Rev. Winifred Kirk, Australia; Mrs. M. L. Willis, Jamaica, B.W.I.; Mrs. Pat Matthews, British Guiana; Mrs. Henry Chao, North China; Mrs. Robert Williams, Presiding Officer of the Meeting, Lake Worth, Florida; Mrs. H. E. Walley, President of the National Fellowship of Congregational Christian Women in the United States; and Rev. Elsie Chamberlain, pastor of Vineyard Congregational Church, Middlesex, England, the most vivacious woman present.

Mrs. Leslie E. Swain, member of the Executive Committee of the World Council of Churches, United States, and a Baptist, spoke Tuesday evening. Mrs. Swain is the only woman on the Executive Committee of the World Council of Churches. Her address was well given and inspirational.

The women were able to have two sessions and met at other times for short discussions, and the time spent visiting between sessions of the Council, I will always cherish this as a rich and valuable experience.

The theme of the afternoon session on Sunday was "The Life and Work of Women in the World Church." A follow-up meeting was had to discuss ways of developing a closer fellowship among Congregational Christian Women's organizations in various countries. It was decided that each country within the Congregational fellowship would appoint a person to edit a news letter. This letter is to be written twice each year and printed in some national bulletin. In the United States it will appear in the bulletin, Guide Post, edited by Mrs. E. E. McClintock, National Secretary of Women's Work.

I was overwhelmed by the beauty and the wonderful fellowship of the entire meeting, but what impressed and will remain with me for always, was the inspiration of the moment, when we sang, "In Christ There Is No East or West," with people of every race and color present. I did feel that we were all truly brothers, and "that his service is the golden cord close binding all mankind."

MAN'S TRUE GREATNESS.

A Sermon

By REV. BERNARD V. MUNGER,

Chapel Hill, North Carolina.

"And the Lord God formed man and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. In the image of God created He him; male and female created He them . . ."

That is one of the greatest things ever written about man. It speaks about a "God-likeness" in man. It says that man's real exalted place in the universe is rooted in the image of God within him. Surely there is no one who couldn't find something thrillingly magnificent about that, if he would.

But, the tragedy is that man just isn't content with that as the source of his greatness. Men are not content to express their essential dignity as God would have it expressed. Instead, they want to express their dignity in their own way. The result: misery! Seeking greatness in something other than an expression of God's image in us always brings misery. And, because this misery is so omnipresent, let us think about the ways in which men seek greatness in ways other than in an expression of God's image within.

Somehow, each one of us is aware of something about us which is essentially great. But, as the same time, we don't know wherein our greatness really lies. So, we should be waiting with eagerness for God's Word to give us the information contained in our text. But, we don't wait. Instead, we get busy seeking to express our greatness in ways of our own choosing. Too often this is merely an attempt on our part to play at being "gods"! When we try to play at being "gods" within the limits of our own lives, we usually take the attitude which William Ernest Henley expressed in his poem, Invictus. It is said that when Henley had been drinking just a bit too much, he would sing: "I am the master of my fate, I am the captain of my soul." But, so expressive of our desires is that poem that since the time he wrote it, it has found its way into some churches! Yet, most of us have had enough experience to know that whenever someone acts as if he were a law unto himself, as if he had nothing in control of him, the result is usually trouble for someone! Most of us know that the man who is his own law and who does as he pleases, is a good man to avoid. The Book of the Judges with its recitals of troubles and miseries, insists that back of all of them was this simple fact, "Every man did that which was right in his own sight, and none did reverence the Lord," which is always how it is when you get together a lot of men who are their own captains. When men interpret their grandeur to lie in their own self-determination, the end is usually misery!

However, even greater misery follows after those who extend their "playing like God" into the lives of others. And there is much of this in each of us. Are there any parents who haven't been tempted to play "God" with the lives of their children? There are few men or women in authority of any kind who are not tempted to act as if it were theirs to determine the living habits of those over whom they exercise authority! We all like to play like little kings with the lives of others. And, this should not be surprising, for there is in each of us a kind of kingly greatness. Yet, because we neither really know God nor His image in us, we seek our own ways of expressing our "kingly feelings." So there are children whose lives must suffer because of parents who seek to express their greatness in the way they dominate the lives of their children. So there are offices and factories and business places wherein individuals and groups must suffer because there are bosses, foremen and owners who seek to express their greatness by acting like old-time army sergeants towards others. And there are wives who suffer because husbands seek to express their kingly greatness by dominating their wives. Thus, misery always follows as man's true grandeur is turned into a false grandeur. And, if you are honest with yourself, you know that you too have caused misery because you have often yielded to the temptation to secure your own sense of greatness from the manner in which you exercise dominion over the lives of others.

There are some who are not content until they express their sense of greatness in the possession of things! The selfish, grasping, possessor of things is usually one who has chosen that as his way of expressing his essential dignity! And, not only is such self-expression followed by misery, but the one who so expresses himself is usually the most miserable of all, for, he can never get enough. He can never cease from being anxious lest that which he has shall be lost, or taken from him. Oh, the untold misery that follows when men who are created to find their greatness in their God-likeness, seek to find their greatness in the possession of things!

Still further evidence of that of which we are thinking comes to us from those men and women whose sense of greatness is in grand contrast to their actual position. They are aware of the way in which the vast universe and the wide sweep of history seems to dwarf them. They know themselves to be but one in multitudes. They know too the variety and number of forces over which they have no control and which seem to flood them with insignificance. But, their sense of essential dignity and greatness will not cease stirring. So, desperately and excitedly, they move out to get for themselves something which they feel will make them important. They proclaim their greatness to reside in their membership in a party, a class, a denomination, a race, or a nation! Such false proclamations lead them then to be vigorous defenders of the superiority of their group. They loudly defend the inherent superiority of one place of residence above all other places of residence. They become rabid defenders of the superiority of their class, or race. And, the more insecure they are, the more rabid they are in defending their prejudices! The result: misery. How many, for instance, are those who have suffered because others have sought their importance in class distinctions and have defended those distinctions with injustice? How many others have suffered because some have sought their importance in race distinctions, and have defended those distinctions with injustice, discrimination and segregation. This is what we might expect, for, whenever men seek their importance in that which is other than the importance given them by God, the result is misery!

All of this is tragic just because it springs right out of our awareness of a grandeur in us. Thus, it is a perversion of the very spring of our

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR FRIENDS:

Do you have a secret place? Many boys and girls do. I had one in the north corner of our yard. I planted lilies there and buried my pet birds and goldfish among them.

Even in a big city one can find such a place. In Richmond there is a lovely little park where the Soldier's Home used to be. Now all the Confederate soldiers are gone and the benches where they sat to talk of the glories of past days are now occupied by children, parents, nurses and young lovers. In the far, far back of this park are some old stone ledges, pilasters and columns that were taken from an old bank building. The plan had been to erect an arch with these stone pieces as a memorial to the Civil War heroes. For some reason it has never been done and the great stones lie big and inviting on the edge of the Battle Abbey. There are many magnolia trees and birds hop about their limbs. Youngsters from all around go to hop, climb, walk and skip among this stoneyard. It is a secret place. The fluted columns are four or five feet high although they are lying sidewise. They were capped with Doric capitols and those make wonderful tea tables. It is a wonderful secret place to play.

Some weeks ago I visited a secret place that a little boy had many years ago. He was taking his children to see the rushing brook and the black, flat stones that the water tinkled over. Ferns and lichens were about. Silver minnows shot through the deep places. It was cool and green, a secret place for play and thinking. Then I went with a young girl to another secret place where crayfish live. Hundreds of daisies filled the meadow above us and she showed me a spot she liked to find when she was tired or angry.

God has made a world so beautiful and so filled with little corners or spots for resting a bit, or just dreaming or giving time to thoughts of God's love and greatness. I hope that you have a secret place for such meditation.

OUR CHILDREN'S SPEECH.

By IDA M. HALIBURTON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Hi ya, Auntie," greeted my great-nephew with an engaging grin. "How about letting me roost here until Gramp picks me up in his old tin lizzy?"

"Hi, Jack," I compromised. "Come in. I'm glad to have you, but I am expecting company, so I'll find you some books to read."

"Don't bother. I carry my own. I'll just dump myself in the breakfast nook, out of the way." He threw a roll of funny-papers on the table and sat down.

"Is it cold outside, Jack?"

"I'll tell the world it's cold, Auntie."

"And how is your grandmother? Better, I hope."

"Oh, she's okey-doke. At least, Mum says she's over the hump. She'll soon be home from the hospital, 'big as life and twice as sassy.'"

It had been some time since I had heard Jack talk, and his language surprised me, living as he did with a school-teacher mother and a well-educated grandmother. His father had been overseas during the period in which Jack was acquiring his speech habits, so blame could not be laid at his door.

Jack soon became so engrossed with his funny-papers that he did not pay any attention to my movements while I was getting my guests a cup of tea, but when I cut into the chocolate cake, its delicious aroma must have aroused the small boy in him, for he looked up.

"Will you have a piece of cake, Jack?" I asked.

"You bet your sweet life I will. Chocolate cake is hunky-dory with me. Yippee! Thanks." He ate his cake carefully, pushed the papers to the back of the table and arose. "Here's Gramp, so I'll vamoose."

"Don't forget your papers, Jack," I reminded him.

"I've read them all. Don't want them," he called back on his way to the car.

When my guests had departed, I studied the reading matter which had kept a nine-year-old boy enthralled for an hour and a half. These are some of the objectionable features I found. A parent telling his son to "Shut up; children should be seen and not heard," and the child replying, "Aw, neither should some parents be heard."

I must confess that I have no liking for funny-papers myself, a fact of which I am not at all proud, having observed many cultured people chuckling over the exploits of Jiggs and Maggie and Mr. and Mrs. Some crudities of speech, humor, and art often amuse adults and, naturally, leave no ill effects. But children are born copyists; like little squirrels with nuts they stow away slang words and phrases for future use.

When my children were small, there occasionally came to hand books which were satisfactory from the story standpoint but which fell very far short of the ideal in regard to language. As I read the books aloud to the children, I omitted the slang and corrected the language. I noticed recently that my son was doing a similar thing for his boy. This little fellow, just turned four, already has a remarkable vocabulary, acquired from the stories he has heard read from his books. Looking from a window one day, he exclaimed, "Look! Grandma, Ted fell and hurt himself himself, but he's drying his tears and preparing to go back home."

The rough and tumble of school life will soon brush away my grandson's tendency to use stilted language, but he will never be at a loss for words to express his ideas. On the other hand, children who have had a thorough grounding in the use of slang and catch phrases may nevertheless later build up an adequate language, but in times of stress, when they reach into the subconscious for words to meet the need, many undesirable words will come to the surface and be chosen. Why permit children to learn what will need to be unlearned?

Then I noticed that Jack's three funny booklets were marked at ten cents each—thirty cents for an hour-and-a-half's amusement. If the money spent that way were saved each week, it would soon amount to a sum which could be invested in books that would bear rereading, and which could be loaned to give pleasure to others; how much more profitable that would be. Every child should be encouraged to build up a little library of his own. A boy or girl who has read the Burgess books will develop a kindliness towards nature—the outdoor world—animals, birds, lightful, humorous stories, such as and so forth. There are many de-Billy Whiskers and Alice in Wonderland, and the fun they tell about is not the kind indulged in at the expense of another.

In the interest of good language, in

REPORTS FROM CAMP CRABTREE.

THOUGHTS FOR MEDITATION.

"For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first, and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, The just shall live by faith. (Romans 1: 16-17.)

These two verses should serve as a challenge to each of you as you return to your work and to your friends. The apostle Paul was never ashamed for his salvation. Likewise, we, as Christians, should never be hesitant in claiming Jesus as our Savior. This poem is very fitting:

*God is in every tomorrow,
Therefore I live for today;
Certain at finding at sunrise,
Guidance and strength for the day,
Power for each moment of weakness,
Hope each moment of pain,
Comfort for every sorrow,
Sunrise and joy after rain.*

A LOOK AT FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill's classes in foreign missionary work have proved to be very valuable. This year we studied missions in China, India and Japan. The students were introduced to the work of our Congregational Christian representatives, Angie Crew, Ruth Seabury, Mr. DeForest, and Mr. McKnight. We studied conditions under which these missionaries work and reviewed the task ahead of them. With the general understanding Miss Coghill has given the campers, we know, will take greater pride in supporting Christian programs in foreign lands.

HOW WELL DO YOU KNOW YOURSELF?

Under the excellent direction of Mr. Munger, his classes carried on a discussion on the mind of a person. It was said, "A real person is the whole person."

Mr. Munger used many Bible references to illustrate this statement. Most of the verses, including Matthew, Luke, John and Philippians stressed that, the will of God should be done, and done well. It is God's will that we love with mind, heart and soul.

A real person's interest, in a Christian sense, is to do God's will. The only way to love God is to love your neighbor. In the end, have courage to face yourself and take responsibility.

AND YOU SHALL LIVE.

I was held almost spellbound the other day as I sat in one of Dr. Lester's classes and listened to him teach. Dr. Lester made a survey of the Bible as a whole, reviewing the number of books, their authors, and the divisions of the Bible. In addition, we got a glimpse into the book of Revelations. I particularly liked his explanation about how God spoke to men. The discussion was centered around John 5:39 which is, "Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."

EASTERN VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

The summer rally of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship will be held at Bethlehem (Nansemond) Christian Church the fourth Sunday in August (28th) at 3:30. There will be an afternoon and evening session with recreation and supper.

Each young people's organization is asked for a minimum of $5.00 a year toward the Pilgrim Fellowship projects. If you have not already contributed your share please bring or send it to the summer meeting.

The money which we contribute is budgeted as follows:

Foreign Missions (China)	27%
Home Missions (Puerto Rico)	25 "
Southern Convention Missions	20 "
Pilgrim Fellowship Counsel, UCYM,
Counsel Expenses, and Youth Outreach	20 "
Social Action	02 "
Delegate to International Work Camp. ..	06 "

Please call this to the attention of your young people and have a large attendance from your church at this meeting. There were 207 delegates present last Spring and we want to make it more. The president is working on an interesting program which will be well worth your time.

an echo of the International Christian Endeavor Convention recently held in Toronto, Canada, where the Virginia delegation won the position of honor at the head of the parade which dramatized the vitality of Christian Endeavor as an interdenominational, international and interracial movement of Christian youth undertaking to build the world of tomorrow as a Christian community.

Dr. Ernest R. Bryan who recently succeeded Dr. Daniel A. Poling as president of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, will be the principal speaker. Three other representatives of the International Society will serve in the convention, including Miss Alice Whitley Jones of Richmond, vice-president for the southern region. They will be assisted by a staff of 50 outstanding ministers and experienced lay workers from Virginia and other States.

In keeping with the theme, "Build With Christ," a feature of the convention will be seven "work shop" conferences offering practical methods courses dealing with the work of a young people's society. This keynote will be further developed by the organization of the convention into several "councils" each having an adult adviser as counselor, and each bearing the name of a building craft, electricians, carpenters, glaziers, etc. Half of the councils will be grouped together as the "Bee Hive" and the other half will compose the "Beaver Dam." A stimulating spirit of friendly rivalry will prevail between the "Bees" and the "Beavers," particularly in the recreational periods under the direction of Dr. H. S. Hardcastle of Newport News and in the daily sessions of the youth assembly when the convention's student government, assisted by Rev. Harvey C. Hahn of Dayton, Ohio, will have opportunity to be heard.

Rev. Harvey C. Hahn will also deliver the keynote address and conduct the mountain top morning watch service. Dr. and Mrs. Owen will deliver the missionary addresses and Rev. W. Stanley Carne of Portsmouth will conduct the vesper services. Arch J. McQuilkin, vice-president of the International Society, will serve as toastmaster at the annual banquet and install the new officers. Rev. H. H. Newman of Fredericksburg will conduct the communion service and Miss Alice Whitley Jones will speak at the "prayer wheel" service each evening.

SONGS OF THANKFULNESS.

LESSON VI—AUGUST 7, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O Most High.—Psalm 92:1.

LESSON: Psalms 92; 103; 136:1-9, 25-26.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 116:1-8, 17-19.

Learning to Say "Thank You."

One of the nation's leading sociologists once wrote, "Thanksgiving would seem to be a somewhat late arrival among the items of the cultus (or civilization) the world over. Many tribes have been discovered which possess in their own language, no equivalent for the words 'thank you.'" And the fact that our children have to be taught to express thanks shows there are atavistic tendencies to ingratitude still at work in the human race. And children are not the only ones who have not learned to say "thank you." Ingratitude is still one of the most common sins, common in the sense of its prevalence, and common in the sense of being just plain common and coarse. There are many people who are ungrateful, and many others who are not grateful enough. If these songs of thankfulness can awaken the spirit of gratitude in the hearts of some folks, we might well thank God and take courage.

Learning to Say "Thank You" To God.

The lesson for today is comprised of a few songs of thankfulness or thanksgiving, invitations to, and expressions of the spirit of gratitude and appreciation. But they are only a few of the many exhortations to give thanks that are scattered all over the Scripture, and embedded in it. Indeed the Bible lays great emphasis upon the spirit of thankfulness, both in the Old Testament and in the New Testament. One of the most significant statements concerning it is made by Paul when after listing the basic Christian virtues such as the spirit of mercy, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearance, forgiveness, love and peace, he adds, and it would seem as a climax, the words "and be ye thankful." (Colossians 3:15.) In another place he says that it is the will of God that His children be thankful. (I Thessalonians 5:18.) It might be said that the Bible is a "Primer of Thanksgiving," one of the required text-books in the curriculum of Christian Education.

The Giving of Thanks a Good Thing.

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto Jehovah, and to sing praises unto thy name, O Most High." Whenever we find any exhortation or any command in the Bible, we may be sure that it is for our sake and for our good that it is there. God is concerned with the highest and best interests of His children. He desires only their good. He is concerned with their character. The invitations and the commands to give thanks are not arbitrary dictates of an exacting tyrant, but expressions of the wisdom and the love of an affectionate Father. Several reasons can be given for this. For instance it is the Lord God who daily loadeth us with benefits, and common decency alone would prompt an expression of gratitude. Or again the expression of gratitude helps to enrich the value of the gifts already received. Furthermore the thankful heart, as D. L. Moody once said is like a magnet moving through a saucer of sand mixed with iron filings, it attracts and discovers many other, and unsuspected blessings. And as impulses are expressed they become stronger. One becomes thankful by the giving of thanks. The spirit of gratitude begets the spirit of gratitude.

The Paradox of This Matter of Giving Thanks.

The strange thing about this matter of giving thanks is that in so many cases the folks who seemingly have least to give thanks for are the most grateful, while the folks who have most to give thanks for, give the least thanks. The story is told of a well-to-do member of a synagogue who came to the Rabbi and confessed that he had never been able to fulfil the commandment which declares that one must thank God for all things, as sincerely for trouble as for joy, and asked the Rabbi how he could fulfil the commandment. Whereupon the Rabbi sent the man to Issac, a poor and humble watercarrier, who lived at the other end of the town, and who had suffered every indignity of fortune, and yet had retained his love of God and his joy in life. As the rich man came to his shack and asked the watercarrier how to thank God for evil as well as good, stating that the Rabbi had sent him thither for this purpose, the old man cried out in surprise and amazement, "I can't possibly understand why. Thank God I have never known anything but good in all my life."

Perhaps the best explanation of this paradox is the fact that we all too often think in terms of what we do not have instead of thinking in terms of what we do have. We may have a hundred things for which to be thankful, but because we lack even one thing that we want—we may not even need it—we murmur and complain. As a matter of fact if we should count our blessings they are, as the Psalmist said, even as the sands of the sea in number.

Saying "Thank You" in Song and Music.

Let it be said again that the Psalms are "songs," poems set to music. We have several from the Hebrew Hymnal for today's lesson. All are good, but one of them, the 103rd Psalm is superb and exalted. Here, in words of beauty and power, expressed in stately rhythm set to music, is the sincere and spontaneous expression of gratitude of a man whose heart was filled with gratitude and thanksgiving to God, the giver of every good gift. Forgiveness of sins, healing of diseases, redemption from evil, quickening of the spirit, reception of overflowing loving kindness and tender mercies, all these things called forth his praise and gratitude. And these things came from a God who shared his secrets with his children, who made known his ways unto his people, who was merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and abundant in loving-kindness. Ah, how gracious he was—he didn't deal with his people after their sins, nor reward them after their iniquities, so great is his lovingkindness toward them, well it was as high as the heavens are above the earth. His attitude toward his people was that of a Father—as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him, them that hold him in awe and love. As the man goes on his wonder and his emotion rise to great heights. He calls upon the angels, upon the hosts, upon the ministers that do his pleasure, upon all the works of Jehovah in all places to join him in this song of praise and thanksgiving. And then he comes to a great climax when he adds, "Bless the Lord, O my soul." He who reads these Notes will do them and himself an injustice unless he takes his Bible and reads slowly and reads slowly and thoughtfully Psalm 103. And he is a strange creature indeed who can read this glowing and glorious Psalm without feeling the quickening spirit of thanksgiving and adding to the great chorus the blessing of his own soul to that of the angels and God's hosts and ministers and the works of his creation.

The Unspoken Word of Thanks.

There is a place too for the unspoken word of thanks. These people of that far-off day knew the value of stringed and wind instruments of music. Every work of man can be used in the worship of God, even a great orchestra.

GET YOUR PACKET.

The Woman's Packet for 1949-50 is $1.25, and may be ordered from the Convention Office, Elon College, North Carolina. It is chock full of good and useful material, as usual, and is a must for all women's groups. In the Packet is the Plan Book, which we may use as our guide for program for the new year, besides a book containing worship services and study programs and many other pieces of literature which we need for a well-rounded program.

CONCORD SOCIETY REPORTS.

Our society is progressing nicely under the efficient leadership of our President, Miss Irene Reagan. Interesting programs are given by different members according to the Plan Book. A devotional service was led by Miss Nellie Tate each time. So far, we have met all requirements for a Superior Society.

We observed the World Day of Prayer with Bethel Society. We had a book review by Mrs. Sloan which was enjoyed very much. We sent flowers, cards, and gifts for the sick and shut-ins of the community.

We observed World Community Day, packed several towels for the project and made gifts for Friendly Service. We sent gifts to Elon Orphanage. Besides our regular gifts and offering we are giving $200.00 to the building fund of our new church, which is being built.

own greatness. Why? Because we don't like to be great through God-likeness. We've somehow sensed enough about God's nature to know that God's ways aren't the ways we'd naturally choose for ourselves, and it is our ways that we are determined to have, come what may. What comes is misery, for God's righteousness is such that in judgment He condemns to misery all else save that which is in accord with His purpose. That is why man, created for greatness, looks so miserably ridiculous when he takes that greatness out in silly little claims like self-determination, family domination, racial superiority, and these other false greatnesses of which I have spoken.

Now will you turn to your understanding of Christianity as it has often been proclaimed to you and recognize that Jesus Christ came to earth just to make it possible for men to be restored to true greatness, to really live in God-likeness. He came in order that the image of God which is in each of us might find true expression in our lives! He came to show us most clearly how God is love, and then, to proclaim to each and every one of us that we could be restored to manhood in God's image, to living in love! Jesus insists that your greatness and mine lies just in this: that we are capable of loving. And, by God's mercy in Christ, we can exercise that capacity with ever-growing fullness, can be great, as God is great, by living. That is the Gospel, the Good News, which Christianity has to proclaim to every man. In Christ, we can be restored to life in love.

It cost Jesus Christ Calvary to show us this. He thought it was worth it. He thought there was nothing He could do for you and me that would be more valuable than this: that by His life and death, we should be restored to the life for which we were created by God. And, even though men crucified Him for suggesting that this was their only way to greatness, He just couldn't be put away. He came back, spiritually alive, and for the same purpose. He's still alive, that by His living Spirit, He might come to men, again and again, suggesting that their greatness lies in God-likeness. Furthermore, He offers to take men, as they are, and by His power, transform them into their essentially great selves. In living lives of love, love that is akin to God's love, our greatness lies. There, and there alone. Would God that you and I were more interested. Would God that we were more willing to let Christ have His way. Then our lives would radiate blessing, and not misery. If He's using this occasion to call you back to your true greatness, will you renounce all self-made expressions of importance, and receive the one He wants to give you?

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

At last the Truitts have moved! Much activity has been going on in and around the little house in which they are to live temporarily. It has been cleaned and freshened up. The yard has been improved some with new driveways and walks. However, it needs something outside to make it look more lived-in. Do we have a nurseryman in our church who would furnish some shrubbery to go around this cottage and the one next door, which we own? It would fill in those bare spots and make both houses more attractive looking.

Mrs. Wright has been away this week. Her own daughter sent for her, announcing at the same time the arrival of a granddaughter. Rebecca Johnston has been substituting for Mrs. Wright and has done a splendid job. We appreciate her service.

Would you like to see a beautiful living picture? Then ride into Elon by the new Alamance Golf Course where you can get good view of our rolling pasture land. We have forty head of the very finest Holstein cattle—all pure bred and well cared for. The recent rains have made the pasture green and fresh, and these fine-looking cattle grazing there make a real picture.

This same fresh, green grass has in turn increased our milk production approximately ten per cent. The rains have also given new life to our garden—corn, beans, tomatoes, and other vegetables are coming in and are being thoroughly enjoyed by our big family.

Cleaning and repair still goes on! We have up to now spent most of our time and lots of money on the building known as the Baby Home. Now, we are centering our attention on Johnston Hall. It develops that considerable work must be done in this building. Special attention is being given to toilets, bathrooms, halls and floors. All this repair work is absolutely needed to bring these buildings up to standard. All this takes money. The income for these summer months has been up to par, but our treasury has been almost drained of the Thanksgiving build-up for the summer months.

Mrs. W. R. Sellars' class from the Burlington Church has given us a Bendix washing machine and ironer—a starter for a new laundry in the Baby Home. This room has been renovated. New ceilings put up, walls painted and when completed this room will be one of the nicest additions to our whole plant. The next piece of equipment for this department will be a large, commercial dryer. What Sunday school will make the first contribution to this piece of equipment?

We are happy to have Mrs. Farmer back on our campus for a short stay. She will relieve the matrons who will in turn get a vacation. Mrs. Farmer and Miss Brakefield have this past week been making new curtains to replace old ones. We would be delighted to have Mrs. Farmer stay with us permanently, but she says her health won't permit it.

cloth shoes have since caused some speculation, "Where did he get them? Were they really men's shoes? Did some woman's fingers make them for a loved one? Was he that one? Are they a type common in some part of North China?"

Again I kept busy with Lewis 'til the soldier had gone, curiosity satisfied for the moment. Leona reported that as she answered his questions and let him look, he softened. When leaving, he did so with typical Chinese politeness.

Several days ago the soldiers moved out of our house and many thousands left the city. There are still plenty of them in our compound. Dick has put an electric light and the radio in their officers' (the men who were in our house) room.

I've just looked across the river at the stream of heads and packs which is all we can see from here of the troops heading west. We hear news of this place and that being liberated; but still no word of Foochow. Our ShuYing is worried about her family there. She remembers hunger from the last war and we know there is little rice in Foochow. Communist soldiers are everywhere; so surely Foochow must fall soon. The sooner fighting is over, the sooner China can get down to the colossal task of reconstruction. Then where will all these soldiers from the north go? Will they remain soldiers living off taxes or settle into useful work here or back in their homes?

These men seem well-disciplined and though they walk into our house like conquerors, they take nothing and respond politely to courtesy. Judging from the sounds coming from the old temple next door and the building in our compound, they sing often and with spirit. They are men with a purpose and though we may not approve all their methods, their expressed purpose is a good one: improving livelihood of China's common people.

any case, it is wise to be very careful in choosing our children's reading. If we provide books with colorful and meaningful pictures, and stories which the children enjoy, they will not long for those funnies which, for the time being at least, are detrimental.

In Memoriam

NURNEY.

Mrs. George W. Nurney, Suffolk, Va., died June 30, 1949, at the age of 89, at her home in the Brandon apartments. Her funeral was conducted at the Baker Funeral Home by her pastor, the Rev. John G. Truitt. She was survived by three children, Mrs. Thomas A. Smyth of Richmond, Va.; Miss Therese Nurney and Jack W. Nurney of Suffolk.

Mrs. Nurney was one of Suffolk's best known and greatly beloved citizens. Born in Suffolk before the Civil War she was educated, married, and spent her long life in her native city. She united with the Suffolk Christian Church during the ministry of its founder, the Rev. William Brock Wellons, D. D., and lived during the ministry of all of its six pastors. This is a very unique record. She and her late husband, George W. Nurney, had been blessed with a lovely family and prospered in this world's goods so that across these years which span the entire history of the church her devotion and the devotion of her family has been greatly felt. It is singular that she should have been called to her eternal home on the very last day of the ministry of the sixth of her pastors.

Appropriate to the beautiful, quiet life which she has lived, the services were simple. The lovely chapel was filled with many friends who sat quietly with her loved ones during the reading of some of the passages from the Scriptures which had meant most to her during the years of her life. May God's blessings be upon her family to whom she was so devoted, and who in turn were so devoted to her.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Pastor.

BURCHETTE.

On May 6, 1948, our beloved co-worker and friend in the Henderson Christian Church, Mrs. Sallie V. Burchette, was called to her heavenly reward.

She was beloved by all who knew her, having that unusual capacity of an understanding heart, of loving, of being loved. As a Christian, as a mother, as a friend, as a woman, she exemplified that perfection which is so rare and yet, with this perfection, she never lost that humble human touch.

She will be sorely missed by those of our number who remain.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in her death we have lost the physical presence of a faithful and loyal member, but we have gained the spiritual lessons she taught us in her quiet and gentle manner of daily living.

2. That we are grateful to have been her co-worker and friend, to have learned the lessons of life she so nobly taught just by actions—not words. We are grateful just to have had her with us these past years.

3. That although our hearts are saddened by our loss we shall endeavor to rejoice for her gain of eternal life.

4. That we extend our sincere sympathy to her devoted family who loved and ministered to her so faithfully during her illness, and pray the gentle hand of God will tenderly ease sorrow from their hearts.

Mrs. J. FRANK APPLE,
Mrs. W. O. CUNNINGHAM,
Mrs. JOHN ALLEN HALL.

PARKS.

On the sixteenth of November, 1948, the death angel bore the gentle spirit of one of our most loyal and beloved members, Mrs. J. E. Parks, to her heavenly home. She was a woman of fine Christian character, and we shall always cherish her memory. We deeply mourn the loss of this friend and member but being assured that she has entered into joys of the blessed, we are humbly resigned to His will. We commend her example of faith and love for Christ's Kingdom to all who knew and loved her.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we of the Henderson Church have lost a devoted member, the community a valued friend, and the family a devoted wife and mother.

2. That we are grateful for what her life has meant to us.

3. That while we shall miss her presence, we will be consoled by the thought that our loss is her eternal gain.

4. That we extend our sympathy to her loved ones and pray God's blessings upon them.

Mrs. J. FRANK APPLE,
Mrs. W. O. CUNNINGHAM,
Mrs. JOHN ALLEN HALL.

ARNOLD.

Whereas, God has in His infinite love seen fit to call from his earthly labors and bodily suffering, Ben F. Arnold, a member of Liberty Spring Christian Church, on March 24, 1949. He was quiet, unassuming, humble, yet firm and steadfast in his devotion to Christian principles and practices.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we realize God doeth all things well, and we bow in humble submission to His will.

2. That we rejoice in the triumph of his release from the burden of pain, to enter into life more abundant, to be forever with the Lord.

3. That we express our sympathy to his loved ones and we commend them to our Heavenly Father's love and comfort.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be placed on our church records, a copy be sent to the family, and one be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Mrs. G. O. O'BERRY,
Mrs. WESLEY BYRD,
Mrs. R. WESLEY HARRELL.
Committee.

LAMM.

Whereas, on the morning of May 26, 1949, our beloved member Faye Kenyon Lamm suddenly passed into eternal life,

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That the Woman's Auxiliary of the First Christian Church of Burlington, North Carolina, has lost a devoted member and a valued friend.

2. That we of the Margaret Lightbourne Circle appreciated sincerely her cooperation and willingness to serve while an active member of our group.

3. That while we humbly submit to the will of our Heavenly Father, we deeply deplore our loss, and we extend to her family and loved ones our heartfelt sympathy.

The Maragret Lightbourne Circle.

Miss KATHLEEN MILES,
Mrs. A. D. COBB, JR.
Committee.

HASLETT.

Julia Morgan Haslett passed to her eternal reward February 14, 1949. She had been a member of the Senior Philathea Class of the Suffolk Christian Church for many years and was a regular attendant up to a few months of her death.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in her death we have lost a faithful member and that her sweet fellowship with this class will ever be a sacred memory.

2. That to her husband and sons, those to whom she was nearest and dearest, we extend our heartfelt sympathy and commend them to the God of love and mercy. May this sad dispensation be to them a connecting link between earth and heaven, where they may be reunited and join an unbroken circle around God's throne.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy entered on our class record, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Mrs. C. B. DUKE, GLADYS YATES.

ROGERS.

On the morning of May 17, 1949, the angel of death appeared in our midst, taking one of our dearest and most beloved members, Mrs. Loulie Rogers.

Mrs. Rogers was a true friend to all, devoted to her Philathea Class as well as to other organizations of her church.

We shall greatly miss her kindly presence and her endearing smile. The lovely memories she leaves behind will live on in the hearts of those who loved her and we feel richer for having known her.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we feel that "she is not gone, she is just away," and that we hope to meet her again in our Father's home.

2. That we extend to the members of her family our deepest sympathy and urge them to keep in mind that "the Eternal God is our refuge and underneath are the everlasting arms."

3. That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon the records of the Philathea Class, a copy sent to the family and a copy to The Christian Sun for publication.

MORGAN.

In the passing of Mrs. Lavinia Morgan, March 7, 1949, the Senior Philathea Class of the Suffolk Christian Church has sustained the loss of a much beloved member. In recognition of her faithful life, we offer the following resolutions:

1. That we cherish the memory of her association with this class, and while we miss her presence, we will think of her as having entered the life more abundant to be forever with the Lord.

2. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the family and commend them to God whose grace is sufficient for every need.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy entered on our class record.

BLEST AMERICA

and how blessed I have found, by reading in the National Geographic Magazine for December, 1948, the article "Mapping Our Changing Southwest" by Frederick Simpich, which gives an account of the riches hidden in the southwestern section of the United States.

For many years the Great Salt Lake was a forbidding section to be avoided by man and beast. But it has produced mountains of potash and an inexhaustible source of salt to be taken by solar evaporation. There wasn't enough loose iron to make a keg of nails or shoe a horse, when the 49'ers passed that way.

Since the Union Pacific Railroad came in 1869, Utah has produced more than two billion dollars worth of base and precious metals such as iron, copper, lead, zinc, gypsum, and the largest concentration of coal is hidden under portions of Utah, Wyoming and Colorado, ready for use. America's largest surface copper mine is in Bingham Canyon, Utah. Nevada's open pit copper mine is a man-made hole, from which 230 tons of material has been taken out.

Nor can we overlook the rush for gold in California, and in Colorado at a later date, in Cripple Creek and Leadville where precious metals are still being found.

We should not forget the pasture lands where millions of sheep, cattle and horses find pasture ready for them, the vast prairies ready for the plow, where grain for the billions is raised.

Who dreamed of oil in those days and natural gas? Those mammoth red-wood trees! Who cared for them through the centuries? Who was it laid the foundations of the earth? Not man surely. Who but a Father who had the welfare of millions in His thoughts.

"The cattle on a thousand hills are mine." (Psalm 50:10.) How are we sharing with the owner?

Here is our balance sheet for one year alone, 1948. As an owner, would you be satisfied with such a miserly return?

"The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light." (Isaiah 9:2.) Isn't that the America of today?

China, Africa, the islands of the sea, are all waiting and longing for that light, and here is our account with God for the year 1948, our national expenditure: Gambling, $12,581,514,314.00; alcoholic liquors, $9,640,000,000.00; tobacco, $3,880,000,000.00 (Department of Commerce, June 11, 1948).

For all our riches and the comforts they have given us, we, the American nation spent the above amounts for gambling, liquor and tobacco, and for church contributions, only $1,250,000,000.00.

WHAT TIME IS IT?

By DON DELANO TULLIS

An English parson has taken the measure of human life by reducing our threescore years and ten to the compass of a single day, from 7 a. m. to 11 p. m.

On this reduced scale for the 15-year-old the time is 10:25 a. m. At 20 it is 11:43; at 30, 1:51 p. m.; at 40, 4:08; at 50, 6:25; at 60, 8:42, and at 70, 11 p. m.

Truly, the time is short. Whatever we have in mind to do, we had better be at it. Half of life's glorious forenoon is already gone for the child of 15.

There is so much to be done if life is to be made worth while. There is so much to be known and so little time to learn. Loafing through college is not something to be condoned. It is a tragic loss.

The swiftly passing moments should inspire us to greater kindness to all whose lives touch our own. We should give more thought to our little ones. Before the day is spent they will be out on their own and opportunities for comradeship with them will be gone forever.

Married folks should meet the challenge of this short day in terms of greater devotion and a larger show of love. Would your wife think you were intoxicated if you came home this evening with an armful of roses for her? Would your husband think you had lost your mind if you were to dress in your most gorgeous gown for dinner with him at home tonight?

And why not tonight? Tomorrow you will see deep wrinkles on his brow. Tomorrow you will realize for the first time that "her golden locks time has to silver turned." O, swiftness, never ceasing, we would meet the precious moments as they come.

Whatever time of day it is with you, it is time to give God a place in your life. Youth, middle life, old age—all belong to Him. Don't let the push of your today rob you of the peace of God's tomorrow.

Dr. Leslie Weatherhead tells of a saintly old Scotchman who lay dying in his humble cottage. The night was dark. The storm was raging. His daughter said: "Father, shall I read ye the Word?" "Na, na," he said. "Na, na, lassie; I thatched my house before the storm began."

Have you? Better do it today. The night cometh.

News Flashes

Guest editors will write the Sunday School Lessons for the month of September. Watch for them.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference will meet on next Wednesday and Thursday, August 10-11, with the Palmyra Christian Church near Edinburg, Virginia. The tentative program will be found on page 14 of this issue.

Union Vesper Service (Community Sunday Evening Services) sponsored by the Woodstock Ministerial Association were held in the St. Paul's Evangelical and Reformed Church of Woodstock, Sunday evening, July 17, at 8:00 p. m. The Rev. Robert A. Whitten, pastor of the Winchester Congregational Christian Church, was guest speaker.

Recently a revival meeting was held in our Dry Run Church, Seven Fountains, Virginia, Rev. R. E. Newton, pastor. Rev. S. E. Madren was guest speaker for the series of services and six young people were received into the fellowship on profession of faith. We are glad to have this encouraging report from our loyal people at Dry Run and rejoice with them in the progress being made for the Kingdom of Christ.

NEWS FROM HANK'S CHAPEL.

Hank's Chapel Christian Church, near Pittsboro, had a full week July 17-24 when the Revival Meeting was conducted by the pastor and a Vacation Bible School was held. Eighteen new members were received into the church—15 by confession of faith and three by letter of transfer. The Vacation Bible School had an enrollment of 93 and an average attendance of 78. Fourteen dollars was raised in the Bible School for Morning Star VI. Rev. and Mrs. Mack V. Welch, pastor and wife, conducted the Vacation Bible School and Mr. Welch delivered the sermons at the Revival Meeting.

Hank's Chapel Church has just voted to take a full time program and to call a pastor for his full time, providing a parsonage for the pastor in the community. The Missionary Society continues to support missionaries in Shaowu and in West Africa. Congratulations to this good church and its pastor.

CELEBRATES NINETIETH BIRTHDAY.

Brother G. W. Rothgeb, the last surviving charter member of the Leaksville Christian Church, celebrated his ninetieth birthday on Sunday, July 10, 1949, at the home of his sister, Mrs. E. Lena Rothgeb. Forty-two of his relatives met for this enjoyable occasion and he received many valuable gifts.

Brother Rothgeb was one of the leading members in the building program of Leaksville Church. The building fund was started in 1890, at which time money was scarce and about all that could be earned was required for family expenses; yet, in the face of these conditions, he gave his entire salary received for five months' teaching school (at $20 per month) to the building fund; and he says his hens laid more eggs, his cow gave more milk, and his hogs got fatter than in any other year, and no doctor was needed during the year.

Brother Rothgeb united with the Leaksville Church at the age of eighteen, and now at the age of ninety he is still as loyal as ever. He served as church clerk for nineteen years, also as Sunday school superintendent for many years, and in many other offices. He has taught in Sunday school for nearly seventy years, and has been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for nearly sixty years.

Leaksville Church has had a continuous growth from its birth to the present time. Rev. R. E. Newton has served as pastor since January 1, 1940.

We extend to "Uncle George" our sincere gratitude for a life well lived.

ALBEMARLE.

The Albemarle Congregational Christian Church has made strides in recent months of which it is collectively proud. Each member seems to better realize that he has a job to do and he tries to do it. The membership has grown slowly but steadily while the regular attendance is almost double what it was a year and a half ago.

Until about a year ago there had been no active Young People's group in the church for several years. Since that time the Albemarle group has grown into one of the largest and most outstanding societies in the Western Conference. Both the church and parsonage have been painted and more modern conveniences have been added.

The most beautiful addition to the church—and one which will add much to the worshipful attitude of the services—was the installation of a Wurlitzer electric organ along with a beautiful set of Maas chimes. A dedication service for the new organ is being planned for the first Sunday in August. With the exception of one $500 gift from the Wiscasset Mills Co. the entire amount of more than $3,200 was raised by gifts ranging from one to one hundred dollars. Two of these smaller gifts came from outside the church membership.

The Albemarle folks are proud of their recent progress, and hope to reach even higher goals in years to come.

W. WALTER HALL,
Pastor.

REPORT FROM ROSEMONT.

While Rosemont's Senior Choir has been on vacation during the month of July, the Youth Choir of the church under the direction of Mrs. Hugh Matheny, has been doing a magnificent job of filling the choir loft at both the morning and evening services of worship. The senior choir, under the direction of Mr. Royal Gallup, will return August 7 while the Youth Choir takes its vacation during the month of August. Mrs. Matheny is taking the young people of the Youth Choir to Manteo, North Carolina, August 13 to see "The Lost Colony." Last summer she took them to Williamsburg, Virginia, to see "The Common Glory."

MODERN CRUSADES AND THE GOSPEL.

By PASTOR HERMANN SAUER, Ph.D.,
Geisenheim Rheingau, Germany.

The traveler from America to Europe retraces the way by which his ancestors came westward to found a newer world. They left behind them an Old World to build the New. They found it not behind the seven hills by the seven dwarfs of a Snow-White but behind the valleys and the hills of the ocean in a refuge from the evil kings of the world they had left behind. And there they found the happiness of a Snow White, in a country that was content to live unto itself apart from the problems of foreign entanglements—until our own day!

The new day began, for America, in her crusade of the First World War. Her Second World War was a second crusade. It could easily be continued into a third crusade for economic control.

America is now in the place of Europe in the Middle Ages when it sent her sons to the Holy Land for the recovery of the Sepulchre of the Master. It might be said that there is something of the instinct of the birds in our people, in a return to the birth-place of the parents, as the German storks find their way each year to the flood lands of the Egyptian Nile. Out of the struggle of the old Occident against the Moslems, in Asia, arose a new Europe. And could it not be that in the crusade of this day there might arise in spirit and in truth a something new that will have utmost significance for the coming centuries in this time when America is concerned in a Crusade in Europe?

These are questions that must move one who travels from West to East, to land in a newly devastated Europe, with its parallel to the medieval country of the Holy Land of the Bible.

The Crusades were the first pilgrimages of the men of Europe. The crusaders were the first Pilgrim Fathers. The answer to their questions was given by the Reformation, three centuries later. Two things must be borne in mind. First, that these Pilgrims of old found a new haven and a new world as they came from their Europe to an ancient Asia, past the seats of the culture of Rome and Greece. That destroyed their own known world. They returned poorer, not richer in heart to their homes, for the tragedy had befallen them, that the Holy Sepulchre had come into the keeping of the Moslem. And that gave birth to the second fact, the great creative genius of Europe. They could no longer be content with the old: the questing spirit and the questioning mind demanded satisfaction. They demanded the revelation of the Word of God.

Luther probed the depths of this new Spirit while he opened unto each believing soul the treasures of the riches of the Word of God, from the Book of the lost Holy Land.

It is one of the mysterious accidents of history that Luther sends this answer freighted with a new faith into darkened hearts just at the time when Europe discovers the coasts of America, the New World! Luther is the contemporary of Columbus.

Again four hundred years have passed. And this New World has grown faster than Europe. It has become a great nation. Like Joseph it has become rich and powerful, while the father and his brethren became poor. America is young; Europe is old. And because the future lies before America, her sons are sent on pilgrimages, into the land of the fathers. In these pilgrimages they are changed because they are brought unto themselves by that which they see and that which happened to them. And thus they are forced to think about themselves and their own future. Their world is to be born anew. Along the Rhine, the heart of the people of the crusades, there continue the traditions of ancient days. There is Geisenheim, of whose beautiful bells the poet Longfellow, himself a pilgrim to Germany a century ago, wrote in his "Golden Legend." In the vicinity are three shrines dear to the pilgrims: Marienthal, Notgottes, and beautiful Rochusberg. The customs of the pilgrimages remain alive. Some things related to them

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

MATCHING MEANS AND ENDS

"Television Inside—Come In," the sign ran. Why not spend a few moments enjoying the great, modern miracle? Inside, the program was very much in evidence—audible and visible. The discovery of the century was before my eyes. Science was demonstrating the transmission and synchronizing of voice and vision. The means was unprecedented in the history of the world. Back of this production was the study, skill and achievement of many scientists and technicians.

To what end, what purpose was this remarkable means being used? Surely a great means must serve a great end; surely such a remarkable mechanism must serve as exalted purpose. Else, why all this effort and expense?

Surprisingly enough, the program was mediocre. The mountain of television was bringing forth the mouse of triviality. A nonsensical, nonenlightening banter was leisurely ensuing between a person and a simulated species of the animal Kingdom.

It is conceded readily that television does present some very attractive and worthwhile features, but these seem to be the exception rather than the rule.

Christianity has great ends in view—the individual and collective redemption of man. The church is dedicated to the achievement of superb ends, but it has been content in many instances to use inferior means. Cheap, inefficient and antiquated means are inadequate for the consummate task of ushering in the Kingdom of God in all its fulness.

With such transcendent ends in view, the Church should employ the best means possible of assuring their realization. The gospel should be proclaimed with clarity, intellectual vigor, and a disciplined zeal. The vast resources of science, art, sociology, philanthropy, as well as theology should be used on a magnificent scale in order to match our means and our ends.

GOOD-BYE BLACKBOARD

Visual education has been in existence for a long time. Before the expression, "visual education," was ever coined, the humble and lowly blackboard was serving that very purpose. In one-room schools, Sunday school classrooms and even in the home, vast treasures of visual education have been disseminated through this one single medium. Writing, drawing, diagrams and the like have served the basic requirements of effective visual education.

The old fashioned blackboard served a variety of purposes. Now it carries a motto for all to read. Again it serves as a bulletin board. Some are stationary, others are movable. Skill in using chalk and eraser enables one to speed up the visual education process. Any teacher who ignores the blackboard is overlooking an effective instrument of instruction.

There is a danger, of course, that something may be left on a blackboard long after it has served its usefulness. On the other hand, there are times when those outside the immediate Class may profit greatly by this visual opportunity.

The writer was browsing around (good editorial procedure, of course) at Lakeside and chanced to find this choice quotation on a blackboard: "Christian missions may properly be interpreted as one of the essential Christian methods for creating that spiritual oneness without which the physical oneness of our world is nothing but a millstone around our necks." How fortunate this arresting statement had not been erased! It is a sermon within itself.

Educators are now abandoning the old-fashioned blackboard and substituting green boards, to be used with yellow chalk. This, it is believed, relieves eye strain. If so, thank God for green boards. And in the meanwhile, we salute the blackboard, the most economical, and the most universally usable medium of formal, visual education.

An old minister sat down in a restaurant with a traveling salesman, so the familiar story goes, and supplemented the usual provision of black pepper with his own favorite cayenne pepper. The traveling salesman sampled the proffered seasoning. "You are a preacher?" "Yes." "You preach hell-fire and damnation?" "Certainly." "Well," retorted the salesman, "you are the first one I ever knew to take a sample with him."

Today we must preach the reality not only of hell, but also of health and heaven; not only the reality of damnation, but also of salvation. We must have demonstrable samples of health, wholeness, and salvation. This generation is not without its samples of the saints.

All through life we must deal with samples. They are an indispensable means of advertising. The sample sells the product.

Christian people should be sample conscious. Many more subscriptions to The Sun could be secured if people would use sample copies judiciously. Leaders who desire to improve their usefulness will avidly sample various types of books and literature, of which there is an abundance. Vacation time should enable alert churchmen to sample many types of religious services and experiences. "Oh taste and see that the Lord is good." We are authorized and urged to sample the goodness of God for ourselves.

Do not complain about things you cannot help, nor grumble about that which you cannot correct.—Nichol.

It Mustn't Get You Down

By SAMUEL LAWRENCE JOHNSON, F. Ph. S.

A fascinating problem for the student of the Bible is to attempt to analyze, if possible the thinking of Judas. He was a man who had walked with Jesus along the way. It is though that he came from Kerioth Hezron, which is generally identified with the ruins of El-Karjetien, south of Hebron. I want to call this to your attention particularly because this made Judas a man of South Palestine where the other eleven disciples were men of Galilee, and the Judeans had a tendency to look down upon the Galileans and perhaps herein lies one of the contributing reasons for Judas' actions.

We find very often that when a minority group becomes a majority group they, in turn, become less tolerant of those who have been in the majority than the majority originally were to them. Could it be that the disciples of Jesus being in the majority men of Galilee who had been scorned by the Judeans now turned to tables and looked with some question in their hearts upon this man Judas?

The life of Judas, previous to his call, like that of the others is hidden from us. And it is remarkable to me that early historians did not make further use of this attractive field of speculation.

About the only source which makes any reference to this early life of Judas is the "Arabic gospel of the infancy" which makes Judas, the boy a demoniac, and indicates that the demon took flight when he first met the boy Jesus, but the passage which makes this reference stands absolutely alone.

We may take for granted that Judas had some good qualities, otherwise he would not have been accepted into the Apostolic body. Among these were, very likely, practical ability and a great deal of energy for he was made treasurer of their little cooperative community. But somehow or other he wasn't trustworthy and began pilfering money from the corporation. His chief fault seemed to have been that of covetousness. But why was he in this respect so much more of a sinner than the others?

Perhaps we have already had a hint at the reason. Judas because of his minority position in the group began to pity himself and feel in one way or another inferior to the other disciples and particularly to Jesus. Silly—you say? Perhaps—yes.

It would seem that Jesus although the greatest man who ever lived, was one of the most humble in the presence of other men—but was Judas sure of this?

If this were the case, however, that Judas did feel inferior to the other disciples and Jesus, then he acted most naturally and most humanly for he tried to establish himself, first by stealing in order to have a little more money than his chonies and secondly by selling the life of Jesus in order as he thought, to indicate his power over the Master and to add to his own stature in the eyes of the community. I think Judas' actions were as a direct result of an attempt to satisfy his own ego, to in some way to his own satisfaction increase his prestige. That things might not turn out as he planned them, or that he was doing wrong; I don't believe entered his mind until it was too late, so great was his desire to justify, within his own reasoning his position in the community.

One of the clearest insights into Judas' twist of mind was his chagrin at the waste of the ointment when the woman came to Jesus and anointed him with it. I don't believe there would have been any such wrathful reaction had Judas been on the receiving end, the one anointed. Constantly reoccurring in that man's mind was the thought: "I'm not as good as he is; I'm not as able as they are; they look down upon me; I'm just being carried along as ballast or dead weight." And because of this burning feeling of inferiority he generated within himself a fierce hate.

From earliest time this has been one of man's great problems. In the beginning he shivered with fear in the presence of the incalculable power of nature. He was aware all too fully of his puniness in the face of the lightning and the storm. When the winds came, toppling over great trees, and pushing about the waters of the lake, he felt relatively helpless in the hands of so great a power. He attempted to reconcile himself to his condition. He killed other animals and took their skins with which to clothe himself to keep out the cold of winter. He worshipped the snow as a god, and the rain and the sun—for they were beyond his comprehension. They did things he could not do, and he felt subservient to them, despite his attempts at reconciliation. And still, with many today, one of man's most constant battles is within himself as he fights this all encompassing and sometimes very destructive feeling of inferiority.

In childhood, parents represent omnipotent gods towards whom inferiority feeling first develops. The influence of this attitude of inferiority engendered by parental authority can be devastating. Dr. Henry von Witzleben, one of America's great Christian psycho-analysts reminds us that 20 or 30 years later in life an individual's thinking might be influenced by what parental attitudes were towards him when a very small child, and that parents must constantly be awake to the fact that there is a wrong and right method of disciplining children.

Some years ago Clarence Buddington Kelland wrote an article: "Why We Behave Like Idiots" (The American magazine, May 1926). In it he said:

"Everybody is a great deal more like everybody else than most of us imagine. We are shy. We are self-conscious—and we fairly ache with this feeling. I suppose the basis of this is each man's intimate personal acquaintance with himself. I know a heap about myself that nobody else does and that I hope nobody will ever discover. I've watched my own processes as you have watched yours, and each of us realizes that he isn't any great shucks after all. We have sized ourselves up and marvel internally that we've got away with it. It's rather a miracle."

And thus we become self-conscious. We don't know the other fellow nearly as well as we know ourselves, and consequently take him at his reputation value.

Feelings of inferiority center on comparisons of the subject with other individuals. Usually these comparisons are originally of tangible, visible things—that is physique, and physical equipment with that of his omnipresent and omnipotent parents; later with his larger playmates. Necessarily he is constantly aware of discrepancies of size, in height, in weight and strength. His obvious inferiorities are associated with his obvious dependencies and subservience.

The child's reactions to his littleness comes out in the form of his speech. There develops, for example, a resentment at being called "little." And there is much talk of "when I grow up," and children play house and confiscate long dresses and trousers.

VACATION BIBLE SCHOOLS.

I have just concluded seven weeks of Vacation Bible Schools. I have served in the Eastern and Western North Carolina Conferences. My first school at New Hope has already been reported so I will only mention it.

Mt. Hermon Bible School was conducted June 20-24. The church is located near Garner, North Carolina, and the pastor is Rev. E. M. Carter. We had approximately 86 in attendance. I held Prayer Meeting on Sunday night and a Young People's Meeting was held on Thursday night with 25 to 30 young people present. We had a picnic and closing program on Friday night.

The Bible School at Beulah, Zebulon, North Carolina, was held June 27-July 1. Rev. T. D. Sutton is pastor. The average attendance was 86. Due to conflicting meetings, no closing program was given but the school was a success. I also attended revival services that week, at another of Rev. Sutton's churches, Oak Level. Rev. J. L. Neese was the visiting minister. We enjoyed the services and had special music each night.

Beginning July 3, I helped Rev. W. T. Madren for four weeks in his churches—Ether, Sophia, Flint Hill and Shady Grove. At Ether, we had 21 pupils and the school was a success. We had a picnic and a closing program. Sophia had 27 pupils. It also was a success and was concluded by a picnic and closing program. Flint Hill had 40 pupils who also helped in the revival services. Rev. Clyde Fields was the visiting minister. We furnished special music one night and gave a program on Friday night before the regular service. Shady Grove school was very successful because they not only attended the School each day but nearly all attended the revival services each evening led by Rev. Madren and rendered special music each evening. The climaxing night was Friday night when the Bible School gave its picnic and program before the regular service. In the service, three of the Intermediates made a decision for Christ and united with the church. Shady Grove had 22 pupils who cooperated very well. The Primary Class had 100 per cent perfect attendance for the week.

The week of July 18 I conducted two schools, Flint Hill and Bailey's Grove. We had only 12 at Bailey's Grove but they worked well together and accomplished a lot. Rev. B. H. Lowdermilk is the pastor of the church.

The main point that has stood out in my experience this year has been the many young people who have taught and assisted in the Bible Schools. In nearly every school I have had young people for teachers and assistants who cooperated well and benefitted from their experience.

Each school had as its project Morning Star VI and they have given their offering for it. Also each school has contributed to the Board of Christian Education.

WESTERN N. C. SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The Sunday School Convention of the Western North Carolina Conference of Congregational Christian Churches held its annual meeting at Pleasant Hill Church, Liberty, North Carolina, Route 2, Thursday, July 7, 1949, from 10:00 a. m. to 4:00 p. m.

The attendance was very good—19 churches represented by delegates and three by reports. Total number present, 163. The Pleasant Ridge Church of Ramseur, Route 1, won the attendance banner by having 22½ per cent of its membership present.

A very inspiring address was given by Dr. W. T. Scott on the theme of "Go Teach."

Rev. J. T. Kiger, pastor of the Ramseur Baptist Church, delivered to the Convention an address on Evangelism.

Rev. Clyde T. Fields conducted the installation service of the new officers for the ensuing year, which were S. H. Pell of Ramseur, N. C., president; Rev. W. W. Hall of Albemarle, vice-president; Miss Elsie Ashley of Liberty, secretary-treasurer; Miss Myra Hinshaw of Liberty, assistant secretary-treasurer.

Rev. W. T. Madren conducted the Communion Service.

This year we are going to mimeograph the minutes of the Convention and send a copy to each Sunday school.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank everyone that had a part in making our Convention a success this year. The ladies of the Pleasant Hill Church did a fine job of providing delicious food and lemonade for all that were present.

An offering was taken for the High Point Church in the amount of $45.00 to be paid through the C. M. A. With this, Brother Earp, goes our prayer and we wish for you a speedy recovery.

PLEASANT RIDGE DAILY VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Pleasant Ridge Sunday School of Route 1, Ramseur, North Carolina, completed one week of Daily Vacation Bible School with a closing program Sunday afternoon, July 24, 1949.

Sixty-two children were enrolled in the Bible School, and 57 received certificates for faithful attendance.

Theodore R. Cox, Sunday school superintendent, was director of the Bible School. Other helpers were: Miss Patsy Brown, music; Rev. Clyde Fields, intermediate teacher; Mrs. Fred Allen, junior teacher; Mrs. Quinton Hicks, primary teacher; and Miss Frances Brown, beginner teacher.

At the Sunday school picnic held on the church grounds Saturday afternoon, a large crowd played volleyball, croquet, horseshoes, softball and ping-pong. The community recreation program, sponsored by the pastor, Rev. Clyde Fields, was part of the Bible School activity.

MRS. FRED ALLEN.

PLEASANT RIDGE AWARDED BANNER.

Sunday, July 17, was banner day for Pleasant Ridge Sunday School. Mr. S. H. Pell, President of the Western North Carolina Sunday School Convention and member of our Sunday school, presented the banner to our Sunday school for attendance at the Convention at Pleasant Hill on July 7. Mr. Theodore Cox, Superintendent, received the banner and expressed his appreciation for our interest and cooperation in having 22½ per cent of our Sunday school enrollment attend the convention.

TRENDS IN HIGHER LEARNING.

At the outbreak of World War II young men of military age throughout the length and breadth of our country were drafted for service in the armed forces of our country. One of the first qualifying acts of the government was to submit all draftees to an educational test. In the process of this act more than seven million American young men were disqualified for service in mechanized warfare. A large percentage of the remaining millions were not qualified for technical positions that were required in the successful prosecution of a war. Immediately the government caused practically every college campus in the country to be transformed into training camps for specific undertakings in connection with the war being waged. This, of course, put millions of young Americans in college. At the conclusion of the war the government enacted the GI Bill of Rights which provided educational opportunities for all veterans in proportion to the time that they had served in the armed forces of their country. This, of course, put hundreds of thousands of young men back in college. The interest of the government in education and the assistance given has popularized education in our country so that not only the GI's can go to school in large proportions but civilians have enrolled in increasing numbers. The present trend is for a continuously increasing enrollment in colleges. Another tendency is to broaden the curriculum. A half century ago, advanced education was largely for professional and cultural purposes. Today, purely cultural courses are not popular. Student are going to college, not simply to advance in cultural living but to advance in those fields in which they may make a living. The majority of the GI's are interested in Business Administration and Physical Education, both of which are comparatively new subjects in the curriculum of higher education. Business may be able to absorb the large number who are training in this field but there is a serious question that the schools, public and private, will be able to absorb the large number who are prepared and preparing to instruct in this field.

Expansions are necessary to accommodate increased numbers but there is a great danger of overexpansion. In the event that prosperity continues with an upward trend, schools will be filled to overflowing but in the event of a serious depression, many new buildings on college campuses will be left without occupancy. There is another tendency in higher education which many educators consider to be dangerous, particularly for the American way of life. Present indications are that the Federal government will enter the field of higher education in a definite way by huge appropriations. Many educators favor Federal participation in education, secondary and higher. They content that the Federal Government will give aid without assuming control. Dr. Hingate of Columbia University, in a recent book, declares that it is nonsense to think of the Federal Government giving support to education without control. He frankly states that he is not in favor of Federal support for education and not in favor of government control of our entire educational system. In my judgment, no step could be taken that would insure greater disaster to American freedom and our American way of life than for the United States Government to assume control of our educational system. These trends in higher education should be watched carefully and our combined program of education conducted accordingly.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Contributions seem to be decreasing in numbers and in amounts. Confronted with these facts the college is also confronted with the fact that the cost of operation continues to increase at a rate not realized before. We have some replacements in our faculty and at least three new additions. When you go into the field today to employ adequately trained and experienced instructors, salaries come high, higher than at any time within the past quarter of a century. Our people, churches and Sunday schools, should keep these facts in mind when the opportunity is presented to make contributions for the support of our college. I know that other things increase. We have to face the whole problem but please let's don't forget our one institution for the training of our young people for leadership in our church and communities. Let us make our contribution to the college as large and as frequent as possible.

THE PARSON GOES TO CHURCH.

By REV. F. H. PETERS, Defiance, Ohio.

"If it is at all possible for you to attend your own church, do so!" So spoke the radio voice. I had been going to church since boyhood days, and through more than a half century of that time as a minister conducting church services. Now, once again, I sit in a pew with many others about me who have come to church on this Lord's day.

But why? The radio voice had said: "You need your church, and your church needs you." But still, "Why?" Is not most of this which I see and hear a kind of religious formality, and being taken for granted by the leader and a conventionally credulous public? Do any who come here, week after week, ever bother to dig into what goes on to find what parts of it, if any, are really vital?

In the pulpit there are traditions, legends, old doctrines and interpretations, non-religious topics, and much talk—sometimes whole sermons—that have little, or nothing, to do with religion and tend to hinder rather than help true worship and consecration in Christian service. Not always, of course, but much too often because in very truth it ought never so to be. Today the service has been conducted according to program, with all spoken words good enough in their place if their place is in the church. It was like that on the previous Sunday; it will be so on the next Sunday. That is what the minister is for—to carry on in keeping with the established rules. He may, indeed, do more if he chooses. So much more as to come to Saturday night too "fagged out" from his outside of church community chores to draw enough consecrated breath to speak living words to his congregation on the next day, and

MISSION IN KUSAIE CONCLUDED.

By DOROTHY P. CUSHING

A dramatic story which began 51 years ago in Newark, New Jersey, ended July 5 at Orange, New Jersey, with the death of 86-year-old Miss Jane DuBois Baldwin, blind, feeble, but mentally alert to the end.

Jane Baldwin was one of the two Baldwin sisters whom the doctor said would never grow up. In 1891 when she and her sister were 36 and 39 respectively, they sailed 8,000 miles to be missionaries of the American Board in the South Seas among the Micronesian people.

There they lived on a tiny pin-prick in the Pacific called Kusaie for 58 years with but one visit home to New Jersey. For 29 years they were the only white folk on their island. For 17 years the nearest doctor or nurse was from 300 to 400 sea miles away.

No story of the pioneer women of the West is packed with more courage and determination than that of the Baldwin sisters. They lived through terrific typhoons, short rations, epidemics, uprisings, illness and war.

They were both teachers, not only of three R's, but of the Christian religion. In 1915 they began the translation of the Bible into Kusaian and 14 years later sent copies of this, together with Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, and an arithmetic, to Boston for the Board's archives.

The Baldwin sisters accomplished this tremendous task of printing the Bible in Kusaian on a hand press. The price Miss Jane paid before the work was completed was loss of her eyesight. But the sisters carried forward the project with Miss Elizabeth "acting as eyes."

In 1922 on the 25th anniversary of their arrival in the islands the American Board was able to send them a small power press. During World War I when sugar was scarce everywhere, the Baldwin sisters used what little they could secure, not for their tea or food, but to make rollers for the press!

In spite of living in such an isolated place as the South Seas, the Baldwin sisters somehow managed to keep in touch with news from the USA, which they always called "our beloved homeland."

It would appall the average adult to think of learning a foreign tongue after 50, but the Baldwin sisters conquered three, and taught in them as well as in Trukese. They translated the Life of Christ and Pilgrim's Progress into three tongues.

Spinsters some may have called them, but they encouraged the children to play at their home because, as Miss Jane put it, "It keeps us from being old maidish!" Every Christmas they made a batch of American doughnuts for the kids.

Once in the Islands Miss Elizabeth came down with tropical exhaustion. "Get out of these parts if you want to go on living," she was told. She didn't get out. She went to bed for two weeks and then got up and went back to work. She died at 80 in 1939 and lies buried on Kusaie.

At 75 Miss Jane still in Kusaie sat in a chair and had a visiting Japanese dentist extract eight tooth roots in one day.

A saving sense of humor never dawaunting them, she, remembering certain dental pieces that had outlived their usefulness, replied with a twinkle: "I already have several gold crowns laid up for me in my bureau drawer."

After Miss Elizabeth's death in 1939, Miss Jane was very lonely. "We were like a pair of scissors in the way we always worked together," she said wistfully. She was brought home to New Jersey in 1940 because of the international situation.

The school at Kusaie to which the Baldwin sisters gave so much is now flourishing, as are the many little coral churches and chapels which they helped plant on the islands. And once more through the blue lagoons and across the often tempestuous tropical seas sails the Morning Star VI, the latest of six historic little white missionary vessels sent out from the U. S. A. by American Congregational Christian Churches and the direct descent of the first Morning Star that left Boston Harbor, Massachusetts, in 1856.

It takes $4,000 a year to keep the Morning Star VI sailing. This goes for supplies, maintenance, repairs, skipper's salary, sails and the many things needed by any ship that works as hard and under as difficult climatic conditions as the Star.

THE GREAT COMMISSION FULFILLED.

Miss Lois O. King of Chicora, Pennsylvania, who is sailing soon for Portuguese West Africa where she will teach under the American Board, was commissioned in an impressive service Sunday morning, July 24, in the South Congregational Church of Andover, Massachusetts. The Commission was conferred by Dr. John A. Reuling of West Newton, Massachusetts, Secretary for Africa of the American Board and recently returned from a four and one-half-month tour of that country. Dr. Merlin W. Ennis of Lexington, Massachusetts, distinguished Christian educationalist for 42 years in West Central Africa, gave the Welcome to the Field.

Miss King, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. I. King of Chicora, Pennsylvania, was born in that state and educated in the local schools of Butler County. Later she went to Maryville College and following that earned her M.R.E. at the Bible Seminary in New York.

More recently Miss King has taken special work at Cornell University along the line of agricultural service in the mission field and also a course at Columbia University in Library Science.

Miss King is the niece of Mrs. C. Leslie Shaw, 606 Swede St., Norristown, Pennsylvania. If travel arrangements can be completed it is hoped that Miss King will sail for Africa around September 9.

VETERAN MISSIONARY DIES.

Rev. William Hazen, veteran Congregational missionary in India for 42 years, died suddenly on July 7, at the Palmer Memorial Hospital, Boston, Mass., at the age of 78. Mr. Hazen, who has been residing at Barton House, Walker Missionary Homes, Auburndale, Mass., since his retirement in 1942, first went to India, under the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in 1910.

A highly versatile missionary, he did many types of work, including supervision of schools and churches, and the promotion of agricultural and social service programs. During the latter years of their service in the Marathi Mission, Mr. and Mrs. Hazen developed a unique plan of work among the villages called "The Travelling Ashram." Although India is the home of the Ashram, an idea developed by such leaders as

ANN TRUITT, Editor; HELEN JACKSON, C. B. TWIDDY, Associates.

DEAR YOUNG PEOPLE:

Take note of the following—we hope it will be of great value to you. We have realized a hope that has been with us for a long time. In this issue and in five succeeding issues you will find on the Young People's Page of THE CHRISTIAN SUN a series of Vesper Services which you can use in your own societies.

These services are not Vesper Services that were copied out of books and are being passed on to you. These services were written by one of our own young people, have been used, and their inspirational value proved.

The services which you will be finding in the next few issues of THE SUN were prepared by Lois Long of Virgilina, Virginia, and they were used at the Junior High Camp held recently at Camp Crabtree. Lois spent several weeks working on these vesper services and the campers at Crabtree were greatly inspired by them.

Here's a word about the author: Lois Long of Virgilina, Virginia, is a Sophomore at Woman's College, University of North Carolina, Greensboro, North Carolina. Last fall Lois was elected Missionary Action Chairman of the North Carolina-Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship and has taken an active part in the work of the Conference Pilgrim Fellowship, doing very good work. Lois attended the Summer Conference at Elon College this summer, taking Rev. Robert Lee House's course on Worship which gave her good background in her work at the Junior High Camp. One of her jobs at this camp was the leadership of an interest group on Worship and Music and she and the members of her class had charge of the Vesper Programs each evening, using the services which you will be finding in the next issues of THE SUN.

If you find these Vesper Services helpful, and we think you will, you will probably want to cut them out and put them on file for future use.

The Young People's Page is intended for our use for such purposes as printing programs, reports of meetings, announcements, etc. If you would like to see more program materials on this page, let us know what you wish to have and we will do our best to provide it for you.

MELVA FOSTER.

THANKFULNESS FOR GOD'S LOVING CARE.

PRELUDE

CALL TO WORSHIP:

*This is my Father's world,
The birds their carols raise;
The morning light, the lily white

INVOCATION

THE LORD'S PRAYER

HYMN: "For the Beauty of the Earth" (all verses).

LITANY:

Leader—The Lord is my shepherd,
I shall not want;

Group—He maketh me lie down in green pastures;
He leadeth me beside the still waters;
He restoreth my soul.
He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.

Leader—Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death,
I will fear no evil: For thou art with me;
Thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me.

Group—Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies, Thou hast anointed my head with oil;
My cup runneth over.

All—Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life,
And I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

Leader—God cares, too, for the things of nature.
Behold the birds of the heaven, that they sow not, neither do they reap or gather into barns, and your Heavenly Father feedeth them.

Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow: they toil not, neither do they spin; yet, I say unto you that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

STORY: "The Heart of the Lily"

Harvey could see a mountain, but he could not see a bird's nest snuggled in the beech tree on the mountain side. Harvey could see the ocean and other big things, but poor Harvey could never see the little lily of the field or the bees hurrying from one flower to the other. This sounds as though he were either very nearsighted or farsighted. Not at all! Harvey was merely lazysighted. He saw the things that were easy to see and did not bother to look for the things that were almost hidden.

One day the Cubs were invited to join the Boy Scouts in a big camporee. There was to be a nature contest and each Cub must do his best because scores were to be kept. The Scout Master said, "You will find red numbers on white cards scattered throughout the woods. The Senior Patrol Leaders will pass out papers with numbers. After each number write the name of the nature object. All ready? Begin!"

Harvey worked fast and finished first, being quite proud and very sure of himself. The time came for answers to be read. Harvey was first. He began, "Number one, tree. Two, flowers. Three, stone. Four, tree. Five, grass. Six—"

But Harvey couldn't finish. Everyone was laughing at him. He stopped and let the next boy read: "One, hemlock. Two, closed gentian. Three, granite"—and on and on he went.

Harvey's eyes grew bigger and bigger. They opened so wide that the laziness fell out. Harvey began to look at things, he began to think, and began to feel. He walked all the way home and when he got there he found his sister looking at a lily through a magnifying glass. He peered over her shoulder and saw each exquisite little line going to the heart of the lily. "Whew!" whistled Harvey. "Did God plan all that? I knew he planned mountains and volcanoes and oceans, but I didn't know he had time for such little things as these designs in the heart of a lily."

HYMN: "Day Is Dying in the West" (all verses).

CLOSING PRAYER: Our Heavenly Father, thou hast given us so many beautiful things to enjoy and use that we cannot sufficiently express our gratitude. We know that thou art caring for them through the sunshine and rain. We know, O God, that thou carest for us even more. Each day we feel thy presence and know that thou art nigh. Teach us, too, to care. Amen.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

One of the things I have written about is friends coming to see us when we are not expecting them. It is such a pleasure. A few Sundays ago the Rev. and Mrs. Arnold Slater of Chattanooga, Tennessee, stopped to see us. They came to morning church services and then came to our parsonage to see our family. I knew them when Mr. Slater was minister at Holy Neck and how good it was to have a few minutes to talk. This morning I had a letter from Dr. Scott at Elon telling me about the Slater children. Here is what their mother wrote:

"I read the story of Timothy Chang's sister's illness to my children and his letter to you about his family. . . . After much discussion they each decided to give some of their savings toward a fund for relief of these people and to ease Timothy's burden. It was an effort for Mark. he was saving for a basketball glove but he decided the Chinese should come first, at this age he wants to be a minister like his father. His sister was saving for shoe skates, she, too, being older thought the Chinese should come first." Good wishes and joy to Betty and Mark Slater! I hope some of you will remember our Chinese friends, too.

I like rituals or ceremonies if they aren't too long. The other night just at sunset I was at a playground with my children. Suddenly everyone got quiet and some of the children went to the playhouse and stood in line. They were given flags. The playground director began the march, and the pianist began to play. Two boys went to the flagpole and very carefully lowered and folded the flag. The children with the small flags stood at attention while the National Anthem was played and then they all marched to the house where the flags were laid away until the morning. It was a lovely sight, blue skies darkening, rosy sun falling away and happy, free American boys and girls caring for their playground's flag. They do it every night. We should learn to take care of our flag.

So many of you have asked me or written about my boy who broke his ankle. He is well. He climbs trees, jumps and runs just as before.

PRE-SCHOOL EDUCATION.

By ANNIE L. GAETZ.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

When should a child's education begin? This is a question frequently discussed, and is one on which there is some diversity of opinion if the question refers to formal education. Real education begins with the child's consciousness of existence. Much can be taught during the years prior to entrance into kindergarten.

You may often have noticed a mother place her baby in his carriage or in his chair, clean and comfortable, but without a thing for him to play with, and, perhaps you have heard her admonish the child, "Now, do be good till I get my work done." If he is a normal, active child, the chances are that he will not be good. He will look around, in vain, for something to get hold of, to manipulate, and to examine, but these natural urges will remain unsatisfied. Now, while the child just sits, inactive, there is very little development of any kind.

A string threaded through some empty spools and tied loosely will keep a baby happy for some time. When he tires of the occupation which this presents, a kettle, and a cover for him to put on and take off, will keep him diverted. Then, a different kettle or box, with a spool inside, is likely to prove a further source of interest to him. While his mind and his fingers, are employed, Mother can work undisturbed.

When the baby is old enough to sit on the floor, he can have two boxes and some empty spools to put from one box to the other. After being shown a few times, he will learn to put all the spools into one receptacle and then into the other. When he becomes tired of that, he can be shown how to pile up the spools in various ways. There are almost endless interesting things that very small children can do with blocks. All these activities teach a child to concentrate, to create, and to use his fingers. A child with a package of colored sticks will enjoy laying them in straight line along the linoleum, and through this activity he learns to notice form and to follow a guide.

Then there are the ever-popular paper cutouts for children before they reach the kindergarten stage. One should show a child how to cut out the pictures without harming the main figures but should not call to his notice any lack of exactness. Even a five-year-old child must not be encouraged to do anything which requires fixed or prolonged attention.

Of course, baby talk to small children is always objectionable. That should be left to the baby. The best language is none too good for him. When he is struggling with a new word, if it is divided into syllables for him he will find it much easier to learn, and he will be able with this help to pronounce some quite long words. A little friend of mine had been taught to say "Mother-er." His playmate said "Mudder," and this child's relatives thought it cute. He continued to say "Mudder," at home, even after he had reached high school. One evening he took part in a high school debate, making a splendid showing, but unconsciously he used the word "Mudder" twice. As a result, he lost the honor which otherwise he would have received.

A little extra thought, planning, and watchfulness on the part of the mother, during pre-school years, may help the child to enter kindergarten and the grades with a keen mind and clever fingers. The period is all too short when Mother has the child so largely under her care, so why should she not make the best of it and give her boy or girl a good foundation on which to build in later years.

REPORT FROM ROSEMONT.

and committee members, announcements, and organizations, with a place for information for pastor and church office on the back cover were introduced at the Rosemont Congregational Christian Church, Portlock County, July 17. If you are interested in using bulletins of this kind in your church write to Spalding Publishers, 754 East 76th Street, Chicago 19, Illinois. Rosemont people are very much pleased with them.

During the months of July and August the Mid-Week Prayer Services at Rosemont are being sponsored by the Maude Hedley Bible Class under the leadership of Mrs. J. M. Carter. Even in spite of the hot weather good crowds have been attending. Says Mrs. Carter, "If you are as warm in spirit as the weather makes you warm in body, you will be there worshipping and working for the Lord."

Have You Read ?

ACROSS THE YEARS. John G. Truitt. Central Publishing Co., Richmond, Virginia.

DOWN MEMORY LANE. Tucker G. Humphries. Dixie Printing Co., Aberdeen, North Carolina.

There are a number of poetic spirits in our ministerial fellowship. Books of poems by Rev. R. A. Whitten and Dr. C. Rexford Raymond have been published. Poems by Rev. John D. Kempster, Congregational minister in Florida, have appeared in recent issues of our publication.

Dr. Truitt has written a kind of glorified diary in his Collection of Poems, for many of them suggest or have notations concerning the time and occasion. He states in the Preface: "The poems . . . were never meant for publication . . . but they began to find their way into friendly letters to shut-in members. It was thus there grew from among well-meaning friends the demand that a collection of them be put in book form." The result is a handsomely bound book of approximately 180 poems, covering a wide range of themes and occasions. These lines are the reflection of a great personality and summarize a stalwart Christian's basic philosophy of life. This volume is another reminder that prose can never record the full story of life, or interpret its deeper meaning. The ampler significance of life is found in poetry. This publication should find, therefore, a wide circulation among Dr. Truitt's friends in the Southern Convention.

Rev. Tucker G. Humphries, who has recently gone from Southern Pines to Reidsville, is the author of a collection of poems, experiences and stories. These grew out of a wide and interesting background as a special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Director of Young People's work in a St. Louis church, and as assistant to the curator in the Washington Cathedral, before going to the Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines. A sample from this interesting publication is found on our back page.

Copies may be secured directly from the authors.

SONGS FROM THE LAND OF DAWN.

Toyohiko Kagawa and other Japanese poets. Friendship Press. $2.

"Out of chaos comes music. Out of the darkness of a bereaved land comes the light of a shining hope." This is the succinct and reliable statement of the publisher. As one reads these poignant poems he realizes anew how true it is that God has not left himself without witness in any generation, even our own.

Privileged Americans can sit at the feet of this great Christian and learn much. Kagawa writes:

I like the simpler life;
I'm sixty,
But I've never had
A best suit yet;
Where there is need
The doctor close at hand
Has one that I can get.

There is convenience
In the simple life;
I find it good,
And practice commonness
In clothing, home and food.
It is a pleasure
Not to be burdened
With too much of treasure!

Other Japanese poets are represented in this collection.

EVERY DAY RELIGION. Don Delano Tullis. Rodeheaver, Hall-Mack Co., Winona Lake, Indiana. $1.

Many messages fall flat because they are not given the wings of song. The singing preacher or singing evangelist will find in this publication a pattern for endless study and development.

These thirty-tone messages by Dr. Tullis were syndicated originally through the North American Newspaper Alliance. The book serves admirably as a guide for daily devotions or source book for sermonic illustrations.

NEW MINISTERS is a research bulletin of 32 pages written by Ralph A. Felton. It is a report of a study of 1,978 ministerial students to determine the factors which influence men to enter the ministry. These men came from all of the 48 states, they represented 20 denominations and were contacted in 57 theological seminaries and church-related colleges.

The bulletin discusses the people and the events that influenced these young men to enter the ministry. It classifies the reasons they gave for choosing this profession. Retarding factors or the things that tend to keep young men out of the ministry are also given. The age of decision, the occupation of the fathers, the type of communities that produce ministers, and the types of fields desired are also discussed.

The bulletin was prepared to help pastors, parents and teachers in recruiting new ministers. It may be ordered from The Rural Church Department, Drew Seminary, Madison, New Jersey. The price is 15 cents per copy or 10 cents for $1.

Other practical and helpful publications of the Rural Church Department in Drew Seminary are:

Men Working—A study of voluntary labor gifts in 341 churches located in 44 states and affiliated with 27 denominations. The major emphasis is upon men's work. Discusses 60 different kinds of work laymen are now doing in their churches. Analyzes the harmful effects of some money-raising projects. 72 pages, 58 photographs. One copy, 30c; four copies, $1.

The Home of the Rural Pastor—A study of 1,171 parsonages in 47 states and 12 denominations. Contains suggestions for improving parsonages, also floor plans for new ones. Seventy photographs. 112 pages. One copy, 40c; 3 copies, $1.

The Lord's Acre—A study of 151 churches using the Lord's Acre Plan. 34 pages. One copy, 15c; 8 copies, $1.

Festival Days.

Festival days had a large part in the life of the Hebrew people. There was, for instance the Feast of the Passover, perhaps the greatest festival day in the Hebrew calendar, the time when the Passover lamb was sacrificed and when the priest made the sacrifice for the nation. It was primarily a religious festival and was observed as such. Then there was the Feast of Pentecost, so named because it came fifty days after the Feast of the Passover, and often called the "Feast of Weeks." It was a kind of "Harvest Home Festival," and marked the completion of the barley harvest. The day was observed as a Sabbath day, all labor was suspended, and the people appeared before Jehovah to express their gratitude. It was a festival of good cheer and a day of joy. The central feature of the day was the presentation of two loaves of leavened, salted bread unto the Lord. Freewill offerings were made unto the Lord, and liberality shown to the Levites, widows, orphans and strangers. It might be likened to our Thanksgiving Day. It was on Pentecost, it will be remembered, that the Holy Spirit came, and in a sense the Church was born. And finally there was the Feast of Tabernacles which came after the harvest season was over, and which was a sort of camping-out time in memory of the period when the Hebrews were wandering in the wilderness. The people lived in booths or rough shelters. It was a general harvest festival, and perhaps it was more like unto our Thanksgiving Day than the Feast of Pentecost, although it lasted for a week. Pentecost was associated with the barley harvest, the Feast of Weeks with the wheat harvest. All three festivals were of agricultural significance and each of them was an expression of the spirit of thanksgiving and gratitude of the people. They were holidays but they were also holidays—there was special religious significance attached to each one.

Festival Songs.

It is not to be supposed that the songs for these holidays were confined to the few listed in today's lesson, and referred to as "festival songs." These happy people sang other songs during these joyful days. But the songs or Psalms listed in today's lesson were used especially in connection with these national festivals and had rich meaning for the occasions. For instance Psalm 105 is especially appropriate for a national festival or holiday and holyday, for it sets forth in poetic form God's gracious dealings with his chosen people. It calls to mind the marvelous works which He had done, and the sure leadership which He had given his people. It recounts in stirring language how He delivered them from the land of bondage by signs and wonders, and how after He had delivered them from the land of Egypt, He provided for them during the long wanderings in the wilderness, and how at long last, He brought them into the land which He had promised, through Abraham his servant, to give to them. A thoughtful, or for that matter a thoughtless Hebrew could hardly read or sing this song without feeling a deep sense of gratitude for the rich blessings and the unfailing goodness of God. Or could he? How many of us sing America or God bless America without feeling what we sing?

Psalm 106 is a companion song to Psalm 105. But whereas the latter song referred to God's providence and provision, Psalm 106 recounts in more or less detail the apostasy and the ingratitude of the people. In spite of the well-attested generosity and goodness of God the people all too soon forget. In fact some of them never even recognized Jehovah as the source of all their blessings. And had it not been for the fact that Moses stood in the breach, they might have been destroyed anyway. But then as now, God was full of mercy and compassion and long-suffering, and heard them in their distress and remembered them for the sake of his covenant. Thus it is that the Psalm ends with the prayer that the people may not forget, and with a call to praise and thanksgiving. Here again is a song suitable to be sung and read on their national holidays, one that would remind them of the goodness of God and that would remind them likewise of their dependence on God. With these men of old we might well pray, "Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet, lest we forget, lest we forget."

Psalm 107 has a recurring refrain, "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!" which comes at stated places in the song after an account of Jehovah's provision for and deliverance of his people. It may be that a singer or a group of singers may have chanted the body of the song, and then the multitude would join in this chorus. That would make it very effective. Like the preceding songs it exalts Jehovah's relation to and care for Israel. But there is a universal element in these songs, Jehovah's sovereignty over all nations is expressed and the praise of Jehovah is invited.

Today's lesson also includes eight other Psalms or songs, some longer than others, but one the shortest song in the Bible and thereby the shortest chapter in the Bible, Psalm 117 which contains just two verses. These Psalms are known as "The Hallel" which is the Hebrew word for "praise" because they are predominantly just that, songs of praise. If they were listed by titles in our hymnals they would have such titles as "Praise God for His Goodness (Psalm 111), "The Prosperity of Him Who Fears the Lord" (Psalm 112), "Praise God for Delivering the Humble" (Psalm 113), "God's Deliverance of Israel from Egypt" (Psalm 114), "Heathen Idols Contrasted With the Living God" (Psalm 115), "Thanksgiving for Deliverance from Death" (Psalm 116), "A Psalm of Praise" (Psalm 117), and "Thanksgiving for God's Goodness" (Psalm 118). There is a diversity of title and subject matter, but there is a common core of praise and thanksgiving running through all these Psalms. They emphasize a factor that is basic to character at its best, the spirit of thanksgiving and praise, and a factor that must be preserved in our national culture, a recognition of God's goodness to us as individuals and as a nation, and a sense of our dependence upon him.

Even a casual reading of American history will show the hand of God in it even as He was in Hebrew history. We are indeed a "chosen nation" in the sense that through us God can reveal and fulfil his will and purpose ers, wear mother's and dad's shoes and express rebellion in all sorts of ways.

Other painful comparisons are made by every child—the little boy—the little girl—compares himself with his father or mother and wonders what's wrong with himself. Such feelings of inferiority are common to nearly all children. They are based, to be sure, upon misconceptions and ignorance but the emotional response is there and unless properly treated may be a blight throughout life.

One of the most dastardly things we parents do is to make unfavorable comparisons, such as, "Sam is not as bright as his sister," or "George is unusually awkward and clumsy at his age," or "Daughter, it's a good thing you're smart in your studies because you certainly are one of the homeliest children I've ever seen"—"John, your teeth are so ugly that they make you look terrible"—"There's no use in paying out any more for music lessons, you haven't got a voice." Such comments are deadly. They often crush a child's hope and his efforts at self-respect are completely devastated, they rarely stimulate, because the authority of their sources makes them incontrovertible.

The child grows into a man, physically that is to say, but often many of his attitudes and mental reactions are still those of the child, and he is subject to much unhappiness because of deeply ingrained feelings of inferiority.

These feelings of inferiority can be absolutely destructive, they can disturb the whole life of the individual they can reduce his ability for accomplishment, they can trammel his senses, can make him vicious and a fairly undesirable character.

A man must recognize his abilities for what they are and then proceed to utilize them. If he does this there is no reason whatsoever for his having feelings of inferiority toward others, particularly those who have more innate ability than he does, and who steadfastly refuse to utilize or develop their capacity.

I've given you one example from the New Testament of a man who permitted his feelings of inferiority to go unscotched. I would like to give you another, of a man who acted very much the opposite. Timothy, the young and trusted companion of Paul, was a native of Listra, or possibly of Derby, the son of a Greek father and a mother who was a Jewess. The son of this mixed marriage received a name which was fairly common in Greek but which would also be acceptable to the Jews. He was trained by his mother in the Old Testament scriptures. But in many respects this young man was not fitted for the task, particularly of preaching to the Jews, as was Paul's first line of attack, for they would be affected by the presence of one who was half-Jew by birth. Half-breeds were no more popular then than now.

Then, too, Timothy, in comparison with Paul was a man of small capacity mentally and emotionally. He was much younger than Paul. Paul's formal education had been such that the ordinary young man could never hope to receive; and yet this boy Timothy became the trusted confidant of Paul. He eventually became a representative of Paul and was left in charge of the church of Ephesus. An indication of how Timothy might have reacted if he had so desired is given in the second letter which Paul wrote to him after the Apostle had been re-arrested and carried to Rome. He begged Timothy not to be ashamed of the Gospel. Now Timothy was not ashamed of the Gospel and he was encouraged to become in his small way an imitator of Paul and Christ; one whom Paul was happy to call his son.

If any man had reason to develop an attitude of inferiority it was Charles William Eliot, the late president of Harvard University. Dr. Eliot had a horrible birthmark on his face, a mark which made him ugly in the sight of others, and people would turn and gaze at him as he walked along the street. There was a man who had reason to hide himself, a man who might easily have crawled into a shell away from others, but instead of escaping from human contact he conquered his feelings and in 1853 was graduated from Harvard, became a successful tutor; assistant professor of mathematics and chemistry; professor of analytical chemistry at Massachusetts Institute of Technology; and in 1869 was elected president of Harvard University, and until the age of ninety-two, President Eliot was a great leader in the field of education.

You can let a feeling of inferiority get you down, or you can get it down. You can let it stifle you or stimulate you.

Jesus once said to a man sick of palsy, "Take up your bed and walk." He might just as easily have said to the man, "Look here fellow, have faith in the dignity of yourself. As long as you lie there you are doing an injustice to the God who created you. So, for God's sake, and man's sake, forget your self-pity and stand up." And the man stood up and re-entered life.

MISSIONS.

Gandhi and copied by Christians like E. Stanley Jones, it was difficult for Indian villagers to travel for long distances in order to attend such Ashrams. So the Hazens brought the Ashrams to them. With a group of Indian Christians, including a minister, a doctor, a nurse and several teachers, they set out with their food and equipment and camped in village after village conducting Christian services, holding clinics, classes for illiterates and discussion groups on health, agriculture and child care. At the heart of the Ashram was the study of the Bible and the story of the life of Christ.

Mr. Hazen was a scholar who had made a special study of the history of Buddhism and had done considerable research among the relics of Buddha in India.

Born in Jericho, Vermont, Mr. Hazen was ordained to the Congregational ministry in Sherburne, Vermont, where he preached for two summers. Educated at the University of Vermont, Class of 1893, Hartford Theological Seminary, Class of 1897, he also studied for a year at Yale Divinity School.

In 1905 Mr. Hazen met and married Miss Florence E. Hartt in Ahmednager where she was serving as an unmarried missionary. During their joint service they worked in Sholapur, Bombay, Satara and Rahuri.

among modern nations. He guided and protected our nation in its early and formative days. He raised up great leaders in times of national crises. He has richly blessed us in many, many ways. He has made us great to the end that we may be the servant of all. He has been long-suffering with us in our forgetfulness of Him. Let every national holiday or festival remind us of his goodness and of his grace, and beget within us a deeper sense of gratitude and of consecration to our nation's welfare and to his will.

The Orphanage

A LOOK AT THE ORPHANAGE.

The Orphanage campus resounds with "Hello, Dr. Truitt," and "Hi, Dr. Truitt," and little boys and girls come running up. Does it do something to the inside of a fellow? Well, I say it does. Messrs. Less Wagner and Garner Hilliard, the matrons, Mrs. Perry the secretary, the bigger boys and girls, the two fine colored men—and Mr. V. R. Holt—everyone has done just the kind of things to make us glad to get to work.

Did I say work? I used the exactly right word. Hay, acres of alfalfa, has been placed in the big barn since I arrived, and since it has been so very hot (and since I do not take over until Monday and then not the hay fields!) I only looked on. But here there is work. Every child can ask a few questions. All have to be answered by somebody. Every day each one needs some advice, counsel, or help. It is a home you know for twenty-four hours every day. But it is a jolly fine one. I visited three excellent playhouses made right under the big trees by the dearest little "mothers" of a few simple pieces of cardboard and broken glass. True you had the trees for decorations and the sky for a roof, but you had to "knock" at the door and it did not make any difference how big you were you did not just step over the imaginary walls! The talk was sweet and their eyes sparkled (perhaps mine were a bit damp but when necessary I looked up at the high ceiling).

There are "men" here, too. What a fine job two of them were doing scrubbing with heavy, big brushes, and a stream of water from a hose, the dairy. It was the wash-down and they knew how. Others just as industriously were helping to handle great loads of baled hay. This hot spell is a test—a real test—for both adults and children but all are making the grade. Let me add this line to say that V. R. Holt, interim superintendent, has done a marvelous job and he along with Mrs. Iris Holt McEwen and others deserve the thanks of us all.

In Memoriam

ROGERS.

On Tuesday, May 17th 1949, death removed from our midst Mrs. Loulie Byrd Rogers.

Although she was eighty-six years old, she was very much alert. She loved people and it was a real pleasure to be in her company.

We the members of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church offer the following resolutions:

1. That we realize God doeth all things well and that our loss is her gain.
2. That we keep in lasting remembrance the high Christian standards and high ideals of service, kindness and joyfulness which were in her daily living.
3. That we extend our deepest sympathy to her family and commend them to the great Comforter who said, "Let not your hearts be troubled."
4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be entered on the records of our society and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Mrs. MYRTLE B. ROGERS,
Mrs. HARRY P. TAYLOR,
Mrs. W H. YATES.

MILLER.

WHEREAS our Heavenly Father has seen fit to take unto Himself our beloved friend and brother, Perry D. Miller, therefore be it resolved:

- 1 That the Fidelis Class, in striking from its earthly roll the first name of a member to be transferred to that eternal roll, has sustained a great loss.
2. That we deeply miss his presence among us, his genial personality, friendliness and fine spirit of cooperation in any undertaking of his Sunday School Class.
3. That our Church has lost a loyal member.
4. That we bow in humble submission to the wisdom of a loving Heavenly Father, knowing that "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord."
5. That each member of the class make his own personal commitment that Perry's name shall be but the beginning of a new Fidelis Class roll in that City where sorrow is not known; looking forward to that day when there shall be an unbroken circle and a reunion that shall not end, in the Father's house.

Mrs. ROBERT A. WHITTEN, LUCILLE H. TRENARY,
CATHERINE E. CARTER.

WAMPLER.

William C. Wampler, born March 12, 1871, near Harrisonburg, Virginia passed away June 21, 1949, aged 78 years, 3 months and 9 days.

Brother Wampler united with the Antioch Christian Church near Harrisonburg, Virginia many years ago and was a most active and loyal member as long as his health permitted. Only a few years ago declining health forced him to retire from active duty. He served as deacon for nearly 35 years and as teacher of the Adult Bible Class for 40 years.

With seemingly inexhaustible energy, Bro Wampler took a leading part in all the activities of the church, which, attracted his interest from early boy-hood, and being an advocate of righteous living and possessing a genial disposition and an understanding of others, he was prominent in the affairs of the church.

He also served as vice-president in the Valley Conference and presided over one session of the Conference.

He leaves his wife and six children besides a host of friends to mourn his passing. Funeral services were conducted at the Antioch Church by the Rev. John F. Locke of the Brethern Church, a close friend of the deceased, assisted by the Rev. L. C. Dickerson of the Harrisonburg Baptist Church. Interment was in the church cemetery.

MODERN CRUSADERS AND THE GOSPEL.

are a bit alien to the Protestant. Yet, they have within them a deep meaning. The journey of the pilgrim, of old, exposed him to serious dangers along the way, even as half of the Pilgrims died in the first winter at Plymouth Colony.

In danger and death the pilgrim is brought close to the judgment and the grace of God. And the descendants make their journeys to the sacred sites to re-live, in spirit, the experiences of divine grace. They seek an old world where is hidden a wealth of history. Perhaps we might say that, because we do not, as Protestants, see the world as religious pilgrims, God has broken us away from our homes to push our men out upon the highways of life, that they might learn anew that which their fathers had seen and heard and lived.

There is in Cloister Notgottes a series of pictures that portray the legend of the Knight of Ruedesheim, as he on his crusade into the Holy Land was made a prisoner of the Moslems, and that he on his miraculous delivery to his home had built this Cloister in gratitude to God. This story contains the entire meaning of the crusades and the pilgrimages.

From the spirit of the pilgrimages arises a memory of the early times when mankind was fugitive and vagabond upon the earth, void of hope, without faith; in that time of great despair that we call the migrations of the nations, into which came the message of the Christ.

The Holy Land could not be saved. But a new spirit came over the men of the crusades. And unto this spirit Luther gave a direction. And from that movement arose the new Europe. Is it too much to say that in this spirit lies the union of the Old World and the New, just today? and that America, for that reason, now looks Eastward?

Let this be the mission of America: to build an altar of faith and prayer between the two worlds, whence would flow a stream of the peace of the spirit; where politics would be spiritualized. Thus was transformed long ago, here in Germany, the old culture of primitive men into a Christian people. In 933 there were yet the Huns, the terror of Europe, and a few centuries later it had become the country of King Stephan, the home of St. Elizabeth.

If America could thus reach the heights and the depths of prayer, who knows but that therein she would be granted the beginning of a new era with an escape from the shoals of the atomic bomb. The world needs a country that will create peace, the peace that Christ can give. Perhaps just there is the seat of wisdom. Europe must not be a colonial project. It should be a Holy Land, whose home is in the hearts of men, a treasury of creative freedom. It should be not a bone of contention between East and West, but a land of peace, a land of the meeting of brethren, where Americans and Russians would be freed from their mutual fears. It should be the country of the pilgrimages of the hearts of the nations. June 30, 1949.

THE PARSON GOES TO CHURCH.

cause his hearers to wonder what point, if any, he is trying to make.

Isolated case? No, it is more like the common order in many churches of the country, with the majority of attendants seemingly content to have it so.

But other things are here in this church service—inspiring music, open Bible, call to prayer, influence of the house of God, and urgings to unite hearts and hands to promote the kingdom of God in terms of brotherhood and peace.

The church ideally perfect? No, not that. Probably in its human aspects it never can be so. Nevertheless, the greatest force for righteousness in the world, and, in spite of its shortcomings, ever aiming to point the Christian Way to sinful, confused mankind, and making clear to me that I do need the church and the church needs me.

All of this and more, this parson sees and hears on Sunday while sitting in a pew.

The Story of A Dandelion

By REV. TUCKER G. HUMPHRIES

Many years ago, more years perhaps than most of us like to remember, my little sister and my little brother went out to a neighbor's yard to play. The season was summer and the day was warm and beautiful. As my sister and brother joined their little playmates they immediately decided to play store. In order to play store they must have some mud pies to "sell." In order to have good mud pies, they would have to bake them. In order to bake them they must have a fire. So in a little toy cookstove, they lighted a fire. And before they realized their danger, my little sister, Margaret, was in flames. She was burnt terribly; she was burnt completely. For as she was wrapped in a blanket and placed in an ambulance, her shoes were all that was left of her clothing.

That night as my family gathered at her bedside in George Washington Hospital, God called Margaret home. That morning at ten she had been in the fulness of life. A beautiful child, full of enthusiasm and interest and life. That night at ten, she was dead.

Our friends were quite as heart-broken as we were, for Margaret was known to them all as a lovely and loveable child. And these many friends were kind and generous in their expressions of sympathy. The living rooms of our home were filled with beautiful floral tributes. Early on the morning of the funeral service, our door bell was rung in a timid sort of way. And when someone answered this ring, a little ten- or twelve-year-old Negro girl was there. she asked to see my mother. When mother came, this Negro girl said, "I hears Miss Margaret is dead."

"You're right, child," mother answered. "Margaret is dead. Did you know her?"

"Oh, yes, Mrs. Humphries," the child answered. "I knew her well." "See these shoes I has on? She gave them to me. See this dress I'm wearing? She gave me this. See these hair ribbons on my pig tails? She gave them to me. I loved Miss Margaret. When I heard that she was dead, I came to tell you I was sorry and I came to bring some flowers."

I know there was a tear in my mother's eyes at this pathetic expression of love. I know there were many more as this little girl drew her hand from behind her and gave my mother her expression of sympathy—two lovely dandelions.

So the little pickaninny said "good-bye," and with tears in her eyes, turned away and disappeared out of our lives forever. We do not even know her name. But as our family wander down Memory Lane we always shall remember her. Why? Well, the hours ticked by and the time for the funeral service arrived. Our home was filled to an overflow with friends and the flowers they had sent. All was in order as our pastor read the burial service and pronounced the benediction, committing the soul of a little girl to God. And then many stopped at the open casket on their way out. If they had looked closely, they could have seen two lovely dandelions, now somewhat withered, resting in the hands of another flower, a little girl, who, too, was somewhat withered, but whose soul had gone home to God.

Do you wonder why we pause at the dandelion for just a moment as we wander down Memory Lane?

YOUR NEXT PASTOR

By HAROLD W. HEWITT

Recently a pastor who was leaving for a new appointment stood up before his people and said: "And now it is my privilege to present to you your next pastor.

"He is, first of all, a man of God. Fully aware of all that it means, he has given himself to the Christian ministry; and he comes to you as a consecrated leader. His whole family will work among you gladly and in quiet devotion to duty they will live among you to the glory of God.

"Your next pastor comes trained in the problems of church leadership. He believes that you will have confidence in him, that his training has qualified him to be your pastor.

"Of course, he does not come as a saint incapable of making mistakes. He knows he will err occasionally; he knows that there will not be agreement in every detail between him and every last member of the church. But he knows that this is a Christian church and, as such, there will be the spirit of good will and forgiveness that will win a victory over any difficulty.

"Your next pastor is a kindly disposed, well-meaning person. He will burn himself out for the Kingdom of God if you let him.

"His name? I do not know his name. But what does it matter? The things just said would refer to anyone who comes here as your pastor.

"Your next pastor will come to you as a stranger. With everything new, the first month will be desperately lonely. You will receive him with open minds and hearts, of course. And you will throw open the doors of your homes to dinner invitations in such numbers that he will not have time to be lonely. By your attitude you will say to him, 'You are my pastor. There have been others here whom we have loved and admired, but they are gone. You are here now, and we are behind you 100 per cent.'

"Our relationship to the church does not depend upon the person who is our pastor; it depends upon our loyalty to Christ. To him we will be true no matter who may be our pastor. You are now, and, for the cause of Christ, we will walk with you; we will serve with you. As Christians, we can do no other!

"If you confront your pastor with that spirit, nothing can defeat the advance for Christ in this church. If you do not confront your pastor with that spirit, he is already defeated."—Christian Advocate.

News Flashes

Dr. Luther B. Grice supplied the pulpit in our Richmond Church last Sunday.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference is in session on Wednesday and Thursday of this week. Rev. R. A. Whitten is president.

No copy has been received this week for the Elon College page. There is also no news from the Convention Office. Possibly vacations are to blame.

Robert Woodruff, pastor of Ingram and Pleasant Grove Churches, near Halifax, Virginia, is to be the guest speaker at the Winston-Salem Church the morning of August 28.

Rev. G. H. Veazey writes that a new Congregational Christian Church is being organized and built at Linville, La. Mr. Veazey has been conducting open air services at night and assisting as a carpenter during the day. Prospects are good and more details will be forthcoming later.

The Massanetta Springs Bible Conference will begin the first of next week. There is usually a representative group from the Congregational Christian Church present. If you are able to go for either the whole conference or for one week, it will be time well spent, especially by ministers.

WANTED A MORE WIDELY OBSERVED LAYMAN'S SUNDAY.

Laymen and church organizations give promise of making Laymen's Sunday on October 16, 1949, more widely observed than ever before, says John H. Ryder, the National Director of Laymen's Sunday.

Mr. Ryder, who is also a director of the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World, says this increased support shows the growing awareness of Elton Trueblood's statement that "the spiritual awakening now overdue will come by and through laymen and will be completely identified with the common things of daily life."

Many church councils and ministerial associations throughout the country have endorsed the observance this year on the theme: "Am I my brother's keeper?" The Right Reverend Charles Gilbert, the Episcopal

Bishop of the New York Diocese says: "It should enlist the cooperation and prayers of all who are mindful of the urgent need of building Christian principles into the life of the sorely troubled world in which we are now living."

Although conflicts in dates prevent some denominations from taking part on the third Sunday in October, Edwin W. Parsons, the executive secretary of the National Council of Northern Baptist Men, says: "It is to be hoped that churches of all denominations will eventually observe the same Sunday which has already secured wide-spread recognition in North America."

Some 30,000 laymen took part in Laymen's Sunday in 1948 and replies have come in from laymen in 39 states that they will have a layman's service this year, the eighth in which the lay Sunday has been sponsored by the Laymen's Movement.

Abroad, churches in both Germany and Japan will also have laymen taking over the service on October 16. This is the first time that the day will be observed by Japanese churches.

The publication of the United States Department of Commerce describes the purpose of Laymen's Sunday as: "To get as many churches as possible to request laymen to take over the morning service to give their ideas of the practicality of Christianity as a way of life to tell of the successes in trying it, their difficulties and failures, and their hopes for the future."

SOUTHERN CONVENTION LAYMEN ARE ASKED TO OBSERVE LAYMAN'S SUNDAY.

The Laymen's Committee of the Southern Convention of the Congregational Christian Churches has decided to cooperate with the Layman's Movement (national organization) in observing October 16, 1949 as "Layman's Sunday." Last year about thirty-five Congregational Christian Churches used laymen to conduct services on the third Sunday of October in observing Layman's Sunday. It is expected that more churches in the Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches will use laymen to conduct the services this year.

HOPEWELL CHURCH HAS BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Vacation Bible School at our Hopewell Church has completed its first week and the Rev. D. D. Nash, pastor, reported that it is proving to be an outstanding success.

Through the efficient handling of the school by William Tolley, of North Carolina, a wide variety of activities is being carried out under the direction of local teachers.

This is the first year that the Hopewell Church has conducted a Bible School. Mr. Nash states that with another week of the school to go, he is certain that there will be additional children joining this week.

Beginners, among their various workshop activities, made scrap book marks and did memory work as well as listen to stories.

Scrapbooks were started in the Primary Department and the group drew and colored their creations. They also heard stories and studied the structure of the Bible and did memory work.

Phases in the life of Christ are being taught in the Junior Department while scrap books, memory work and construction work are all part of their curriculum.

In the Intermediate group, scrap books are being made and a play for commencement was written.

Boys have begun to build bird houses and benches and expect to complete them by the end of the coming week.

MONEY IN ABUNDANCE.

We, who strive to collect money for churches and welfare agencies with too little results, are numskulls working on the wrong road. The greatest joy to a person is returning to the Lord a part of the money which the Lord has given him.

Too many churches and welfare agencies have followed the line of least resistance by "over-begging" the willing givers. The organizers of many money raising campaigns are in too big a hurry, or have never found the "know how."

There are powerful "know how" agencies and their facilities should be used to a greater extent. They have instructions and blueprints for success, which will come by following the plans of an efficient "Every Member Canvass," the Community Chests and Councils, and other sponsoring agencies.

Moreover, their "know how" methods will do much to educate and reach

FIRST TV RELIGIOUS NEWS PROGRAM LAUNCHED.

By HAROLD J. QUIGLEY, Chairman, Radio Committee, Troy Council of Churches, Troy, New York.

The first religious news program, "Thru the Eyes of Religion," was started the beginning of May over WRGB, Schenectady, New York. The pioneering effort represents the co-operation of General Electric's TV station, Religious News Service, and the Tri-City Protestant Radio Commission, of which the Federation of Churches of Christ of Albany and Vicinity, The Schenectady County Council of Churches, and the Troy Area Council of Churches, are members.

Two Troy clergymen are commentators for the program: the Rev. Richard Cummings, First Baptist Church, and the Rev. Harold Quigley, minister of the Ninth Presbyterian Church. Both have been broadcasting regularly on Troy's WTRY station, "Religion Views the News."

The program opens with a one-minute twenty-second movie of the First Baptist Church of Troy, showing the high tower, people going into the church, and the traffic going by. The captions, the name of the program, the commentators, the photos by Religious News Service, "News of Interest to Protestants, Catholics and Jews," are shown successively, on a church bulletin board.

On the June 10 program, the station supplied a large map of Europe, showing the division of the "Iron Curtain." Mr. Cummings discussed for two minutes the story of the churches in the Soviet orbit. Pictures of Roman Catholic Archbishop Joseph Deran of Prague, Czechoslovakia, and Bishop Otto Dibelius, head of the Evangelical Church in Germany (EKID), were included. Both have severely criticized the Communist regime.

Featured next was a story on the Quakers' celebrating a year's anniversary of trying to bring about friendly relations between the United States and Russia. A picture of the Quakers receiving the Nobel prize in 1947 was used with the commentary.

Next followed a story on the investigation of the Atomic Energy Commission. Commentary ran as follows: "A new term is being used widely these days to describe the low punches being thrown in the fight for power in Washington, D. C. It is 'character assassination.' Abraham Lincoln was assassinated by a gun. The new device is the razor sharp word that cuts the heart of the responsible public servant. Forrestal was a recent victim. The new target is David Lilienthal."

To lighten up the program at this point, a picture was introduced showing people going to church in overalls. The pastor in Meridian, Mississippi, had said, "We don't want people to stay away from church for the lack of new clothes."

Since Mr. Cummings had attended the Northern Baptist Convention in San Francisco the week before, Mr. Quigley interviewed him regarding highlights of the meeting. The proposed merger of the Baptists and the Disciples of Christ was referred to as a "flirtation," and the five-year plan to bring it to a successful conclusion as a "full-blown courtship."

A "woman's page" told of the appointments of women to high positions in the Church. It was illustrated with pictures of the ordination of Mrs. Victoria Booth Demarest as a minister of the Congregational Christian Churches, and of Mrs. Colewell, newly-elected president of the Northern Baptist Convention. Mrs. Demarest is the granddaughter of General William Booth, founder of The Salvation Army. The pay-off line was "The Moslems used to say that the women will make heaven on the coat tails of their husbands. News this week gives the lie to that saying."

The problem of the internationalization of Jerusalem, next treated, was illustrated by pictures showing the damage to some of the shrines from the recent conflict, and a map indicating the divisions of the city.

To illustrate the problem of "separation of Church and State" a remarkable picture was shown of a nun, Sister Mary Josella, teaching school

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTIONS

The average person thinks of a theological institution as something far removed from his own sphere of influence. He is vaguely conscious of the fact that there are such things as theological seminaries, but they are for ministers and for ministers only and therefore may be dismissed from further attention.

Yes, there are theological seminaries for ministers, and there are some very good ones in America. Our people should know something of the character of these institutions, their denominational background or affiliation, and especially their theological presuppositions. Those engaged in the gentle art of selecting and calling a minister are distinctly handicapped if they lack this knowledge. Some churches, to their sorrow, have learned this lesson too late.

But theological institutions are not limited to ministers. Two of our foremost are the home and the Sunday School. Here many people imbibe their basic theology. Parents are theologians and theological instructors, inescapably so. Children get their first theological instruction at home. Some of it is rather crude, but it is theology nonetheless. Since religion is both taught and caught, parents cannot evade their theological responsibility. Yes, the home is our primary theological institution, with the world's largest enrollment.

Sunday School officers and teachers are theologians. What a responsibility and opportunity! Every lesson and every prayer has theological implications—crude or refined, liberal or conservative, true or erroneous. Every Sunday School building is a theological institution. This being true, we should see that adequate provision is made for theological instruction, that current theological books are available and read. Every lesson should be prepared and taught in the sobering realization that children are theological students. Given an adequate foundation, they should mature in their theological thinking.

Dr. Elton Trueblood had this to say in a sermon before the Chicago Sunday Evening Club: "We are living in a very great day so far as theology is concerned. As I mention names you will recognize that we have a galaxy similar to that of 1649. Among those who are today living or just recently dead are the following: William Temple, Nicholas Berdyav, John Baillie, Karl Barth, Emil Brunner, Albert Schweitzer and Reinhold Niebuhr." (This writer would add the name of Trueblood to this imposing list, for there is no more astute analyst of Christendom today than Elton Trueblood.)

Then Trueblood went on to say: "There has not been for a hundred years, so far as I know, a set of men of greater fidelity, more masculine minds, able to wrestle with the problems of our time from the Christian point of view. This means that the people who say that 'I cannot believe in the Christian religion; that old poppycock doesn't mean anything to me,' are out of date. They are fighting the battles of their childhood; they are judging the Christian faith by some poor little church in their hometown, they do not know what is going on because today we have men who can interpret the Christian faith in terms so strong, so honest and so intelligent that the humblest believer should have no fear. There is no use of worrying today about the old problems of science and religion or of prayer and the natural law. These problems have been threshed out so well that genuine solutions are clear to people who have the courage and industry to attain them. The great theologians belong to all of us. They are read by all of us."

This, stop to think of it, is a theological era. Thank God therefore for all our theologians and theological institutions. Theologians all, let us rejoice in our heritage and discharge our responsibility to posterity.

THE REVERIE OF A DOWNTOWN CHURCH

I am a downtown church. Some people rather pity me, for they think I am destined to grow weak and die. But they do not know me, or they would know better.

I have an honorable history. I was here a century ago, and I may still be here a century hence. Long after neighborhoods have changed, and good neighborhoods have deteriorated, I will continue to be strong.

For I am in the heart of the city, and my ministry is not to a section of the town, but to the entire city, for I reach out in every direction. My ministry touches every neighborhood, and it extends to all classes.

I am not provincial in my outlook. In me, the rich and the poor mingle in the fellowship of worship. Through me the poor are enobled and enriched, and the rich are made generous and gentle.

I live to serve. I exist for others. This may be the reason why I continue to keep my strength through the years.

It is sometimes said that I am not convenient to attend. But whoever said that religion is to be a thing of convenience? If pilgrims of Israel could travel the length of Palestine afoot to attend the special temple services at Jerusalem, surely the twenty minutes it requires to come to the heart of the city is not too much.

I leave my future to you, for my place in the city depends upon your loyalty. I believe that I can count on you. (Author Unknown.)—From bulletin of The Little Church Around the Corner, New York, N. Y.

World Missionary Task of the Churches

By DR. J. H. OLDHAM

You have heard during the past year a good deal about the World Council of Churches. Less prominence has been given to the work of the International Missionary Council, which came into existence more than a quarter of a century before the World Council of Churches, and by its example provided the main stimulus to later developments in international Christian cooperation. Let us take a look at the position of Christianity in the world as a whole.

The Drama of Christian Missions.

The spread of Christianity to almost every country in the world during the past hundred and fifty years has been one of the outstanding events of modern history. The propagation of the Christian faith in non-Christian lands has for the most part engaged the interest of only a minority of the members of Christian Churches. It was for long an object of derision to many both inside and outside the church. The picture of Mrs. Jellyby and the jibes of Sydney Smith were the expression of an attitude that was widespread. In spite of this, missionary service often made its appeal to the ablest of the younger Christian generation, and the ranks of missionaries include some world-famous names, like David Livingstone and Grenfell of Labrador, and many men and women who in their time were outstanding figures in the countries in which they laboured. Alongside of these were to be found missionary workers of limited education and, sometimes, of narrow outlook. Like all human agencies Christian missions have made mistakes and have sometimes done harm as well as good. But the remarkable thing is that in spite of shortcomings and failures modern missions have in the past century and a half achieved the astonishing result of making Christianity, in fact as well as in principle, a world religion.

It is not only that there are today throughout the world younger Christian Churches with an independent life of their own, and with gifted leaders who can meet on equal terms with those of the older churches of the West. What is of no less importance is that Christian ideas, largely through the influence of Christian colleges, have penetrated into far wider circles than the membership of the Christian Church. The outlook and action of outstanding personalities and a host of less widely known national leaders have been in varying degrees influenced by contact with Christianity. It is one of the notable surprises of history that an adventure of Christian faith and hope, conceived and carried out for the most part by very ordinary men and women, in the face of obstacles that must have made it appear in the eyes of outsiders a fantastic dream, should have achieved results that are an important factor in contemporary world history.

It is clear, however, that a movement which, however little recognized as such at the time, has been the most important achievement of Christianity in recent history, is now facing entirely changed conditions. To meet the demands of the new age it must be reborn in some new shape. What that new shape is to be is not yet clear. The International Missionary Council is alive to the range and gravity of the questions to which an answer has to be found. It knows that it does not at present possess the answers. But it is determined to search for them. It is initiating consultations and inquiries in the different countries as a means of preparing for an international conference to consider the broad lines of Christian strategy in the new period, and how to present today in the most appealing terms the claims of the universal mission of the Church.

Editor's Note—This article comes with the following endorsement of Dr. Fred Field Goodsell of the American Board.

We are accustomed these days to surveys, or appraisals or other studies which help us individually and collectively as Christians to get our bearings. Whither are we going, how far have we progressed, and where are we now, what obstacles must be surmounted, what are our resources? I was about to write out such a statement when I read Dr. J. H. Oldham's recent article in the Christian News Letter of London on "The World Missionary Task of the Churches." Dr. Oldham is a very wise man, a remarkable Christian, and an experienced ecumenical leader. I can do no better as I take my official leave of you than to ask you to read and ponder his words. To what action do they spur you? Here they are."

We are glad to circulate this important statement and trust that it will be read carefully and widely.

What are the new factors that make necessary a radical re-thinking of the nature of the world-wide responsibilities of the Christian Church and of the means by which they can be fulfilled?

The Younger Churches.

To begin with the inner development of the missionary movement, the great decisive new factor is the growth of the younger churches which are the fruit of missionary activity. We have the outstanding example of the formation of the united Church of South India. There are still large areas in the world which are practically unevangelized or where the indigenous church is small and weak. But in all the main fields of missionary activity the predominant factor is now the indigenous church. The task of the western churches is no longer, as it was throughout the nineteenth century, that of planting Christianity in virgin soil and fostering and superintending its early growth, but the less clearly defined and more difficult task of assisting the younger churches in the discharge of responsibilities that are primarily theirs. A stage has been reached similar to that in the family when the younger members are ready and anxious to stand on their own feet. In the new period the leadership and main initiative must be that of the younger churches.

That does not mean that aid from the West is no longer needed. We have spoken of the miracle of the younger churches—for such it is—but it is also true that, apart from a relatively small number of gifted leaders, they are for the most part still weak and immature. Their membership is recruited to a large extent from the poorest classes in the community. They are in an alarming degree dependent financially on the supporting missions. While there are among them ardent evangelists like Dr. Kagawa of Japan, these younger churches as a whole have hardly as yet the strength to take upon themselves the main burden of the tremendous world mission of the church. The experience is only too widespread that the second generation of Christians is apt to turn in upon itself and lose any sense of obligation towards those who remain without.

Leaders of the younger churches have repeatedly declared that they will still need and want the help of missionaries from the older and more experienced churches of the West. But it is plain that only men and women with exceptional gifts of sym-

MINUTES OF EASTERN VIRGINIA S. S. CONVENTION.

MORNING SESSION.

The Eightieth Session of the Annual Sunday School Convention of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention of the Congregational Christian Churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference met at the Oakland Christian Church, Chuckatuck, Virginia, Tuesday, July 19, 1949.

The morning session was called to order by President Mills E. Godwin, Jr. Song service was conducted by Mr. W. H. Baker, Secretary of the Convention.

The Invocation was given by Dr. I. W. Johnson, pastor of the Oakland Church and the address of welcome was given by Dr. N. G. Newman. The response was given by Mr. Floyd A. Turner of the Suffolk Christian Church.

The morning worship service was conducted by the young people of the Oakland Christian Church.

The ministers of the conference were recognized—nineteen attended the morning session. The superintendents of the various schools were also recognized and there were ten attending the first session.

Dr. Wm. T. Scott, Superintendent, Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches, gave a very informative talk on "Our Sunday School Literature."

Rev. Earl Farrell of the Cypress Chapel and Damascus Christian Churches gave a most interesting address on "Where Does the Sunday School Lead Its Scholars?"

A worship service was then conducted by Rev. L. B. Grice of the Holy Neck Christian Church after which the morning session was adjourned and a most delightful country dinner of fried chicken and country ham was served by the ladies of the Oakland Christian Church.

* * *

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The afternoon session was called to order by President Mills E. Godwin, Jr. Song service was conducted by Mr. W. H. Baker. Dr. Will B. O'Neill gave the invocation.

"A Young Man Looks at Sunday School" was the subject of a most interesting talk by Mr. Jack Byrd of the Cypress Chapel Christian Church.

Mrs. Ray Gordon of the Suffolk Christian Church gave talk on "A Mother Looks at Sunday School."

Mr. L. P. Waldo, Jr., of the Holland Christian Church, discussed "A Superintendent Looks at Sunday School."

Dr. Will B. O'Neill of the Holland Christian Church gave an inspiring address on "Go Teach."

BUSINESS SESSION.

Dr. Wm. T. Scott and Rev. Robert Lee House gave fine talks on the need of every school supporting THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the help it could give to teachers and workers in our schools. Dr. Harcastle's Sunday School Notes which are published by THE SUN each week were commended and are a real source of help and inspiration to all Sunday School teachers.

Report of the Finance Committee—

We, the members of the Finance Committee, have examined the books and records of the Treasurer and have found them neatly kept and correct as far as we can ascertain. We commend Miss Folk for her good work.

We have also checked the Secretary's report of funds received by mail and at this session of the Convention and have found them also correct—the amount being $830.00.

We recommend the payment of the following appropriations and bills: (1) Virginia Council of Churches—$50.00; (2) Secretary of Board of Christian Education—$800.00 ($100 of this amount to be earmarked and reserved for various conferences and training schools in this conference); (3) W. H. Baker for salary and expenses—$28.00. We herewith turn in all funds received to the Treasurer $830.00 and we recommend the payment of bills for printing, etc., in connection with this Convention. Signed: H. S. Harcastle, Chairman, R. E. Brittle, Letcher Eley.

Report of Time and Place Committee—The committee reported that an invitation had been received from the Cypress Chapel Christian Church, to meet with them on Tuesday after the third Sunday in July, 1950. Signed: G. C. Man, Chairman, C. W. Darden.

Report of Committee on Resolutions

—We, the members of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention in session July 19, 1949, would like to record our appreciation for the invitation to meet at Oakland Church and for the fine way in which the Convention has been entertained.

We bespeak our hearty thanks to the officers and speakers for an excellent program.

Be it resolved that the Convention commend the Board of Christian Education for the promotion of training schools, camps and conferences and Bible schools and that we pledge our continued cooperation in this essential work of our Convention.

Resolved that we urge our Sunday Schools to give intelligent and sympathetic consideration to the wealth of materials provided by our denomination. That we further commend for consideration the use of THE CHRISTIAN SUN among adult groups.

We have missed the presence of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Morgan in this session, and would record our gratitude for their many faithful years of service in our midst and our very earnest hope that they may be with us again next year. Signed: R. L. House, Chairman, Mrs. I. W. Johnson, J. E. McCauley.

The secretary was instructed to write Mr. and Mrs. Morgan a note of good will and hopes for continued improvement.

Nominating Committee's Report—

The following officers were nominated by the committee: Mr. Mills E. Godwin, Jr., president; Rev. W. L. Wood, vice-president; Mr. W. H. Baker, secretary; Miss Mary Lee Folk, treasurer.

Motion that the Nominating Committee's report be adopted, seconded and carried and the above officers were elected to serve for the year 1949-50.

Motion that all reports be adopted, seconded and carried.

The closing worship service was conducted by Rev. Johnson Griffin of the Bay View Christian Church.

The benediction was given by Rev. R. E. Brittle, pastor of the Bethlehem Christian Church.

Motion that the Convention adjourn, seconded and carried to meet Tuesday after the third Sunday in July, 1949, with the Cypress Chapel Christian Church.

A New Church in New York

By WILLIAM CLEMES AND BETA MUELLER

The fashionable section of New York's famous Park Avenue extends from Grand Central Station to 96th Street—some fifty blocks. Here well-dressed people live in tall apartment buildings and hotels, their doors sheltered by sidewalk canopies and attended by men in livery. The big churches and cathedrals are as handsome and secure as their congregations.

But at 96th Street the neatly trimmed strip of park dividing the Avenue's traffic abruptly ends. North of here the tracks of the New York Central Railroad, emerging from underground, bisect long rows of tenements, their fire escapes inelegantly draped with faded laundry.

This is East Harlem. Its people are Negroes and Puerto Ricans, with a scattering of Germans, Italians, and the impoverished remnants of earlier populations. Here bad housing and disease live side by side and inadequate schools and playgrounds beget juvenile delinquency and adult violence.

Where is the church? The "church" here is mostly sects which meet in store fronts where the lonely and disinherited find comfort in lavish promises of a happier world to come. In another sense, the "church" is the Communist-dominated American Labor Party, a highly efficient political machine presided over by Congressman Vito Marcantonio.

While well represented in the "silk stocking district" of Park Avenue, orthodox Protestantism has long existed here like a prehistoric animal dying slowly because it can no longer meet the demands of a changed environment—its congregations mere tokens of the whites who have long since moved away.

But today, for the first time, established Protestant denominations are engaged in a unique experiment to bring a living and meaningful gospel to this blighted area. Known officially as the East Harlem Protestant Parish, it is supported by the home mission boards of the Baptist, Congregational Christian, Methodist and Presbyterian Churches. The pattern being set by the young ministers and social workers attached to this project might well provide Protestantism with the formulae for unlocking the doors of city slums across the country.

The story of the Harlem Parish opens in the fall of 1947, when a group of young Union Theological Seminary students decided there was more to the ministry than just well polished sermons, pot-luck suppers and wedding ceremonies.

"We came to feel that the Protestant faith was being proclaimed mostly to those who could afford to pay for their religion," is the way the Rev. Donald Benedict summed up the sentiment of the group. "Furthermore, we were dismayed at the inability of the Protestant church to evangelize the masses of industrial workers, especially those of the lower income brackets."

When Benedict and his co-workers finally decided to move into East Harlem they realized that the traditional church trappings, such as an impressive building, well carpeted floors and stained glass windows, would serve more as a hindrance than a help.

The beginning of the East Harlem Parish was simply a card table set up on a sidewalk on one of the most crowded blocks in Harlem. As children flocked around to register for a vacation Bible school, curious neighbors watched the scene from the vantage of their window sills, doorways and orange crates used as sidewalk bleachers.

Even though the Parish had no church, the vacation Bible school opened on schedule with space borrowed from three neighborhood store front churches for the hundred or more kids who had signed up.

By October, Don Benedict and his friends had found an abandoned butcher shop which they thought might be converted into a store front church.

There was no building committee to supervise this operation, but there were plenty of eager youngsters from the vacation Bible school to help. They pitched in on the basement first, which yielded two sanitary truck loads of refuse. Next they installed new beams and propped up the sagging floors with rough hewn posts and gave the exterior a cheerful coat of red paint.

Determined to make their church more than just a place for Sunday worship, the ministers next eyed a desolate lot two doors away, typical of many that lie like scars among the ugly tenements of the district.

"This could be a playground," they said.

They discovered that taxes on the lot had long gone unpaid and the owners had either disappeared or lost interest. After consultation with city officials and lawyers, a block committee took over the lot by "squatters rights." Men and teen-aged boys from the neighborhood spent days and evenings cleaning the lot, while the women-folk brought lunches and suppers. Finally they leveled off the lot with ashes from the city sanitation department. Already there are baseball games because Joe Cronin, former manager of the Boston Red Sox, has sent bases and a dozen major league balls. Twice a week after dark, two or three hundred people bring chairs to the lot to see movies projected on the wall of an adjacent tenement.

The guiding principle behind this city slum church has been to demonstrate the meaning of Christianity in terms of people's every day problems. There is no place here for a religion which offers only "pie in the sky," a charity handout or a pretty sermon.

The parish has now grown to include four full-time ministers and two dozen staff workers. A second storefront church was acquired early this year along with a Methodist church building. While the big church eventually will be used for worship, the store fronts will always be the heart of the parish.

Here, unabashed by long corridors or secretaries, the people come, bringing all the medical, legal, psychiatric and economic problems that are part of East Harlem—a man seeking a blood donor for his wife, another surrendering a knife with which he planned to stab a neighbor, a family threatened with eviction, a troubled mother, a rebellious adolescent.

As the ministers up there will tell you, normal adolescent growing pains on the street corners of East Harlem too often turn into truancy, gang fights and petty crime. By 17 or 18 too many of these kids bred amidst poverty and hate have prison records. But reached a few years earlier, these same children have proved to be the most responsible and enthusiastic group in the parish.

The parish's teen-age Crusader's Club grew out of an escapade of a 14-year-old girl. Missing from home for nearly a week, she was found by one of the ministers in a down-town movie house.

On the way home, this minister suggested that she help organize a

ZULU TEACHER RETURNS.

Miss Minnie E. Carter, a Congregational Christian educator and thorough-going Connecticut Yankee from Bethel, Connecticut, set sail back to her post under the American Board of Foreign Missions in Inanda, South Africa on the Holland-American Liner Veendam from New York on August 2.

Inanda Seminary, where Miss Carter teaches, was founded by the American Board in 1869 and is the oldest and finest Christian educational institution for girls in all South Africa. It is 20 miles from the nearest city, Durban, and six miles from even a tiny railroad whistle stop.

This is why Minnie Carter has been busy raising funds for a new automobile which has just been purchased in Africa and given a hearty welcome by the Zulu students.

"No one can estimate the influence of the Zulu girls who go out from Inanda school with a practical education, plus Christian ideals of service to their own communities as nurses, teachers, pastors' wives, social workers or just Christian mothers," says Miss Carter.

Born in Redding, Connecticut, and educated at Danbury State Normal School, plus work at Columbia University, Miss Carter has been making her headquarters during her furlough in Bethel, where she is a member of the Bethel Congregational Church.

MISSIONARIES TO AMERICA.

The Third International Seminar of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Boston, Massachusetts, will take place August 10 to September 15 at Old Orchard Beach, Maine, bringing together a small and carefully selected group of Christian Nationals from Asia, Africa, Latin America and the Near East.

These "missionaries to America" are key men and women in the great Christian fellowship which has its roots deep in the native soil of every country. In the present days of tension the nurture and strengthening of the Christian fellowship around the world is imperative.

The American Board held its first International Seminar at Yale University in 1939 and its second at Chicago Theological Seminary in 1945. In 1949 it is leaving a college campus or big city and gathering in a spacious beach house bearing the somewhat Victorian name of "Minnie's Seaside Rest" at Old Orchard Beach, where since 1896 spiritual and physical refreshment has been found in the summer by hundreds of missionaries from more than twenty different countries ranging from China to Africa and from Turkey to Great Tibet.

"Minnie's Seaside Rest" was built in 1896 as a memorial to a little girl by the name of Minnie Green. Following her early death at seven years of age her parents purchased land near their own summer home on Old Orchard Beach and erected Minnie's Seaside Rest as a memorial to the wistful, dark-eyed child who repeatedly expressed her desire to "take the tired off somebody."

It was willed to the American Board of Foreign Missions, international arm of the Congregational Christian Churches for this express purpose.

This Third International Seminar of the American Board will have as its Dean a distinguished Christian educator and sociologist, Dr. Samuel C. Kincheloe of Chicago, Illinois, Professor of The Sociology of Religion at Chicago Theological Seminary.

On the "faculty" which will be mainly a consultative and discussion group, will be: Prof. and Mrs. William Pauk of Chicago Theological Seminary, Chicago; Prof. and Mrs. Julian Price Love of Louisville, Kentucky; Prof. and Mrs. Philip Guiles of West Newton, Massachusetts; Dr. Douglas Horton of New York, Moderator of the International Congregational Council and Minister of the General Council of Congregational Christian Churches; Francis McPeck of the Council of Social Action, Chicago, Illinois; President Charles S. Johnson of Fisk University, Nashville, Tennessee; and Dr. Thomas A. Tripp of New York City.

pathy, understanding and tact can meet the demands of a situation which contains many possibilities of tension and must always remain delicate.

The New State.

The remarkable influence of Christian missions on the non-Christian world was largely assisted by the fact that they were the pioneers of western education. Throughout the greater part of a century the outstanding educational institutions in China, India and the Near East were Christian colleges and schools. It was in these that a large proportion of the educated national leaders of these areas received their education. For decades all the schools in pagan Africa were, almost without exception, Christian schools. Missions were also in Asia and Africa the pioneers of western medicine and exercised a widespread healing ministry. They have rendered notable services in the field of agriculture. The contribution of Christian institutions to education, medicine, and agriculture is still immense, and the needs to be met are as great as ever. But almost everywhere today governments with vastly greater financial resources than are at the disposal of Christian missions are accepting responsibility for the provision of these social services. With the expansion of state-provided services, the proportionate share of Christian institutions in these fields must inevitably diminish, though the share of Christian teachers, nurses, and doctors in state services may be a very important one.

The maintenance of Christian institutions, even of theological colleges and training institutions indispensable to the vigorous life of the church itself, makes financial demands that are entirely beyond the resources of the younger churches. In view of the rapidly rising costs the subventions that are still needed from the churches of the West will not be easy to provide. The missionary boards and societies are facing entirely changed conditions which will call for a new strategy—combined, unified and worked out in closest consultation with the younger churches.

Conflict.

The modern missionary movement in its first beginnings had in many areas of the non-Christian world to knock for long at closed doors, which only slowly opened. It was only later that there came a remarkable period of almost world-wide missionary freedom. There were still some closed areas, and others in which missionary work was subject to considerable restrictions. But the general picture (Continued on page 9.)

VALLEY WOMAN'S CONFERENCE IS HELD.

The Virginia Valley Missionary Conference met with the Linville Church, July 28, 1949, with an excellent attendance. Miss Verdine Showalter, the president, was presiding, and the theme used was "We Dedicate Ourselves."

Mrs. J. E. Rohart led the morning devotions in a very impressive manner. Miss Mary Rohart welcomed the conference, and Miss Betty Showalter gave the response.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill of Henderson, N. C., was present as our guest speaker. She also gave a preview of our mission study on Japan. Luncheon was served in the church basement.

The afternoon devotions were given by the Wood's Chapel Juniors. Other speakers present were: Rev. and Mrs. R. E. Newton, Luray, Va.; Rev. and Mrs. R. A. Whitten, Winchester, Va.; Rev. J. E. Rohart, Linville, Va. Mrs. Frances Cooper of Winchester brought us echoes from the School of Missions held at Elon College in June.

The reports given from the various superintendents showed much improvement over last year.

The following officers were elected: Miss Verdine Showalter, president; Mrs. R. A. Whitten, vice-president; Mrs. Howard Hensley, secretary; Mrs. Noah Painter, treasurer. The following superintendents were elected: Mrs. J. E. Bryant, spiritual life; Mrs. Edgar Nelson, life memberships and memorials; Mrs. O. J. Sours, literature; Mrs. Orville Hoover, friendly service; Mrs. R. A. Whitten, interdenominational cooperation; Mrs. Kermit Kibler, young people; Mrs. B. F. Frank, women; Mrs. Austin Kipps, cradle roll.

The Missionary Conference will meet with the Winchester Church next year.

NEWS FROM LOCAL SOCIETIES.

LITTLE CREEK.

Our society has enjoyed a profitable year. In November, we observed World Community Day and sent several boxes of clothing to children in Germany. We held our public service November 7, with the whole church participating, from which we received a good Thank Offering. Our World Day of Prayer service was attended by only a few of our women, but was inspiring. We hope in the future our women will realize the importance of this day and attend better. May Fellowship Day was observed May 5, with emphasis on family life. A movie was shown: "Yesterday, Today and Forever."

The outstanding event of Family Week was a "Family Festival" on May 6, which all church families attended. We had appropriate games for each member of the family, and a weiner roast. Much fun was had by all.

During Youth Week, a party was given for our young people. The fellowship, fun and food was much enjoyed. The young people had charge of Sunday school devotions that week.

A party was also given for the Cradle Roll. Our Cradle Roll leader, Mrs. Percy Price, has done a good job with the little tots. They filled their mite boxes to send to the Christian Orphanage, for the Baby Home.

On Our Own Doorstep was reviewed by our President, Mrs. M. E. Taylor. We were invited to the Christian Temple, and were privileged to hear China, Twilight or Dawn, reviewed by Mrs. Frank Morgan, who is an able and interesting speaker.

We are working toward being a Superior Society by meeting all requirements. Each month we have a well-planned devotion. We are planning a vesper service for August. Our Bible Study was conducted through six meetings at our Wednesday night Bible Study. For our Friendly Service, we sent hospital supplies to the Ryder Memorial Hospital, Puerto Rico, and baby clothing for the Indian Mission in North Dakota.

In addition to our missionary activities, we had a chicken supper, from which we received $167.00 to be used on our parsonage indebtedness.

When we read of the dangers and trials of our beloved missionaries, the Jacksons and Riggs, we realize anew our responsibilities in being a small was of a world in which the Gospel was freely proclaimed. The prestige of Europe was at its height. Liberal ideas were in the ascendant. Countries that desired to be regarded as civilized felt it incumbent on them to conform to the principle of religious toleration.

All this is changed. Communism is in principle hostile to religion. Christianity finds itself face to face today throughout the world with one of the most formidable opponents it has ever encountered in its history. The historical parallel which leaps to the mind is the conflict thirteen centuries ago between Christianity and Islam, which swept over lands nominally Christian and ousted Christianity from the countries of the middle and nearer East and northern Africa. Communism has established itself over a large part of China and is everywhere acting as a powerful ferment among the peoples of Asia and Africa. It is possible that its greatest and most significant triumphs may be in Asia.

It may be that among Asiatic peoples Communism may assume a different form from that which it has elsewhere displayed. But the evidence thus far available points to the likelihood that Communist governments will do all in their power to restrict within narrow limits, if not to eradicate, Christian activities. In particular, the state may be expected to bring education entirely under its own control and eliminate Christian activity from this field. Information about the spread of Communism in China and its effects on the Christian Church has already been given in recent issues of the News-Letter. The situation is at the present time much too fluid to permit of any safe generalization.

Islam has always been intolerant of other religions, and Moslem countries are less open than formerly to influences which might lead them to mitigate their intransigence.

If doors are closed that were formerly open to missionary activity, that does not remove the obligation of the Christian Church to proclaim its message to the whole world. The missionary boards and societies are generally agreed that they will maintain their

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR LITTLE FOLK:

Jody and Anna were excited. They tugged at mother and daddy's hand. They pulled and jumped. They were at the zoo. Mother told them a zoo was the place in which wild animals were kept, clean and as much like their homes as possible, and in order that people could come and see them.

Jody cried, "Look, a brown something jumping up and down, up and down." Anna echoed, "Up and down, what's it, what's it?"

It was a big brown bear. He rolled over and jumped and grinned like a teddy. Next there was a big, big white polar bear. He had a pool of water in which to keep cool. His feet were so big.

Anna laughed when she saw three bears—all of them waving a paw. "Look, he is telling me bye-bye," she said, and waved at the biggest one.

Daddy and mother held Jody and Anna by the hand as they crossed the road and went to visit the monkeys. They scampered up the bars of their cages. They swung over and under. They stopped to scratch their heads, they looked at the people watching them.

Jody called, "Come Anna, come see the rabbits." A large pen had hamsters, guinea pigs and bunnies. Anna and Jody watched the wigglesome noses of the rabbits. They walked along seeing camels, giraffes, a baby elephant, zebras, reindeer and elands.

Jody said, "Mother, the camels are like those when Jesus was a boy. Did he ride on one?" Anna answered, "I hope he didn't, there isn't any sitting room on them, not much room."

Finally they had looked at many animals and were on their way home. Jody began a prayer: "Thank you, God, for this day. Thank you for kangaroos, camels and bears. Thank you for all your good things. Amen."

"A real trip to the zoo," said father, "helps us remember that God indeed made more than man for His world."

"SUCH PRETTY WAYS."

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Essie, our laundress, speaks of the children of my neighbor as having "Such pretty ways!"

I agree. Jackie and Mary Ann Aldrich have pretty ways. I asked their mother, as she and I sat knitting in her garden, what she had done to help her children acquire their charm of manner.

"Children should learn early to be resourceful, sociable and happy," she replied. "When I caught my children's first smiles, I began talking to them—to help them to understand it's pleasant to communicate with people. Their feeling of nearness to me—of belonging—was encouraged by chatting with them while I worked, singing snatches of songs when I passed them, substituting one toy for another or suggesting a different use for the one that, for the time, had lost its attraction. I made it a practice to exchange smiles with them frequently, so that they would acquire a disposition of sunniness."

"When you are away for relaxation or shopping, how do you continue these practical lessons in social relationships?" I asked.

"I always leave a congenial substitute. When I cannot secure one, I stay at home," Mary Aldrich replied. "However, from time to time I make an earnest effort to secure a proper person, for I don't want my children to become too dependent upon me. Having substitutes for Mummy and Father, widens a child's circle of acquaintances. This is a way, too, of teaching hospitality."

After I had inquired in what way, Myra continued, "One night my husband's secretary offered to stay with the children. Before bedtime the children appeared with a tray on which was a glass of milk, some cookies, and a napkin. 'For you, when we are asleep,' Jackie told Miss Jo, and Mary Ann added, 'Mommie does this when she has guests.'"

"These are indeed, as Essie says, 'pretty ways,'" I answered. Then, remembering the times the children had sent cards and greetings when they were on trips with their parents, I mentioned our appreciation.

"Children become naturally thoughtful and kind if they are encouraged in such habits on their own age level," said Mrs. Aldrich. "When a friend is ill I have Jackie and Mary Ann deliver whatever delicacy or flowers I may have for the invalid. The children enjoy doing this, and each such errand helps to strengthen the tendency to be considerate of others. I find it is important for a child, when learning to share, to have an abundance of satisfactory fun experiences in doing it. This manner of teaching, aided by example, is far superior to nagging or pleading methods—such as saying, 'Be a good host, Jackie,' or 'Be gracious to others, Mary Ann.'"

"Jackie and Mary Ann certainly are learning to be good little mixers," I said, thinking of the occasions on which I had noticed how easily they fitted into the picture when among strangers.

"You're quick to observe, and it is kind of you to mention this," my friend answered appreciatively. "I have worked hard to bring it about. Boys and girls need to be gradually weaned from over-dependency on their families. They need their social horizons broadened. Self assurance, socially, also increases as children learn skills—both of language and body control. We should help them to develop those capabilities for which they have an interest and aptitude." The mother had been deeply serious; now she smiled broadly as she said, "Well, I have gone on the lecture platform! And all I intended to do was to thank you for telling me of Essie's remark—that our children have such 'pretty ways.'" the spendthrifts and selfish people who are permitted to dry rot spiritually. This negligence is certainly an indictment against leaders.

MONEY IN ABUNDANCE.

Did you know that the major activity of the Golden Rule Foundation is to sponsor stewardship in behalf of all churches and all welfare agencies on a non-partisan basis? Furthermore, if ministers, leaders and solicitors will place the proper literature in the hands of church members and civic-minded people, it will benefit all parties spiritually and materially.

The average church and welfare agency must adopt better technique for collecting, and more practical methods for spending donations. Successful churches and wide-awake communities are using the "know how." The above is not a theoretical program—it is the practical way to get "Money in Abundance."—T.F.Epes.

IF YOU WILL. A VESPER SERVICE.

PRELUDE

CALL TO WORSHIP:

O God, our Father,
We would ascend into thy holy hill,
We would enter into thy holy place

And stand in thy glorious presence,
That we may commune with thee:
Therefore cleanse our hands
And purify our hearts;
And reveal thy beauty and truth.
To guide us unto thyself.

HYMN: "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind" (all verses).

SCRIPTURE: Psalm 51:1-12—

Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving kindness; According unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot our transgressions.

Wash me thoroughly of mine iniquities, and cleanse me from my sin.

For I acknowledge my transgressions and my sin is ever before me.

Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight; that thou mightest be justified when thou speakest and be clear when thou judgest;

Behold I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me.

Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts; and in the hidden part thou shalt make me know wisdom.

Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me and I shall be whiter than snow. Make me to hear joy and gladness that the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice. Hide thy face from my sins and blot out all mine iniquities.

Create in me a clean heart, O God and renew a right spirit within me.

Cast me not away from thy presence; and take not thy holy spirit from me.

Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free spirit.

SPECIAL PRAYER HYMN: "God Who Touched Earth With Beauty."

STORY: "A Legend of Spring (Junior Worship Materials):

Once upon a time there lived an old man who did not get along very well in the world, so he left other people and went to live in the forest all by himself as a hermit. He was very unhappy and believed everything was wicked. He even prayed to God that great storms might destroy every living thing. The hermit accustomed himself to standing still for hours at a time, praying thus, and in time he became so rugged and weatherbeaten that it was hard to tell him from the broken and gnarled stumps that were in the forest.

The storms did not come; and the birds commenced building their nests for another spring. Soon a pair of little birds, searching for a suitable location, discovered a lovely hollow in a rough old stump and began building a nest. The lovely hollow was the outstretched hand of the old hermit as he stood motionless before God.

At first the old hermit was about to spurn them because he was displeased with everything; but they seemed so innocent and happy that his heart softened and he no longer wished to harm them.

He became interested and watched each day as they built their nest. Some children who had formerly been afraid of him, came by. When they saw him they were afraid no longer, and brought him food and drink, and arranged a rest for his arm.

Soon four little eggs were in the nest. By and by they were gone and four birds replaced them. Soon the old hermit became alive with them and no longer prayed for storms. When the little birds needed his care no longer, he left his lovely forest and lived in happiness among those whom he had hated; seeing God's hand in the lives of those about him, and serving where he might.

POEM: "If You Will"—

*If God can make of an ugly seed,
With a bit of earth and air
And dew and rain, sunshine and shade—
A flower so wondrous fair;
What can he make of a soul like you,
With the Bible and faith and prayer,
And the Holy Spirit—if you do his will
And trust his love and care!*

HYMN: "Open Mine Eyes" (first verse only).

BENEDICTION: Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known and from whom no secrets are hid; cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit, that we may perfectly love thee, and worthily magnify thy holy name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

LESSON: Psalms 8; 19:1-6; 65:9-13; 104.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Job 37:14-24.

The Wonder of the Earth.

The earth, this planet on which we live is a wonderful thing, an amazing thing which ought to call forth a sense of awe and wonder and worship. Think of anything as large as it, suspended in space, revolving around the sun in a well-defined path, traveling thousands of miles an hour and millions of miles a year, and revolving all the while at tremendous speed, yet without any perceptible vibration or sound. That in itself is a wonderful thing.

Then think of the composition and the construction of the earth. Here are vast oceans and great land masses, great heights and abysmal depths, rivers, lakes, forests, plains, deserts, some of them exceedingly productive, some of them barren of life—no, that is hardly true for both in the great deserts and even in the vast ice areas of the world there are some forms of life. Think of the infinite variety and incalculable volume of the foliage and fruitage of the earth, grasses, trees, fruits, vegetation of all kinds, herbs, grains, medicinal plants and herbs, and all growing things of the vegetable kingdom. Think, too, of the vast resources in the earth, the millions of tons of coal, of ore of every kind, including precious minerals and metals, of the oceans of oil and the billions of cubic feet of gas that lie under the surface of the earth. Think, too, of the tremendous natural forces such as water power, electricity, and man's latest discovery, atomic energy. What an earth this is indeed!

But the end is not yet. Thus far we have considered only the physical world with its vast material resources and its organic life in the realms of plants and the like. But behold living things of the animal world, using the word animal in an inclusive sense. Think of the wide variety in the living creatures of this world, ranging all the way from an elephant to the tiniest bacteria, in infinite variety, but with one unifying principle, the principle of life, the power to adjust themselves to their environment, the power to reproduce their kind. Lacking what we humans call reason and conscience these living things have skills and instincts and characteristics that are amazing and awe-inspiring. Their plumage, their coloring, their protective devices, their weapons of defense, their cunning, their keen sense of sight and smell and hearing, their speed of movement, these and other things make them another factor in the wonder of this earth of which they are a part.

But the crown of the earth, and of creation, is man. "What a piece of work is man!" Take a look at him with his body fearfully and wonderfully made, the most delicate animal alive; think of him with his power of speech and the ability to write and to read; think of his power to think and to feel and to will, to imagine, to remember, to create, to compose music and poetry, to invent intricate and delicate machines, to discover and to control and to utilize the vast resources of the earth, and the air and the sea; think of his spiritual nature, that divine life within him that comes from something outside himself, which those with the Christian philosophy of life say, comes from God. Man is a part of this great and wonderful earth we have been considering in its myriad forms and in its mystery and majesty.

The Wonder of the Universe.

Just a minute, my friends. In one way this is a great earth, there is no denying that. But in another way it is "mighty small potatoes" if we compare it with the vast universe of which it is such a small and infinitesimal part. I read only the other day that men can make a model to scale of practically everything except the universe. And the reason is not far to seek. If the earth was represented by a ball one inch in diameter the nearest star would be fifty-five thousand miles away!!!! In fact when men began to chart and measure the universe they had to speak of distances in terms of "light years." Light travels, as I recall it, 176,000 miles per second. And even the nearest stars are thousands of light years away from us!!!! Folks, this is a big universe we are living in, of which our earth as large as it may seem, is only the tiniest of specks.

Vast, stupendous, immeasurable, yes. And orderly and dependable. A few years ago a group of scientists and astronomers went to far off Africa to make studies of a total eclipse of the sun. They established camp, set up their instruments, and made ready to take pictures, and to study the eclipse. Looking at his wrist watch one of the men said, "Gentlemen, if we have not made a mistake in our calculations, the eclipse should begin in three minutes." Sure enough in three minutes the first faint shadow appeared on the edge of the sun. And the men who know would say that this is characteristic of the orderliness and the dependability of the universe. Sun and moon and stars follow a pattern and a time schedule that is so dependable that men measure their time by it and find their way by means of it.

And perhaps still more wonderful is that the microscope reveals order and law as does the telescope. Every snowflake falling in its original condition has perfect crystals arranged in definite and yet different ways. One of my professors told us in a course in Organic Evolution that perhaps the most wonderful creation of God aside from man himself was the wing of a bird. But enough. What the writer of these Notes has been trying to do is to help his readers to see something of the glory and the grandeur of the earth on which we live and the universe of which we are a part.

The Works of God.

From whence came all these things? That is the "Sixty-Four-Dollar Question." Did they just happen? Were things put together, shaken up well, and lo the earth and the universe with all these mysteries and marvels and miracles come out? I talked with a man recently who takes that view of things, although he did say that perhaps there was some kind of supervision at the beginning, but that the superintendent had got things to going and then had gone off and left the machine running. But that answer does not take account of the facts and does not satisfy even the average man. The universe shows evidences of order and wisdom and purpose. And more, there are many to whom the universe shows a concern for personal and spiritual values. They recognize the difficulty of believing, but they recognize the greater difficulty of not believing, of thinking that this vast universe is simply the product of chance and coincidence. They go beyond reason to faith. They go back as far as they can, and when they can go no further they say with the inspired writer of Genesis, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth . . . and God created man and woman. . . ." They join the Psalmist in today's hymns of praise to God as the Creator of all things, and in awe and adoration they cry out, "O Jehovah, how manifold are thy works, in wisdom hast thou made them all; the earth is full of thy riches."

That is it. The works of God should lead to the worship of God.

WORLD MISSIONARY TASK OF THE CHURCHES.

work in China so long as it is possible to do so. In northern China there seems to have been a marked improvement in the situation in the past few months, and some of the British missionary societies feel justified in sending out fresh recruits. The time has certainly not yet come to rule out the possibility that in the matter of religious toleration the Chinese attitude may be different from that of the Kremlin.

Already in some of these difficult situations in different parts of the world young Christian leaders with the help of missionary colleagues are showing there are new—if precarious and dangerous—ways of bearing Christian witness in the new conditions.

The Missionary Call.

So far as the churches of the West are concerned there appears to be no drying up of missionary interest. On the contrary, that interest appears to be more widespread than ever. Missionary giving has reached in recent years unprecedented heights. The decline in the number of lavish individual benefactors has been largely offset by the increased number of smaller contributions. The available evidence shows this to be true of Great Britain, the United States and Scandinavia.

On the other hand, in spite of the higher level of giving and its more widely spread basis, the missionary societies may before long be facing the greatest financial crisis in their history. Costs all over the world are rising out of all proportion to the increase in giving. The principle of a whole-time Christian ministry has been accepted by the younger churches but has in relatively few instances been fully carried out in practice. The goal of self-support seems as far from being reached as ever. The younger churches have not in general been able to maintain a village ministry without assistance from the missions. The problem has acquired a new acuteness not only through the rapid rise of living costs and of the market value of coolie or peasant labour (with which the payment of the village ministry in China, India and Africa at one time compared favourably), but also through the separation which has become inevitable of the functions of teacher and pastor. Until recently local pastoral service could be provided in many instances by a teacher, who was subsidized by Government. That stage is rapidly passing for good.

If the support of the western churches for the world-wide mission of the universal church is to be maintained, the home constituency must be educated to understand the radically changed conditions. A new basis of appeal is needed, which has not yet been formulated. At an earlier stage the participation of home congregations in the missionary enterprise was direct and evident. They sent out and supported their own agents for evangelistic work abroad in the same way that they themselves engaged in evangelistic activities at home. They could speak rejoicingly of "our" converts. It is a more difficult task to enlist their sympathy, prayers and support for the younger churches, which desperately need their interest and support, but can receive it only on their own terms. The missionary movement has reached a turning-point at which there is an imperative need of a new apprehension of the essential meaning of the missionary obligation.

No programme, however excellent in itself, will amount to anything unless men and women in both the younger and the older churches dedicate themselves to its realization. The missionary societies are at present short of candidates, and in particular are getting too few of the type of men and women qualified to meet the demands of the situation that has been described. This fact is engaging the attention of the Student Christian Movement and the World Student Christian Federation. There are signs of a stirring of a new interest among students in the world-wide church, which found expression in a conference in Holland last year attended by a hundred and thirty students from thirty different countries who came together to examine with fresh eyes the responsibilities and needs of the universal church.

Strategy of the Universal Church.

The importance of the questions to which the International Missionary Council is directing its attention is seen in a fresh light when we think of the strategy of the universal church in the present state of the world. It may well be that the main advances of Christianity in the next few generations may be in areas that have never formed part of Christendom. In the countries in which it has long been the prevailing religion it has to contend with the handicap that its message has in the ears of many acquired a certain staleness. They think that they have laid their account with the church and are consequently impervious to its message. A French priest, working in rural France, has recently described his disheartening experience among the de-Christianized population. "I have been struck and pained," he writes, "by the discomfort of this depreciated religion. I suffer much from being obliged to give the sacraments to people in whom there is no inward response. I would like to bring them the Good News, but they have become so inured to it as to see in religion nothing but a kind of social conformity and to be able no longer to understand that it has any meaning beyond baptism, communion, marriage, and burial." In lands in which the Christian message is unknown and is seen to involve an entirely new outlook on life, there is a greater prospect of its finding a welcome among those who have become dissatisfied with traditional ideas and ways of life. It has been remarked that the unsurpassed contribution of the early fathers to Christian theology may have its explanation in the fact that practically all of them up to St. Augustine, and even after him, were converts from paganism and embraced the Christian faith as offering a more adequate interpretation of the meaning of life than the systems in which they had been reared. Transplanted to new soil the church may gain a fresh access of vigour and an enriched understanding of its faith, which will in turn set in motion new vitalizing currents in the older church of the West.

Unhappy is the man for whom his own mother has not made all other mothers venerable.—Richter.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Now I have done six days at the Orphanage, and what fine full days they have been! It is somewhat like being initiated into a lodge with some one taking you by the hand and leading you around. Sometimes it is a tiny little girl leading me. She talks and her little eyes sparkle and I look somewhat amazingly at her with "Marlene, how old are you?" and she replies, "I do not know." But she does know her way around, and she will soon be four. I sat under the big trees for a minute before coming in to write this letter and she saw me and came running. Close on her heels was Jackie. If you do not know Jackie you have missed a charming little fellow just above four, and he is heart-high to everybody that looks into his beautiful brown eyes. And there followed Richard, and Ruthie, and Tommy (she is a girl, too), and Doris . . . well, they increased until I told them I had to go write for THE CHRISTIAN SUN. And just to show you Marlene knows her way around she asked me in all seriousness if I were going to put her name in the paper!

How fine I felt when two or three big boys came up to me as I was escorting a goodly group of visitors from the Valley of Virginia Conference who caught me just before I got into the office to write this letter, to ask me if they might go to the movies—a privilege which they have occasionally. These boys in their teens were so well-mannered and courteous that my guests remarked on the fine fellows here in the Orphanage. I escorted the guest through the three main buildings. They were pleased with what they saw, and I carried them to the dairy and the big hay barn. I told them about the devotionals before each meal in every dining room, and how reverent the children are according to the matrons' story. I shall see for myself occasionally and pray a prayer for them, too.

I hurry to Greensboro with two boys who are being treated there. I hold conferences with staff members. I write letters. I delve into business problems and take questions to Mr. V. R. Holt. I find every day full. But there are the charming children and the kind neighbors and a moment to relax and thank God for the hundreds of Orphanage friends and for the joy of serving.

WHY I WANT TO BE A MINISTER.

to Gaza, but there is also the same Christ along the Damascus Road to whom must be asked, "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?"

Another test after my decision I had to meet as I began my college preparation. Through a bitter experience I learned that the church, though following the perfect Example, is not in itself a perfect organization. That it consists of human beings, who are capable of making mistakes, and who too often capitalize on their humanness. I was embittered, not at the outcome of the experience, but the way the matter was handled. Then for some time I searched for the answer to how a church, using standards even below good business, could hope to redeem this world. I found no solution until I felt the impact of these words: "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God. . . ." Forget everything—material wealth, personal gain, public honor—and work only for His Kingdom.

Not long ago in wondering what part is mine to build in this Kingdom, I realized my share would be but a small part. I began to relax, as the dreams of greatness seemed to melt away. And there came a certain sense of security that comes from knowing that there is reasonable livelihood ahead for one and that one need not strain for it. But again and again I am stirred with the words of Jesus: "No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back is fit for the Kingdom of God." The Kingdom is coming, and I want to look forward for my part, small or great, so that I may be a part of that Realm.

Finally, in becoming a minister I found before me the unavoidable question of success. In college, success is mostly measured by material standards. To Christ I do not think material possessions and the spiritual Kingdom blended together. Therefore, to work for a higher salary, or to aspire for a more prominent pulpit, should not be in the heart of a minister. It is human for anyone to do so; it is Christian to put Christ first and only. This success that Christ stands for is best expressed, it seems to me, in the words of Paul: "In Jesus Christ I die daily." My ambition is to remove successfully my daily short comings that I may more and more die daily for Christ.

I want to be a minister because I believe that is what God wants me to be. I was not sure when I first decided, and I still wonder why He chose me. I want to be a minister not because I think I can be "a good minister of Christ," but that that Christian life is a constant growth, that "he will teach (me) in the same hour what I ought to say." Timothy was not the best man Paul could have chosen, but he was of one mind with Paul, working the Lord's work, seeking the things of Jesus Christ. To serve Christ and His Kingdom, that is why I want to become a minister.—(Used in the Central Pennsylvania Methodist Youth Fellowship publication.)

What religion needs today is not more flying with God, or leaping with God, or jumping up and down with God, or going into spasms and convulsions and epileptic fits with God. What religion needs today is more walking with God.

PLANNING YOUR FALL PROGRAM?

Even a city congregation can find vital meaning in a service of thanks and praise for the fruits of the harvest, Dr. Benson Y. Landis, secretary of the Protestant inter-council Committee on Town and Country, said this week in a message urging all Protestant churches, both rural and urban, to set aside one Sunday between now and November for a special Harvest Festival service.

From earliest times, people of all lands and faiths have celebrated the harvest, in primitive folk festivals, in the great Hebrew feasts of Succoth and Pentecost, in the English "Harvest Home," the German "Erntedankfest," the Scottish "Kirn" and the American thanksgivings of the Pilgrim fathers, Dr. Landis pointed out.

In churches today, however, Thanksgiving has come to be a remembrance of national blessings rather than those of nature, he added.

"Although only a few groups, such as the Lutheran, Reformed, Brethren, Mennonite and Moravian, have maintained the separate tradition of the 'harvest home,' it is one we might all observe," Dr. Landis said. "The cycle of growth and fruition, with its evidences of mystery and providence, has a vital meaning for all mankind, city-dwellers and country people alike."

Dr. Landis' message accompanied the eighth annual leaflet of his committee which has a suggested Order of Service for the harvest festival, including hymns, special readings and offerings of appropriate harvest fruits and clothing which could later be distributed to charitable organizations or needy individuals. The Sunday may be chosen according to the time of the area's harvest, the leaflet suggests.

Prepared by the Rev. Theodore A. Rath, Frenchtown, N. J., director of town and country church work of the Synod of New Jersey, Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., the leaflet is available for 5c a copy from the Home Missions Council, 297 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y., and rates are available on quantities.

group her own age, "Then you won't have to run away for excitement," he said.

The girl returned the next night with 15 friends who formed the nucleus of the parish's teen-age group. The group set to work on a health and housing survey for the East Harlem District Health Council. Later they helped round up 2,000 neighbors for free chest X-rays. When warm weather came, they organized a festive street carnival and a block party for over 300 people.

While the teen-agers were easily accessible, their parents were a tougher problem.

The parish finally found the solution in a revival of the ancient Christian tradition of the Agape Meal—the "love feast." Since the people were reluctant to come to church, the church went out to them. Small groups were organized in each apartment house to meet in one member's flat with the minister for a light meal, prayer and the reading of the scriptures, which were then related to an immediate problem—cleaning a vacant lot, helping a sick neighbor, getting better garbage disposal or heat for a building.

As they faced their mutual problems together, they were led into a closer relationship with the church. And people who had felt alone in a hostile world discovered a sense of belonging and a new dignity in acting together for a better as well as a more Christian life.

The Agape Meal has served to break down barriers between the church and the people. It, along with other activities, like taking kids to the country, representing their parishioners in court, getting medical aid for the sick, has also given the ministers a deeper understanding. Hargraves recently wrote in a report:

"As we dig into some of the immediate problems of human need, better housing, better health, a little more fun for the kids and little more hope for their parents, we break through into ever deeper human problems. It is then that the message of the Gospel has its real relevance, then that it must speak to these men and women, who like the rest of us, are alienated from God and full of antagonism toward their fellowmen."

FIRST TV RELIGIOUS NEWS PROGRAM LAUNCHED.

in Raleigh, North Dakota, but wearing ordinary clothing, in compliance with state legislation outlawing the wearing of a religious garb by a public school teacher.

The story of Dr. Ralph Bunche, former special representative of the United Nations in the Palestine dispute, turning down a job as Under-Secretary of State, because of Jim Crow policies in the nation's capital, was illustrated by picture of Dr. Bunche in a happier mood, receiving a medal as "father of the year."

A regular feature of the program is "pictures that tell their own story." A typical story follows: "Here is a Protestant church service in an unusual place. You could never guess this location. It is the plaza of the Imperial Palace in Tokyo, Japan. Imagine an Easter Service in the Palace Grounds of the Emperor of Japan."

And another: "This is a new kind of paint shop. And a new kind of sign painter. Harrison Mayes is a coal miner in Kentucky, but by avocation, he is a preacher. He does his preaching, however, by brightly painted signs which he has posted in all parts of the United States, and many foreign countries. There's more than one way to preach your religion."

Now seen every two weeks, the program requires two full days of work (besides initial planning), and an afternoon, the day of production, for camera rehearsal and preparations at the studio. Five scripts are required for production personnel.

The two commentator-clergymen, experienced radio broadcasters, know that they have a big job ahead of them. Comparing their experiences in video and radio, they had this to say:

"The medium of television requires more creative and technical preparation, greater financial expenditure, and extended hours for planning, writing and production."

At this stage, the program represents a pioneering venture on the part of local councils of churches, who were the first to come forward with a religious news program for television.

Dependence and obligation are related to each other as the wings of a bird, which, being opposite and of equal size, sustain the bird in its course without difficulty as it pursues the even tenor of its course; but let it attempt flight bereft of one of the wings, and its futile effort is evidenced at once as it flutters to the ground in utter confusion. So, too, the man who boasts of a life of independence, who spurns all offers of aid, and turns a deaf ear and unseeing eye on those things others furnish him, or lives for self only, with never a smile bestowed nor a word of cheer or encouragement spoken—such a man is never a success, nor is he happy.—Nichol.

Why I Want to be a Minister

(A Letter from a Junior in a Pennsylvania College)

I have not always wanted to be a minister. Like most American boys I dreamed once of becoming a big league baseball star. After the fading of this dream I looked with more seriousness toward the life of a cartoonist, and through most of my high school I carried a sketch book with me, sketching everything in sight—and some I did not see. I do not know exactly when I began considering being a minister. The fact is I did not decide completely at one time, but one experience led me to another until I realized finally I wanted nothing but to be a minister.

One night while working on a drawing I began, for some reason, to consider my future then as a cartoonist. What if I would become a successful cartoonist? A home, cartoon fans, a new convertible—all that! But what could I say for myself at the end of such years? Then something inside made me admit I wanted more from living in this world. I wanted people to remember me for the accomplishment of some good work. Although I went no further that night, I took a forward step by finding for the first time a sense of service.

The following summer I worked in a textile mill where during lunch hour I spent my extra time either sketching or reading. About the end of the summer I realized I was more interested in reading than in sketching. The book I happened to be reading was "How to Illustrate Sermons." This to me was another practical experience, and another forward step.

That year at school I went a little further. Our class one day began discussing future vocations. When my turn came to express my desire, I said, "I don't know—perhaps a minister." Afterwards I thought regretfully about the incident. After all, had I not often asked His guidance—especially before a Spanish test? I decided then that if I would expect Him to help me in school, I must also in school stand by Him.

After these three and other experiences I decided I wanted to become a minister of the Christian gospel. But not with trumpet blare, or flare of colors, or rush of mighty wind, was this decision made. It came as "a still small voice." At first I did not hear, and when I heard I did not recognize; it came at my own prayer corner, where I had even prayed that I would not have to become a minister. Gradually however I began to see that His Will was for me to become a minister. I launched out and thought I knew where I was going. But Columbus, I do not think, was more surprised. For I, too, found a new world, full of a glorious new future.

Deciding to be a minister and becoming one I have since found are two different things. Several since my initial decision have explained to me how they almost became ministers. Only recently one person said: "You know, it wouldn't take much for me right now to become a minister." But how much? They have decided, almost, but as yet they have not launched out into the fathomless waters to find the thrill of Christian adventure. Becoming a minister today is to me first of all a challenge. There is the same thrill of the Holy Spirit that "caught away Philip" from the road (Continued on page 14)

Making Your Minister

By FREDERICK M. ELIOT

Of course, the plain fact is that any minister is largely the product of his parish. It is easy to forget this, and to talk as though the minister would be just what he is in any church—just as successful or unsuccessful, just as good or poor a preacher, just as wise or unwise a counsellor, just as assiduous or lazy, in whatever place he might have found himself. Sometimes I have to listen to laymen who tell me that their minister “isn’t the same man we called two years ago,” and they usually seem very much astonished by the discovery. But how could he be “the same man?” He cannot help changing, and the direction of the change will be largely determined by his people.

A church can build up its minister into a true servant of mankind and God. It requires patience, and courage, and kindness. Patience, to listen and understand and wait; courage, to speak out in defense and in helpful criticism; kindness, to create the bonds of mutual confidence and goodwill that hold minister and people together. A church can even make its minister a great preacher—not, perhaps, by popular standards, but by the true measure of greatness in the pulpit. Best of all, a church can make its minister a power for personal and social and civic righteousness such as he himself could never have become—or dared to dream of becoming—alone.

News Flashes

The resignation of the Rev. Peter Young as pastor of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, has been announced.

Homecoming Day will be observed at Bethel Church, Valley of Virginia, on Sunday. Dr. W. T. Walters, a former pastor, will be the guest speaker.

Supt. and Mrs. W. T. Scott were on the faculty of the Senior Camp at John's River, North Carolina, for the past two weeks. Dr. Scott taught a course on "Our Church and the Whole Church." Mrs. Scott taught "Music in the Church."

The Rev. W. T. Scott, Jr., supplied the Sanford pulpit the first two Sundays in August. Mr. Scott will complete his undergraduate work at Elon College this summer and enter the Yale Divinity School in the fall.

The Rev. Robert Lee House, pastor of our Richmond Church since 1940, announced his resignation last Sunday in order to accept a call to The Church of Wide Fellowship, Southern Pines, North Carolina. Mr. House will conclude his Richmond pastorate October 31.

HAPPY HOME VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

The Happy Home Vacation Bible School was held July 11-16. There were 180 children enrolled.

During the opening exercises each day, Miss Clarice Gunn, director of the school reviewed our foreign mission study book, The Watch Goat Boy. At the conclusion of the school, an offering was received for the Jacksons.

The entire school used the "Life of Jesus" for its study during the week. The worship services were planned around this theme. Splendid notebooks and projects were completed in the various departments and were displayed when "Open House" was held following the commencement program on Sunday, July 17. The Intermediate Department edited and published a newspaper which contained news summarizing the work done in each department.

Teachers in the school were: Beginner's Department—Miss Barbara French, Mrs. Harold Hill, Mrs. William Sheffield and Mrs. Robert Watkins; Primary Department—Miss Margie Strader and Miss Anne Ward; Junior Department—Mrs. Raymond Daniel, Miss Mary Price Dix, Mrs. Leonard Gillie and Miss Helen Powell; Intermediate Department—Mrs. Edwin Hill and Mr. Harold Strader; Music—Miss Theodora Carter and Miss Louise Sparks.

Mr. Page Owens contributed greatly to the success of the school by keeping the building and helping on the playground and other places where he was needed during each session.

WHOM WE REMEMBER.

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN.

We remember people not by their wealth or by their poverty; not by their wisdom or by their nativity; not by their greatness or by their commonality; not by their genius or by their simplicity; not by their success or by their failure but by their kindness. Memory enshrines those who are good, those who are true, those who are kind. And "kindness is to do and say the kindest things in the kindest way." We soon forget those who are selfish, those who are false, those who are ruled by hate. But we never can forget those who are kind.

pastor of the Blacksburg Methodist Church, flew to Brussels, Belgium, from Idlewild Field, N. Y., on June 25. He was accompanied by his son, Jim, who is a junior at Randolph-Macon College.

On June 28 the Robisons went to Paris by train where they remained five days—sightseeing. On July 1 they went by train and boat to London, England, where they were met by Mr. Stephen Thorne, Executive Secretary for the English Society of Friends (Quakers). Mr. Thorne took them by train to his beautiful country home at Jordans in Buckinghamshire, only a few miles from Windsor Castle.

On Sunday morning the Robisons attended worship at the Jordans' Friends Meeting House, where William Penn and his family worshipped. The Penn family are buried in front of the Meeting House door in a beautiful garden. After the morning meeting the Robisons and Thorne walked through beautiful gardens and parks—stopping for a brief visit to the Friends' Hostel—a group of very old buildings where weary travelers and holiday seekers may stay for a few days in an atmosphere of quiet and beauty. One of the buildings of the Hostel is an old barn built from the remains of the Mayflower.

On Sunday afternoon the Robisons took a bus for Windsor where they visited one of England's most ancient towns, including Windsor Castle, the country home of the Royal family, and Eton College established in 1440 by Henry VI. Within the Castle walls is St. George's Chapel where Henry VIII and many of his wives are buried. The Castle in its earliest parts dates back to the Dawn of English History. In a private tomb in the garden lie buried Queen Victoria and Prince Albert. The Castle overlooks the Thames River and has some of the most beautiful gardens in all England. These gardens, the Chapel and many of the rooms of the Castle are open to visitors every day except Friday—which is reserved for "clean-up" day.

On July 6 the Robisons joined forces with a group of churchmen who had come from the United States to study the relation of the Church to the British Labor Movement and to learn something of the present Socialist Government in meeting the needs of post-war life among the British people. The group was under the direction of Dr. Willard Uphaus, Executive Secretary of the Religion and Labor Foundation, New Haven, Connecticut.

The party went places, interviewed members of Parliament, Cabinet Ministers of the Government, talked with church leaders of the Established Church, the Methodist Church, and leaders of other Free-Churches. They studied the National Health Program and visited the coal fields of Manchester, attended the Methodist Conference in session at Liverpool, talked with church leaders working with men in the steel plants in Sheffield and spent two days with trade union leaders among agricultural workers in Northern Wales in the area of Bangor. They met Trade Union leaders, interviewed the Red Dean of Canterbury, and talked with people on trains, in buses and by the wayside. They were told that most of the program of the present Labor Government would be continued—even if the Conservatives should win the next election—which seems doubtful.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE MEETING.

The Virginia Valley Central Conference met at Palmyra Church at Edinburg, Virginia, for its annual meeting August 10 and 11, 1949. Rev. Clyde O. Koon is pastor of the church. The meeting was called to order by the president, Rev. Robert A. Whitten and the opening devotional was led by Rev. Mr. Koon. About 150 delegates were present for the conference. The theme of the conference was "The Call of Christ," and the text chosen was, "And ye shall be witnesses unto me"—Acts 1:8. Officers of the conference are: Rev. R. A. Whitten, president; Rev. R. E. Newton, vice-president; Rev. Silas E. Madren, secretary; Mr. Clarence A. Phillips, assistant secretary, and Mrs. Owen W. Andes, treasurer.

Dr. John G. Truitt, president of the Southern Convention and new superintendent of the Orphanage, brought greetings to the conference. Dr. Truitt then presented the opening address entitled, "Team Work in the Church." He stated that because the members of this conference were servants of Jesus Christ, they had come, and he challenged the group to real team work with vision and the willingness to sacrifice; that church people be cooperative and use team work in the local church. He explained the relationship between the local church and its conference and the whole Southern Convention, and urged that the conferences work together as a team of five. Dr. Truitt said that it was the business of church people to do their little part that in God's sight will be a big sight, because it is in God's sight that the Kingdom of God will come and His will be done on the earth.

The conference was saddened to learn of the death of Rev. M. L. Weekley who had long been a minister in the Valley Conference.

The second address of the morning session was presented by Rev. Frank H. Lewis, D.D., president of the Eastern Virginia Conference and pastor of the Shelton Memorial Church of Portsmouth, Virginia. Dr. Lewis gave a stirring message on the theme, "Christ's Church Must Evangelize." He used as his text Luke 19:10, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost," and he stated that the most important matter of the church is to come close to God, to evangelize men and women. The church has no other real purpose, he added; all else contributed to that. He reminded the congregation that theirs is a great commission—that of going out to evangelize. He stated that our task is great but that it is a great time to be alive and that because of Jesus Christ we can be equal to any task. Dr. Lewis closed with these words, "I can only point you to the east and assure you that the dawn will come."

The afternoon session on Wednesday was called to order by Vice-President R. E. Newton. Rev. R. D. Coulter led in the opening worship period and this was followed by the annual sermon which was delivered by Rev. Clyde O. Koon. Mr. Koon chose the topic, "Letting Ourselves Off and Down," and he challenged the conference to better and greater work in the coming year.

The presiding officer called for reports, all of which showed progress and enthusiasm of the part of the Valley Conference. Report was made that all of the Valley churches are now supplied with ministers. Rev. Emerson Rohart, new pastor of Antioch, Linville, New Hope and Beulah Churches was presented formally to the conference.

The Wednesday evening session was called to order by Rev. R. E. Newton. Young people from the Valley Pilgrim Fellowship were in charge of the worship. The worship period was followed by a sermon delivered

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

SUBSCRIPTION DEPARTMENT

Those charged with responsibility for publishing our church paper get discouraged at times. We hear about subscriptions being discontinued and the paper not being read, but "in the red." What are the explanations? Are our people immune to good reading matter or is the paper insufferably poor in content and make-up? Why do we have such a struggle in getting and maintaining subscribers? Surely there must be something radically wrong with our people or our publication—or both!

Then comes a reminder that our situation is not unique, that by and large our problems and those of other religious publications are similar if not identical. For instance, a Newsletter to a member of the United Student Fellowship carries a paragraph which reflects our common problem: "Why does 1 in 20 USF-ers take 'Intercollegian'? Because 199 cannot spare the price of a couple of shows for something to read. Because in many of our 160 USF groups there is no one who makes it his job to promote 'Intercollegian.' Because 'Intercollegian' is given only a cursory reading, and is cast aside with the remark, 'There's nothing in it to interest me.' Our paper will bear up under thorough reading, for behind the facade there is always something you are very glad you did not miss."

Substitute "The Sun" for "Intercollegian" and you have a statement which approximates our own situation. Cursory reading and lack of promotion are the bane of all religious publications.

In the face of all the usual and peculiar difficulties, we have grounds for encouragement. Many of our people and churches have responded to Supt. Scott's efforts in the promotion of subscriptions. "The Sun" representatives are rendering an invaluable service to religious journalism. New subscribers are being added from week to week. We thank God and take courage.

GOD'S TROUBADOURS

Biography is a fascinating study. This writer never tires of reading and re-reading the lives of great preachers. Many of these are found in the Bible, but extra-canonical and more recent examples abound.

Dr. J. D. Jones of Bournemouth, England, was one of the great Congregational preachers of the last generation. Here is one comprehensive paragraph which gives the heart of his biography:

"Men ask what made him so comprehensive and manysided. My answer," writes his biographer, Arthur Porritt, "would be experience. He became one of the world's greatest preachers and expositors. Why? I think again experience, experience of men and things. To preach sermons for nearly forty years, to many thousands of all sorts and conditions, must be educative.

How did he do it? No doubt there were many factors. Systematic and comforting home visitations—so-called pastoral work—created and stimulated a joint and uninterrupted cooperation between them; a careful preparation of his sermons; exceptionally good health, a personality, a soul of insight; a quiet and melodious conversational delivery; a hidden source of flame, hidden but generative. These had much to do with it. But there was something more. He was interpreter and teacher as well as being evangelist, for he possessed expository genius; and an understanding apprehension, a sympathy with wonder; and a vast experience of the hungry world of men, rich and poor. Lastly, there was the superb splendor of his message. He was God's Troubadour, who held the early ones and won the new ones."

Holding the early ones and winning the new ones; ah, that is the test of a pastoral ministry. It is not an easy achievement, but it has been and is being accomplished by many of God's troubadours.

One of the best ways of acquainting oneself with God's work is to study the lives of God's men. It has been many years since the late Dr. P. J. Kernodle wrote "The Lives of Christian Ministers." That volume served a great usefulness. Perhaps another publication of this type is overdue.

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD MISSION

The imperative need in these critical days for strong Christian churches both in America and around the world is crystal clear to even the most religiously illiterate, says Rev. R. Norris Wilson, of New York City, Associate Minister of the Missions Council, who is directing the Christian World Mission of our denomination with its goal of $6,280,000 for 1949.

With the slogan, "The Truth Shall Make You Free," Mr. Wilson is promoting a stream-lined educational and promotional program to help the Congregational Christian Churches of the country raise this money through the use of up-to-date methods including motion pictures, radio, enlistment of laymen, and a drive for an Every Member Canvass this fall in all the 6,000 churches of the communion.

DANGER OF INDIFFERENCE

A family perished, not long ago, by a fire in their own house. They were not consumed by the flames, but suffocated by the smoke. No blaze was visible at all, nor could any alarming sign of fire be discovered from the street, and yet death came as effectually upon them as if they had been burned to ashes. Thus is sin fatal in its consequences, few being destroyed by outrageous forms of it, flaming up with lurid glare, but multitudes perishing by the stifling smoke of indifference and spiritual slumber.—J. N. Norton, D. D.

The Home of the Rural Minister

By RALPH A. FELTON

The writer has just completed a study of 1,171 rural parsonages in 47 states. These represented 12 different denominations. In many cases the insurance on the parsonages was not enough to cover replacement costs, minus depreciation. The insurance on 39 per cent of them was inadequate. In 37 cases the pastors did not know whether or not there was any insurance. One fourth of the parsonages were in need of repairs. This was no doubt due to the shortage of materials and will soon be remedied. Ordinarily one per cent of the value of the parsonage should be put in the budget each year for repairs and redecorating.

The Study.

Most parsonages are built like other homes in the community and not with the special needs of the pastor's family in mind. These are all rural churches, in communities of 2,500 population or less. Rural churches, as a rule, are not kept heated during the week. Rural pastors in 87.6 per cent of the cases had their study in the parsonage and not in the church. But in the very few cases has the church equipped a study for their minister. In 31.9 per cent of the cases it was upstairs. We can hardly picture a doctor's wife sending her husband's patients upstairs to a back room.

The study should have an exterior entrance, or from the front hall. Young ministers are trained in the seminaries these days in personal counseling. The laymen can do their part by providing a well-equipped study.

It should have an extension telephone, so the pastor can talk undisturbed with his parishoners. It should have a couple of easy chairs for personal interviews. There should be a mimeograph machine and also filing cabinets. The minister needs a big flat-top desk similar to those his laymen have in their offices. And, of course, there should be ample bookshelves built around the walls.

It might seem more encouraging to say that many parsonages are beginning to provide this equipment. Forty-five per cent have a telephone in the study. One-third have separate entrances. Three out of five have installed bookshelves. Nearly half have filing cabinets for sermon material. Nearly three-fourths have a mimeograph.

Some churches take great pride in helping their pastor to become more efficient by giving him excellent equipment for his study. They provide a swivel chair for the study, table, an over-stuffed easy chair for reading, a rack to hold his many magazines, a fluorescent desk lamp, and a storage closet for supplies.

The Kitchen.

Of all the rooms in the house the kitchen was the most lacking in modern equipment. This probably has two explanations. Many of these parsonages were built before the days of modern built-in equipment. In those days they built one room with four walls and simply designated it as the kitchen. At the present time they build into the kitchen three "work centers" and they are arranged from right to left in this sequence, (1) refrigeration and food preparation, (2) sink and cleaning, (3) range and serving. This is what our home economics people call "a well-planned kitchen."

When we asked one minister's wife if she had a well-planned kitchen she said "it was not planned at all."

Probably the other reason for the lack of modernized kitchens is the fact that the church never knows what equipment the new minister will bring with him. The average tenure of the ministers in these rural churches was 5.7 years. Any church would hesitate to change its kitchen around that often. The same would apply to the laundry equipment.

The pastor is a tenant and does not pay rent. So he makes few demands upon his landlord, the church. The laymen are interested in the parsonage, in every room in it. But there seems to be no very clear understanding as to who provides what. As a result, many things are neglected.

Our conclusion is, after studying 1,171 parsonages and conferring with the pastors, and in 60 per cent of the cases with their wives also, that churches should agree upon "standard equipment" for parsonages. All built-in or connected equipment should be provided by the church, all movable pieces should be the responsibility of the pastor's family.

If a church followed this general policy, the result in most cases would be a modernized kitchen. The pastor would appreciate the church's help and interest and would do a little more than his share.

The church would provide a gas or electric range, hot and cold running water, a sink, built-in kitchen cabinets, a storage or supply closet, counter work surfaces of proper height, a semi-indirect ceiling light and a light over each work area, adequate electrical outlets, linoleum for the kitchen floor, and an automatic refrigerator.

With such a modern kitchen as this, the pastor would do his share. He would provide the pressure cooker, the small pressure saucepan, the electric clock, the electric mixer or beater, a step-stool, an electric washer, a serving table, and all cooking utensils.

Mistress of the Parsonage.

Some busy laymen are not enough interested in the kitchen-side of life to agree wholeheartedly to such a plan as this. So let us study the matter further. Pastors' wives are the best educated group in the community and receive the least for their work. Eighty-three per cent of them attended college. Three-fourths of them had vocational or professional experience before becoming mistress of the parsonage. They were not "called" to be ministers' wives. They just fell in love with your pastor. One-third of them were trained teachers, one-third had studied music, one out of five were trained in the field of religious education. As a rule they don't hold church offices, but they do plenty of church work. They teach a Sunday School class, lead missionary meetings, help in summer conferences, go calling with their husbands, answer the telephone about twenty times a day, and open their house to some church group about once a week. In fact a pastor's wife does on an average 12 different church jobs all the time.

Now let's get back to the kitchen. Thirty-two per cent of her day's work is spent in food preparation. With all the things she has to do in the church and community, for which she receives no compensation, she surely should have a modern kitchen. She spends a little over seven hours a week washing dishes. Isn't it fair to give her a kitchen sink of the right height. If some "important church trustee" would work seven hours a week over a sink that was too low he would fix it before another week passed.

Someone might say, "I thought our parsonages were pretty well equipped." The facts are that in one parsonage out of five the cooking and canning is still done over an old coal

A REPORT FROM THE VIRGINIA INTER-DENOMINATIONAL RELIGIOUS WORK FOUNDATION.

"Chaplain, will you go to see my girl friend?" The young man, scarcely more than a boy, had no family and only one brother who at that time was in the Army overseas, and the chaplain was interviewing him on his admission to the State Penitentiary. Chaplain Frazer agreed to see the "girl friend" and asked for her name. Peculiarly, the young man did not know her family name. He did not know her street number and he did not know the name of the street on which she lived, but he told the chaplain that he and Betty were planning to be married just before he got into trouble. Chaplain Frazer said how did you find Betty when you went for a date? And he explained that he rode a street car to a certain point and transferred to a bus and when the bus went up over a hill and made a right hand and then a left hand turn, and "then you go one block and walk down the street three blocks and Betty lives in the third house on the right hand side." With these instructions Chaplain Frazer found Betty. There are those who will say that such an errand has nothing to do with religious work in state institutions, but the Rev. Emmet M. Frazer, Director of Religious Work in State Institutions, believes that any service which helps to restore fellowship between the individual and his fellowman and between the individual and his God is included in the program of religious work in state institutions. Chaplain Frazer believes that letters from friends and relatives do much to help a prisoner maintain his self respect, his faith in God and in himself. There is a tendency for those who feel that "nobody cares whether I'm living or dead" to become careless and cease desiring to live better lives. Without this desire rehabilitation is doubtful.

Sunday morning finds Chaplain Frazer setting out to visit institutions to conduct worship services according to a definite schedule. For example, on the fourth Sunday of each month he has a worship service at the State Farm from nine to ten, visits patients in the hospital at the State Farm from ten until eleven, returns to the Penitentiary at 11:45 to check and supervise three students from Union Theological Seminary who are doing field work at The Penitentiary as a part of their ministerial training. During the morning these young men have been conducting worship services for those who are in quarantine and cannot attend the regular chapel service, interviewing new men and those who request interviews because of personal problems, and visiting the sick in the prison hospital. After lunch Chaplain Frazer and one of the students from the seminary drive to the Peaks Industrial School for a worship service at 2:30 and from there to the Hanover Industrial School for a worship service at 4:00 o'clock. Five-fifty finds the chaplain returning to Richmond to join his family for dinner, unless he has accepted an evening speaking engagement at some church or young people's organization.

On the first Friday of each month Chaplain Frazer visits the Blue Ridge Sanatorium for tubercular patients in Charlottesville. He spends the entire day going from bed to bed greeting and visiting with the patients; stopping to answer questions, to make notes of letters that should be written, to make notes of Bibles or devotional literature which are requested and moving on from building to building and to the worship service which is held in the evening, by Rev. Mr. Frazer on the first Friday and by ministers of Charlottesville on the other Fridays of the month. The patients look forward to these monthly visits which do much to break the monotony of hospital routine. Some requests have no relation to religious work and yet the chaplain thinks of them as important. Not too long ago one of the patients called the attention of the chaplain to a young girl who had been a patient for a long time, and now that she was strong enough to get out of bed for one meal a day, she could not go to the dining room because she had no clothes to wear (she was just a little girl when she came to Blue Ridge). The young woman had no family to do anything for her and the chaplain came back to Richmond and told the story to a ladies sewing circle. In short order clothes were made and delivered and by that Samaritan gesture, the hope and confidence of a young woman were restored. Her health improved steadily and she is today healthy, happy and devotedly religious. On the third Friday of each month Chaplain Frazer goes to the Piedmont Sanatorium for tubercular patients, at Burkeville, Virginia. At this institution he not only visits the patients but presents a program of moving pictures in the evening.

Miss Erma J. Barker, secretary to Mr. Frazer, promotes a Christmas stocking project for the inmates of state institutions. In September she buys bolts of material and passes this material to various groups who cut and sew the stockings. Most of this work is done by the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Mark's Episcopal Church and by the inmates at the State Industrial Farm for Women who have volunteered this service from year to year. When the stockings are all prepared they are distributed to various Sunday school classes, church societies and individuals who undertake to fill them according to a list provided in order to assure uniformity. A typical stocking will contain, for a boy, a cake of toilet soap, a candy bar, mixed nuts, game, tooth brush, handkerchief and comb. Similar items are included for girls, and for men and women. For Christmas, 1948, Miss Barker secured and Mr. Frazer distributed 2,278 stockings to boys and girls in the sanatoria and industrial schools, and to men and women in the hospitals, sanatoria and prisons.

A chaplain's work is not all dreary, sometimes it is even humorous. Not so long ago a Negro prisoner came to the chaplain to complain that he had been sent to prison and that he was innocent. The chaplain listened while the prisoner told the story and insisted that he had committed no crime. After he had unburdened himself, he said, "I've done lots of things that I did not get caught for. Last night I was adding up the time that I would probably have gotten if I had been caught and, you know, it added up to just about 15 years that I got for something I didn't do. I guess it balances out after all." A less humorous instance is brought to mind of a Negro who came to the chaplain's office and said, "These mens ain't treatin' me right. I was sentenced for three years and they got it down six years, and that ain't right."

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

HOUSING PROBLEM AT ELON COLLEGE.

In the Spring of 1943 a contingent of the Army Air Force was assigned to Elon College for training. The contingent assigned numbered 250. The regular enrollment of the college was approximately 300. Adding this number of students required additional faculty members. The college owned only one faculty house and there were none in town for rent. The Dr. J. O. Atkinson house was for sale. The college purchased the house and made it into a four-family apartment. This eased the situation for a brief season only. In 1946-47, we failed to secure two efficient educators for our faculty because of unacceptable living conditions. It became evident that if Elon College was to have a good faculty that provisions would have to be made for acceptable living conditions. In the summer of 1948 the college constructed seven faculty homes. In the spring of this year, the college faced again the necessity of providing additional homes for additional faculty members. Consequently, there are being erected at this time one large dwelling designed to accommodate a professor with a large family and a duplex house. The apartments in this consist of six rooms and bath each. In addition to these two homes, the college has this week acquired the Reverend L. I. Cox home. This is a large house and will accommodate three families. These additions to the college plant are expensive but they are valuable additions and will mean a continuous income to the college. All buildings are paid for in full with the exception of the ones being constructed and the one acquired this week. Arrangements have been made whereby these will be paid for by the spring of 1950.

It was not desirable that the college make these investments but it was inevitable if we are to secure and maintain the grade of professors that Elon College should and must have. These improved living quarters contribute perceptibly to the morale and satisfaction of our faculty.

Body of 1949-50 in the Student Handbook:

We are living in an advancing age. Everything moves forward. Progress demands new avenues and opens new roads. Obstacles appear and new difficulties are encountered. Nothing threatens to halt our advancing civilization other than ignorance and war. In this particular, man is the answer. He is made in the image of God and should seek and abide by the will of God.

To be able to cope with the hindrances of the march of civilization, man must in reality be a new man, new in body, mind and spirit. There are two definite forces that strive to make him a new being, education and religion. Education gives information and guidance. It strives to give you a healthier and stronger body and a more alert mind. Religion seeks to relate you to God that you may share His wisdom, His vision, and His courage.

On Elon College campus, you will find education at its best and religion at its work. In the classroom, you will meet men and women who have spent their lives up to the present moment gathering information and enriching their experiences by imparting to those who have sought and who seek. In the classroom, on the campus, in chapel, and in church you will discover a spirit and encounter an atmosphere that will remind you of the finer things of life and cause you to seek Him whose we are and whom we serve.

At Elon College, education and religion are regarded as essential to the proper development and sure guidance of college men and women for the days and years that lie ahead. In this little booklet, you will find recorded some of the ideals, wishes and injunctions of Elon College. They are meant for your advancement and happiness. Elon College is delighted to have you as a student and wishes for you every possible success. All that the college has and is are placed at your disposal. Make the best of it.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

There seems to be a difference in an outright gift and an apportionment. A gift, as a rule, is voluntary. The contribution is made out of the benevolence of the contributor's soul. An apportionment, as a rule, is worked out in consideration of a need and made to the individuals or churches who are expected to meet that need. It is understood that an apportionment is assigned in due consideration of certain benefits received from the cause supported. It certainly has been the aim of Elon College and is its main purpose today to make contributions to the church and the cause of Christian education through the church in excess of any support that may have been given by the church. The college welcomes and is always glad for any opportunity to render specific service, as well as an overall contribution to the whole program of our church. It has dedicated itself to the cause of Christian education and proposes to train young men and young women who come to its campus in the spirit and atmosphere of our Christian religion. An apportionment paid to Elon College is an investment made in human life which we hope will bear rich dividends as the years come and go.

Many churches today want diplomas behind their pulpits instead of prophets. They want glad-hand artists who will pat people on the back and tell them they are wonderful. They want good "mixers" but God wants good "separators."

Christian Missions

At Home and Abroad

CHINESE CHURCH ASKS WITNESS, NOT RETREAT.

"We need a Church of Witness, and not a Church in Retreat," says a report on Christian work in Communist areas of China which was presented to Dr. John R. Mott, vice-president of the International Missionary Council, on his visit to Shanghai in early April, 1949.

"I believe that a church with strong Chinese leadership and a well planned social program has a bright future in China," asserted the author of the report, an experienced Chinese Christian. "We need men of faith and courage to cooperate with laymen to work for the Kingdom. A paid ministry may not be able to function, but a church emphasizing a lay program will have a good chance."

1. There are generally three stages in the Communist attitude to Christian work in newly occupied areas. There is first a Period of Tolerance and Freedom, next a Period of Toleration with Control and third, a Period of Opposition. Communist leaders have made pronouncements that there will be freedom to practice religion; there will also be freedom to criticize, ridicule and oppose religion.

2. During the past six months, country churches have experienced more restrictions and difficulties than city churches in Communist areas.

3. In the city churches, morale is good and in some cases more people attend than before liberation.

4. Many western missionaries remain at work in liberated areas. It is almost certain that the chances of continuing medical and educational work of certain kinds are better than for direct religious work.

5. Chinese pastors may not solicit funds from church members—they may in some cases receive voluntary contributions. Many church workers are already earning their living in secular occupations—some are farming, others sell bean curd and still others make soap.

6. Church buildings are considered as public property by the Communists. The buildings are often used for public meetings, sometimes at the very time arranged for Sunday worship. This has generally happened in rural districts.

7. Church property acquired by Chinese churches with money raised in China is generally not interfered with by Communistic authorities.

8. Most Christian schools are carrying on. Many of them face financial difficulties as in some places fees cannot be collected from students. In each school there is a student council, recognized by the Communist educational authority, and this council sometimes exercises the final authority in matters of administration.

9. Christian hospitals have had varied experiences. In some cases hospitals cannot collect fees from patients but are obliged to maintain a large staff. Some hospitals have continued to operate with little interference.

10. In many cases Christian institutions now have to pay heavy property taxes. Formerly, schools and hospitals which were registered and recognized as charitable bodies paid almost no taxes.

11. Communist policy in relation to churches and Christian institutions is not uniform—in some places Communist officials have been friendly and helpful, in other places markedly antagonistic.

12. Money for Christian work has been sent to Communist areas in a good many cases through commercial transfers. It seems likely that this cannot continue.

THE HOME OF THE RURAL MINISTER.

or wood stove. There could be an electric range in the kitchen since in 94 per cent of the cases electricity is available. One kitchen sink out of six is not "satisfactory." One parsonage out of seven still uses an old ice box instead of an automatic refrigerator. The work surfaces in one-fifth of the kitchens are not of the proper height.

Please don't get the idea that the pastors' wives are complaining. We didn't get a half dozen complaints out of 1,171 cases.

We expect the parsonage to be a model of happy living for the community. We should make it a model of good housekeeping.

Wash Day.

Suppose we send a committee around to inspect the parsonage on Monday morning. Sunday is just over and our pastor's wife attended every service. She was a substitute teacher in the morning and she had some of the young people "drop in" after the evening service. Most of us didn't know it but she made some sick calls with her husband on Sunday afternoon. We appreciate all she does. After each church service we shake hands with her as well as with her husband just to try to show our appreciation. But now it is Monday morning—wash day!

She is using the old-fashioned galvanized iron or heavy wooden tubs (in 61.6 per cent of the cases). One member of the visiting committee would probably suggest stationary tubs with a floor drain. In over a third of the parsonages, the water is being heated on the stove. Someone suggests an automatic water heater. In only one out of three cases is the laundry on the main floor. There is the running up and down steps to the basement.

The committee probably wouldn't stay till the end of the washing and ironing, but they would stay long enough to decide on a few things. They would need to stay nearly five hours to see the end of the routine work of washing and ironing each week.

The average pastor's wife spends 4.68 hours a week at washing and ironing or 243 hours a year.

There are automatic washers available. The clothes are put in, the controls are set, the soap is added, and there is nothing more to do until the clothes are ready for the line. The machine fills itself with water, washes the clothes, rinses them and spins them until they are nearly dry. There is no stooping, no lifting, no heavy sheets to rinse, no backaches.

The wife of one rural pastor wrote thus about her automatic washer: "The church should by all means provide as standard equipment in the parsonage an automatic washer. It is the most important of all the time-saving and labor-saving devices for the minister's wife. My only regret is that I did not have it ten years ago when I was a young bride. What time it would have saved me for other worthwhile things. What anxiety it would have kept from me, when concern over two growing boys vied with the drudgery of soiled clothes. The combination of an automatic washer and an ironer in my experience is more important as a strength saver than a time saver."

WOMEN TO MEET WITH N. C. COUNCIL OF CHURCHES AT HIGH POINT.

When the North Carolina Council of Churches meets in annual session on Tuesday, September 13, at High Point, the North Carolina Council of Church Women will also hold their annual session. The place of meeting is the First Presbyterian Church, North Main Street.

Registration begins at 9:30 a. m. and the opening devotional service begins at 10:00. The business session and program of the North Carolina Council of Church Women, with Mrs. C. C. Todd, president, presiding, follows. During this time, Miss Mabel Head of New York will conduct a Workshop on "Conferring About Council Work and Problems."

A Workshop on Evangelism led by Dr. Forrest C. Weir of Atlanta will come at 10:20. At various times through the day Miss Sarah Little, Presbyterian Youth Director, will present audio-visual aids.

At the Council Luncheon at St. Mary's Episcopal Church, 12:30, Miss Mabel Head, official observer at the United Nations for the United Council of Church Women, will address the group on "The Church and the United Nations."

The business session of the North Carolina Council of Churches will begin at 1:45. This will include election of officers, committee reports, and an address on "The United Evangelistic Advance" by Dr. Forrest C. Weir.

The Fellowship Banquet will be served at 5:30 by the host church. At this time, Dean J. H. Satterwhite will speak on "A Panorama of Past Achievements and Future Forecast."

The Ecumenical Service of Worship will be held in the Sanctuary of the First Presbyterian Church, with the host pastor, Rev. Paul Tudor Jones presiding. Music will be presented by the choir of the host church, the new officers will be installed by Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, president of the North Carolina Council of Churches. An address, "The Evangelistic Task of the Church," will be presented by Dr. George D. Kesley.

Reservations for the luncheon and banquet should be made at once, and must be in by Friday noon, September 9.

Women: Try to attend the meeting of the North Carolina Council of Churches—all women—not just the President of the Local Council of Church Women. It is both inspiring and instructional. It is just a one-day meeting, and should be fairly accessible to all.

BEREA (NANSEMOND) WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The women of Berea (Nansemond) Woman's Missionary Society have enjoyed a good year of Christian fellowship under the leadership of Mrs. Lowry A. Daniels, our capable president.

The programs for each monthly meeting have been inspirational and interesting. The Bible Study of Galatians, The Gospel Unlimited by Dr. Ferris E. Reynolds, was taught in a most comprehensive manner by Mrs. Herbert Harrell. The good women of Liberty Spring Church invited our Woman's Missionary Society to meet with them in the study of the Home Book, On Our Own Doorstep. Three of our women taught the book and the women of Liberty Spring were gracious in their hospitality by serving a delicious luncheon.

In May, our kind neighbors, the women of the Bethlehem Christian Church, gave us the wonderful opportunity of joining with them in their church and hearing Mrs. Frank Morgan in her usual competent manner give a most interesting review of the Foreign Study Book on China. The women of Berea led the opening devotional service, which was based on May Fellowship Day. At the conclusion of the afternoon program, the ladies of the Bethlehem society served a lovely tea in the social room of the church to friends and guests present.

One of the happiest experiences and privileges of the year was when the Spring Rally of the Suffolk District met at Berea (Nansemond). Approximately 225 attended the meeting. The program for the day was inspiring with good speakers who brought us challenging missionary messages. There was beautiful music and delightful fellowship. At the noon hour, all drove to Plante's Club on the Nansemond River, where our women served luncheon.

The Berea Missionary Society does not have a large membership, but the women work together in unity and a fine spirit of cooperation exists. Our loyal and faithful pastor and his wife, Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson, are at all times a great help.

THE CHURCHMAN'S CREED FOR AN AMERICAN.

The following appeared in a recent issue of The Churchman, issue of April 1, 1949, and is from the pen of its editor, Rev. Dr. Guy Emery Ship-ler:

"I believe in America—an America which stands for the equal rights of all to life, to liberty and to the pursuit of happiness; which stands for duties as well as rights; which puts people first and things second; which rejects hatred and intolerance, the bulwarks of slavery, and cherishes goodwill and understanding, the bulwarks of freedom.

"I believe in America—an America fashioned from the fibre of many races and people, where none shall know discrimination and all shall have respect; an America where the decencies of brotherhood can be practiced under a common Fatherhood; where sacredness of the individual is not lost under the domination of the state, and when the church of God speaks not with the voice of a dictator but with the Voice of God.

"I believe in America—an America strong through the high warrants of the Bill of Rights—the rights of freedom of speech, freedom of press, freedom of assembly and freedom of religion; an America which stands not for selfish isolation but for courageous cooperation with all men and nations of goodwill; which dares to dream of a Kingdom of God on earth, when wars shall have ceased throughout the world and the principles of the Prince of Peace, of Love and Brotherhood, shall rule in the hearts of all men everywhere.

"I believe in America—an America which shall be the consummation of all the Utopian dreams of all the dreamers of the world—A Commonwealth of Goodwill.

"I believe in America."

LITTLE FRIENDS:

When you read this I shall be at Massanetta Springs in the Valley of Virginia. I shall be there if my family stays well I will be able to go. Massanetta is near Harrisonburg and is very beautiful. The hotel is on top of a hill and the building where services are held is on a higher hill so that newcomers and oldsters often puff and groan as they make the ascent. When I go up the hill and the congregation is already singing I often think of the ancient Hebrew song, "Who shall ascend unto the hill of the Lord, and who shall stand in his holy place?" Do you know the answer. It is about those who have clean hands and pure hearts.

There is a beautiful swimming pool with its blue reflecting the skies. How pleasant to swim and see the mountains in the distance. Not too far away is a middle-size mountain which I have climbed. At its top one may see for miles in the Valley. In all my travels I have never seen beauty to equal the blue of the Blue Ridge and the morning haze clearing is beyond description.

Sometimes I have heard discussion about which mountains were the loveliest. When in the Rockies one is amazed at their crags, majesty and sheer bigness. When in the Smokies one marvels at nearness of nature. The close-up scenes are exquisite. But in the Blue Ridge one sees beauty just a little bit away, and when one has crossed that mountain yet another lures one. Perhaps I love them because I have spent such pleasant hours among the hills in the Valley.

Our churches there are strong and enthusiastic. Nestled around Harrisonburg and other places are tiny rural churches that are hard to find if one is not a native, but once found what a welcome awaits and if the occasion calls for eating—what food!

If you have not seen the majesty of the hills and high places you must seek them, their quietude and peace.

DAVID GETS A NEW SLANT ON OWNERSHIP.

By JANE CARPENTER.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Mom, will you lend me fifty cents?"

"David Bristol! Dad gave you your allowance last night; why don't you take what you need from that?"

"Oh, I suppose I can, but—"

"But what?"

"Well, it's this way. I'll have to pay what I owe to Sam Done; he tires me out asking for his dollar and ten cents all the time. I'll never borrow from him again. Now, I owe Charlie Torrett more than I owe Sam, but Charlie never mentions the loan. He's a real friend. But I ought to pay him a little."

"Why do you borrow so much. David? Why don't you keep your spending within your allowance?"

"It isn't enough, Mom. Ask Dad to increase it; will you?"

"I'll see what I can do. You ought not to have to borrow."

"And do I get the fifty cents now, Mom?"

"Why do you need fifty cents?"

"All the boys are contributing toward a new baseball outfit."

"Very well, but don't ask me for any more money this month."

No., Mom, I won't."

The mother watched her tall twelve-year-old son as he strode whistling down the path. "He's such a dear!" she mused.

That evening, as the family of three sat together in the living room, Mrs. Bristol said, "Tom, could you increase David's allowance? He has to borrow, and I don't think he should do that."

Tom was a good-natured husband and father, but he was having financial worries, too.

"Two dollars a month is all I can afford, my dear," he answered. "By the way, have you paid Jack Harris, the grocer?"

"No, Tom. I was going to ask you for some more money. You see, I had to have a new hat on account of the P.T.A. meeting on Monday."

"I can't give you any more until next payday, Edith. I'm afraid you will have to send the hat back. I'm sorry."

"Send the hat back!"

"You wouldn't want to ask Mr. Harris to lend you money for a hat, would you?"

"Ask—Mr.—Harris?"

"My dear, you couldn't take the money from him without asking, could you? That would be ste—well, anyway, the facts are these. He trusted us and sent us the groceries, and they've all been used up. We can't send them back, so—"

"Yes, I see," answered his wife. "It must be the hat. I'll send it back tomorrow."

David walked quietly up to bed. In the morning his mother handed him a hatbox that was carefully addressed.

"Notice where to take this," she said.

"Yes, Mom," he answered.

Then he hesitated, put his hand into his pocket and drew out the fifty-cent piece that she had given him the day before. "Take it, Mom," he said. "I'll earn some money; I'll pay my debts and I won't borrow any more. I've made up my mind."

VIRGINIA RELIGIOUS WORK FOUNDATION.

The chaplain listened to his story and wrote to the clerk of the court where he was tried. Surprisingly, and in some manner not easily explained, duplicate copies of commitment papers had been made out for this Negro prisoner with the result that he was charged with six years instead of three. The error was corrected. The services to men who are discharged is not limited to referring them to a church, but includes such everyday matters as helping to find employment and a place to live.

One of the finest chaplain's service offered in the State of Virginia is at the Medical College of Virginia Hospital where the Rev. Mr. George Ossman is the chaplain. His program, which is sponsored by the Interdenominational Religious Work Foundation, is particularly directed to patients who are far away from home and whose pastors cannot visit them.

The most difficult part of the work of the prison chaplain is service to those whom society has condemned to die. Chaplain Frazer is personally opposed to capital punishment under any circumstances but he feels that as a representative of the Church he must render every possible service to these men. It is his custom to appoint a minister of the same race and denomination to be his spiritual adviser. This spiritual adviser visits the condemned man about once a week and attends him on the last day. Chaplain Frazer visits the men about twice a week and is present at the time of execution. He is frequently asked by those on the outside, "Do the men fight or resist when they are

PRELUDE

CALL TO WORSHIP (all): "Rise Up, O Men of God" (First and last verses).

POEM: "You—An Answer to Prayer"—

*You can be—yes, you—
An answer to prayer
There is work to be done;
A field to be won;
And millions are praying—
Hands lifted, hearts saying:
O Lord, yet how long
Until right conquer wrong?
You can answer that prayer—
You—answer that prayer.*

*Be an answer to prayer—
You—an answer to prayer;
By performing the task
God and Right of you ask;
By your courage, your smile,
Fortitude under trial;
By the good cheer you bring;
You can be—yes, you—
An answer to prayer.*

*Be an answer to prayer
You—an answer to prayer;
By doing your part
Everyday from the heart
As for Christ; everywhere
Gladly doing your share.
Money, service you give,
Live, love—nobly live
And you truly will be—
You—an answer to prayer.*

SCRIPTURE: Selected Antiphonal
Readings—

First Reader—Jesus said, thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment.

Second Reader—And the second is like unto it. Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.

First Reader—You are the salt of the earth; but if the salt has lost its taste, how can its saltiness be restored? It is no longer good for anything except to be thrown out and trodden under foot by men.

Second Reader—You are the light of the world. A city set on a hill cannot be hid, nor do men light a lamp and put it under a bushel, but on a stand, and it gives light to all in the house.

First Reader—Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and give glory to your Father who is in heaven.

Second Reader—You have heard that it was said, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth; but I say to you, do not resist one who is evil. But if anyone strikes you on the right cheek, turn to him the other also.

First Reader—Verily I say unto you, in as much as you have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.

Second Reader—But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.

First Reader—Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

Second Reader—Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: And, lo,
I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen.

STORY: "His Bread Tasted Sweet" (Stories for Junior Worship by Alice Geer Kessler)—

If you had been passing through the steel town of Aliquippa, Pennsylvania, one day in the spring of 1939, you would have seen crowds of people going inside a church.
The cars in front would have told you it was a funeral that had brought so many people here.

If you were to ask whose funeral it was your answer would be, "Mario Ezzo, the shabby little old man who was always cleaning streets."
Then you would like to have known about him and this is what you would learn.

Seven years before, Mario Ezzo left Italy to live in America. No one needed his help because he was getting old. Finally he resorted to taking money from a relief agent.

Mario was to receive $3.60 a week. Some would have grumbled because this was not enough; but not Mario Ezzo! He was really grateful and felt that he must show his appreciation. He went out into the dirtiest street and began to sweep. He swept and swept. Six hours of the day, seven days a week, Mario Ezzo could be found sweeping the streets of Aliquippa.

He whistled while he worked for he was happy. Why should he not be? He had work to do for others.
He would say, "I think this is a wonderful country. I decided I will be an honest man. They give me money to live, so I keep this town clean like table. It makes my bread taste sweeter."

This was the little old street cleaner whose funeral packed that church. The people of Aliquippa later erected a monument for this man who worked for others so humbly, yet so usefully. The inscription on the stone reads: "Work makes me feel good inside. My bread it tastes sweeter."

HYMN: "Give of Your Best to the Master" (all verses)

PRAYER (all)—Let the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, our Strength and our Redeemer. Amen.

EUROPEAN REPORT.

The party were twice tea guests of Members of Parliament, once in the House of Commons lounge and once on the terrace of the Parliament
Palace overlooking the Thames.

Special inquiry and study included Cooperatives in England. The group visited Rochdale where in 1845 the famous Rochdale Cooperatives were organized.

This was Mr. Robison's second visit to England and Europe since the war. In 1947, he visited the war-torn areas by chartered plane as a member of a group of U. S. churchmen sent out to investigate the relief needs.

Mr. Robison will be available for a limited number of engagements with interdenominational groups, clubs, civic organizations and ministerial organizations this fall and winter. If interested write to him at Box 63, Blacksburg, Virginia. He will speak on "British-American Relations,"

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

EXALTING THE WORD OF GOD.

LESSON IX—AUGUST 28, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee.—Psalm 119:11.

LESSON: Psalm 19:7-14; 105; 119.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Prov. 2:1-9.

Kant, the great philosopher, once said that there were two things that moved him to awe: "The starry heavens above, and the moral law within." Psalm 19 embodies both of these awe-inspiring factors. The first six verses which were a part of last Sunday's lesson exalt God's world; the last eight verses which are a part of today's lesson exalt God's word. The starry heavens above and the moral law within are here praised by the Hebrew song- or Psalm-writer. Whether he looked without or looked within, he was impressed by the majesty of God revealed in his works and his word.

The Word of God.

1. Its characteristics—

a. It is perfect, complete, well-rounded. It deals with principles not details and hence is timeless and eternal.

b. It is sure: a wayfaring man, though a fool need not err therein. There may be much that we cannot understand, but there is enough that we can understand to guide us aright.

c. It is right: God is fair; he does not have two sets of rules. He appeals to reason. He is just and righteous.

d. It is pure: unadulterated, all of one piece.

e. It is true and righteous altogether, and it endures forever. As Jesus said heaven and earth may pass away but his words will never pass away.

2. Its functions—

a. It restores the soul. There is renewing and re-creative power in the word of God. Its words are spirit and they are life. It is as food and drink for the soul. Man cannot live at his best without it.

b. It makes wise the simple. If the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, God's word is the basis of true education. Humble men and women become wise by mastering a knowledge of the Book.

c. It rejoices the heart. In it are many exceeding great and precious promises, the reading of which makes glad the heart of the reader. There is a sheer joy to be had from reading the Word of God.

d. It enlightens the eyes. In its light we see light and find new meaning to man's most pressing problems and the answer to his most persistent questions.

e. It warns. By them is thy servant warned. It posts danger signs at places of danger along life's pathway. It issues warnings against wrong attitudes and actions. It calls attention to evils that may come from within and without. Men need to read it to keep sensitive to all the enemies of the soul.

f. It brings reward through obedience. In keeping of them there is great reward. Righteousness may not pay in dollars and cents, but righteousness pays. And there are things more important and valuable than dollars and cents.

3. Its desirability—

More to be desired are they than gold, yea than much fine gold; sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb. It is the song-writer's way of emphasizing how precious is the word of God to the believer.

4. The Psalmist's prayer—

As he thinks of the deceitfulness of sin, as well as its dominion over people, he prays that he may have help and achieve the victory. He prays especially that he may be delivered or cleared from secret faults. He prays also that not only the words of his mouth, but also the thoughts or meditations of his heart may be acceptable in the sight of Jehovah, who is both his rock and his redeemer.

The second half of the Psalm is a worthy companion to the first part. One cannot read the Psalm in sincerity without feeling something of the majesty of God as revealed in his world and in his world, and without joining in praise and thanksgiving.

Psalm 119.

Psalm 119 is the longest chapter or section in the Bible. There are 176 verses in it. And every verse in it, except one or two, refers to the Word of God. To be sure many words are used in referring to it, statutes, word, law, commandments, precepts, testimonies, judgments, etc., but the central theme is the Word of God. Thus would the sweet singer of Israel exalt the word of God.

Furthermore he uses an interesting device to "make it stick" in memory. There are twenty-two letters in the Hebrew alphabet and the man divides his song into twenty-two verses or sections, each under a letter of the alphabet. Then each of the eight verses in the twenty-two sections begins with that letter which stands at the head of the section. In other words the first eight verses begin with Aleph the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet, the second eight verses with Beth, and so on down through the alphabet and, through the Psalm. It is quite likely that many, many Hebrews, even boys and girls, could repeat this Psalm or sing it from memory, by the use of this mnemonic device.

As has been stated above this song exalts the word of God. Like the 19th Psalm it sets forth in poetic language the characteristics, the nature, the function, the delights, the rewards, the demands, the sovereignty, the supremacy of the word of God. It also is permeated with the delights and the dividends of these words of God, and of the singer's dedication to the law. It is not surprising that this song was included in the hymn-book of the Hebrew people, because of the way in which it exalts God's word.

Our Modern Neglect of the Bible.

Perhaps it should be added that all too many Christians in our modern world do not share the Psalmist delight in and devotion to God's word. To many it is a closed book, they never open it at all. To many others it is a book which is read only on occasion or in crises. Its words are still spirit and life. And life is all the weaker because we do not search the Scriptures and in them find eternal life. For as Paul says they are able to make us wise unto salvation which is in Jesus Christ.

The best thinkers in the world have been, and are, those who are groping for the ideal. Our government seeks what its leading men conceive to be the best, the ideal, in its relationship to other nations, as well as for the citizens of our nation. The ideal has not been reached, but some progress has been made. It is the selfish man who seeks only that which will give himself pleasure. You should strive for that which will give righteous pleasure to all nations.—C. R. Nichol.

PSYCHOLOGY AND RELIGION FOR EVERYDAY LIVING. Charles T. Holman. The Macmillan Co. $2.50.

Charles T. Holman is richly qualified to write this book. He spent 25 years teaching pastoral duties in the University of Chicago. His method of work and point of view are indicated in the titles of two previous books: Getting Down to Cases and The Religion of a Healthy Mind. At present he is pastor of Union Church in Guatemala City.

The author states in the Preface: "Men everywhere and always have sought a satisfying life. But hindrances, frustrations, anxieties, disappointments, and defeats are, in varying measure, the lot of all men. How may men overcome their frustrations and defeats? How may life be brought to its true fulfilment? This book is intended to indicate how an understanding of ourselves and of the resources inherent in religious faith may assist us in achieving a full, rich and liberated life. It does not present a systematized treatment of psychology or of religion, but it does discuss some of the problems which we all face day by day as we pursue the quest for life, and inquires what help psychology and religion can give us toward finding solutions for these problems and toward realizing life at its best."

This intensely practical volume should prove helpful to parents, teachers and ministers. Here is a reservoir of psychological insight for all who face the common problems of life. Quotations from and evaluations of modern psychologists are helpful to all who seek guidance in the field of psychology. And religion is not made a footnote to a sociological and psychological study but permeates the whole.

YEARBOOK OF AMERICAN CHURCHES. 1949 Issue edited by George F. Ketcham of the Federal Council of Churches. Sowers Printing Company, Lebanon, Pa. $3.50. 200 pp. The Yearbook is the only regularly published reference volume giving up-to-date information on every religious denomination from the largest to the smallest in the United States and Canada. It is the 19th biennial issue sponsored and compiled under the auspices of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. The 1947 edition carried detailed information only on denominations with 50,000 members or more. The new issue includes detailed information on all.

The Yearbook, containing statistics and general information concerning churches and allied organizations, is an indispensable reference work. It includes a detailed directory and record of U. S. religious bodies—Protestant, Catholic and Jewish—with names and addresses of church officials. It also lists the 260 religious bodies in the United States and Canada; officers of synods, dioceses, state conferences and conventions of major denominations; state and local church federations and councils of religious education; theological seminaries, colleges and universities, religious periodicals; 200 social and civic agencies, world-wide church agencies, national cooperative religious organizations, statistics of membership and finance. There is also a directory of relief agencies, denominational and interdenominational.

NEW BAPTIST TEMPLE, AKRON, OHIO.

The recently dedicated $1,000,000 Baptist Temple at Akron, Ohio, is huge and modernistic. The pastor is Dr. Dallas F. Billington. He told the architect that he wanted a structure half between a church and a theatre, with a little of a factory thrown in for size. A one-time taxi-driver and a laborer at the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, the dedication climaxed for Dr. Billington fourteen years of planning. He founded the Temple in a school gymnasium, with a congregation of twelve persons who contributed $1.83 to start the project.

The Temple is 200 feet long, 92 feet wide and five stories high. Air-conditioned, it boasts 96 loudspeakers with special earphones for the hard-of-hearing. Its elaborate baptistry is 46 feet high and 20 feet wide.

Its complex system of lights floods the baptistry as the convert enters. The glow of the light changes from a crimson to a blue as the person is "buried" in the water. As he emerges a pure white light flashes upon him, thus symbolizing his new state. One door in the building is large enough to admit an ambulance, thus permitting ill persons to attend services on stretchers.

An estimated 38,000 persons visited the Temple at its dedication and left a free-will offering of $15,000. The parking facilities for the Temple will accommodate 1,500 cars.

THE HOME OF THE RURAL MINISTER.

House Arrangement.

There were a lot of encouraging things about this study of rural parsonages. Ninety-five per cent had running water in the house. Four parsonages out of five had a central heating plant. Twelve parsonages out of 13 were screened. (They hadn't screened the porches yet.) They had plenty of bedrooms. One parsonage out of four had four bedrooms, two out of three had three bedrooms, the rest had two. Forty per cent had a guest room. In fact twice as many had guest rooms as had a playroom for the children.

There are still improvements needed in the house arrangement. Two-thirds of the parsonages were short on storage space. One out of five is still heated with stoves. Only 12 per cent have a coal stoker, 22 per cent have oil heat. It was a little disappointing to find 347 parsonages out of 1,120 without a clothes closet in the bedrooms. Of course, those were old houses, but closets can be added, houses can be modernized!

Half of these rural ministers were reared on a farm. Nearly a third grew up in a village or town. The city provided only 21 per cent of them. We would expect them to have a family garden and berries and fruit.

The rural parsonage is a great place to raise children. There are shade trees and flowers, and recreational facilities. There are large lawns, croquet and swings for the children. In some cases there is an out-of-doors fireplace.

The wife of one rural pastor in Pennsylvania said, "A parsonage should be a model of good housekeeping and happy living for the community, and so inviting that folks will feel that they are welcome anytime for whatever reason."

It is the responsibility and the high privilege of the church to provide a modern parsonage for its minister.

To admit that you were wrong is to declare that you know more than you did yesterday, or formerly.—Nichol.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

It was plenty hot in the Valley of Virginia last week where I attended their annual conference, and made my first speech for the orphanage. I told them what I thought were the answers to a good many questions which people asked me about my job at the orphanage. "What do you do?" is a favorite one. So far, I tell them, I have visited all the dormitories, looked them over from top to bottom; talked with the matrons several times; spent much time getting acquainted with the children; visited most of the angles and acres of the farm; delved into many matters in the office; held numerous conferences with the chairman of the Board, Mr. V. R. Holt; helped several children with various problems; held a staff meeting; and a general meeting of everybody on the Hill here; gotten acquainted with several business friends in Burlington and Gibbsonville; written letters to all the trustees, and several letters to others about our work here. Of course I didn't tell the Valley Conference all these things—else they would have known as much as you do now!

One of the favorite ways of keeping me in place is to ask me, after I have told them something of the above. "Well, what are you supposed to do?" I sometimes tell them: To make a home for on toward a hundred boys and girls which will be a backlog to good living all the days of their future lives; to give them an insight into the goals and hopes and dreams which a fine boy or girl may have toward their usefulness and happiness in the world of tomorrow. (As a matter of fact meal time comes three times every day—and a bunch of hungry boys and girls are not thinking about tomorrow nearly so much as they are now!) Who looks after that? Six matrons, two in each of the three buildings, and their children helpers! It is not a system, it is a home! And there is teamwork—and a large part of the teamwork is the farm and the dairy. That is another page and will come later.

Most of all that which I wanted to say is: Thank you, God bless you, for the offerings this week and every week.

JOHN G. TRUITT,

A NEWS ITEM IN 1960.

A nation-wide strike of employers started last Thursday. This closes down every shop, store and factory in the United States. Employees are beseeching owners and managers to resume business, but they persistently refuse until their demands are met.

It seems that the employers are asking only one thing, which is that the employees shall stand one-half the worry of the business. They say they lie awake half of the night, and sometimes all night long, worrying about how they are going to raise sufficient money to meet payrolls and necessary business expenses, while the employee, when the whistle blows at three o'clock in the afternoon, goes to his home without a worry so far the business is concerned. The employers say it is unfair labor practice, and demand that responsibilities be shared equally.—Anonymous.

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE MEETS.

by Rev. William J. Andes, pastor of the United Church of Winston-Salem, North Carolina. Mr. Andes delivered an inspiring message on the theme, "Givers - Keepers." He reminded his congregation that it is only in giving that we truly receive blessings which are allowed to keep.

Dr. Truitt then had charge of a communion service. He was assisted by ministers of the Valley Conference.

The morning session on Thursday was called to order by the president and an inspirational worship service was led by Rev. Emerson J. Rohart on the theme of the conference, "The Call of Christ."

Dr. John G. Truitt delivered an address on behalf of the Christian Orphanage. He spoke on "The Church and Her Children" and he encouraged and urged that all of the churches of the Southern Convention become interested in "registering" the children of our Christian Orphanage into wholesome Christian lives. There might be young people there who would give themselves to Christian service.

Dr. F. C. Lester, Chairman of the Mission Board of the Southern Convention and pastor of the Asheboro Church, delivered a challenging message on the theme, "Missions During the Next Fifty Years." He reminded us that the world's eyes will now be on China; that the world stands on a threshold of destruction unless it can soon find its way. He told his congregation what part they could have in the great missionary enterprise: first of all, they can believe in the missionary enterprise; second, they can pray for the missionary enterprise; third, they can give to the missionary enterprise.

In the final session on Thursday, Mr. Roy A. Larrick, former president of the Valley Conference, led the group in a helpful discussion on problems which confront our laymen of today.

The officers were re-elected to serve the Conference during the year 1949-50.

A minister asked a little converted boy, "Does not the devil tell you that you are not a Christian?" "Yes, sometimes." "Well, what do you say?" "I tell him," replied the boy, "whether I am a Christian or not is none of his business."—New Encyclopedia of Illustrations.

being taken 'the last mile'?" Such questioners are surprised to hear him say that almost every man walks unaided and unafraid, having been reconciled with his Maker and being resigned to his fate. The faith of men is shown in this situation beyond the imagination of those who have never had to face the ordeal of watching a date come closer and closer. There is no foolishness among these men. When they talk of God they are sincere and understanding. One morning as man was leaving his cell to go to the execution chamber a fellow prisoner who was scheduled to go the following week, calley him and said, "Willie, when you see the Master, tell him about me."

One of the most interesting parts of the program of Institutional Ministry is the ministry of youth to youth, wherein youth organizations of the several denominations band themselves together in the United Christian Youth Council to secure funds to pay for the religious program at the Peaks and Bon Air Industrial Schools. These young people are putting their beliefs into practice and remembering their responsibility "for my neighbor." The program at the Peaks Industrial School is under the direction of Miss Cora E. Wiggins. Miss Wiggins teaches Bible classes, conducts Christian Endeavor meetings, cottage prayer meetings, and arranges for worship services conducted by visiting ministers. Miss Wiggins is also available for counseling on personal problems of the girls. A similar program is carried on at Bon Air Industrial School by Miss Doris E. Foltz. Miss Foltz has recently conducted the renovation of a building at Bon Air Industrial School. The girls call the project "the conversion of the cannery." The building which was once used for canning foods is now used for worship services in which the girls themselves may participate. Much of the meaning of this project comes from the fact that the girls themselves scrubbed the floors, painted the walls, decorated the room and made it a worship center.

Many stories could be told about the boys and girls in our industrial schools, but one will suffice to illustrate the heart-break and loneliness which often results in youngsters being sent to our industrial schools. One of the girls came to Miss Foltz and said, "Do you mind if I call you

'Mom'? I've never had a mother who paid any attention to me or took an interest in my problems." Many girls continue to write to Miss Foltz after they have been discharged from the Bon Air Industrial School. The Christian friend found in time of need is not forgotten.

The program of religious education at the Lynchburg State Colony was highly successful during 1948. The outstanding feature was a summer camping experience for all of the patients who could be taken from the buildings to the camp site. In camp they had a religious program similar to the programs given by church-sponsored camps for their own young people. Several patients expressed the idea which one patient put into these words, "This is the first time I have ever understood what religion really is." Dr. D. L. Harrell, Jr., Superintendent of the Colony, is delighted with the work which has been done at the Colony during the year and he is particularly pleased with the summer camp.

Chaplain Frazer likes to take visitors to the State Industrial Farm for Women because they are always amazed at what they see. The women appear happy and they live in comfortable quarters which are as beautiful as they can be made without sacrificing security. The Director of Religious Education at the Women's Farm is Miss Katherine Golbeck, who directs the worship programs, conducts Bible classes, interviews new arrivals and serves on the classification committee, which formulates the program of rehabilitation for each inmate. Miss Golbeck is a full-time trained director of religious education and is held in high esteem by all of the women at the farm. She is constantly in correspondence with many of those who have gone back to their homes or have made new beginnings in strange places.

Chaplain Robert N. Hartness interviews each new arrival at the State Penitentiary, offers them Christian counsel, Bibles and literature. His personal service to prisoners is not limited to the walls of The Penitentiary as is illustrated by a trip of over two hundred miles which he made recently to take a prisoner to the funeral of his sister.

Chaplain Frazer spends most of his time traveling from one institution to another distributing Bibles and tracts (13,211 in 1948), conducting worship services, answering questions and showing moving pictures on religious, educational and entertaining subjects. A total of 527 films were shown at institutions and prison road camps during 1948. Those who have never worked while a guard stood by with a shot gun, those who have never slept with a chain dangling from one leg, those who have never been in a prison road camp, cannot imagine how monotonous, lonely and unbearable such a life can be. One of the bright spots is the visit by the chaplain who frequently brings used magazines which have been donated, and who has a friendly smile, a Christian greeting and in the evening gives motion pictures on Bible subjects, travelogues, industrial improvements, comedies and feature films. The sound motion picture projector which Chaplain Frazer uses in his work was donated to him by the Kiwanis Club of Richmond, Virginia. The Interdenominational Religious Work Foundation came into being 28 years ago when a bill was introduced in the State Legislature to provide a salary for a chaplain at The Penitentiary. Church leaders insisted that religious work in state institutions is a missionary opportunity of the Church and not a function of the State, and the denominations banded themselves together to support the religious program for the State Penitentiary. Gradually, and year by year the work has been expanded to reach more and more of our state institutions. Virginia is unique in this clear separation of Church and State. Other states have entered the field of religion and have employed chaplains on their payrolls. The Interdenominational Religious Work Foundation is supported and directed by eleven denominations, with each denomination nominating one member to the Board of Trustees. These denominational representatives are: J. A. Engle, Methodist; Carter N. Williams, Jr., Baptist; R. Cary Montague, Episcopal; George L. Cooper, Presbyterian; J. J. Scherer, Jr., Lutheran; J. A. Tate, Disciples; James R. Stein, Friends; Robert Lee House, Congregational Christian; Carl C. Hassel, Evangelical and Reformed; Chester I. Harley, Church of the Brethren; E. E. Miller, Evangelical United Brethren; James R. Bryant and John E. Easter are Trustees-at-Large.

Alcohol is one of the chief curtailers of human life. The man of twenty who drinks has a probable life of fifteen years before him; the abstainer, one of forty-four years.

THE HOLY CITY

Thirty men, red-eyed and disheveled, lined up before a judge of the San Francisco police court. It was the regular morning company of "drunks and disorderlies." Some were old and hardened; others hung their heads in shame. Just as the momentary disorder attending the bringing in of the prisoners quieted down, a strange thing happened. A strong, clear voice from below began singing:

Last night I lay a-sleeping;
There came a dream so fair:

Last night! It had been for them all a nightmare of drunken stupor. The song was such a contrast to the horrible fact that no one could fail of a sudden shock at the thought the song suggested.

I stood in old Jerusalem,
Beside the Temple there;

the song went on. The judge had paused. He made a quiet inquiry. A former member of a famous opera company, known all over the country, was awaiting trial for forgery. It was he who was singing in his cell.

Meantime the song went on, and every man in the line showed emotion. One or two dropped on their knees; one boy at the end of the line, after a desperate effort at self-control, leaned against the wall, buried his face against his folded arms, and sobbed, "O mother, mother!"

The sobs, cutting to the very heart the men who heard, and the song, still welling its way through the court room, blended in the hush.

At length one man protested, "Judge," said he, "have we got to submit to this? We're here to take our punishment, but this—" He, too, began to sob.

It was impossible to proceed with the business of the court, yet the judge gave no order to stop the song. The police sergeant, after an effort to keep the men in line, stepped back and waited with the rest. The song moved on to its climax!

Jerusalem, Jerusalem! Sing for the night is o'er!
Hosanna in the highest! Hosanna for evermore!
Hosanna in the highest! Hosanna for evermore!

In an ecstasy of melody the last words rang out, and there was silence.

The judge looked into the faces of the men before him. There was not one who was not touched by the song; not one in whom some better impulse was not stirred. He did not call the cases singly—a kind word of advice, and he dismissed them all. No man was fined or sentenced to the workhouse that morning. The song had done more good than punishment could possibly have accomplished.—Selected.

A Ten Point Program of Christian Activity for Every Church Member

By DR. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN
First Congregational Church
Mason City, Iowa

1. Begin and close each day with a prayer.
2. Read or call to mind one or more helpful verses of scripture each morning—also other writings calculated to give spiritual inspiration and guidance.
3. Attend Divine Worship each Sabbath Day if physically able and if opportunity is afforded.
4. Seek "balanced rations" in general reading, entertainment and recreation.
5. Spend a certain amount of time each day in definite Christian service without pay.
6. Be a constructive member of society—making your living by rendering some type of needed service.
7. Assign a definite portion of your earnings to the church and other social agencies. Make a worthy contribution to your church and to missions each week.
8. Tactfully and enthusiastically recommend Christian discipleship to friends and associates as opportunity permits.
9. Give loyal support to the social and religious leaders of your community. Their load is heavy and they need your prayers and your words of encouragement. The other crowd is giving them more than their share of criticism and opposition.
10. Have the courage to stand up and to speak out against what is wrong and in support of what is right anytime and anywhere.

News Flashes

The guest editor of the Sunday School Page this week is Rev. Robert A. Whitten. The lesson is for September 4.

The Editor and Mrs. R. L. House are spending part of their vacation at Massanetta during the Bible Conference.

Richard Allen Kimball, son of Rev. and Mrs. Robert Kimball, is now one month old. Congratulations to the parents and good wishes to the son.

Rev. H. E. Crutchfield conducted a revival meeting at Pleasant Cross Church, Route 1, Asheboro, last week. The pastor of the church is Rev. J. U. Fogleman of Route 6, Burlington.

Dr. John G. Truitt will speak each night at the revival meeting at Pleasant Ridge Church near Ramseur the week of August 28-September 2. Rev. Clyde Fields is the pastor of this church.

Max Vestal, who will enter Elon College as a ministerial student this fall, is presenting the morning messages in our Asheboro Church during August, while the pastor, Rev. F. C. Lester, is on his vacation.

Dr. F. C. Lester preached at Bethel Evangelical and Reformed Church near Mt. Pleasant, North Carolina, on last Sunday night. Rev. Aubrey W. Hedrick, who directed the E. and R. Junior High Camp, is the pastor of this church.

Parsonages are being completed at Pleasant Ridge, Seagrove, and Sophia in the Western North Carolina Conference. This is going to mean that pastorates can be organized around these three areas and ministers come to live in the community in which they serve.

Rosemont Church, Norfolk, Va., observed its 47th Anniversary on Sunday, August 14. Dr. Frank H. Lewis, president of the Eastern Virginia Conference, gave the sermon. The church has accumulated approximately $15,000 to enlarge its Sunday School building. Rev. H. G. Councill, Jr., is pastor.

Rev. and Mrs. Charles Cecil Thomas and two little daughters have been spending their vacation at the home of Mr. Thomas' parents in the Shallow Well community near Sanford. At present Rev. and Mrs. Thomas are living in Hornell, New York. While in North Carolina they visited in Asheboro, where Mr. Thomas served our church for two years.

The churches of the Western North Carolina Conference have been greatly enriched during the past two months by the work of the president of the conference, Mr. George T. Gunter. The conference and the Mission Board cooperated in making it possible for Mr. Gunter to aid in forming pastorates, finding pastors for churches and otherwise being helpful to the ministers and local churches in this conference.

ROCKY FORD.

The Rocky Ford Congregational Christian Church at Fancy Gap, Virginia, has experienced a revival in the church and in the people. June 5 of this summer marked their first Sunday school and church service for this year. Attendance is still increasing. The church has built a better road, and raised $100.00 to pay for its construction. This week the church is being painted inside and out. The people are proud of what the church will be like when finished, and plan to have a Home Coming the first Sunday in September. All friends of the church are invited to come.

JAMES MADREN,
Pastor.

NEWS FROM PLEASANT CROSS CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Recently our revival meeting was held in our Pleasant Cross Church, five miles east of Asheboro, North Carolina, on Highway No. 64. Rev. H. E. Crutchfield was our guest speaker for the series of services which became a great revival to everyone. Seven adult members were received into the church on profession of faith with others expected to join with us soon. Rev. Crutchfield brought us messages with wisdom and great power, and many souls were saved in the old time way. Our pastor, Rev. J. U. Fogleman, is due much praise for the great work he has done and is doing for our church. We are grateful to him and our God.

Our Sunday school is very much alive. It is increasing in numbers and interest. The young people's class of our church expects to visit our Christian Orphanage soon.

TAR HEEL BY ADOPTION WILL HAVE MAJOR ROLE IN FIGHTING RELIGIOUS PREJUDICE.

At a time of increasing religious tension, a young North Carolinian is preparing to take over as director of inter-religious work in the foremost national organization that is working for good will among Catholics, Protestants and Jews.

When Allyn P. Robinson of Charlotte goes to New York September 1 to assume the key post of director of the commission on religious organizations of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, he will be continuing in a larger field a work in which he has scored unusual success. After four years as regional director of NCCJ he will now direct NCCJ work with religious organizations in this country and throughout the world. North Carolina has served as the proving ground for the abilities he carries to the job.

Urged Not to Come South.

In 1938 when Robinson was minister of the Congregational Christian Church of Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, his friends warned him not to accept an offer of a pastorate in Raleigh. Southerners, they said, had the fixed belief that anyone who had not had the foresight to get born in the South was not one of them and could never be.

Today, as Robinson prepares to return North after eleven years in the South, there is keen dismay at his going. For Allyn Robinson has not merely been accepted in his adopted state. To many North Carolinians he has become a symbol of man's striving for deeper understanding and a nobler way of living.

At the age of 40 Robinson has a record of achievement in human relations work that is regarded as one of the most significant in the South or in any part of the country.

Founded Institute of Religion.

While pastor of Raleigh's United Church he founded an annual Institute of Religion that has attracted national attention. For seven years he served as its director. Aimed at relating religion to social and personal problems, it annually draws to its lecture rostrum nationally and internationally known speakers in many fields of social endeavor.

Later, as regional NCCJ director, Rev. Robinson led in developing a state-wide organization that has drawn thousands of young people and adults into the task of eliminating religious prejudice.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE GOSPEL IN THE GRASS

There is an interesting statement found in the Second Book of Samuel, Chapter 23, verse 4, which reads: "And he shall be as the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain."

Now in all honesty the writer must confess that there was a time when he hated grass. As a boy on the farm he had to grass the cotton. As a matter of fact, it grassed itself—even while he slept or rested. He had to degrass the cotton. It was a stern, relentless fight on the farm with grass. Later he was under the necessity of picking up odd jobs to work himself through college, and one of the jobs was mowing the lawn. That which was a source of pride and joy to others was a weekly chore to him. Grass? He hated it with a vengeance!

More mature thought, however, brought him to the realization that grass is an indispensable element in our economy. There is a wide variety of grass for countless services. It is propagated, palatable and nutritious for animals.

The Psalmist is speaking the language of science as well as of poetry when he says, "He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle and herb for the service of man." Yes, every mother who gives her child a glass of milk today should thank God for the grass upon which the milk-giving cow feeds. Have you ever lived where no grass grew? Recall the places and seasons when grass ceased to grow, then you realize how indispensable is the cohesive power of grass in holding the soil together and preventing costly erosion.

Come to think of it, some people are like that. They have cohesive power. Ordinary people though they are, they help hold important groups or institutions together. Thank God for these people in the home, the church, and the community. This is the gospel of grass.

Moreover, let us note that grass is characterized by growth, prolific growth, beauty and fruitfulness. And these are the marks of the God-like life. Therefore, do not simply walk upon the grass; learn its message. Is your life growing—growing in knowledge, service and grace. If not, then you need to linger with the Psalmist in the green pastures of meditation and self-examination. Have you given your stint of beauty to the world? That is precisely what the artist, the florist, the painters and designers do. Even the beauty of a smile can do much to help the day be cloudless. Is your life fruitful, productive? Are you helping to give subsistence to a needy world? Have you learned the gospel of the grass?

One of the commonest messages of the grass to men is the truth of our mortality. Listen again to the Psalmist: "As for man his days are as grass; in the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth." Even in the verdure of August we dare not forget this lesson.

Now this Ninetieth Psalm is read quite frequently at funerals, but its message is not for the dead. It is for us, the living. "The sands of time are sinking," as the old hymn expressed it. Today is the day of opportunity, grace and salvation. Make full use of it as a child of God. Work, therefore, the works of Christ, for the night of death cometh, when no man can work.

STATISTICALLY SPEAKING

The Year Book of the Congregational Christian Churches in the United States, published by the General Council in New York City, giving the statistics for 1948, shows that as of January 1, 1949, there are a total of 5,715 Congregational Christian Churches in the United States with 1,184,661 members, an increase of 11,035 members over the previous year.

The Sunday schools have a total membership of 534,118, an increase of 17,001.

A total of $3,046,877 was received for the apportionment, an increase of $106,498. Total benevolences received in 1948 amounted to $5,596,949. Home, or local congregational expenses, totaled $27,477,429, an increase of $2,723,148. New building expenses for the year were $10,430,986, making a combined total for Home Expenses of $37,908,415. The property value of the Congregational Christian Churches totals $241,351,575, an increase of $36,166,860 over 1947, and 1,873 churches report having invested funds totaling $37,146,938, in addition to the Pilgrim Memorial Fund and other trusts held by the General Council, aggregating approximately six million dollars more.

These statistics give us some idea of the great work being done by the Congregational Christian Churches, which when combined with the vast and varied activities of the other denominations causes us to realize more than ever the meaning of the Crusaders' hymn: "Like a mighty army moves the church of God."

Those men are the grace and strength of councils who are of that healthful nature which is content to take defeat with good humor, and of that practical turn of mind which made them set heartily to work upon plans and propositions which have been originated in opposition to their judgment; who are not anxious to shift responsibility upon others; and who do not allude to their former objections with triumph, when those objections come to be borne out by the result. In acting with such persons you are at your ease. You counsel sincerely and boldly, and not with a timorous regard to your own part in the matter.

—Sir Arthur Helps.

Notable Ministry Concluded

By LEONARD AND AGNES CHRISTIAN
Slingerlands, New York

On the 27th day of April, after nearly forty years of service under the American Board Mission, we left Foochow, and after two months and five days of travel across two oceans and three seas we landed in New York on July 2. I need hardly add that this time it was not easy to leave, for there was to be no return to the people we have come to love, and to the service that took up our time and thought most of our lives. In order to avoid the farewells, we tried to keep the date of departure in the background, for we know it would be just as hard for many of our friends to see us go as it was for us to leave. Yet, though our starting hour finally had to be five-thirty in the morning, we did not entirely escape the strings of fire crackers popping as we climbed into our rickshas at the Mission gateway. Helen Smith and John Fairfield were on the jetty three miles from the compound to wave us bon voyage as our launch moved away in the swift current of the Min River.

Hong Kong, said to be one of the three most beautiful harbors in the "seven seas," was our first break in the journey, and four days in port gave us a touch of the life of uncertainty that so many of the missionaries from many denominations and many stations are living these days, perched on the edge of evacuation in the Missionary Home on Kowloon. As we went about making the necessary arrangements for our trip to the Philippines, we were glad to see that much of the damage done to this British Colony by the Japanese invasion had already been repaired. To us, seeing it with a tourist eye, it looked much the same as when we last visited it in 1932.

The trip by Pan-American Clipper to Manila took us only about five hours bringing us in over the city about 9 p. m. From an altitude of several thousand feet the neon lighted city presented a dazzling sight in its greens, reds, blues, and yellows, an unforgettable experience to end our first air journey. At the airport we were met by our friends of the Presbyterian Mission, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Little, who made us welcome in their beautiful tropic-style home with its lovely garden. In the next few days, they not only worked out for us an itinerary through some of the mission stations but also showed us present-day Manila emerging from the still all-too-evident wreckage of the war years.

In order to save time and see as much as possible of the Islands we again took to the air, so that from an altitude of from five to ten thousand feet we must have seen more than half of the seven thousand isles of the archipelago. At the rate of 200 miles per hour the changing landscape appears like the patterns of a kaleidoscope in many shades of green and blue with the yellow lines of the roads clearly marked on the various islands, among which ply the tiny freighters.

At Dumaguette on the Island of Negros we spent three days visiting Silliman University with its student body of 3,500 of the choicest Filipino youth. Dr. Phillip deVargas, transferred from Peiping to the Seminary here, was our most excellent guide and mentor, and through his eyes we gained an impression that our own observation confirmed, of the powerful influence exerted by this Protestant Mission school in a land of age-old Catholicism. The large and beautiful campus needs much more in the way of restoration and improvement, but the devoted faculty, both American and Filipino, make it a "real home of the soul" to the alert young people of the islands. Dr. and Mrs. Roy Bell made it their kindly business to see that we met nearly every professor on the campus, and Dr. deVargas arranged interviews for us with some of the promising students in the theological school. Naturally, we heard many stories of the war, the interment camps, and escapes to the hills, with all the horrors and heroisms they bring up; but the prevailing impression was one of a most encouraging forward look, into an opportunity such as they have never had before to win the youth for Christ.

From Dumaguette we flew across Moroland on the island of Mindanao, to the headquarters of the American Board in that second largest island of the Philippine group. There Rev. and Mrs. Elton Brown were our hosts, and showed us the great challenge of the rural evangelism in which they are engaged. Four men could hardly begin to do the work which Mr. Brown is attempting single-handed in evangelistic tours and training institutions in addition to the building up of the local ministry; while Mrs. Brown takes on assistance in the Brokenshire Hospital, as well as women's work in the Davao church besides the training of her family!

Our Philippine experiences ended with a week-end at Baguio, the mountain retreat 125 miles from Manila. Going by train we passed through Tarlac where I was stationed in a military hospital way back in 1900. Agnes and I got off the train, but the town is a mile from the station, and I saw nothing at all familiar. At Baguio we shared with Rev. and Mrs. Heffin the Quonset hut which replaced one of the summer homes of the mission that had been destroyed by American planes when they made their blanket bombing of this area. We attended Sunday services in the basement of the wrecked Community Church, and saw something of the comeback that is being made all through the islands.

On May 17 we bade farewell to our kind friends, the Littles, and boarded the M/s Tudor which was to be our home for the next forty-seven days. This motor-driven freighter of 9,200 tons was on her maiden trip, and her Captain Jensen proved to be an excellent seaman and a jolly host. He enjoyed making his twelve passengers feel at home, and taking us over the ship, explaining radar and other modern aids to navigation. Our cabin was large and convenient, with private toilet and shower; and a small table bolted to the floor became a marvellous hitching-post for our trunk when it took to skidding.

Our first port of call again was Hong Kong where we picked up the baggage we had left behind, and in calling at the Missionary Home were amazed to learn that four members of the Foochow Mission, Rev. and Mrs. Giffin, Miss Armstrong and Miss Atwood, all of whom had helped to give us our farewell party in April, had gone through and were then already in America.

Keelung in Formosa was our next port, where the freighter spent a day taking on a cargo of twenty thousand bunches of bananas to go to Japan. We passengers had time to take a bus trip to Taipeh, the capital, where we found broad macadam boulevards, concrete buildings, modern hotels, and public gardens. A trip to the sulphur springs some twenty miles outside of Taipeh gave us a chance also to enjoy some beautiful mountain scenery.

Shanghai, which was to have been our next port, had to be cancelled because of the conflict then going on there; so that we went directly from Keelung to Japan where an exchange

A Man and His Self

The biggest problem that any of us has is the problem of dealing with himself. Paul wrestled with this mighty problem as Jacob wrestled with the angel. Said he: "For the good which I would I do not: but the evil which I would not, that I practice. But if what I would mean, that I do, it is no more I that do it, but sin which dwelleth in me. I find then the law, that, to me who would do good, evil is present. For I delight in the law of God after the inward man: but I see a different law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity under the law of sin which is in my members." (Rom. 7: 19-23.) The most prolonged, fierce, and critical battles in which one ever engages are those which take place within the borders of his own soul. Again, the apostle to the Gentiles said: "I therefore so run, as not uncertainly; so fight I, as not beating the air: but I buffet my body, and bring it into bondage: lest by any means, after that I have preached to others, I myself should be rejected." (I Cor. 9:26, 27.)

This matter of dealing with self enlisted the best efforts of the most brilliant minds of paganism. For example, Marcus Aurelius, the Roman emperor and bitter enemy of Christianity, is accredited with the injunction: "Control thyself." To this heathen philosopher, the measure of a man was his ability to master himself, whether in the market place, the banquet hall, or on the field of battle. This sentiment, however, was not original with the emperor. Solomon, son of David and king in Jerusalem, had said a thousand years before: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city." (Prov. 16:32.) Truly,

*A glory gilds the sacred page,
Majestic like the sun;
It lends its light to every age,
It lends to all, but borrows none.*

Alexander the Great conquered the world before he was thirty-five, and later died in a drunken debauch in the gutters of Babylon.

In order to control one's self it is necessary for one to know himself. The importance of self-knowledge has been recognized in every age. Socrates said: "Know thyself." Juvenal, the Roman poet and satirist, said: "From heaven descended the precept, 'Know thyself.' " Old Chaucer cast it in these words: "Full wise is he that can himselfen knowe." And in later times Pope, the poet, said:

*Know then thyself, presume not God to scan;
The proper study of mankind is man.*

The Bible is the only book from which man can learn what he needs to know about himself. In this book man can learn that he was made a little lower than the angels; that he was endowed with certain faculties, which, under the influence of divine teaching, will enable him in the hereafter to be not only as the angels, but equal to the angels. He will learn at once that which experience will confirm: that he is fearfully and wonderfully made. He is so wonderfully made that he bears the image of his Maker; he is so fearfully made that he can say "No" to his Creator.

There is a precept which is instinctively on the lips of universal man: "Be thyself." If there is anything which reminds one of the "missing link" between monkey and man, it is the "mimic" in the pulpit. When the preacher condescends to be an "ape," the congregation is disgusted with the "monkey business." To mimic and impersonate another is to betray an inherent weakness. Melancthon, the German scholar and reformer, by nature carried one shoulder noticeably higher than the other. His students, it is said, went about consciously holding one shoulder higher than the other. They labored under the childish delusion that this device would make them scholars and preachers like Melancthon. Aping others is a sign of weakness, and ninety-nine times out of a hundred the weakling who mimics another will imitate his weakest characteristic. It is said that years ago a bishop in the Methodist Church, by reason of some weakness in his vocal equipment, pronounced God "Gawd." As a result a generation of ministerial students went about mispronouncing the name of Deity. "Be thyself." The fellow who apes somebody else makes a monkey of himself.

He who spake as man never spake taught men to "deny self." Of all the precepts relative to self, this is one of the most difficult to obey. A man does not deny himself when he merely gives that which he does not need or miss; a man does not deny himself when he refrains from doing that which he really does not care to do. One denies himself when he, like the poor widow, gives that which he needs and will miss; a man denies himself when he, like Moses, turns his back upon that which he likes to do, and that which he finds pleasurable and profitable in the doing. As clear and crisp as a gunshot on a still day, the words of the greatest of all teachers fall upon the ear: "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." (Luke 9:23.)

"Take heed to thyself." (Paul.)

MID-WEEK PRAYER MEETING.

A crowded gathering of distinguished scientists had been listening, spellbound, to the masterly expositions of Michael Faraday. For an hour he held his brilliant audience enthralled as he demonstrated the nature and properties of the magnet.

He brought his lecture to a close with an experiment so novel, so bewildering, and so triumphant that, for some time after he resumed his seat, the house rocked with enthusiastic applause. And then the Prince of Wales, after King Edward VII, rose to propose a motion of congratulation. The resolution, having been duly seconded, was carried with renewed thunders of applause. But the uproar was succeeded by a strange silence.

The assembly waited for Faraday's reply; but the lecturer had vanished! What had become of him? Only two or three of his most intimate friends knew the secret. They knew that Faraday was something more than a great chemist: he was a great Christian. He was an elder of a little Sandemanian Church, a church that never boasted more than twenty members. The hour at which Faraday concluded his lecture was the hour of the mid-week prayer meeting.

That meeting he never neglected. And, under cover of the cheering applause, the lecturer had slipped out of the crowded hall and hurried off to the little meeting-house—for prayer meeting.

DR. SLOAN ATTENDS SWEEDEN'S GREAT LINGIAD.

(NOTE: Below is an article from Dr. W. W. Sloan about the travels of himself and Mrs. Sloan during their current visit to Europe.)

In America very little is heard of the Lingiad, international event dealing in physical education demonstrations of various types, although more people participate in the Lingiad than in the Olympics.

The first Lingiad was held ten years ago and was organized by physical culture teams and teachers from all over the world gathering in Stockholm, Sweden, for demonstrations in honor of the 100th anniversary of the death of Per Henrik Ling, founder of the Swedish system of physical exercise.

So much fellowship and exchange of techniques were discovered in this meeting that it was decided to hold such congresses frequently. But war interfered so that the second Lingiad was not held until this year.

Sixty-six nations accepted Sweden's invitation to participate in this year's event. I was given a press card admitting me to all demonstrations of the gigantic event which was formally opened by the Crown Prince of Sweden, acting for the King who is now 91 years old.

Large flags of the 66 nations were brought into the stadium and shortly afterwards the 15,500 participants who would take part in several days of demonstrations filed in. All dressed in gym clothes, they took their places in the stadium with their various costumes and team flags making a very colorful display.

After the Crown Prince had given his address in English, the royal salute of 19, or maybe 21, shots was fired by a cannon just behind the press stand. The Prime Minister made a short speech in Swedish and then the process of 15,500 people marching out of the stadium through the same exit began.

Demonstrations of teamwork and individual prowess were held in auditoriums all over Stockholm for four days. I attended some of the events one afternoon in the Concert Hall where I had spoken at the Baptist convention the first week in June.

The most advertised event was a mass outdoor demonstration of 5,000 Swedish housewives in "exercises especially developed to strengthen women's feet and backs." Rain necessitated a postponement of this event, however, and I did not have a chance to see what promised to be a most unusual spectacle as far as I was concerned.

I left Stockholm to take part in another international activity—a course in "Aspects of Sweden Today" at the ancient University of Uppsala, an institution for English-speaking people from all over the world. I will be here three weeks along with five other Americans and a number of people from other countries. One of the Americans is a young woman from Greensboro, North Carolina.

When I finish the course here I will go back to North Carolina by way of Denmark, Germany, Holland, Belgium, France (where Mrs. Sloan will join me), England, Scotland and Newfoundland.

In my travels I have found that the world is a rather small place, after all. It seems that no matter where I go I always run into someone I have met before or who has lived in the same state or section of the state from which I come.

I was hunting for a particular office in the great railroad station in Copenhagen, Denmark, a few days ago when I ran across the local Danish American Express man. I asked him for directions and in the conversation that followed he asked where my home was.

When I told him I was from Elon College, North Carolina, he beamed, thrust out his hand and exclaimed, "I lived in North Carolina—at New Bern—for 30 years."

The next morning as I left Copenhagen, two American women crowded into the train compartment where I was. Recognizing me as an American, one of them asked me the usual question, "What state are you from?"

I discovered that she was a physical education teacher for women in the college I attended as a student and is still teaching there. She is well acquainted with my sisters. She handed me a current copy of my college alumni journal in which I found an item about myself.

Sweden is accused of being nationalistic, less interested in events outside its borders, than are Norway and Denmark. This seemed to me to be true to some extent but not to extremes.

I have been staying again at "Chapman," the youth hotel ship in Stockholm harbor. Here I meet people from all parts of the world and during my current stay I have had three sets of cabin mates—three Scotsmen, succeeded by a German and his nine-year-old son, who were later replaced by two Danes and a Swede.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Existing conditions and future prospects would seem to complicate the church-related colleges in the days that lie ahead. The national and state governments will doubtless increase their financial support for our tax-supported colleges. Increased funds mean increased facilities and increased salaries for instructors. This is good for our tax-supported schools but adds to the problems of our church-related institutions. Unfortunately, it seems that the church and the general public do not increase their support for their colleges willingly as the general public is forced through taxation to increase its support for our state institutions. Our church colleges are compelled to improve and increase their facilities, equipment, and salaries if they are to keep pace with our sister institutions with their increased support. This is a matter that the constituency of our college cannot ignore. When the college was built, the church and friends made certain sacrifices to assure its beginning. We are now approaching the time when the church and the ones of us who are interested must consider making certain sacrifices that the college may not only continue its program of education for our young people but may be able to keep pace with the demands of the times and the requirements of an expanded curriculum for the training of the young men and young women of our homes and of our church. Elon College has always depended upon its constituency and is happy to trust its future to its generosity.

At Home and Abroad

MISSIONARY APPOINTMENTS.

I

Miss Marilyn Candace Bieser, daughter of Frank W. Bieser of Craig, Colorado, has been appointed for a three-year term as English teacher by the American Board in Pierce College, Athens, Greece. Miss Bieser hopes to sail for her post in the Near East around September 9.

Born in Aurora, Colorado, Miss Bieser graduated from Craig High School, Craig, Colorado, and the University of Colorado, Class of 1949.

"I wish to serve abroad because I feel that a person should help where help is most needed," says Miss Bieser. "The world situation shows plainly that we have a long way to go before peace can be secured. . . . I believe that this overseas mission presents an excellent opportunity for me to learn and serve at the same time."

II

Miss Mildred Myrtle Simpson of 2221 N. W. 22nd Street, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, has been appointed for a three-year term as a Business Secretary in Bombay, India, by the American Board. Miss Simpson expects to sail for her work on August 23. She will work in the Bombay Inter-Mission Office which serves the Marathi Mission of the Congregational Christian Churches and several other denominations working in India.

Miss Simpson has been Office Secretary of the Central South Conference of Congregational Christian Churches, with headquarters at Oklahoma City, since 1938. She was born at Fort Cobb, Oklahoma, and educated in the schools of Oklahoma, including the Oklahoma A. & M. College (B.S.) and Blackwood Davis Business College, Oklahoma City. Miss Simpson is the sister of William B. Simpson, John B. Simpson, Mrs. A. H. Bergthold, and Mrs. Pursell Graham, all of Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, and of Mrs. Howard Hollingsworth, Albany Hotel, Tulsa, Oklahoma.

Following a year of teaching in a western consolidated school, Miss Simpson spent four years in charge of the membership department of the Oklahoma Farmers' Union during which time she acted as Secretary to the President. She has also served as a church secretary and has been active in Sunday school work, both locally and throughout the State of Oklahoma.

Miss Simpson's work in the Congregational State Conference has brought her in touch with many missionaries and now she will make her contribution to this cause in a much more personal way in India.

NEWS OF FENYANG HOSPITAL.

By EMMA NOREEN.

It has been nearly a year since the American Board sent out a general letter for me. During that time we have received very little mail and sent less. After Peiping was liberated, letters which had accumulated there were forwarded to us, and we have been receiving them off and on for the past two months, letters dated anywhere from April 1948 to April 1949. Last week I received ninety-some pieces of mail in one day, including last year's issues of nursing and medical journals, Life, National Geographic, Science News Letter, Readers Digest, Christian Century magazines, etc. (More than half the numbers haven't arrived.) Neither Louise nor I have ordered periodicals for this year, waiting until it seems more certain that they will reach us. However, a grand parcel sent by First Church, Columbus, in June, 1948, arrived here in good shape last week, so we are beginning to have hopes.

The hospital has been and is a busy place. Last spring we equipped thirty beds and planned to limit our in-patients to that number until our staff could be enlarged. In July Fenyang was taken by the liberating army and immediately we had to expand. "Enemy" patients in the hospitals of the departing army were sent over to us, and many people wounded in the fighting between here and Taiyuan were also brought to us. In-patients increased to over eighty and out-patient clinics to over a hundred.

Our Dr. Wang, Senior, planned to go to America last year for study, but his plans could not be carried out and he has taken work at the Peiping Union Medical College instead. Dr. Wang, Junior, has carried the hospital load admirably in his absence.

Our work has practically doubled since the liberation. Cases who could not come to the hospital during the former regime have been coming to us now in great numbers from far and near. We have had much surgery, nine abdominal tumors (ranging from 23 to 79 pounds), hernias, fistulas and many, many neglected gunshot wounds. During the last year there have been 10,154 in-patient days, 10,045 out-patient visits. We have had many children patients; children with bronchial pneumonia; others who lost hands or eyes playing with unexploded shells; over a dozen children who have been torn by wolves. At present we are giving typhus, typhoid and cholera inoculations and small pox vaccinations from 5-7 p. m. daily to school children. Fortunately we have been able to secure biological supplies, penicillin and sulpha. We have been so grateful for the generous supplies sent us by Helen Dizney and Dr. Watson.

The school of nursing has been a great joy to me all through the year. We took in a new class of four women and seven young men last August, giving us a total of seventeen students—there being six women in the second-year class. With our limited staff, it has been difficult to get classes taught, but we have kept up with our schedule. Sometimes I have had 20 hours of classes a week. Dr. Wang, Junior, has also given much time to teaching. The students have made some fine drawings in anatomy and obstetrics. When we did not have the posters or charts needed, we just made them. I have been so grateful that I brought out as many new text books with me as I did, for with communications disrupted throughout the country, it is difficult to get good recent books.

Our hospital staff, students and servants have one big family, pulling together. The staff members, as well as servants, have been receiving only one tan, i. e., 140 pounds of grain, per month, as salary. We are all doing our utmost to see whether a Mission Hospital can continue to function under the present regime.

NOTE: The Fenyang station mentioned in this letter was formerly called Fenchow.)

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

ASHEBORO WOMEN HAVE SOMETHING NEW IN AUGUST.

For the August program the Asheboro women tried something different in their circle meetings—not wanting any heavy speech or such when it was so hot.

After the women arrived at the meeting, they planned their worship service and then used it. The subject was "Missions." Numbered slips were passed out to all present. Those with No. 1 were to get together in one corner of the room and pick out two suitable hymns; others with the same number chose call to worship, scripture, poetry, prayer. One person was asked to be the leader and find out from the different groups what they had chosen and who was to read the different parts, so she could announce the program. Someone, of course, had to provide hymnals, Bibles, poetry books, and so forth ahead of time so they could be available. It seemed to work out quite well.

For the "program" questions were passed out to everybody—two apiece. These were numbered and No. 1 read her question and either answered it or asked someone else to. They were questions about local church history, our denomination's history, about the new merger, and about mission work in the past and present. It proved to be quite a "peppy" program, with discussion on many of the answers. The questions ranged all the way from "What are five cardinal principles of the Christian Church?" to "Who is president of N. C. women of our churches?" They included such questions as "How many missionaries do we have on the foreign field?" and "What foreign missionaries have visited our church during the past year?"

* * * *

This is a good idea from the Asheboro women. I hope that some other groups may come up with some good idea for a different type of program and have it published on our page, so we may all profit by it. I would like very much to have some news items about different ways of doing things in our women's groups.

MT. CARMEL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Our society, even though small, has met all requirements, and we feel glad that we could accomplish this much in the work of missions.

We have been fortunate indeed in having Mrs. J. Frank Morgan review all study books, also our Bible study of Galatians.

The Society has observed World Day of Prayer, sent a box of clothing to the Christian Orphanage for Easter, had a public service and Thank Offering and sent cards, flowers and gifts to the sick.

For our Friendly Service project we sent clothing to the Indians at Elbowoods, North Dakota. We also have taken out a life membership for Rev. J. Frank Morgan.

In addition to our missionary activities, we have helped to keep flowers in church for all services, and we're hoping to be able to do even more to spread God's Gospel over the entire world.

WESTERN N. C. CONFERENCE ON EVANGELISM.

A very small group of men and women heard the fine addresses presented by Mrs. O. H. Paris, president of the Southern Convention women, and by Dr. W. M. Brown of the faculty of Elon College at the Asheboro Church on the Fifth Sunday in July.

Sponsored by the laymen of the Western North Carolina Conference under the leadership of Sybrant H. Pell and by Mrs. E. P. Boroughs, superintendent of the Asheboro Missionary District, the meeting was well publicized throughout the area. Those present felt keenly the loss which laymen and women from many of our churches sustained by not being at this important meeting.

The opening worship centered around the theme, "Christ's Messengers," and was presented by the Asheboro Church. Mrs. E. P. Boroughs was the leader, with Mrs. J. G. Vestal, Max Vestal and Mrs. F. C. Lester participating Special music, "I Walked Today Where Jesus Walked," was presented by Mrs. John L. Davis, accompanied by Mrs. S. H. Pell.

Because of the smallness of the audience, Mr. Pell suggested that the group not divide as planned, but that both men and women hear Mrs. Paris and Dr. Brown. This proved to be a happy solution—especially since Mr. George D. Colelough, who was to have addressed the entire group, was absent because of illness.

Mrs. Paris did an excellent job of presenting the problem of evangelism as it falls upon the shoulders of the individual Christian in the local church. Dr. Brown used the Great Commission as the basis for his scholarly presentation of the need for evangelization in our day.

Mr. Pell presided during the business session, calling attention to Laymen's Sunday, which comes in October. The attendance of five ministers, W. W. Hall, W. T. Madren, Clyde Fields, Mack Welch and F. C. Lester was an encouraging feature. The closing meditation was given by Rev. Mr. Fields who challenged the group with opportunities for serving Christ.

Before you can leave the ship your passport is collected, and a military pass is issued; ashore money cannot be exchanged except at certain designated banks; the military personnel uses special scrip; American civilians living in port buy with coupons from the government-subsidized provision stores; and travelers are unable to buy a meal anywhere.

Having friends in Kobe College lifted us immediately into the guest status, and Rev. Frank Cary was a delightful host. We spent a night in the friendly family of Kobe College faculty, and had a forenoon under the guidance of Dr. DeForrest, seeing how marvelously the campus has come

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

The name of the very charming lady who invited me and made possible my visit to the Haw River Church was Miss Artelia Poole. When the account was given some time ago her name was misspelled. Many thanks to Miss Poole for her interest and kindness.

Are you friendly with your doctor? This past year I have become acquainted with three doctors all of whom were different. One was an orthopedic or bone specialist, another was a young psychiatrist or physician of the mind, and one was a very skillful surgeon who knows how to make scars disappear in wrinkles or from lines. All three of them are very nice people to know, at work or at play.

What if the doctor does hurt you some? It is for your good. The patients who get well the quickest are the ones who want to get well, want to help, take their medicine and believe in their doctor.

Jesus was a friend of the sick. He spoke quietly to those who had sore eyes, lame arms or legs and his touch was soothing and healing. He wanted to teach his believers, I think, that religion and healing are a part of each other. God has given us fingers to use—deftly or with skill and He gave us minds to know how to use these skills.

Some people are afraid of doctors, hospitals and operating rooms. No need to be. An operating room is clean, quiet and impersonal. The surgeons and doctors who operate work quickly and seriously to save lives, to make the sick well or the suffering happier.

If the doctor's medicine stings, it will soon cool. If his scalpel pricks as it cuts, it will soon heal. God has given man the skill and our bodies the ability to get well. We should be grateful.

The three doctors I mentioned all touched my life although none of them did anything for me. All of them helped someone I knew and loved. I am grateful to them and glad they had such fine training.

Be friendly with your doctor. Remember he doesn't like to be stuck either and if you wiggle it makes his sticking even worse. The easiest thing to do is to stay very well and I hope you all may be healthy, well and cheerful.

MANAGING JOHNNY.

By C. G. MORT.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

I had contracted to teach the Sunny Side School. Having heard of this some of my friends and neighbors, when they met me, said that I must not mind if I were not successful, that Johnny Smith—a little boy of about eight or nine years old—would try to break up the school. They said he always planned serious mischief every time a new teacher came in. They did not say so, but I knew they doubted my ability to cope with Johnny, because they had heard me say I never use corporal punishment.

But I did not feel discouraged; and I said with a smile that I could at least try.

I managed to become acquainted with some of the parents who lived in the district, and they all spoke of Johnny as being incorrigible. However, I had no idea of giving up the school on his account. Having been teaching for several years, I did not have any fears that I would not get along with him. Only once had I ever had any trouble in school, and that experience would be a help, for it was with a little fellow of about the same age as Johnny. After he and I had come to an agreement, we worked together nicely the rest of the school year.

When the opening day for the Sunny Side School came, I was there bright and early. The children were gathering and quite a number had already come in; the one I believed to be Johnny was among them.

I was standing by my desk arranging some of my things, anxious to test my metal. In a far corner of the schoolroom a book was lying on a desk. So I said, "I would like to see the book that is over there," indicating with my hand the book to which I referred, and, in the same breath, I added, "Johnny, will you please bring it to me?"

He was off like a flash, and when he brought it, instead of putting it on my desk, he came and handed it to me, and as I took it a sweet smile played over his face. I smiled back and said, "Thank you for bringing it so quickly."

There was something remarkable in his bright eyes as he stood there, as if waiting to do another errand for me. Right then and there, before school had even begun, I had found the key to Johnny's heart. The only trouble had been the lack of a kind, personal touch on the part of those upon whom the responsibility for his development had rested. He recognized and appreciated the fact that he had found a friend who understood boys.

Mr. Mort and I had raised three boys to manhood, and from their earliest remembrance they had known what to expect of us and what we expected of them. They never knew the meaning of a family switch; that instrument of correction was never found in our house.

If parents and teachers would always treat children with the same courtesy they extend to adults, and say please and thank you with requests, fewer reformatories would be needed. Johnny proved to be one of the best pupils I had from the first day of school to the last.

FATAL PHRASES.

"What's the use?" and "Why should I?" are the two most fatal phrases in the English language. They mark the dividing line between success and failure for hundreds of thousands of human beings.

"What's the use?" is the philosophy of the chap who throws up the sponge when the battle has been started. He sits down beside the road when he finds that the signpost has deceived him—instead of lengthening his stride. He is satisfied with "good enough." He has no goals, no visions. He accepts no challenge.

"Why should I?" is the cry of the work-dodger. His aim is to do just enough to get by. He is a clock-watcher who is afraid he will render more service than he is paid to perform. He is too lazy to think, too selfish to put his shoulder to the wheel in a common cause.

How much more vibrant and dynamic are the phrases, "It can be done!" and "You can count on me!" These phrases sparkle with the spirit of success and never fail of sufficient reward.—Selected.

One cannot be wise without remembering, creative without hoping, nor efficient without working. You should train your mind so it will be dripping with things remembered—be wise, be energetic, be efficient.—C. R. Nichol.

EASTERN VIRGINIA PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP TO MEET.

Miss Margaret Taylor, secretary, announces a meeting of the Eastern Virginia Pilgrim Fellowship, Sunday afternoon and evening, August 28, at Bethlehem, Nansemond. Rev. Earl Farrell will be the speaker. A movie, "Salt of the Earth," will be shown. Supper and recreation will be provided.

On his first visit to the United States this fall, Rev. Jan Mirejovsky, Secretary for European Reconstruction for the Youth Department of the World Council of Churches, will consult with youth and student leaders on the activities of American church Youth.

YOUR BEST IS YOUR DUTY.

A VESPER SERVICE.

PRELUDE

CALL TO WORSHIP:

Hear ye the Master's call.

"Give me thy best!"

For, be it great or small.

That is his test.

Do then the best you can.

Not for reward,

Not for the praise of man,

But for the Lord.

HYMN: "Our Best" (all verses).

POEM: "I Shall Not Pass This Way Again"—

The bread that bringeth strength I want to give.

The water pure that bids the thirsty live:

I want to help the fainting day by day.

I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give the oil of joy for tears,

The faith to conquer crowding doubts and fears.

Beauty for ashes may I give away.

I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give good measure running o'er,

And into angry hearts I want to pour

The answer soft that turneth anger away.

I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give to others hope and faith,

I want to do all that the Master saith;

I want to live aright from day to day.

I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

PRAYER: "The Lord's Prayer."

HYMN: "To the Work" (vs. 1, 2, 3).

STORY: "He Took It Upon Himself" (Christ and The Fine Arts by C. P. Maus)—

A monk once lived in a rude stone hut on the mountain-side, where he could see from his window the village on whose streets he had played as a happy little boy. But it had been five years since he had left his home or the hillside where he had cared for the cattle.

Wearing the cross and a long robe fastened with a cord about his waist—the symbol of his order—he had entered into solitude, hoping to rid himself of the burden of the poverty, sin and shame which lurked about him. He had climbed the plateau, built his hut, and planted his garden, enjoying the sunrise and sunset as he listened to the birds and breezes. Ignorant of the world and the sufferings of others he read and meditated and prayed. Thus he was content and thus he grew strong.

Then one day he fell asleep and dreamed. He had just finished reading the story of Calvary, and was so thrilled with that sad story of the cross, that he knelt in prayer, and as he prayed he fell asleep. As he slept he dreamed that he walked upon the road from earth to heaven. It was dark at first and hard to travel. But as he traveled on it grew lighter, and then beautiful with blossoming flowers.

At a turn in the road he met the Master. "O Master," he cried, kneeling at His feet, "why didst Thou leave us? We need Thee so sorely. Couldst Thou not have stayed?"

The Master answered softly, "I finished the work I had to do."

"But the poverty and sin," said the monk, "are still with us. O Master, who can bear the burden of man's need?"

The Master said, "I share with those who love Me the burden of man's need. I left part of the burden for them."

"But, Master," cried the monk, in sorrow and in fear, as the Master looked deep into his soul, "what if they fail Thee?"

"Ah," said the Master of Men, "I am counting on those who love Me, and love never faileth."

The monk awoke. His dream had been so real, the vision so clear, that he gazed for moments about the tiny room before going out into the moonlight. Later he sat down in silence to think. It had been so quiet, so comfortable, there had been time for worship and thought. But the dream disturbed him.

Again he fell upon his knees and prayed. Then he arose, took off his robe and folding it neatly with the cross and beads, laid it away. With mingled feelings of fear and hope he dressed in the clothes he had worn when, as a young student, he had left his father's house. "Now," he said softly, "I am one of them—His friends on whom He is counting." Then he grasped his mountain stick firmly and started down the trail. And as he walked his look of fear changed to one of joy.

"I'm going back," he said aloud. "Back down into the midst of problems that must be met and solved—down where life is hard and men must toil; down into the thick of the battle with selfishness and greed; down into the midst of mad pleasure, where souls seek release and find it not—into homes where men and women struggle to be true and fail. The Master has finished His part. Now He works through me. I must not fail Him."—Author Unknown.

RESPONSIVE READING: Psalm 116—

Group One—I love the Lord because he hath heard my voice and my supplications.

Group Two—Because he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live.

Group One—I will walk before the Lord in the land of the living.

Group Two—What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?

Group One—I will take the cup of salvation and call upon the name of the Lord.

Group Two—I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people.

PSALMS OF JUSTICE.

LESSON X.—SEPTEMBER 4, 1949.

By REV. ROBERT A. WHITTEN.

Guest Editor.

MEMORY SELECTION: Righteousness and justice are the foundation of thy throne; lovingkindness and and truth go before thy face.—Psalm 89:14.

LESSON: Psalms 49:1-7; 72; 82.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 72:1-8, 12-13.

Justice for All.

Our lesson for today is a timely one to consider on the eve of Labor Day. Psalm 49 deals with wealth; Psalm 82 with its distribution. Labor Day is a time when we should think of the people who toil with their hands for a living. We should be reminded that they have rights which must be respected if we would obey the righteous law of God. A living wage, favorable conditions under which to work, just treatment at the hands of an employer, who would remember them as human beings and not as slaves driven to a task—these are the honest working man's just deserts. The laborer must remember his responsibility, too, giving an honest day's work for the wages he receives. Without due consideration of the interest of his employer the employee himself becomes quite guilty of the sin of injustice. To the rich and poor alike the obligation to deal justly is enjoined upon us all in today's lesson. Our highly developed industrial life presents problems to be solved by both the employer and employee in the spirit of Christ, as stewards of Almighty God. Injustice prevails in many places of the world but woe to those who oppress the hireling or to the wage earner who shirks his responsibility to deal justly with the prudent man for whom he works.

Permanent Possessions.

It may be possible for an individual to live for years without the discovery of Life's Deeper Meaning, spending time, energy and talents for selfish ends. The Bible teaches us that God has a purpose for placing each of us in His world. It teaches that life is God given and if committed unto Him for the fulfilment of His divine purpose, will be God directed. Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly" (John 10:10). The Gospel of Jesus Christ reveals a loving heavenly Father who cares for his children and is ever seeking to bring the prodigal into the loving fellowship of the Father's home. In this world God has placed you where your physical needs may be supplied, where you may cultivate and keep in order all that has been entrusted to your care, for yourself and others. How can we be reverent toward God while we deal unjustly with His children? One who spends his life seeking worldly gain, without assuming his obligation as a steward of God in all human relations will doubtless find at the gate of death that all his ill-gotten gain must be left to others while his soul embarks upon the voyage "from which no traveler ere returns," empty handed and with the stinging consciousness of a misspent life. We should practice the golden rule of "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you." Getting wealth by honest means is commendable, but, if in the getting one becomes a slave to his possessions, he loses life, getting only those things for which he has exchanged his soul. It is possible for one who possesses no wealth to be so covetous as to miss the joy of living. Jesus seems to have regarded the matter of worldly goods as one of the most important problems a man could face. Whether we are rich or poor let us strive to see that our treasure as Christians is laid up where moth and rust do not corrupt and where thieves do not break through and steal.

A Parable.

A certain family had a lovely home into which several children were born. These children compared favorably with other children in the community in health and intelligence and were as precious as babies and young children could be. As each grew older there were questions which must be answered; about life, the world in which they found themselves and decisions which were important in their young lives. Each child craved companionship and each pleaded with his parents to tell stories, to go on hikes, to romp and play, to teach them to make things with their hands. But the father and mother, although they loved their children very dearly, put them off from time to time, saying, "I don't have the time, now." They were busy parents. They worked hard, they attended social functions, indulged in games, occasionally, perhaps, which neither improved the mind nor added to the sum total of human joy.

Both parents, without realizing it, became prodigal. They took a journey into a far country, far from the home where the children were growing up. There they wasted their energies with minor things which consumed their substance while the children at home perished with hunger for the love of father and mother. The years rolled by more quickly than the parents dreamed. The children were growing up. Left to themselves they found amusement, at first innocent, but continually left alone they sought others forms of pleasure, sometimes venturing on paths which lead astray. There were other children near who had parents more concerned with the getting of wealth, pleasure or absorbed with some hobby, and they, too, had overlooked the responsibility God had given when He placed those precious children in their care. A child's life, like clay, must be molded at the right time, or like a tree that is bent when young, it cannot be straightened again.

These children, not having been taught to deal justly, to respect the rights of others, knew nothing of righteousness. They began to trespass on the rights of others and when confronted with their wrongs, spoke falsely to shield themselves; doing many things unbecoming a well-reared child.

And then one day the parents were stabbed wide awake by some misdemeanor of a child. Mother and father found themselves starving for the love that one day was theirs by inheritance. Finding themselves in a far country they arose with penitent hearts and came to their children, saying, "We have sinned against you and in the sight of heaven. Come, we will be your pals. We will share your pleasures and teach you the things you should know." But the children said, "Not now! It is too late for us. We have our friends. With them we will share our pleasures. From them we will learn. Once you could have taught us important lessons. Once you could have made life beautiful for us. Now, we go our way." And the parents, seeing too late, their grave mistake, went away sorrowful, while their children, without having known the way of righteousness and justice, went out into the world to join thousands of other grown-up children who had not been taught about God and justice.

What then, will be the harvest of all the children of these children who practice injustice with their neighbors. The home is the place where the practice of justice should begin and where justice should be taught as a way of life.

TAR HEEL BY ADOPTION.

Rev. Robinson was born and reared in New York. Originally he planned to study medicine, but at Columbia University he became interested in psychology. One summer he did student work in Georgia and this further convinced him that his field was human relations and possibly the ministry. By the end of his junior year he had definitely decided he was more concerned with man's mind and spirit than with his body. Training at Union Theological Seminary followed.

An approachable nature and a concerned and adventuring spirit are Robinson characteristics. The latter appears in his attitude to his new NCCJ religious commission post.

"The current Catholic-Protestant tension," he says, "makes the commission's work both important and difficult. Nevertheless conference work with religious leaders and organizations ought to be the most promising field of operation for an educational organization like NCCJ. It is from these leaders and groups that we can expect religious motivation without which a movement like ours is dead. Certainly our major faiths have immense educational resources and as our religious leadership becomes more aware of the stake we all have as Americans and world citizens in the building of understanding and good will among those of differing religious convictions, their participation will be assured.

"Both the future of democracy and the peace of the world are threatened by our present unhappy state of prejudice and ill-will. I shall begin my new work with a sense of real humility but with a tremendous desire to be of some small use in an immense job that needs the help of all of us who believe in God and in the inherent dignity of all men."

Robinson is unhappy at leaving North Carolina. "My greatest personal gratification has been my acceptance as a 'Tar Heel'—and my greatest regret about my new job is that it takes me away from North Carolina.

"I think," he said, "the South is the most exciting place in the country to live and work. I have loved the South from the moment I made my first trip in 1928. From the day in 1938 that I arrived here to live I have felt at home. No one has ever made me feel like the 'foreigner' some of my Northern friends insisted I would be."—Frances Cox in Greensboro Daily News.

MINISTRY CONCLUDED.

through the war years. President Hatanaka of Kobe, having been a classmate of Leonard's in Oberlin, graciously gave us his evening to relating stories and experiences which are ever memorable. At the chapel exercises which President Hatanaka conducted in a very impressive manner, Leonard was given a special introduction to an interested audience of Japanese girls who dressed and acted much like their American sisters.

Back in the town of Kobe, Dr. Cary took us to see the ruins of the Community Church; and the miraculously undisturbed Glory Kindergarten which came through unscathed in Kobe's baptism of fire. This kindergarten and its training school for fifty young women is one of the few places in Kobe that seems to be functioning normally.

Nagoya, our second port in Japan, impressed us more favorably, for its crowded streets have taken on an aspect of "business as usual" despite the prevailing foreign supervision. Yokohama and Tokyo are also recovering from the frightfully devastating bombing they had received in various raids. These two cities have little time for mourning, for they are in the midst of an intensive program of rehabilitation, and have already wiped out most of the signs of the destruction of war.

In Tokyo we were principally interested in the visit to our nephew's son, Paul Higby, who is serving in the Counter Intelligence group of the Occupation forces, and is stationed in the buildings formerly occupied by the Kempetai, Japan's Gestapo, where the Doolittle flyers were detained, tried, executed and buried. Even so brief a visit gave us a very encouraging glimpse of what the Occupation means to the Japanese, and also to the ablest of our young men in the service.

The next evening the M/s Tudor was nosed away from the pier, and before darkness settled upon the sea, Japan was fast receding from our sight, and we began the roughest stretch of the journey. All through the north Pacific for twelve days, the Tudor rolled and pitched, and the motion never ceased till we reached the coast waters of California. When out of the mist we beheld the Golden Gate Bridge, we could appreciate the feeling in the heart of Sir Walter Scott when he wrote:

Breathes there a man with soul so dead,

*Who never to himself hath said,
This is my own, my native land?*

And yet, after the formalities of inspection were over, we spent our afternoon ashore in San Francisco's China Town!

On previous trips our journey ended here, but there was still before us a seven-day voyage along the coasts of Lower California, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and the Republic of Panama. Smooth seas, sunny skies, gorgeous sunsets and starry nights under the southern cross—all the makings of a perfect trip—were climaxed on June 26 when huge flocks of pelicans winged their way far out into the harbor of Balboa to lead us into the Canal Zone.

Leaving the Canal Zone via Limon Bay we crossed the Caribbean which, despite its reputation for rough seas, was kind to us. Between Haiti and Cuba we made our way into the Atlantic Ocean, and after a four-day run up the coast we were in sight of home. As we approached the harbor of New York, slowly making our way through the Narrows, ocean-going vessels of many sizes and descriptions were passing us—liners, cargo carriers, tankers, excursion boats and private pleasure craft. Glasses were especially directed on the beaches at Coney Island and Far Rockaway where some three million people from New York, Brooklyn and many other coastal cities were trying to escape the burning heat that had New England in its grip. Before we reached Staten Island the Statue of Liberty came into view, and then we knew we were back in the homeland once more, for in the absence of a reception committee, she brought us her friendly challenge.

In our personal letters to those who reply to this, we shall be glad to tell you more about our Chinese co-workers and friends; of the political changes coming about in China; and of the church and its need of your prayers, also what we still may do to help in this hour of China's greatest need.

The Orphanage

DEAR PEOPLE:

It will take money—good money—from good people who love little children to bring this place up to the level sought by those who have studied its needs for several years. Under our former superintendent it climbed—it really climbed, for I can remember as a young student going out from Elon to some of our best rural churches hearing from them about the orphanage—its good points and its needs. It had its good points from its very first day, and it has done a good work every day since then. I became interested in it then and have followed the trail of the man who preceded me with genuine pride. The least of my thoughts was that I should ever sit here in this chair and write this letter. It was put up to me. It was put up to me persuasively and insistently, as a place of service, of need and of calling. I accepted the post humbly and with fear of God and real desire to do His will.

I know already that it will take money to bring this institution up to the level of its modern needs. Two prayers fill my soul: God bless these dear children and open the road of usefulness and blessing before them; and find Thou, O God, their friends who love them and Thee and desire them to see good success in their day. Now I have faith that God will hear the prayer for the poor and needy. Something tells me He will.

Someone will perhaps look at the total set up in this report by Mrs. W. Clarke Perry, secretary here in the office, and wonder if it doesn't take faith. But we have learned here on the farm that a dry spell sends the roots down deeper for the double purpose of finding further nourishment and in preparation for the forthcoming season. May it be so with us here and now.

There is not space enough remaining to tell you about the picnic, the swimming party, the foot-long weiners with especially prepared rolls, the seventy fresh new towels, the two packages of bathing suits, nor the twelve extra long iced watermelons . . . well, let's just say that Mrs. W. W. Sellars did it, and her friends of Burlington helped her; and that she and her good husband were just as happy as all the children and all the others of us here—you should have seen it to realize how happy that was!

The annual home coming day will be observed here September 4 with dinner on the grounds served by the Orphanage. Please come to see us that day, and if you can come for the dinner at noon drop us a card telling us how many will be in your party. Thank you!

HERBERT HOOVER OPPOSES INCREASE IN POSTAGE RATES.

An important ally has been won by the forces opposing the proposed great increase in second-class postal rates on newspapers and magazines to offset the annual post office deficit. He is Herbert Hoover, the only living former President.

The Post Office Department said Mr. Hoover, is losing about $500,000,000 a year through wasteful, inefficient operations. What can be done, he urged, is to take the country's 19,000 postmasters out of politics and effect other reforms that will put the department on a business-like basis.

"The whole organization is obsolete from a modern business point of view," he declared. "It operates on 160 years' accumulation of laws and regulations that total 800 closely printed pages. No mortal man knows what all this means."

Mr. Hoover flatly opposed an increase in second-class postal rates on newspapers, magazines, and books. He said the country should maintain its traditional policy of encouraging public information through low postal rates.

IT'S AS SIMPLE AS THIS.

A great deal of complicity has been injected into the recent discussions of alcoholics, alcoholism, and related subjects. That there is a great deal about alcoholics we do not know is granted; that they need patient and skilled treatment is also granted. But that the whole field is complicated we deny. It's as simple as this:

More alcohol consumed by more and more people makes for more alcoholism. There isn't any way in the world for one to become an alcoholic if he or she does not use alcohol. It is only as one resorts to the use of the drug that one becomes addicted to the use of it. (That statement is so simple that I'm almost ashamed to make it.)

More alcohol available in the greatest number of places will make for more and more use of it. Talk about the bootleggers all you want to but the fact is that, when liquor was scarce during Prohibition, the climb of alcoholism was stopped dead in its tracks. Why? Simply because alcohol was not easily available for the multitudes as it is today. The more liquor stores, the more liquor will be sold. This, too, is absurdly simple.

Give any community an easy and convenient supply of alcohol in liquor, beer and wine, and allow the manufacturers to exploit the product by advertising in paper, magazines, picture shows, and on the radio, and more and more will more and more people secure and use the advertised product. This is the sole purpose of advertising, and, failing in this, it fails entirely.

Here, then, is this apparently complicated problem reduced to childlike simplicity. Now go ahead and allow the poison peddlers to set up shop in your community, or to stay there if already in, and you are laying the certain foundation for the creation of alcoholics in your community. Get rid of the sources of the evil, stop the people from drinking, and alcoholics and alcoholism will disappear.

The solving of this problem is so amazingly simple that one wonders why we allow it to continue to plague us with all its horrors of sudden death and every kind of misery and sorrow known to the heart of man.—Norman M. Lovein in The National Voice.

A great business success was probably never attained by chasing the dollar, but is due to pride in one's work—the pride that makes business an art.—Henry L. Doherty.

been generous. It will be noted that the contributions total $611.12. We believe that this will be sufficient for the present to take care of the needs of Yaying. You will be interested in excerpts from a letter from Dr. Harold Matthews of the American Board now in Foochow under the date of July 11: "You wanted a report on Timothy Chang's sister, Miss Yaying Chang, a T. B. patient in Union Hospital, Foochow, since February 22. She has had one lung collapsed about 20 per cent; is recovering, and takes certain special treatments once a week and she will be able to leave the hospital within three months. This information I just received from her Chinese woman doctor. Her family did well to take care of all bills from February to June, and the contributions from the people of the Southern Convention lifts a great load from them at this time. Presumably later months care for her will cost approximately $30.00 per month."

It is our purpose to send $30.00 a month through the American Board for the care of Yaying. Should there be need for additional funds, we will advise the friends of Timothy in the Southern Convention. We are grateful to you for your response. You will see Timothy's deep gratitude in the note which follows. I think nothing we have done for him has meant more than this generous response from our people to the needs of his sister. I think your gifts meant not only relief from anguish on his part because he was unable to take care of the whole matter himself, but it is a living example of the partnership in Christ with him. This expression will mean much to him as he returns as our ambassador for Christ in Shaowu.

A MESSAGE FROM TIMOTHY CHANG.

Though I am among Christian friends here, yet I am far away from home. I haven't seen my folks since July, 1948. The political unrest in my country has caused me worry, and I have hoped and prayed for the safety of my family. I hoped every day that they are well but when I first learned of the illness of my younger sister, Yaying, I naturally felt very bad and I wanted to help. I must have seemed very sad because Dr. Scott seemed to know something was wrong. I told him about the hospital expenses for her and how I wanted to work to help pay them. He and Dr. Harrell were most understanding and assured me that my friends in the Southern Convention would wish to help. You have helped most generously in your prayers and gifts. I want to tell you my gratitude.

First, I would thank God for His leading and His helping me. I also want to thank all of you who have done everything for me as I have already been here nearly a year. Your kindnesses are not only to me but my younger sister, Yaying, also. I believe that she would thank and remember all of you in her whole life. I can't tell you more now, but we can watch her works in the future. I try to say some more for showing my appreciation but I don't know how to say it. I can only say that I thank you all very much from the deep depth of my heart.

TIMOTHY CHANG.

YOUR BEST IS YOUR DUTY.

Group One—I will offer to thee the sacrifice of thanksgiving, and will call upon the name of the Lord.

Group Two—I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people.

All—In the courts of the Lord's house, in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem. Praise ye the Lord.

BENEDICTION: Our Father, who hast shown us in so many ways that all life is vibrant with possibilities: Save us from thinking that we are worthless and that our efforts are futile. Help us throughout our days to believe that thou art depending upon us, even as we are dependent upon thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CHORAL RESPONSE: "Hear Our Prayer, O Lord."

CONGRESS GETS BILL TO RESTRICT RUM ADVERTISING.

Congressman Laurie C. Battle of Alabama has introduced a bill, HR 5559, to drastically restrict the advertising of alcoholic beverages. The bill proposes an amendment to the Federal Trade Commission Act, as follows:

"In the case of an alcoholic beverage an advertisement shall be deemed misleading in a material respect if in such advertisement representations are made or suggested by statement, word, design, device, sound, or any combination thereof, that the use of such alcoholic beverage (a) is beneficial to health or contributes to physical upbuilding, (b) will increase social or business standing or prestige, or (c) is traditional in American family life or a part of the atmosphere of the American home."

The term "alcoholic beverage" is defined as "any spirituous, vinous malt, or other fermented liquor fit for use for beverage purposes."

When enthusiasm is inspired by reason; controlled by caution; sound in theory; practical in application; reflects confidence; spreads good cheer; raises morale; inspires associates; arouses loyalty, and laughs at adversity, it is beyond price.—Cor.

FENYANG UNDER LIBERATION

By LOUISE MEEBOLD

I feel such a great debt of gratitude to you all for your fellowship by letter and prayer during this past year, and, when I pray for you, it is always with thanksgiving and a lifted heart. Some of you are rather inclined to make us out heroines, and Emma Noreen deserves that sort of title, but certainly not I. When the national government left town, I was considering leaving, too, but Emma felt she could not desert her patients; and then the new government came in so quickly I could not get away anyway. As you know, on their first day they put up their "religious freedom" posters and sent people around to assure us that our lives were in no danger, and, since then, our troubles have been mainly in making adjustments to the new regime. We have been in the midst of a loving fellowship here, too, with our local church friends. Our many problems have thrown us together in a continual interdependence, which has had a very steadying effect on us all.

Since the new government wishes to control all schools, we have closed ours and turned the property over to the new schools to use. After the Japanese occupation, our big compound had many empty buildings, and these are now one by one being occupied by new schools and training classes; the place is alive with young people and their activities. The actual school work for students is lighter than at any previous time. It is the teachers who work hard, for besides teaching their classes, they are obliged to study the purposes and policies of the new regime, write essays and criticisms, and take examinations.

At first my house was a sort of museum, with scores of visitors daily, and I often felt I was considerable part of the exhibit, but, since the schools have come on the compound and the young people's curiosity more or less satisfied, I have not so many callers. Now I am able to give some time to teaching individuals. I have English, music and Bible students; a "Sisters' prayer meeting" every Tuesday noon (join us at 12 o'clock) and an all-day sort of Sunday school; I prepare a Bible story and some songs, and my little scholars come in two's and three's all day Sunday to hear and tell the story and to get the home-made picture cards which my secretary and I whack out each week.

Our church work is also "making adjustments." We hold regular Sunday services in a basement auditorium of the hospital; we have Wednesday evening prayer meeting but no regular young people's or children's work. Attendance at all these services is quite small for the large number of Christians in town. An added problem at this time is that America is so hated by the government that many people are afraid to acknowledge any relationship to us or the church, some do not want any of our church people to call on them, and in other ways show war hysteria. I have repeatedly suggested to our leaders that if my absence would make things easier, I should be glad to know. I am not a nurse or a doctor, whose services to the community are obvious to all. But so far our church leaders think it is more helpful to have me stay, and I abide by their decision.

The booming part of our work at present is the hospital and Emma Noreen is telling about that in her letter (on page eight of this issue).

A Prayer for the Inner Man

CONFIRM me, O God, by the grace of Thy Holy Spirit. Grant me might to be strengthened in the inner man, and to empty my heart of all useless anxiety and distress; not to be drawn away with sundry desires of any thing whatever, whether mean or precious, but to look on all things as passing away, and on myself also no less as about to pass away with them. For nothing is abiding under the sun, where all things are vanity and vexation of spirit. Oh, how wise is he that so considereth them!

Grant me, O Lord, heavenly wisdom, that I may learn above all things to seek and to find Thee, above all things to relish and to love Thee, and to think of all other things as being, what indeed they are, at the disposal of Thy wisdom. Grant me prudently to avoid him that flattereth me, and to endure patiently him that opposeth me. Because this is great wisdom, not to be moved with every wind of words, nor to give ear to an ill-flattering siren; for thus we shall go on securely in the way which we have begun.—From The Imitation of Christ by Thomas a Kempis.

News Flashes

Dr. J. H. Dollar, a former pastor, preached at Newport News Sunday.

Rev. R. L. House will assist Dr. Luther Grice at Holy Neck next week.

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein preached at First Church, Richmond, last Sunday.

Rev. J. Everette Neese is assisting Rev. R. E. Newton in the Valley Conference this week.

Rev. W. Millard Stevens has announced his resignation at the First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C.

Rev. and Mrs. Robert Harding of Jeffersonville, Vermont, are spending their vacation with Mrs. A. W. Andes at Harrisonburg, Va.

Now is the time for many of our readers to establish a Sustaining Membership for THE SUN. Send $10 to Supt. W. T. Scott.

Rev. Roy D. Coulter received ten members into Timber Ridge Church Sunday morning at regular services. And baptized 11 members into the church Sunday afternoon.

Nearly two hundred people crowded the Timber Ridge Church last Sunday to hear the pastor deliver a message on "The Open Doors."

A revival will begin at Long's Chapel September 4 and continue through September 11. Rev. W. J. Andes, Winston-Salem, will be the evangelist. The women of the church have raised money and had the church painted in July. They are looking forward to the meeting of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference to be held here October 4.

DR. TREVER TO MAKE SERIES OF BIBLE TALKS IN VIRGINIA.

Dr. John Cecil Trever, director of the department of English Bible of the International Council of Religious Education, will give a series of twenty public addresses in Virginia between September 1 and 12. He also will conduct conferences in the interest of developing a new appreciation of the Bible and its meaning for our time.

During 1947 and 1948 Dr. Trever served as active director of the Jerusalem School of Oriental Research. During this time four ancient Hebrew scrolls were brought to him by Syrians for examination. He found one of them to be a complete scroll of the Book of Isaiah, at least 1,000 years older than the otherwise earliest known copy of the book in Hebrew.

His schedule of meetings in Virginia is as follows: September 1 and 2—Church of the Brethren Regional Conference at Bridgewater; September 2—Woodstock High School, Woodstock; September 3—Methodist Church, Monterey; September 4—Front Royal Baptist Church; September 4 and 5—Bridgewater College; September 6—Mayflower Hotel, Lexington, and Grove Avenue Methodist Church, Radford; September 7—First Presbyterian Church, Lynchburg; September 8—Longwood State Teachers College, Farmville, and LABOR DAY PRAYER.

By DR. RALPH W. SOCKMAN.

O God, our great Companion, by whom the meek are guided in judgment, grant us humble hearts to seek thy will and honest minds to follow thy truth. Grateful that we have entered into the labors of other men, help us so to labor that we may leave a worthy heritage to those who come after us. Make us manly enough to bear our own burdens and godly enough to help bear the burdens of others. Keep us from foolish fears and world anxieties, that with singleness of mind and purity of heart we may seek first thy kingdom. Minister to those who are ill, give cheer to those who are lonely, comfort those who mourn. Amen.

CONFERENCE PRESIDENT DIES.

Dr. Frank H. Lewis pastor of the Shelton church in Portsmouth, and president of the Eastern Virginia Conference died sudden last Sunday while attending Massanetta Springs Bible Conference. Funeral services were conducted from the church on Wednesday afternoon.

WORLD COUNCIL SECRETARY REPORTS YEAR OF CONSOLIDATION.

The first year of the World Council of Churches has been "a year of consolidation," said Dr. W. A. Visser 't Hooft, general secretary of the Council, on July 9 before its main administrative body.

Speaking at the meeting of the Central Committee in Chichester, England, Dr. Visser 't Hooft reported on the development of the ecumenical movement since the Amsterdam Assembly of last summer. Excerpts from his report follow.

Churches Facing New Regimes.

"Special reference should be made to our relationship with the churches in Eastern Europe and China," said the General Secretary. Mentioning the fact that Bishop Ordass of Hungary, a member of the Central Committee, is still in prison despite the strong protest of the Committee and of many church leaders last September, he asserted that, "Even if we take into consideration that in certain cases the conflicts between the state on the one hand and churchman on the other have a political rather than a religious flavor, there remains the indisputable fact that a systematic attempt is being made to force the churches into a pattern which is foreign to their nature."

"There is on the whole no direct religious persecution in the forms in which such persecution took place in the early stages of the Russian revolution. But there is a policy of regimentation of the churches, forbidding them to render any public witness when they are invited to join the official choir of glorification of the new regime. . . . Such regimentation is more, and not less, dangerous for the purity and freedom of the church."

"At the same time priests and pastors of all confessions who do not accept these restrictions on the independence of the church, have been removed from office and a great many have been imprisoned. . . . In several of the countries concerned, it has been made quite impossible for the churches to maintain any relationships with their sister churches abroad."

"It is exceedingly difficult to generalize about the attitudes of the churches themselves," Dr. Visser 't Hooft pointed out. "They were on the whole unprepared for this fundamental change in their situation, which, as one acute observer has put it, forced them to jump from an 18th century situation when Church and state were closely related into a 21st century situation when Church and state will probably have little or no connection with each other.

"It would seem that the World Council has in this connection two tasks which are not easily reconciled. On the one hand we must stand squarely for the freedom of the Church to be the Church in the fullest meaning of the word. . . . On the other hand we must do our utmost to maintain fellowship with these churches. . . .

"And this can be done only if we have sufficient imagination to understand their baffling problems and if at the same time we accept the tension inherent in the ecumenical movement, namely that we can stand together in spite of varying decision in the political and social realm."

Younger Churches Challenge Ecumenism.

"Only if we succeed in giving to these churches the full opportunity to make their individual and combined contribution to our common thought and action will we be an ecumenical rather than a Western body," said Dr. Visser 't Hooft, speaking of the younger churches, members of the Council, most of whom are in East Asia.

"The younger churches in this area have taken over the initiative for the Christian task in Asia, and they assume this tremendous responsibility when great upheavals take place in the life of their peoples. At such a moment they need to foster much closer relationship among themselves. . . . and they need to define what they will expect from, and will give to, the total Christian movement as expressed in the International Missionary Council and the World Council of Churches."

Orthodox Point Up Basis of Council.

Alluding to the fact that the Moscow Conference had taken its stand against the world churches, Dr. Visser 't Hooft added that, "The situation is further complicated by the ecclesiological issue whether the World Council has room for a church which considers itself as 'holding the whole truth and as being the only church on earth.'"

"Ecumenism does not mean ecclesiological relativism or syncretism. It is precisely the originality of the ecumenical movement that it invited churches, many of which are as yet unable to regard each other as branches of the same tree, to enter into fraternal conversation with each other. . . .

"In this respect, the situation of the Orthodox Churches is not fundamentally different, from that of many other churches in our movement. It is useful, however, that our Orthodox brethren remind us of this deep spiritual tension in our undertaking which we dare not forget or minimize, if we really want to stay together."

Roman Catholics Discuss Council.

Dr. Visser 't Hooft commented on "the quite remarkable interest in the Assembly which has been shown by Roman Catholics in all walks of life. . . . This interest in Amsterdam is part of a more general movement in the Roman Catholic Church which takes a deep interest in all ecumenical developments, seeks to make contacts with Christians of other churches, and finds its expression in various institutes, magazines and groups in different countries, particularly in Europe.

"The attitude of the World Council can only be to encourage every constructive attempt to arrive at genuine ecumenical relationships. In the present situation this means concretely that we must concentrate on unofficial contacts with individual Roman Catholics.

"In spite of rumors to the contrary, it remains a fact that the highest leadership of the Roman Catholic Church has forbidden the attendance of the unofficial Roman Catholic observers who had been invited to come to Amsterdam and that no alternative proposal was made by it. The only road open to us is, therefore, to foster personal relationships.

"We do not know where that road will lead. It may be that it is a blind alley. It may also be that it leads to unsuspected and hopeful ecumenical

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

ON LABOR DAY

"This is the gospel of labor,
Ring it, ye bells of the Kirk;
The Lord of love came down from above
To live with the men who work.
This is the rose he planted,
Here in the thorn-cursed soil;
Heaven is blessed with perfect rest,
But the blessing of earth is toil."

—Van Dyke.

LONELY HEARTS BUREAU

Now for a prolonged season our newspapers have carried the story of a trial which is referred to as a case of "Lonely Hearts." Sing Sing Prison, which has electrocuted only seven women in its history, had to make special arrangements in preparing to execute Martha Beck, the "Lonely Hearts" murderess. Mrs. Beck was convicted of beating another woman's brains out after plotting the crime with one Raymond Fernandez.

There are many lonely hearts in the world, although they may not patronize a lonely heart bureau, or commit a crime. The Church is set in the world to minister to lonely hearts. The Bible contains our most adequate antidote to loneliness. The Holy Spirit, the Comforter, is the universal provision of the Savior for all who call upon Him.

Dr. W. E. Wisseman testifies that one who fills his mind with great poetry is least likely to be lonely. Music, especially the great hymns, gives perennial comfort and strength in all the exigencies of life. Work and fellowship in the Church give one a sense of belonging, of release and fulfilment. Yes, the Church is God's Lonely Hearts Bureau.

UNITY OR UNION?

It seems to be the safe and popular thing to say nowadays: "I am not interested in Church union, but I am greatly interested in unity." This statement, in substance, has been heard on numerous occasions. Speakers are missing a great opportunity to give a solid testimony in season for Church union when they repeat the trite statement concerning unity.

Those who are seriously interested in unity will not discountenance union. They will realize that the ultimate test of unity is union; that unity which stops short of union is unity with reservation, the unity of convenience. It is difficult therefore to believe that those who give lip service to unity and dismiss union as inconsequential are sincere. Or, granting their sincerity, it is obvious that these speakers have not considered the full implications of such a statement. Unity is important; but like patriotism, it is not enough. The ultimate and inevitable test of unity is church union.

MINISTERIAL CASUALTIES

God has not left Himself without the witness of great preachers in any generation. Three noted ministers have passed recently to their reward. Consider!

Dr. Ralph M. Timberlake, retired Superintendent of the Massachusetts Congregational Conference, died August 27 at Bridgeport, Connecticut. He had led the activities of one of the largest and most influential state conferences in our denomination since 1933. He spent 48 years in the Congregational ministry, beginning at a salary of $350 a year. He was succeeded last January by Albert B. Coe.

Dr. Ernest Fremont Tittle, pastor of the First Methodist Church in Evanston, Illinois, and one of the prophetic voices of our day, died August 3. The last sermon in his church was given to a congregation of 1,900. He gave the Lyman Beecher Lectures at Yale in 1932. His preaching was characterized by forthright pronouncements on economic, social and political problems. He never spoke in mere platitudes.

Dr. William L. Stidger, poet, preacher and teacher of preachers at the Boston University School of Theology, died August 7. Thirty-five years ago he heard Dr. Lyn Harold Hough recommend reading a book a day. It is said that he did just that for the rest of his life and wrote a book a year.

MINISTERIAL VACATIONS

One church in the Convention, whose pastor has been with them a number of years, voted to pay his expenses at any summer school or pastor's conference. How thoughtful, how generous, how appreciative! Such a provision for one's pastor is a fitting act of courtesy, an investment in better preaching, and an investment in better leadership. Some churches try to change pastors frequently while others steadfastly endeavor to help and improve their own.

Quite a number of our ministers attend the Massanetta Springs Bible Conference. It is within easy driving distance for those in our Convention. Dr. William E. Hudson had some of the foremost preachers of our day from America and Scotland on the program this summer. Elton Trueblood, the Quaker; Ross Stover and Oscar Blackwelder, the Lutherans; Stanley Jones, Henry Hitt Crane, Roy Smith, Ray Goff, Bishops Moore and Hughes, Methodists; William Forrester and Sidlow Baxter, Scotch Baptists; Raymond Lindquist; John S. Bonnell, P. D. Miller and George Docherty, Presbyterians—these men constitute a formidable cross section of Christian preaching in the English-speaking world.

These men preach the gospel with conviction and power. All are not of the same theological stripe, and the variety in point of view and presentation is wholesome. We are fortunate in having a Conference of this kind, open to people of all denominations, in our area.

Riding for a Fall

By ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, Minister,
First Congregational Church, Mason City, Iowa.

Every social crisis, whether it be economic or political, must be laid at man's own door; for social crises are always due to man's negligence or to his lack of understanding, his shortsightedness, his greed, or else to his repudiation of social responsibility. Whatever may be the basic cause of any social crisis, the innocent are compelled to suffer along with the guilty. However, any social crisis may be changed into social opportunity, advantage and accomplishment by genuine social concern, practical commonsense, cooperative effort, and hard work.

Human history is far more than the inter-play of impersonal economic forces. Human history is instead the inter-play of human personalities—the give and take of individuals and of groups. What makes history is not things but people. "Man is the master of his own fate" and of the fate of his fellows economically and politically. The resources of "God's Good Earth" are in man's custody. He can use them or abuse them at his own choice. He can ignore his social responsibility, greedily taking unto himself all that he can get—exploiting his fellows in his getting—and thereby bringing havoc upon himself and his fellows; or he can accept his social responsibility, altruistically seeking and using for the common good the values that lie about him; and thereby secure for himself and for others life's highest social rewards and satisfactions. Only thus can human progress be realized. The law of the jungle is "to get and keep" while the getting is good; but the law of civilization is "to get honorably in order to serve nobly." Moral law must be recognized, respected and obeyed in economics, as well as in every other realm of human interest, in order for mankind to make advance or even to continue life's drama.

Power of any kind, if misused, becomes an enemy instead of a friend not only to the victims of its misdirection, but also to its possessor as well. Power of any kind in man's hands always carries with it responsibility commensurate with its magnitude.

There has been a very dramatic shifting of economic power in America's social picture within the past two decades. From the beginning of our national history, Capital held the position of authority in the economic life of the people until within recent years. The ruling power is being shifted into other hands. Because of its power, Capital dictated the terms that had to be met. Its power was often wielded with tyrannical design and with high handed policy, absolutely unmindful of the reckoning day that must inevitably follow all misuse and abuse of power.

And now since the ruling power has been largely shifted into the hands of the working classes, it remains to be seen whether Labor is to rise to its high privilege of directing and using its power with a true social conscience that all classes may be blessed: or whether, because of self-contentedness and indifference to the common-good, it shall tyrannically rule with even a higher hand and a colder heart than did Capital in its heyday of power, making the last state of man's lot worse than the first. Any group, possessing the ruling power, which assumes the attitude of "the public be damned" cannot long hold its power. And unless Labor recognizes that social power always carries with it the definite social responsibility of using its power wisely and justly, then that power will be a devastating boomerang against those who hold it, and "a mill-stone about the neck" of society itself.

Only the religion of Jesus Christ in the hearts of the laboring classes and in the hearts of their leaders can enable them wisely and justly to wield the power that is now theirs. Unless Labor is possessed of a higher social conscience than Capital has had, unless Labor sees our nation's social picture as a whole, unless Labor recognizes its obligations to Capital and is willing to share Capital's losses as well as demanding the privilege to share Capital's gains; and unless Labor recognizes its responsibility to society (to all groups within the social structure), then the power that Labor now holds will prove a curse instead of a blessing to Labor, to Capital, to Government and to society as a whole.

A revitalized social conscience on the part of Labor and on the part of Capital is the crying need of the hour. The leadership of the Carpenter of Nazareth is the leadership needed today by both Capital and Labor for their own good and for the good of the multitudes who are unidentified with either group.

Certainly "The Forgotten Man" is no longer "The Toiler" as was too long the case. Everybody is now thinking about him, but nobody seems to be able easily to find him when there is something that only he can do. The toilers do not need our sympathy so much in these days as they need our prayers, for their responsibility is stupendous and the vision of their leaders sadly blurred. Economically, their lot is now cast in far more pleasant places than is that of numerous other groups (especially those who toiled in days gone by, now having but little to show for the rewards of their toiling). "The Forgotten Man" in the social regime of today is the man who is engaged in humanitarian service such as the teacher, the promoter of social welfare agencies and the man who toiled in life's yesterdays whose savings are sadly insufficient to meet today's needs. The terrifically increased cost of living today finds the meagre savings, of those now past the earning age, pitifully inadequate to meet their needs for even a comfortable existence. In these groups is to be found "The Forgotten Man" today, largely due to the shifting of the ruling economic power into new hands. And Labor will prove itself unfaithful to its trust of power if in its demands for more power these, whom it has forgotten, are not again remembered.

Let Labor concern itself with the need of these forgotten groups before reaching out for higher rewards and more power for itself! Let Labor commit its way unto the Lord in following the vision of service to all; let Labor be baptized with the baptism of love and goodwill toward Capital and toward "the Capitalless," and Labor can save itself and America. Otherwise, both Capital and Labor and all the rest of us are "Riding for a Fall." And God only knows how terrible may be that fall!

A priest had a striking dream. He dreamed he had ascended the ladder that reached from earth to heaven. Expectantly he knocked upon the door. Some one responded and demanded, "Who is there?" Proudly the priest called his name. "Who is with you?" came the reply. "No one," answered the priest, "I am alone." "Sorry," said the angel, "but we are instructed never to open these gates for a single individual." And, crestfallen and disappointed, he descended to earth.—Sunday School Times.

Labor Sunday Message--1949

American workers in factory, store, field and office, with their families, compose most of the American nation and most of the Christian churches. Labor Day calls attention to their rights, responsibilities and aspirations. We therefore call upon the churches to unite wholeheartedly in celebrating this Labor Sunday.

Everywhere workers are taking a larger part in the shaping of their own lives. They are assuming greater economic, social, and political responsibilities.

Workers want status. They want to feel that they are recognized as far more significant than the machines they operate and the materials they handle. They want to bring the democracy they hear so much about into their work-a-day world. American labor has made great strides toward this goal.

Workers want security. They want an end to the ups and downs of the business cycle. They want a cushion against the hazards of unemployment, sickness, and old age. Within recent years the justice of this demand has had increasing practical recognition.

Workers seek self-expression, both in their work and as citizens. This means wide participation for all in economic and political decisions. In America social changes over the years have resulted in gradual but significant progress, partly registered in social legislation.

A World in Ferment.

The world is now in a ferment. Movements that were begun to free the people have been used later to enslave them. Other movements have effected profound social and economic changes without sacrificing civil and political liberties. We should take care not to resist change merely because it is change, nor to condemn that which exists merely because it is not as new as something which is proposed. The strength of democracy is its ability to reinterpret the old, to use the new, to make continuing adjustment between freedom and justice, between individual rights and social demands. We dare not ignore the just aspirations of all people. We must strive to realize them within the framework of a Christian society.

The first step toward this end is to recognize the vast changes that have already occurred in our American life. We have shifted to a large extent from individualism to organization, from comparative self-sufficiency to far-reaching interdependence.

How Will Labor Use Its Power?

The Church must never forsake its basic interest in individuals. Nevertheless the times demand that it give increasing attention to group action, group morality, and group responsibility in our economic life. Men and women as objects of God's redeeming love are not means to be used by the powerful for selfish ends. They are neither slaves to be driven nor statistics to be manipulated. Each as a child of God is an end unto himself within God's purpose.

In America the churches are rightly concerned with the motivation and the social consequences of the increased concentration of corporate power; they face also the great question of the end for which organized labor will use its expanding power. Will it give Christian principles, including social responsibility, a first place in its program? Will the men who guide its affairs exercise Christian humility and justice in their use of power? Will they put the public interest above the special interests of the pressure groups they lead? The answers to these question depend upon the religious and ethical values held by the people in the ranks and leadership of labor.

The values that Christianity puts first cannot be realized by preaching and the printed word alone. They can most effectively be caught from men who share the problems and strivings of those they would serve. Our churches seek both the organized and the unorganized workers in still larger numbers in their membership and leadership, while they likewise seek to achieve closer contact, understanding, and cooperation with all workers everywhere.

The Task Before Us.

Such is the task to which we urge earnest dedication by our churches. This is a task which cannot be done only in the pulpit, in the sanctuary, or where people gather together for prayer and worship. It must be taken also to wherever people live and work. The mission of the churches cannot be separated from the restless masses of humanity who seek justice and freedom.

We cannot escape from our increasing interdependence; rather we must accept its responsibilities and meet its challenges. This means that Christians must be motivated by a purpose to help, never to dominate. Christians must seek a more intimate and sympathetic understanding of the conditions and just aspirations of all working groups in their own communities; and then apply that understanding, rather than ill-informed prejudices, in their judgment and action as citizens on issues that involve labor's rights and responsibilities.

In a changing world, as Christians we not only welcome but seek actively to promote, every advance in human relations toward social justice and human brotherhood under the Lordship of Christ and the love of God for all men.

WORLD COUNCIL SECRETARY REPORTS.

developments. But here—as so often in ecumenical affairs—we must not think in terms of success or failure, but in terms of our immediate obedience to the Lord who seeks to gather His children."

Amsterdam Calls for Rebirth of Churches.

"One cannot conclude this report concerning our first year without wondering whether our young and inexperienced movement is really able to bear the many, varied and heavy responsibilities which have been placed upon it. Are we in danger of being 'distracted with much serving'? and of being 'anxious and troubled about many things'? All depends on whether we are really concerned with the one needful thing. The Call to Prayer for the Assembly described what this was: 'Our first and deepest need is not new organizations, but the renewal, or rather the rebirth, of the actual churches.'

"The World Council has, therefore, no future if it is merely an organization for the more efficient marshalling of the Christian forces of the world. It can only live if it works for that specific unity which comes where Christ gathers His children to Himself in renewed obedience and loyalty.

"The Council can only live if it moves forward; if our staying together is not just staying where we are, but a common pilgrimage towards the same goal, which is the glorification of Christ in His Church. In other words, our fellowship must become increasingly the fellowship of members of the same body which share with each other, challenge each other and live for each other for the sake of their common Lord."

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITE

PRIVATE COLLEGE INCOME NOT MATCHING LEAPING COST.

The small college in this country has been the bulwark of our freedom and our government since the beginning of our country as a nation. The products of the small colleges have played an important part in the leadership of the nation and the development of their results through the years. No greater calamity could befall our civilization than to have our church-related and privately-endowed colleges close their doors to the youth of our land. Every possible effort and every necessary sacrifice must be made that these colleges may continue to render their services. I appeal to the constituency of our own college to make what contributions they can now and to continue these contributions throughout the years and when they are through with what they have that they may remember Elon College in their last Will and Testament. It should be a great satisfaction to realize that when you are gone that you will continue to serve through what you have been able to accumulate during your lifetime.

The following article, "Private College Income Is Bigger Than Ever, But Not Big Enough To Match Leaping Costs . . ." by Bruce Blossat, appeared in the daily press a few days ago. It is of such significance and importance to the ongoing of the colleges of this country that I am taking the privilege of asking for its publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I do trust that the readers of THE SUN will read this article carefully and consider the statement seriously. It is serious.

* * *

"Private colleges and universities are taking in more money than ever before. But in most cases it isn't enough to offset their leaping costs.

"During the war, most schools enjoyed profitable contracts with the government for wartime research and training of service personnel. They built up reserves that have come in handy since. Then their coffers were further swelled by record tuition money when the huge post-war enrollment of veterans deluged them.

"Now the reserves are gone or dwindling fast, and veterans are graduating in big numbers. Enrollments are dropping, though perhaps not as fast as was predicted.

"Ordinarily, private schools have three chief sources of funds: tuition and related student fees; gifts and grants from individuals, corporations or other organizations; and government contracts.

"For decades the private gifts and grants, usually from rich old men and women, were the main prop. They aren't any more. Such contributions average less than 40 per cent of private schools' income these days. Tuition, on the other hand, generally accounts for more than half of school income.

"A good share of private contributions go to endowment, which means the money must be invested and only the income used by the school. Hence the term 'endowed institutions.'

"Endowment is still pouring into private colleges and universities, but the pace is slower now. The President's Commission on Higher Education reports endowment funds increased an average of $500,000,000 in each of the three decades from 1900 to 1930. But from 1930 to 1940 they rose just $250,000,000. For the 1940-50 span the total probably will fall somewhere between those two figures.

"Leading specialists in philanthropy explain that gift-giving is heavier than ever, but that private colleges aren't getting their former share of it. The President's Commission and some other educators blame the schools, saying their money-raising methods are out of date.

"In 1929-30, according to Thad Hungate, a student of college finance, contributions to higher education took 11 per cent of the philanthropic dollar. By 1941-42, schools were getting only five per cent of that same dollar. And the situation is hardly brighter today. Endowment doesn't produce as much income as it once did, either.

"That's not all. The state-supported institutions, as they have grown in strength and quality, have attracted increasing amounts of endowment money which they can pile on top of funds they get from legislatures. To them it is almost pure gravy.

"One educator reports, for example, that mighty California now has a bigger endowment than any private institution west of the Rockies.

That includes well-established Stanford University at Palo Alto, Calif.

"Another difficulty is that so much of the money the schools do get has some sort of strings tied to it. Generally it can only be used for a specific project like cancer research, or for a particular department.

"This ties the hands of schools at the very time when the crying need is for 'free money' funds that can be used for anything. A gift of $100,000 for polio research may be a fine thing, say many educators, but it doesn't help a school pay its janitor or light bills, and often fails to make allowance for overhead costs associated with the research.

"Lacking free funds to use flexibly as it sees fit, the private school can't often embark on the new enterprises it may deem vital to its continued stature as a leader.

"More and more, the private schools have sought money they could use not as endowment but to pay current expenses. Back in 1920, only about 11 per cent of private contributions were for current use. Twenty years later the figure had soared to 41 per cent and it's going higher.

"A conservative school like Harvard is reluctant to trust annual contributions for current use. It fears a business decline might dry up the source quickly and that it would be folly to build too much on the hope of such money. But most schools haven't any choice. They have to rely on it."

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It is an inspiration and gives a sense of security to realize that Elon College has as its constituency more than thirty thousand church members in the Southern Convention alone, approximately ten thousand alumni, and a host of friends. If this combined constituency would take the college seriously and give out of their surplus, not out of their necessities, a small share, the college would have no difficulties of a financial nature but would be able to expand its present curriculum and multiply its services to the church, to society, and to the nation. If everyone would contribute even a small amount, that amount totalled would be a sizeable sum and go a long ways in supporting the college.

Our churches at the request of the Convention have obligated themselves to a minimum support of the college. If these allotments could be paid regularly, week after week, and month

Christian Missions

At Home and Abroad

REPORT FROM AFRICA AND THE NEAR EAST.

By DAVID McKEITH, JR.

During the first six and one-half months of this year I had the privilege of visiting our American Board stations in Africa and the Near East. It is a thrilling experience to meet the people of these countries and to realize how much has been accomplished by our missionaries.

In Angola, Portuguese West Africa, we have over 50,000 church members under the American Board alone, and this number could be doubled in six months' time if we had sufficient personnel. The number of children in school could be doubled almost overnight. These people are eager for the Gospel and Christian education.

In Southern Rhodesia one government official urged us to go forward with our program of Christian education and develop Mt. Silinda into the only higher educational institution for natives in that part of Africa. If only we could provide the leadership! Similar stories could be told about every one of our missionary areas. "The fields are white unto harvest."

Now, upon my return to Boston, the first problem I meet is one which disturbs me greatly: the treasurer estimates that the fiscal year will close on August 31 with a deficit of over $100,000 unless many substantially increased gifts are received.

With all the opportunity before us we must go forward. I trust, therefore that you will help us avert this possible deficit by sending in a generous contribution, if you have not yet responded to the Summer Appeal, and by speaking enthusiastically about the Board and its work to your friends—will you ask them to send a gift also?

The American Board is doing a great work; I hope you will continue to count yourself as part of the American Board family.

Former chaplain, now American Board missionary, Rev. Dr. Harold Hanlin, tells of new responsibilities in Micronesia.

needed—read some beginning books on navigation.

Then one day the Star sailed into Kwajalein Harbar. We decided that Miss Wilson had best fly on to Truk, and that I should try to get the Star there in time for the Mission meeting. So began an entirely new experience for me in my work as a missionary! I wish I could have transformed myself overnight into a combination captain-engineer-navigator, electrician and radioman—for the Star needed all of them!

I had no idea how much was involved in getting a small ship ready for a long sea pull like that from Kwajalein to Truk. This climate is very hard on equipment and rigging, and we had a very busy two weeks at Kwajalein before all was in order. But we were off—to Lilie and Maloelap and Aur and Majuro and Ailinglaplap—all in the Marshalls. Engine trouble forced us often to depend on the sails and the winds and the grace of God. On our way to Ailinglaplap the winds failed us, but God did not; we were late but had a fine visit there.

I wish I could describe the enthusiasm with which the people hail the arrival of the Star. She certainly represents much to them—as a reminder of the interest of Christian people in America and Hawaii, and as a missionary in her own right. Everywhere we went we were warmly welcomed, and sent away with many gifts of handicraft and of food.

Up to this point we were still in the Marshalls, where the crew were familiar with the waters. The test was yet to come—we had to take the ship on to Kusaie, in the Carolines. We left Ailinglaplap bravely, though I wondered if I had learned enough celestial navigation to take the ship to port. After sailing for three days, we thought we ought to be getting in sight of Kusaie. I felt sure that we would see it in the next morning, but, during the night, our Marshallese skipper decided we "had used up all the miles from Ailinglaplap to Kusaie" (how he figured that out I will never know!). So we changed our course and sailed slowly until morning. When it was light enough we sent a man to the top of the mast, but he reported he could see nothing but water.

I prescribed a new course, but it was obvious the crew were not a little worried. They suspected, and I knew, that I was not too sure of my calculation. They said nothing, but kept looking ahead. We were all very much relieved when after two hours we sighted Kusaie through the clouds which hovered over the horizon.

We stayed at Kusaie a week. The days passed rapidly for there were many things to do. And then we started on, for Ponape and Truk. And that was a real trip, too! One night I was awakened by a small typhoon which tossed us around and blew us off our course. It was so violent that one of our men was thrown from his bunk and suffered a painful cut over one eye. After a

Morning Star Captain Reports

Late in February a strange series of events and combination of circumstances resulted in my becoming captain of our mission ship. Morning Star VI, a 63-foot, 20-ton schooner.

The events and circumstances began in Kwajalein, in the Marshalls. I was there for a field trip. Eleanor Wilson was visiting Marshallese atolls with the Star, with a local crew, but was eager to get on to Truk where much work awaited her in connection with our whole Mission to Micronesia. I had known of her difficulties with the Star, and had—just in case I was

EXCERPTS OF DURHAM'S MISSIONARY PROGRAM.

Belt buckle first, the good ladies of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Durham Church are marching briskly forward toward the completion of a creditable conference year. However, they leave not footprints, but a written record of their activities—it follows, in part, herewith!

The missionary emphasis for the local church and church school has been promoted by the Auxiliary, led by its president, Mrs. R. J. Kernodle, and by the school's departmental superintendents. The Young Woman's Class conducted a study course based on the book On Our Own Doorsteps, to which they invited all adult departments. Mrs. H. E. Parfitt and Mrs. W. H. Erwin directed the study program. Mrs. Carl Key sang, accompanied by Mrs. Neil Alexander. At the close of the formal meeting other class members served tea during a pleasant social hour.

Before Christmas the Auxiliary circle conducted a bazaar of handmade articles and applied the profits thereof to the local building fund. Because of its success this project will be repeated this year.

From the bizarre to the sublime: during a six-week period of the summer Dr. Harrell taught the Bible study of the Book of Galatians.

And on to the ecumenical: uniting in city-wide observance of the World Day of Prayer, our church was host to the churches of its section of town for a most impressive service. Mrs. Robert Smith presided, and several high school students participated in the program.

Plans called for Miss Pattie Lee Coghill to come to review the study book on China for the women of the church, but when the men learned of it quite a few of them insisted on being present. Every one was delighted with the program: Pattie Lee was really at her best!

Timothy Chang is a genuine help and inspiration to the entire church. One Sunday he visited the Junior Department and held members and teachers in rapt attention to the stories and paper designs with which he illustrated his theme, "Cooperation and Good Fellowship." Timothy always does his part on a program well, but this was a most impressive lecture. Those present wish that all the boys and girls of the convention could have shared their rare experience.

So, as anyone can plainly see, the women of the Durham Church are really buckling down to work! And the fellowship and friendship developed by meeting and working together, is a most valuable by-product of the great program for world friendship under God.

NEWS FROM OTHER WOMEN'S GROUPS.

LIBERTY (VANCE).

As we look back over the year, we feel like we have had a good one, but we could have accomplished more if each member would be interested in the work.

We try to make our programs as interesting as we can. To help our finances, we served suppers to different civic clubs in the church annex. We observed our annual Thank Offering Service and received a good offering. We observed the World Day of Prayer and had a good offering from our penny-a-meal boxes.

Mrs. Laubach (wife of Dr. Frank Laubach) spoke to us at our March meeting. We met with the New Hope Church in April, to hear Miss Pattie Lee Coghill review our study book on China.

We lost one of our faithful members last April, Mrs. Lillie Grissom Ward, and we have sent for a Life Memorial certificate to be given in her memory.

Our society has joined the Christian Missionary Association of the Eastern North Carolina Conference.

We gave an electric sweeper to our church this year, and helped get a new reading stand for the pulpit. We gave one hundred dollars on the new church. We sent a friendly service box to Fort Berthold Indian Mission, Elbowoods, North Dakota.

We pray God's blessings on our society, that we may go forward in His work.

MRS. MACON, Sec'y.

OAK GROVE (SUNBURY).

The women of Oak Grove Missionary Society have enjoyed a good year of Christian fellowship under the leadership of Mrs. W. K. Parker, our capable and efficient president.

The programs for each monthly meeting have been inspirational and interesting. The Bible study of Galatians, The Gospel Unlimited, written by Dr. F. E. Reynolds, was taught in a most interesting manner by our leader, Mrs. Elsie A. Eason.

The good women of Eure Church invited us to meet with them in January in the study of the home mission book On Our Own Doorstep. In April we were invited to join in the churches of the county for the study of our foreign book on China.

Oak Grove does not have a large missionary society, but the women work together in unity and a fine spirit of cooperation exists. We are an active society.

We observed the World Day of Prayer with our sister-church, Sunbury (or Damascus). We also observed World Community Day, when our society packed a towel to be sent to a little fourteen-year-old girl. We gave a Life Membership Certificate to our oldest member, we have made quarterly contributions to our treasurer, and we have observed May Fellowship Day.

We used visual aids as a means of presenting missionary ideals to the church. We have increased our gifts, in trying to be a Superior Society.

The Oak Grove Society also has helped in a building program to install screens for the church and a new floor and refinishing for Oak Grove.

We are very proud of the year's work and by the grace of God and the assistance of our new pastor and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Farrell, the women of Oak Grove Church hope to be able to do a greater work in the coming year.

NEWPORT NEWS, VIRGINIA.

We are again approaching the end of a full and, we hope, successful year.

Our Circles have worked faithfully on their projects, and, to date, all apportionments have been met, and all projects taken care of. Our projects included medical supplies and other needy items, to Miss Angie Crew in Japan, from three circles, and supplies to the Ryder Memorial Hospital in Puerto Rico, from two circles.

HELLO BACK-TO-SCHOOL FRIENDS:

Holidays and vacations are over. Do you have new shoes, new pencils and maybe a new lunch box? Is it your first experience at school? You are going to like it. Before you have depended on touching, tasting and seeing things or smelling them to find out their content or usefulness. Now, you may learn to read for yourself and what a world lies before you. Not in your entire lifetime will you be able to read all the wonderful books in our world. But do read as many as you can.

There are other things to learn—about your classmates, your teacher, your principal. They are your friends. Play fair with them and they will with you. A glorious time lies ahead. Remember that our country is the only one in the world that gives its children so large and free an education.

Everyone stayed well so we made the trip to Massanetta Springs. Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Lewis, the Rev. and Mrs. W. J. Andes and the Reverends Robert Kimball and O. D. Poythress were there. It rained and rained; the springs were flooded and ran over, but the preaching continued.

Sunday afternoon, Mr. Roy Larrick of Winchester came. He ate supper at our table. It was nice to see him. He came, as did many others, to hear the memorial concert for Dr. Peter Marshall. Dr. Marshall's choir from the Washington Church came and sang very lovely music. The director had broken his leg in an accident but he came anyway and used his crutches for support and propped his lame foot in a chair.

Several of the preachers were from Scotland. Did you know that country is noted for its preaching? Their accents have a burr to them and it is pleasant to the ears. My favorite preacher is Bishop Edwin Hughes. He is retired and quite old but very spry. His silvery head was often bent to hear a childish complaint or often seen over the checker table. He is an ideal minister in that he speaks his mind without fear. That is probably because he is old enough to do so without being called down—like you would be!—or many ministers!

You would have liked the Revue that the waitresses and grounds force gave on Saturday night. They even had the "Massanetta Sympathy Band"—which played good music, too. You would have certainly enjoyed it when a skunk fell into (fortunately empty) the swimming pool. Some of the boys dipped it up with a net. Swimming had to be done in the rain but lots of folks tried it.

The clouds and mist hid the mountains. I hope I shall see them in clear view in a few weeks when the Women's Board holds its meeting at Winchester.

APPRECIATION THROUGH PARTICIPATION.

By LAURA GRAY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

An ominous quiet made me peep into the living room. There our two-and-a-half-year-old Anne was busily rubbing the top of a glass coffee table with her doll's bedcover. A heavy-framed picture, two glass candlesticks and other articles had been placed on the floor. Finally she flung aside the cloth and put back the ornaments.

I stifled an impulse to dash in and scold, having just put a shine on that table—and Anne had been forbidden to touch it. I would certainly have to punish her if she knew I had been watching her. So, not feeling sure of the best procedure, I tiptoed back to my washing, unseen. I had read somewhere that it was not desirable to speak of every mistake a child makes. But I worried somewhat as I squeezed out woolies and hung up socks—had I been wise or weak? In any case, Anne's disobedience gave me a problem to solve.

So, the next morning, I asked, "Anne, would you like to help Mother clean the glass table?" She came eagerly. I wrung a cloth out of warm water for her. She was delighted. With another cloth I worked with her—talking about rubbing edges and corners—as well as the middle. After we had finished the table, I allowed Anne to replace the ornaments. I noticed later that this table was respected; it was never again touched by Anne unnecessarily or the articles on it disturbed by her. Being permitted to help had fostered the understanding that the table was not a plaything—something I had been trying to establish for some time, without much success.

Smeary finger marks and tongue prints over the windowpanes had been annoying me before the table episode, and no amount of scolding had stopped this. Now we clean windows together. Anne's part has to be done over again, but I try to do it without discrediting her work. So far, she has not put her little tongue on a single window since we began to do this chore together.

Anne has a pretty work-apron now, with pockets—one in which to hold a soft cloth. She dusts all the window sills every day. She sets the lunch table, too—with spoons, forks, napkins, salts and peppers. Naturally, her efforts do not as yet make my work easier, but I am beginning to see home as a place where my daughter can learn, and where she can grow in usefulness.

Daddy screwed a hook, low on the inside of her closet door, which has given her as much pleasure as a new toy. Each morning she proudly hangs up her dressing gown on her "very own hook." And, too, a low rail placed in the bathroom for her towel

YOUTH MUST KNOW!

"1. Remember that you have plenty of company if you choose not to drink. Many of America's topflight businessmen, such as Thomas J. Watson, president of the vast International Business Machines Corporation, and J. C. Penny, nationally known merchant, are well known for their sobriety.

"Athletes by the hundreds leave alcohol alone and never hesitate to say so publicly. Such all-American football stars as Johnny Lujack of Notre Dame and Harry Gilmer of Alabama, Glenn Davis and Joe Steffy of Army, Waldon Humble of Rice, Bob Davis of Georgia Tech, and Doak Walker of S.M.U. are in this group. So also are such big league baseball stars as Don Black and Jackie Robinson. The list of coaches who do not drink and who emphatically oppose drinking by their teams is endless.

"2. When you decline a drink, be casual and natural. Instead of saying, 'No, I don't drink,' just say, 'I'd like a coke, please,' or 'May I have a glass of orange juice?' There is no more reason why you should take a cocktail than a cup of coffee if you don't want to.

"3. Never, never assume a 'holier-than-thou' attitude. Be a good sport if you have to take a ribbing about not drinking.

"4. Remember that in the long run most people respect those who stick by their convictions. It is the sad experience of some people who forsake their convictions in order to please the crowd, to discover that they are really despised for being weak-kneed.

"5. Win your popularity by your pleasant personality, your skill in sports, your ability at dramatics or speaking. If you do these things and make friends easily, you will seldom have to worry about being unpopular just because you choose not to drink."

HOW MEXICO IS REDUCING ILLITERACY.

At the annual banquet of District Chapter, P. E. O. Sisterhood in Washington, D. C., Rafael Avelerya, Consul General of Mexico, told the delegates how Mexico had reduced its illiteracy from 9,000,000 in 1945 to 6,500,000 in 1947. He said the campaign against illiteracy reached its climax in 1945, when the government enacted an emergency law requiring each person who knew how to read and write to teach at least two persons in one year to read and write, or contribute to a special fund for that purpose. He said the campaign was the most dramatic gesture looking toward educating the masses in the rudiments of learning ever recorded in history.

Mexico's great problem, the Consul General stated, was the fusion of Spanish and Aztec cultures and peoples. Missionaries taught the Indians in the Spanish language, writing, customs and moral standards. Thus education remained under the direction of religious orders up to the middle of the 19th century, but the benefits of the school did not reach the rural population until after the revolutions of 1910 and 1917.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

and washcloth has developed a new sense of importance and of belonging.

Young children have wonderful imaginations, and when an idea is conceived they put it into action. One noon hour I ran water into the basin and told Anne to wash her hands by herself. When I called her to lunch, there was no answer. I investigated. There she was on the bathroom floor, washing the tiles with soap and facecloth!

"Look at your facecloth," I said quietly. "It is now too badly soiled to use for washing your face, isn't it?"

"Too badly soiled!" she agreed.

I mopped the floor, brought a fresh cloth, and washed Anne's hands and face. How much simpler and how much quicker it would have been to have washed the child myself in the first place! But—this way, Anne was learning.

Interest in the home is developing in our little daughter, because she feels she is part of the life here. It takes a lot of patience to let a mere baby help, but it is an unforgettably happy experience to have a darling toddler by my side "helping," even though sometimes she is only undoing my own good work! And some day, if I am truly patient and appreciative in the meantime, Anne really will help me.

JESUS AND THE PSALMS.

By REV. W. J. ANDES,
Guest Editor.

SCRIPTURE: Psalms 8:2; 22:1, 16-18; 91:9-12; 103:8-13; 110:11; 118:22-23; Matthew 21:15, 16, 38-42; 22:41-45; Luke 24:44.

MEMORY SELECTION: "The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner."—Psalm 118:22.

"These are my words . . . that everything written about me in the law of Moses and the prophets and the psalms must be fulfilled." (Luke 24:44.) So spoke Jesus on his resurrection day. The disciples should think of him as fulfilling the Old Testament and as beginning the New Testament. In our study of the Psalms as they relate to Jesus, this is clearly indicated. The Psalms are for devotional use but Jesus made them alive and vibrant. Always he found the true meaning and the depth of strength in them.

Jesus Knew the Psalms.

Not only did Jesus know the Psalms but he knew the rest of the Old Testament. Often he quotes from the Law, the Prophets and the Writings. His mother had taught him the great passages from the very beginning. In the synagogue school he had studied and he knew his Bible.

But he knew the Psalms. No part of the Scripture was more familiar to the people than the psalter. Jesus was no different, for he had the Psalms woven into the warp and woof of his religious life. The spirit of the Psalms became the very language of his soul. His thinking, his prayer life, his teachings were saturated with the Psalms. In his teachings we find at least twenty-two references to the Psalms, more references than to any other book of the Bible.

These Psalms were always at his finger tips, and he could use them for all occasions. He knew them with the mind and also with the heart!

Have You Never Read?

Matthew 21:16 gives this pointed question, "Have you never read?" and then Jesus quotes from Psalm 8:2. He had cast out those that bought and sold in the temple. The little children cheered him and sang, "Hosanna to the Son of David." But this young Galilean prophet was confronted by the religious leaders of the temple in all their official robes. They asked him if he had heard what the children had said. Quickly Jesus gave them the answer from Psalm 8:2. One can imagine these defeated leaders slinking away, fearing both the crowd and the young prophet who could quote the Psalms better than they could, and mean what he said.

This could well be a question for us to ponder. Have we read the Psalms, yea, even the Bible, enough that its meaning will flash through our minds and hearts to answer the enemies of righteousness. Those nearest to the heart and mind of God, like the children in the Temple, know the answers to life's questions as well as know how to worship this Lord God Almighty better than those who have never read nor pondered God's Holy Word.

Psalm 8:2 contrasts the majesty of God's power in our universe with the humbler channels that he often uses to work his will. Here God uses children to do his work, "establish strength." God can make of the weak things of life a mighty bulwark.

What Do You Think?

As far as the disciples were concerned, they hadn't thought much about the Messiah and how he would appear. When Jesus asked them and the Pharisees, "What do you think of the Christ? Whose son is he?" they gave the conventional answer. Promptly they said, "The Son of David." This was the important thing to them, external as it may be, that the Messiah should literally be a descendant of David.

Jesus then disturbed their peace of mind by quoting Psalm 110:1 which has David to declare that there is another person as "my Lord." There must be one who is greater than David. We can say that Christ is David's Lord even more than that Christ is the "son of David." Jesus is here trying to show them that their idea of the Messiah is too limited. If they don't go beyond the mere fact that the Messiah is to be the "son of David," they will never recognize him when he comes. The Messiah is to be one who is truly Lord and superior to anyone they have known before.

And we may not be much better than those in our thinking about Jesus. Our thinking may be very short and limited as to the true meaning of Christ the Messiah in our own lives. Simeon Stylites in The Christian Century (page 983 of the August 24, 1949, issue) tells us that we are living in a Messianic Expectation. There are some who have a timetable for the second coming of Christ, the messianic expectation of a Great Day coming soon. There are others who look "expectantly for a new world of chromium and ceramics, of uranium and cyclotrons, of egg-shaped automobiles and layer-cake houses, of helium and helicopters." What a trade most of us have made—God for gadgets; the vision of a city of God for the coming of a salesman's paradise. What think you about Christ, this Messiah? Have we closed our minds to the truth of Christ?

The Discarded Stone.

Jesus faced stiff opposition and he found strength in Psalm 118:22, "The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner." He knew that most of his own people had turned against him. Had he failed? In Matthew 21:38-39, Jesus told a story to reveal his feeling of failure. Yet, having shared this fate of persecution and rejection, he finds strength in the fact that he will become the cornerstone, the very foundation of the structure the builders were pretending to erect. This Psalm 118:22-23, is a great chorus that was sung in commemoration of great victories and Jesus used this in answer to his enemies.

The New Testament world never ceased to wonder how he who was despised and rejected of men was raised from the dead and is now seated at the right hand of God the Father. Jesus, himself, now took a firm hold on life and with an unfailing faith in God walked the road to Calvary. Men may reject him but God would not be defeated!

In his teachings and in his life, in his ministry and in his death and resurrection, Jesus found strength and inspiration in the Psalms. Those cries from the cross have rootage in the Psalms. As he died, he committed himself into the Father's care, the very heart and message of the Psalms. Could this have been a bedtime prayer which Jesus had learned in childhood at his mother's knee?

With St. Augustine of old may we pray: "Grant me, even me, dearest Lord, to know thee, and love thee, and rejoice in thee. Amen."

One of the outstanding events of our year was the visit of Dr. George Shepherd to our group. He came following conference to speak at an Unseen Guest Supper. The money realized from this meal went to our mission enterprise. In addition our society raised money for its apportionment and for the church.

The superintendent of our district and the president of our conference are members of our society. We were represented at the rally, conference and at the Milwaukee meeting of the United Council of Church Women.

Our women have been led most successfully by Mrs. Annie M. Virden. She is a woman of ability and great Christian character.

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel," saith the Master. When this great command is considered, we realize anew the vast need for more personal evangelism. With nearly two-thirds of the world's population yet to hear the story of Jesus, and to come within His gates; each of us needs to tell of God's marvelous works and make each day an occasion for a festival, by influencing someone to dedicate or rededicate his life to God.

An occasion for sincere rejoicing occurred in the Congregational Christian Church, Franklin, Virginia, August 14, at the 11:00 o'clock worship service, when fourteen people—twelve adults and two young people—united with the church. These people came into the church due to personal contact on the part of the pastor, W. A. Grissom. If we are to "glory"—in His holy name," may we each as church people become personal evangelists, and not wait for our pastor or some special Christmas or Easter occasion to use our influence to get someone to unite with the Church of Christ, but make each day a festive day for the cause of the church.

INGRAM, VA.

As we draw near the close of the year we, the women of Ingram Missionary Society, feel that we have spent a most wholesome year. In addition to having a program at each meeting with very good attendance, we held our Thank Offering program in November, gave fifteen dollars for Timothy Chang for Christmas, packed eight towels for overseas, sent two overseas bags to Windsor, Maryland, sent hens to the orphanage for Thanksgiving and dresses for Easter, sent two boxes of clothing to Elbowoods, North Dakota.

We observed the World Day of Prayer with Pleasant Grove Society. We have had both of our books reviewed together with our Bible study. We also sent fifteen dollars to Timothy Chang's ill sister and gave one Life Membership.

During Vacation Bible School we served supper to the children. We held our revival school from 5:00-7:00 o'clock. Preaching was at 8:00 o'clock.

We are getting ready for the year 1950. We have our materials packet, all study books and Bible study book.

BETHLEHEM (NANSEMOND).

The Young People's Missionary Society of Bethlehem has been divided into two groups this year—the "Teen Age" group and "Senior" group, with both working toward the same end—a Banner Group.

This year our Bible Study was led by a member of our group, after our worship services at each meeting.

We were invited to Cypress Chapel to hear our book review on 18 Plus. This was enjoyed by everyone. We were delighted to have Liberty Spring, Oakland and Cypress Chapel as our guests to hear the book review by Mrs. Thomas Woodward on Rising Through the Dust.

The last few years we have been sending money to foreign fields through our Friendly Service, but this year we decided to give it to the Indian Mission in Elbowoods, North Dakota.

After much discussion our young people finally decided to raise money to buy vestments for the church choir. This undertaking proved successful and now the vestments are being used, with our young people taking an active part in the singing, the fourth Sunday of the month being young people's day.

On Christmas Eve a group of the young people from both groups went caroling. They visited several shut-ins, who were members of the church and carried them baskets of fruit. We received a letter from one of them telling us just how much this visit had meant to her.

With God's help we are hoping to finish our year's work and continue on into a bigger and better year as he would have us do.

THE BLIND SPOT.

The country is very much concerned because of the ravages of polio. This is in striking contrast to the lack of concern caused by the thousands of deaths and hundreds of thousands of injuries caused by drunken driving each year. One-fourth of all the fatal accidents on the highways are due to the drinking of a driver or a pedestrian. In view of the fact that highway accidents cause approximately 35,000 deaths annually, to say nothing of the more than one million injuries, the lack of concern of political authorities is astonishing.

If discouragement and repression of drinking were to result in largely decreasing the drunk-driving toll, the saving in insurance premiums alone would be many millions of dollars. Every insured driver is paying a heavy penalty each year because of the folly of the man who drinks and drives.

The Orphanage

MR. TRUTT.

DEAR ORPHANAGE FRIENDS:

Thank you for your offerings. Total for this week is $298.77. Hope it will be even more next week, for we need it. But that is not what I wish to say this time, for I am definitely counting on everyone who reads this column to make some real contributions toward making this the big, happy home for these children which it should be. I want to ask Sunday schools, churches, ministers, Sunday school teachers, laymen and church women to visit the Orphanage. I do not know all about the world, as I often so needlessly say, but I want to set a goal of 1,000 people visiting the orphanage this fall. Let us make a check of the names of the Sunday school people and church people—and everybody—who come and see if we cannot reach the 1,000 callers before hard winter sets in. Already I have totaled up quite a few.

It is a good time to see this place before frost. For all of you who have never visited us I can safely say it is a prettier place than you have imagined it. But believe me, with all its fields and trees and lawns, its charm lies in its children. If you just get acquainted with the superintendent, or even the six matrons, or the master farmer, or the man in charge of the dairy—Garner Hilliard—and do not get acquainted with these boys and girls, both big and little, you have not really seen the Orphanage. How I should like for some of these fine boys and girls to grow up with something of the same deep love and appreciation in their hearts for me as they have for their late beloved "Uncle Charlie."

Already more than thirty places have been spoken for at the Home Coming picnic table. "Yes, I'll be there," they write. From Raleigh, Charlotte, Durham, Greensboro, Graham, Burlington, Snow Camp, Hamlet—yes, they write, "I'm coming," and so often there is a note that shows they will miss one whom they loved greatly. But they will be here—here for him—and for the days yet to come, and for the days and years in which this home served them. I want everyone to come. Please drop me a card if you get around to it, but if not, come on anyhow. We want you and will welcome you. "But it ever so humble, there is no place like him." I thank every one of you who have helped and are helping to make this a really good home for these boys and girls.

JOHN G. TRUTT,
Superintendent.

MORNING STAR CAPTIAN REPORTS.

period of calm, the other side of the typhoon hit us more severely than before. Part of the rigging gave way, and we all spent some anxious moments as the crew labored to lower the mainsail and secure the broken lines in the darkness. We were at the mercy of wind and wave, and I thought of the Apostle Paul and his party who waited one night through long hours, "wishing for the day."

But our God was gracious, and brought us to Ponape, where we repaired the broken rigging, and then on to Truk and the Mission meeting—where it was voted that henceforth I be "Captain of the Morning Star." Those are new responsibilities for a landlubber from the Middle West, who had to learn to get over seasickness, and who often late at night might be seen on shipboard struggling with an elementary navigation text, under pressure! The arrangement may be successful, because our crew is a good one. But I still am not quite used to it all.

Mary Ruth has done a superior job of supervising the building program and plantation work at Kusaie. Also she and one of the Kusaie pastors held a series of nine week-long conferences for young people. In all 242 young people and 44 adult helpers participated in this project. Our teen-age daughter Alice conducted a devotional service each week—entirely in the Kusaie language, without the aid of an interpreter.

Next week, I leave Kusaie again to go back to Majuro. Alice and Ruth Ann will go with me (now that the Star has sailed safely thus far under my supervision Mary Ruth is willing to let the children take a trip on it, but she herself still prefers to stay right here at Kusaie!). There are many other things we'd like to write, but this is enough for now, so we shall say what the islanders always sing as the Morning Star departs: "God be with you 'til we meet again." May God bless us all in our work for Him.

NOTICE!

Dr. E. M. Conover, director of the Interdenominational Bureau of Architecture, reports that 1,000 million dollars worth of new American Protestant Churches and improvements are now being planned by architects. He advises that churches that hope to improve their buildings or erect new within the next several years start immediately their program planning and the financial plans.

The Bureau is now at Room 808 300 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York. Removal from rooms rented from the Federal Council of Churches became necessary because of expanding work of the Council and of the Bureau.

THE NEW CHAIN-REFERENCE BIBLE

Truly a Bible PLUS a Biblical Library in ONE Volume

EDITED BY REV. F. C. THOMPSON, D.D., PH. D.

READ WHAT OTHERS SAY:

Justice Glenn Terrell, Former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Florida: "The inscription over the entrance of the Library of the Florida State College for Women in Tallahassee, Florida, is:

"The Half of Knowledge Is to Know Where to Find Knowledge."

The New Chain Reference Bible is the "Where" to find the fullest spiritual truths and to gain the most complete knowledge of the Bible in the easiest way. For the past two years I have used the New Chain Reference Bible and I have found it the best of them all." Rev. Ralph W. Sockman, Ph.D., LL.D., D.D.: "It contains so much in such concise form that I use it above all others. I have never seen a Bible edition which equals it for study work and general use." Rev. E. E. Helms, Ph.D., S.T.D., LL.D., D.D.: "In my judgment the Chain Reference Bible is the most valuable and useful volume ever published. Anyone using it a week would not part with it at any price." Rev. J.

Stanley Durkee, Ph.D., LL.D., D.D.: "I have to confess that in the New Chain Reference Bible I have found my greatest and best thus far. It is a marvel of condensation." Rev. Walter A. Maier, Ph.D., D.D.: "I use the New Chain Reference Bible with continued delight and would not be without it. It has been a great help to me in my radio work, preaching, literary and editorial activities." Rev. William Evans, Ph.D., D.D.: "I find it all that you claim for it. It is a most efficient and scholarly and helpful Bible, and I recommend it heartily." Rev. H. Framer Smith, Ph.D., Th.D., D.D.: "I find that it surpasses them all for real practical helps. The more I use it, the more I value it. It is not only a very scholarly work that will be greatly appreciated by the deep student, but it is so simple that even a child nine years of age can use it. To anyone desiring a better knowledge of the Scriptures I would say, examine this work before buying any other Bible."

A Prince and a Great Man is Fallen

DR. FRANK H. LEWIS

"Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?" Death came suddenly to remove from the ranks of the church militant the pastor of the Shelton Memorial Church, the president of the Portsmouth Ministerial Association and the president of the Eastern Virginia Conference. Funeral services were held in the church which Dr. Lewis had served for the past nine years. Dr. I. W. Johnson officiated and was assisted by Revs. H. G. Councill, John Gwyn, R. E. Brittle, O. D. Poythress and R. L. House.

News Flashes

Supt. W. T. Scott is recovering after an attack of bronchitis.

Dr. Stanley C. Harrell assisted Rev. R. E. Brittle in revival services at Bethlehem last week.

Dr. Luther Grice conducted revival services recently at Eure Church and received five members.

Rev. Arnold Slater of Chattanooga, Tennessee, was the supply preacher during August at the Congregational Church in Daytona Beach, Florida.

Dr. Will B. O'Neill announces revival services at Holland, September 11-16. Dr. W. E. Wiseman will preach and Rev. O. D. Poythress will sing.

Rev. Victor Murchison, Friends pastor at Winston-Salem, has been assisting Dr. I. W. Johnson this week in revival services at Liberty Spring Church.

The Committee on Evangelism of the E. and R. Church is holding a Retreat for Ministers at their Assembly Grounds, Blowing Rock, North Carolina, September 6 and 7. Our ministers were invited and some are attending.

The death of Rev. Lucius Lee Lassiter, a retired Christian minister, occurred last week. Mr. Lassiter was educated at Elon College. He had lived in Suffolk for many years. Funeral services were conducted by Dr. L. W. Grice.

Mr. and Mrs. Morrills, the new treasurer of Kobe College and his wife, have completed their language study at Yale and sailed this summer to take up their new work. Their commissioning service was held at the Congregational Church at Kent, Ohio, on June 26.

Rev. Duane N. Vore, pastor of the Wallin Congregational Church in Grand Rapids, Michigan, has accepted a call to serve the Suffolk Christian Church. Mr. Vore is a graduate of Elon College and Yale Divinity School. He has served churches in North Carolina, Connecticut and Ohio. Mr. Vore is a former Chaplain in the U. S. Navy.

Rev. H. G. Council had the following supply preachers at Rosemont Church during his vacation: Billy Russ of South Norfolk on August 21, Rev. M. A. Carson on August 28, and Chaplain Harry F. Feustermacker, U.S.S. Mississippi, Evangelical and Reformed minister, on September 4.

Rev. C. C. Dollar offered his resignation as pastor of our church in Sanford, North Carolina, on August 28 to become the director of the Regional Rural Life Program in Alabama and Georgia, with headquarters at Southern Union College, Wadley, Alabama. Mr. Dollar served a period in the Chaplaincy before going to Sanford.

Wednesday, August 31, was a big day for our Reidsville Church. The annual Sunday school picnic was held at the Police Lake beginning at 2:30 and concluding with a picnic supper. The Reidsville Church is making splendid progress under the leadership of its new minister, Rev. Tucker G. Humphries. This church is not only conducting a strong program locally but is one of the most outstanding churches in our denomination in its missionary work. In addition to the regular apportionment, the church is raising approximately $5,000 for the support of Miss Harriet Summer-ville in Angola, West Africa and Rev. and Mrs. Robert C. Mueller, Ahmed-nagar, India.

REPORT FROM POWELL'S FORT. (Pilgrim Fellowship.)

Following is a list of impressions of Summer Conference. True, these might be impressions of any conference, but they are the expressions of the campers at Powell's Fort, the camp where the young people of the Valley gathered to work and play and worship.

For the benefit of the rest of the young people in the Convention, Powell's Fort is located in a valley with hills rising in majestic splendor on all sides. For the aquatic minded there is a very nice pool. For those who like to walk there are numerous trails (one is five long miles up and five long miles back). For those who like to eat, well, we'll let the campers own words express what they found:

"Had good food!"

"I had fun."

"Studied the four gospels, life of Christ, and the seven last words of Christ."

"Had grand good teachers."

"Learned some new songs."

"Learned to go to sleep every night."

"Got a cold."

"Learned discipline."

"I didn't learn to sing but some of them did."

"Good nurse—good life-guard."

"Enjoyed the fellowship of all the young people."

"All the counselors were good."

"Assembly programs were inspiring."

"Vespers were excellent."

"Learned to make my bed."

"Learned some Bible stories."

"Learned some new games."

"A fine spirit of cooperation."

To those of you who have never been to a summer conference these impressions may give you some idea of what you've missed. To those of you who have been to summer conference, but didn't go to Powell's Fort this year, these impressions may give you, too, some idea of what you have missed.

CHANCE FOR COUNTRY CHURCH TO SERVE.

The Christian Rural Overseas Program, commonly called "CROP", affords the country church and farm people an opportunity to contribute to world peace by feeding unfortunate folks in foreign lands while training them in Christian principles. Sponsored by over 75,000 churches of all denominations in this country and endorsed by the national farm organizations and agencies, CROP collects contributions from field, orchard and barnyard through local church and farm groups, assembles them at a central point from where they are shipped, at Government expense, overseas and distributed through foreign churches to the needy. Over 2,392 carloads of food was collected last year. Especially needed this year are grains, livestock and dairy products, dried fruits, nuts, raw cotton and wool.

Every state in the Upper South is cooperating in the program. It is hoped that every farm family in the area will contribute something—a few bushels of wheat, barrels of corn, buckets of molasses or some cured meat. The drive adds up—farm-by-farm, county-by-county, state-by-state—to a significant national program that is a tribute to the tradition of good neighborliness of rural America. Your help today makes friends for Christian Democracy tomorrow.—Dr. Paul D. Sanders, Editor of The Southern Planter.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

DR. LEWIS

Dr. Frank Lewis stood in a tradition of great preachers. He followed in the footsteps of Drs. Charles Eldred Shelton and Marna S. Poulson. Into this great tradition he brought a rich heritage of training and experience. His buoyant faith, his felicity and perspicacity, his robust physique and radiant personality made him a peer among many preachers. Coming into our Conference from the Methodist Protestant Church, he adapted himself quickly to our polity and served the Conference and Convention as well as his own church in Portsmouth. We are indebted to the Shelton Church for bringing this prophet into our midst. Evangelism was his central theme. We honor him and his Christ by exalting this theme.

SEX AND SALVATION

Before the advent of cars and movies young people went to church for their social life. The church service was the big event of the week. Young people were prominent in every congregation and numbers were available for any normal activity or project. Young men attended church, if for no better reason, to be the company of young women. Sometimes their real reason for uniting with the Church was to win social approval; that is, that of a sweetheart and perhaps her family. Young couples united with the Church, "the thing to do," were married and usually remained faithful to each other and to the Church. Too much did not depend on the kind of sermon, Sunday School teacher or church program in general. The mutual attraction of the sexes was one of the dominant factors in Church attendance for many youth. Sex and salvation had a unique and inescapable affinity.

Whereas, sex once drew young people in great numbers to Church, it is a major factor today in keeping them away from Church. Many churches have witnessed the closing of their Sunday evening services, once composed largely of young people. The herd, or crowd, goes elsewhere. Commercialized amusements, with their clever, expensive advertisements, have captured the masses of youth. The majority of churches have surrendered their Sunday evening meetings and retreated to their one remaining stronghold—Sunday school and the morning Church service. Even these services are penalized by extended Saturday night escapades.

The Church can never win by ignoring or competing with this dominant factor in life. Some churches have the wisdom and courage to provide ample facilities for recreation and social life within the program of their own Church. Money, imagination and leadership are needed. The children of light must be as wise as the children of darkness. A far more adequate and attractive provision must be made in the average church in order for it to become a rendezvous for youth. We of the Church need to remember that the commercial enterprises which operate on Sunday were not initiated nor are they maintained without a substantial investment. Will the Church make a reasonable investment to recapture its youth?

SO HERE'S TO FRANKLINTON

"I think Franklinton should be opened as a junior college," said Supt. W. T. Scott. In this statement made by Supt. Scott at a Board of Trustees meeting, he was but echoing what a number of our Church leaders have said from time to time and what our Colored Constituency have felt through the years. Such an eventuality certainly would be an answer to long and fervent prayers.

Franklinton will not open this fall, just as it has not opened for years, for academic work. We have Elon. It has not missed opening a single year. It means much, far more than some of us realize, to our church. Honestly, how could we get along without Elon? Many of our people would not think of sending their children elsewhere. Elon will be opening soon, opening for all who wish to attend a school of their own denomination.

But Franklinton will not open. Negro members of Congregational Christian Churches must go elsewhere or not at all. Our Colored Constituency deserve a college of their own. There is not one argument for Elon or any other denominational school which does not apply to Franklinton. Franklinton Center should be Franklinton College, but countless friends must come to the rescue before this takes place. They must create the demand and make available the resources.

In the meanwhile, Rev. William L. Brogden of Spencerville, Maryland, has accepted the position as Director of Franklinton Center. He will begin his duties November 1 as successor to Rev. W. L. Lake. Mr. Brogden is an ordained minister and also a county agent. His diversified training and experience should enable him to render valuable service in our program of rehabilitation at Franklinton. The present plan of operation includes the summer conference, the winter institute and the improvement of the property. Pray for Franklinton. May it be true that the best is yet to be!

Some people "budget" their income. So much will go to pay for their food; another amount they determine to make buy the necessary clothes; so much for taxes or rent and insurance. There are those also who "budget" their lives. A certain amount of time they will work, another amount they will give to the pursuit of recreation and pleasure, and then some time to religion. Is it true that some people think the only time and place for religion is in the meetinghouse?—C. R. Nichol.

Revival in Alpine, Tennessee

By BEATA MUELLER.

A shining example of interdenominational cooperation has been going on for four years now in the rural communities of the Eastern Highland Rim in northern Tennessee. The Dale Hollow Larger Parish, supported by the Disciples of Christ, the Methodists and the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., serves 4,000 people at 18 churches and preaching points in an area some 100 miles square.

The program is a revival of church cooperation. The ministers and staff of this rural larger parish have joined together, not for the fire-and-brimstone conversions of 150 years ago, but for a church-centered effort to bring their people a better life in an area where living is not easy.

Originator of this larger parish project is the Rev. Bernard Taylor, minister of the Presbyterian mission at Alpine, Tennessee, a village of 200. Georgia-born, the Rev. Taylor shares his parishoners' love for the independence of rural life. He is aware of the problems of poverty and ill health that beset them, and is deeply convinced that the most effective help can be found only in church cooperation.

When Taylor and his family arrived at Alpine a dozen years ago, he had already served as pastor to a group of rural churches in Pennsylvania. But here on the "barrens" of the Highland Rim he found farms where the vitality of thin soil had been leached away by the porous limestone underneath. He found homes where the only heat was from a fireplace or an old oil barrel made into a stove, the only water supply fifty feet or more from the house.

Tuberculosis was a scourge. Pelagra added its dragging fatigue to overwork. The average family income ranged from $86 to $200 a year. As the children grew up, many of them left home for work in the factories of the North because there was no adequate living to be made at home.

Yet most of these families had a tradition of self-reliance, education and hard work. A young South Carolina teacher had started the Alpine Institute in a log cabin in 1821. The Institute later became a mission school, and the Taylors found many families had sons and daughters who were graduates, many of them teaching in local rural schools.

Both people and land had inherent resources that could be developed.

And Taylor, "a born pioneer," as one of his family describes him, loved both the people and the land.

One of the first concerns was housing. He had seen the picturesque cabins with their stone chimneys and wide porches where large families lived crowded in insufficient space and suffered from the cold in winter.

"This manse is too big, compared to the average house around here," he told a visitor in the early days. "I don't want to live on a level so different from the level of our people."

After ten years of service in Alpine, Taylor and his wife went North for a year of study. There he found an answer to the housing problem in his investigation of low-cost home construction. When he returned to his parish, he had worked out plans for an inexpensive house of concrete blocks that would be practical in the mountains. Built as a demonstration and paid for by income from the mission forest, it now houses a family of eleven who had lived in a two-room mountain cabin.

But long before that, Taylor had been busy on a dozen other projects for the Christian development of his people and their community. One of these was the mission farm, now an important part of the rural life center at Alpine. Purchased in 1941 and worked by a trained manager, it has become a demonstration of what can be done on poor land. Legumes build up the soil, grain and garden produce help feed the community, carefully-bred cattle pastured in fields too steep for cultivation provide milk. A similar agricultural demonstration was set up recently by another of the larger parish's ministers on his 20-acre manse property in the next county.

But Taylor knew that farming alone could not bring sufficient returns. He next turned his creative mind to an 18-acre forest tract owned by a landlord in a distant city. Timber was once one of Tennessee's great resources, and this stand of forest, Taylor felt, could be a demonstration of scientific forestry and a source of community income. With the advice of state and federal forest services and with funds provided by a friend, the church acquired the property.

If the forest was to be accessible, however, there had to be a road. This was war-time; even if there were funds to hire road-builders, there was no labor force available.

This did not stop the resourceful minister.

"Alpine has had church conferences before," he decided, "and this time we are going to have a working conference of rural ministers and church leaders."

Mark Twain had written about the "Knob Country" around Alpine and the minister's conference had a touch of Mark Twain's ingenuity.

Mornings, clad in heavy boots and work clothes, church men with crowbars and a bulldozer toiled on the road up the mountain.

"I never knew a crowd of preachers who worked together so hard," one local farmer commented.

In the afternoon, back from their hot and muddy work, the men studied and discussed the life and work of the rural church.

Out of Taylor's road-building conference, grew a forestry project where trees still protect the area's watershed and cut timber, turned to material for buildings and wood pulp in the cooperative sawmill, brings in a steady income.

The war's end brought a stop to allotment checks and wages from war industries. But returning GI's now found a means of learning a trade and earning an income not only in forestry but also in work with cabinet woods—black walnut, white oak, cherry—that grew on the mountainside.

The county had taken over the schools, and Alpine Institute's buildings became the home of Alpine Community Crafts. Under the direction of one of the parish staff, veteran trainees became skilled woodworkers, turning out furniture for their families, toys for their children. After a minister from southern Tennessee ordered pews, pulpit and communion table for his congregation's new church, the Alpine center became known for church furniture of dignified simplicity.

The woodcraft instructor's wife, who, had done graduate study in ceramics, set up a kiln and two potter's wheels at the center. Adults and older children, as they acquired professional skill with the native red clay, became employees of the pottery. Bowls, pitchers and pottery figures are sent from here to retail channels.

Weaving, a traditional mountain skill, became another of the center's projects, providing additional income for the families of the women who work at the center's weaving room.

These handicraft industries serve not only to raise the general economic level of the area, but also provide a

A Great Man of God

Message by DR. I. W. JOHNSON at the Funeral Service for Dr. Frank H. Lewis

Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, and the Word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth.—I Kings 17:24.

These words were spoken to Elijah the great man of God among the prophets of the Old Testament era. There was a famine in the land. Many of the people had been led away from the worship of the true God by the paganistic Ahab and the wicked Jezebel. The king and his wife had backslidden. The worship of Baal—and other false gods—was taking the place of Jehovah-worship among the people. Elijah suffered with others and his life was endangered by the hostility of the Baal worshippers and the lack of food in a dry, parched land. Elijah went to Zarapheth. At the city gate he saw a widow gathering sticks. He asked her for a drink of water—and for a morsel of bread with it. She said: "I have a little bit of meal in the barrel—and just a bit of oil in the cruse. I am gathering these sticks to cook the last meal for myself and my child—and then we are to lie down and die." "But," said the prophet, "make me thereof a little cake first . . . and by the word of God the barrel of meal and the cruse of oil shall not fail until the Lord shall send rain upon the earth." She obeyed, fed the prophet and her child, and herself—and for many days the meal and oil wasted not—they had plenty and to spare.

Then after some days the child became very ill. Life went out of her frail body. There was sorrow in that poor mother's heart. Then she upbraided the prophet, believing that possibly he had brought judgment to her home and little family. But not so—for there was a true messenger of God in that home. He took the child up to his room, stretched himself upon him and prayed three times for life to come back. The child's life was restored and he took him down to his mother. The mother exclaimed: "Now by this I know thou art a man of God, and the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth."

The Witness of the Man of God.

This man had done some strange things for this home. He had provided plenty in a time of sore famine—by his prayers and faithfulness to God. He had restored faith and courage. His presence was a benediction and blessing. But death came to the mother's only son. The man of God did not stay the hand of death. But he knew what to say and do in that dark hour. He took over a dead child for the glory of God. He stepped in the breach where the shadow of death had brought emptiness and weeping. He called upon God for help, for comfort, for returning life. God heard him. Note the upward steps of his ministry. Wisely showing the way to sufficient food by putting giving in the foreground against stark famine and great personal need. "Make me thereof a little cake first." Put God first in your program. Then there is the sustained supply of food for a period of continuing famine in the land. In that home there was enough food. The man of God was there—he was in touch with the source of all food supply. When death came with its train of sorrow, he was there with a voice of prayer. He took that experience to the throne of God, whom he served. His plans, his message, his life, his prayers all swung into the high plan of God. The man of God knew the will of God and followed that at every point and in every trial. The voice of the man of God spoke the word of the Lord which was in his mouth. That word was truth. This widow of Zarapheth recognized in all these things that a man of God was her guest. She said, "By this I know thou art a man of God."

To me, on this occasion, this text seems a fitting tribute to a beloved minister who has passed beyond our human sight.

Dr. Frank H. Lewis, son of the late Abram and Elizabeth Handy Lewis, was born in the State of Maryland, November 4, 1872. He died at Massanetta Springs on Sunday afternoon, August 28, at the age of 76 years, nine months and 24 days. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Isabel Lewis, three daughters, Mrs. Virginia Richardson of Clare, Michigan, Mrs. Marjorie Lamb of Michigan, North Dakota and Mrs. Louise Wilds of Portsmouth, Virginia, five grandchildren and two great-grandchildren, and one brother, William E. Lewis of Choptank, Md.

He began preaching the gospel at the early age of 21 or 22 years, as a minister in the Methodist Protestant Church. His talents were recognized at the beginning of his ministry and he became pastor of some of the large churches in that denomination, among them being a large church in Pittsburg, Penn. He served as president of the Methodist Protestant Conference of that section for a period. When he was between 65 and 67 years of age he retired from active service as a pastor. He soon discovered that retirement was not compatible with his urge to preach the gospel. He was not satisfied to sit on the side lines and see the procession move by without his active service. During this period he came to Portsmouth on a visit. Dr. Poulson, pastor of the Shelton Memorial Church, had passed away. Dr. Lewis was invited to supply until the church could secure a pastor. The members of the church soon decided they wanted Dr. Lewis to remain. He was called, accepted and served as pastor until his death—covering a period of about nine years.

He united with our Eastern Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches that same year, and was elected president of that body in 1947. He has served his conference ably in that capacity.

Last Sunday afternoon (Aug. 28) Dr. Lewis and I went together to a great program of sacred music in the auditorium at Massanetta. When that program of inspiring music was concluded, it was raining. He walked down the steep hill to drive his car from the hotel to the auditorium to take his wife and some friends back to the hotel. On the way to his car he slipped and fell. This fall did not apparently hurt him seriously at the time, but it shocked him and greatly upset his nerves and disturbed the action of his heart. Within fifteen or twenty minutes after his return to his room, he was desperately ill. A doctor was called immediately. Dr. Lewis said, "I think this is it." In a few minutes he was free from pain and his spirit had left us. We were all great shocked. One of my dearest ministerial friends had slipped away. I thought what an experience for him to enjoy the singing of a great choir for nearly an hour, then come down the hill to slip away to hear the heavenly choirs sing before the sunset shadows could fall upon the mountains at Massanetta. He passed through a brief period of suffering—and then went away to the land of freedom from sickness and sorrow—to the home prepared for just such a man of God. His family, his friends, his congregation, his denomination, knew him as a man of God. Now by this, by what he was, by what he said, by his ministry, by his life, by his works, we who knew him, know he was a man of God—"and the word of INCREASED COST OF OPERATION.

The syndicated articles concerning the plight of the church-related and privately-endowed colleges in this country appearing in the daily press are certainly apropos. These articles call attention to the vastly increased cost of operation and the increased income from these colleges. The increase in the income, however, is far short of the increase in cost of operation.

This discrepancy in cost and income has been brought about by unusually high prices for everything including labor. The high cost of living is the result of the government's financing subsidies. When the government puts up money to guarantee prices of this or that, it necessarily raises the cost of the article produced and other related necessities. When we reach the place in this country where the janitors of the school receive equal or greater pay than the instructors, something must be wrong. Among the highest paid employees of Elon College today are the plumbers who are working on the gymnasium. Some brick layers working eight hours a day make twenty-four dollars. I do not mean to say that these laborers are receiving too much money, but I do mean to say that, at any rate, they are receiving more money than the Dean of the college or many other Ph.D.'s on our faculty. Men of these achievements have spent years and thousands of dollars in preparation for their positions.

The article appearing in last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN could not have presented Elon College's case more accurately had the writer spent weeks on Elon College's campus studying the situation and analyzing the trends of the college. Elon College does have the largest enrollment in its history. It does have the largest income from students that it has ever had, but on the other hand, the cost of operation and expansion has simply exceeded any and all possible incomes from the college itself and its endowment, and the end is not yet. Those who are interested, perhaps, will say hold your cost down, stop spending. Good advice, but will you tell me how? "To stay in the running," Elon College is compelled to keep pace with sister institutions. I do not mean state institutions but I mean church-related colleges in Elon's own class. Of course, the state institution with its increased enrollment and increased income from the institution itself, in addition to subsidies, secure large appropriations for buildings, equipment and salaries. In addition, a number of tax-supported institutions are piling up huge endowments from which they receive current returns. The church-related and privately-owned college is in the whole picture, that is, the picture of higher education and if they are to continue with credit and efficiency, their incomes must be greatly increased.

To continue the case of Elon College in considering the cost of operation, we should be reminded of the fact that fifteen years ago, the salary budget was approximately sixty-five thousand dollars a year. The salary budget for the current year will be one hundred sixty thousand dollars. Fifteen years ago, we were spending very little, if any, on improvements about the college. Last summer and for the current year, we are spending at least thirty-five thousand dollars on improvements. These are actual necessities. Two years ago, we were confronted with the necessity of providing new heating facilities for the college. The power house was built and necessary machinery installed at a total cost of one hundred thirty-two thousand dollars. One hundred twenty-six thousand dollars were raised in cash and pledges, one hundred seven thousand in cash. Then, we were faced with the necessity of building a gymnasium to provide facilities for physical education and college sports. The building is now in the process of erection. This building equipped will cost a total of two hundred thousand dollars, plus. One hundred twenty-five thousand dollars have been secured in cash and pledges. Of this, more than fifty thousand is in cash.

A campaign will be launched in early fall to raise the money needed to complete and equip this undertaking. Now, we face the necessity of providing a dining room, and dormitories that will appeal to and give satisfaction to new students, the cost of which has not been determined but it will be considerable. This is a part of the story of Elon College. It should be told to every interested person with the hope that immediate and continued response would be given. Elon College is not a large school. We do not want it to be but it is a good school and we are determined to see that it is a better school. Today, it deserves and should receive the patronage of our own constituency who are able to pay the expenses of their children in college. In some instances, Elon College is a better school from every standpoint than the ones to which these friends send their children. There is one thing that is encouraging about Elon and that is a good percentage of its graduates make good in their chosen fields and are able to match abilities with the graduates of the so-called better schools of this country. There is no need to call names. You know who they are.

Elon College will continue to grow and expand to the extent that the church, alumni and friends make such growth and expansion possible.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Now that summer is over, the fall has come and the church program will be in full swing. I am sure that the college may expect increased contributions from our Sunday schools and churches. If any church or Sunday school has paid its apportionment in full, that is fine. Perhaps, in the light of the present plight of the college they would want to send an extra contribution. Schools and churches that have not paid their apportionment in full, I am sure, will be glad to take this matter under consideration and forward contributions at an early date. We should remind ourselves that the Convention's askings for the college for the current year is increased from $12,500 to $15,000. This is a modest increase but when the college receives it, it will seem to be a great increase. It would be a pleasant surprise to receive contributions from every church and Sunday school for our next week's report and what a joy if some of our larger churches beyond the Southern Convention would remember the college and help to meet its great program and increased cost.

BETTY HORTON TO SPEND FALL AT KOBE COLLEGE.

Betty Horton, the youngest daughter of Dr. Douglas Horton, has gone to Japan this summer to be in a work camp. From the work camp she will go directly to Kobe College to help in whatever way is feasible from September through December. She will return to Radcliffe in January for her last semester of work there. As Radcliffe is one of the sister colleges of Kobe College, this is a happy turn of events from every angle. Kobe College faculty is delighted to welcome her. The Friends of Kobe Fund will provide her support while she is at Kobe College.

TWO KOBE COLLEGE TEACHERS TO BE ON AMERICAN CAMPUS.

Miss Setsuko Mita of the English and Music Departments of Kobe College will be taking special work at Michigan State University next year. Excellent arrangements for her have been made, largely through the personal interest and help of Mrs. W. D. Pierce of East Lansing, Michigan, who was a former teacher at Kobe College.

Miss Noriko Yamakawa of the Psychology Department of Kobe College will study at the Chicago Theological Seminary this next year taking courses at the Seminary and the University in her speciality. The Seminary and Michigan State have given tuition scholarships to these teachers.

JAPANESE STUDENTS IN AMERICA.

Twenty-eight Japanese scholarship students, 18 men and 10 women, arrived in San Francisco August 26 on the S. S. General Gordon for graduate study in American colleges and universities under the Post-War Scholarship Program of the Interboard Committee for Christian work in Japan.

In this week's group, there are three been underway, nearly 100 Japanese have come here on scholarships. Seven more are scheduled to arrive in September.

In this week's group, three are physicians. One is a woman, Dr. Chiyeiko Okawa, who worked in the laboratory of a U. S. Army hospital in Japan and plans to study internal medicine here.

The other two are Dr. Saburo Shirato, assistant chief of the public health department in Yokohama, who is going to study public health methods at Columbia University School of Medicine, and Dr. Masahika Kitahata, who will do postgraduate work in medicine in the South.

Others arriving this week include Haruo Tsuru, soil expert and honor graduate of the former Tokyo Imperial University, who will attend the school of agriculture at the University of Illinois; Masaichi Takemori, who speaks five languages and is going to Union Theological Seminary in New York; Miss Noyuri Ariga, daughter of the dean of the government university in Kyoto, who will study music at Otterbein College, Westerville, Ohio; and Hisashi Kuranaga, dean of Aoyama College, Tokyo, who will study school administration at Ohio Wesleyan.

Nine Protestant groups are providing transportation, living expenses and tuition for the group, according to the Interboard Committee.

The nine groups are: the foreign missions boards of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A., the Congregational Christian Church, the Evangelical and Reformed Church, the Evangelical United Brethren and the Northern and Southern Baptist churches; also the Kobe College foundation and the Division of Foreign Missions and the Women's Division of Christian Service of The Methodist Church.

The Interboard Committee for Christian Work in Japan, with headquarters in New York, is the coordinating body for eight major Protestant denominations in the United States and Canada. These denominations, united in the Church of Christ in Japan, count as members three-fourths of the approximately 200,000 Japanese Protestant Christians.

means of making a living for some young adults and their families who might otherwise have to move away from home.

Meanwhile, Taylor, on horseback and on foot, had been visiting the little churches and the cabin homes of the area, in the gullies and up on the crests of the hills. He felt increasingly that only by working together could the churches reach all the people with the help that was needed.

Finally, in 1945, discussions with other local church leaders brought into being the larger parish and its interdenominational council. The co-operative effort that had been Taylor's dream for years brought new strength to all three of the area's major communions.

With joint resources they could employ a director of Christian education to work with local churches on projects they could not accomplish singly—vacation church schools, leadership training courses, religious education in the public schools, health work such as patch tests and eye tests done in conjunction with the public school religious program, community improvement work, recreation and personal counseling.

One summer a director of music brought in by the parish council gave a new appreciation of church music to people who still cling to hymnals with shaped notes.

Now recreational activities are carried on the year round in the gymnasium. Together with a growing Scout movement, the program has gone a long way to providing a solution for juvenile delinquency that results when youngsters have no constructive outlet for their energies.

Taylor and another of the parish ministers, because of their familiarity with the area and its needs, helped TVA authorities map a system of electric power lines to extend into their territory. One by one, homes of the hill people have lighted up, and the drudgery of the women has been lightened by electric irons and washing machines.

Some of the larger parish's most significant work however had been done in the health field. Although development of a county health department had had its effect in combating pellagra and typhoid, undernourishment still took its toll in lowered resistance to disease, and tuberculosis continued to flourish.

A school child's meals for the day might include cornbread and milk for breakfast, a sandwich and a "fried pie"—dried fruit dipped in batter and fried in deep fat—for lunch, and cornmeal and milk for supper.

A parent-teacher organization formed one winter raised funds for a hot-lunch program in the schools, while two of the ministers rounded up

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

The Executive Board of the Woman's Missionary Convention of the Southern Convention is meeting at Winchester, Virginia, on Wednesday, September 7, at 7:30, as guests of the women of the Winchester Church.

NEWS FROM WOMEN'S SOCIETIES.

ISLE OF WIGHT.

Our society, though quite small in membership, has had a very profitable year, under the leadership of Mrs. Raleigh F. Whitley and reached all goals for Honor Roll.

We enjoyed having Mrs. J. F. Morgan review our Mission Study books.

The society invited three neighboring churches to Union Thanksgiving services, observed World Day of Prayer, Family Sunday, sent representatives to the Conference and Spring Rally.

We sent towels and feed bags to Elbowoods, North Dakota, cards and flowers to the sick and Christmas boxes to our shut-in church members. THE CHRISTIAN SUN goes into the homes of 90 per cent of our members.

In addition to our missionary activities, we fed the local Ruritan Club three times and had a Christmas supper, open to the public—the proceeds going toward our Building Fund.

BETHLEHEM (NANSEMOND.)

As we near the end of another successful year, we, the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Bethlehem Church wish to report that we have had regular and well-planned meetings each month. We joined Cypress Chapel to observe World Day of Prayer at Liberty Spring.

The Thank Offering service was held at the church, with our Spiritual Life Superintendent, Mrs. R. O. Luther, as leader.

In May, we observed May Fellowship Day, at which time Mrs. J. F. Morgan reviewed our mission study book on China. We were happy to have Berea (Nansemond) with us and to present the devotionals.

At Easter, we sent clothing to Elon Orphanage and also several boxes to needy people.

Our society has welcomed four new members, making a total of eighty-five on roll.

Thus far, we are very fortunate not to have any memorials to present. We have nine Life Memberships to give.

Last, but not least, we have tried to bring what cheer we could to the sick and shut-ins by sending cards and flowers to them.

At this time may we thank our pastor and his wife, Rev. and Mrs. R. E. Brittle, for the services rendered us this year.

MRS. H. U. SMITH,
Secretary.

PLEASANT RIDGE (RANDOLPH).

One of the most interesting things that we have done this year was to make Easter baskets and bunnies for the smaller boys and girls at the orphanage. We made our plans early in the year and met together twice for what we called a Bunny Party. We made the baskets out of cardboard and the bunnies of knitting yarn with little crocheted jackets. When the grass and the eggs were put in the baskets with the bunnies, it made a colorful picture. Our pastor, Rev. Clyde Fields, delivered them for us on Sunday before Easter.

At Christmas, instead of exchanging gifts among ourselves, we secured the names of the inmates of our county home. We drew names and on Wednesday night before Christmas we went in a group to take our gifts. We gave a short program, after which the presents were distributed and the happy smiles on their faces made us happier than we could possibly have been to get something ourselves.

We are very fortunate to have one of our teachers to review our mission study books for us. Mrs. Hilda Allen gave splendid reports on China—Twilight or Dawn and On Our Own Doorstep. The pictures that she showed each time helped us to get a clearer understanding of the people in the different countries.

On July 31, we sponsored a lawn party held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Craven. This was a big occasion for us and the entire church worked together. We made a little over $450.00 to be used on our parsonage, which is almost completed.

We celebrated Family Week by giving various awards on Mother's Day. There were corsages presented to the oldest and youngest mother, also gifts to the largest family, the couple married the longest and the most newly-wed couple.

These are some of the highlights of our year's work. We are striving toward being a Superior Society and expect to reach our goal. Our attendance has been increased slightly by planning an Achievement Day at the end of the year, with awards for attendance, as well as other things. We feel that we have had a good year and now we are looking forward to another year, under the leadership of our president, Mrs. Harry Stewart.

MRS. QINTON HICKS,
Secretary.

FRANKLIN JUNIORS.

The Junior Missionary Society of the Franklin Church has had a very successful year. We regret losing our leader, Mrs. Robert M. Kimball, wife of our pastor, when Mr. Kimball accepted a call to Ohio. She was a very capable superintendent and loved by everyone.

Our programs have been very interesting. We took part in the White Gift Program at Christmas and also had a Christmas supper and get together in December. All of our members took part in a special program in which clothing, books, games, toys, and a good assortment of other things were brought to be added to other things gotten together by older members of our church for Rev. Harold M. Case, superintendent of the Bert-hold Indian Mission in North Dakota.

Among other programs, we reviewed the book Mingo of the Merry-Go-Round and saw a colored picture of the "Puerto Rican Story." We also included the book Dike Against the Sea in our study of China.

In May all of our boys and girls, together with some of the parents enjoyed a weiner roast and outing at a club house out of town.

With the year coming to a close, we feel that we have met all of our requirements, enjoyed being together and look forward to the beginning of another successful year.

MRS. W. D. JOHNSON,
Ass't Superintendent.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

When you open your copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN you probably do not know how much work has gone into that one issue. It would be quite interesting if everyone of you could come to Richmond and visit THE SUN office at the foot of Broad Street hill.

It looks like any other print shop only there are larger presses than one often sees. The material for the pages has to be written, sent to the editor or the managing editor, then each article has to be set in type, proof run and proof read—and we still have mistakes! Then the articles must be fitted together for size and locked in page forms called chases. The paper must be run through the press, folded, fastened together with wire staples and the edges trimmed. It is then addressed, sorted into mail routes and mailed. It happens every week.

Church papers are usually poor and so is ours. The editor gives his services to the Church and the managing editor whom we call "Mr. John T" has given days on end of his time to keep the paper going. He probably hates it and loves it at the same time. The list of subscribers is kept at the Convention Office in Elon and there are always some people who forget that and their addresses go back and forth and the people stay at home feeling anxious and tired of waiting to get their address changed.

The editor has to read all sorts of things: good, bad and terrible. Such spelling and punctuation as sometimes appear before him. From time to time a person intends to send him a news account and thinks he did, but didn't, and then he thinks the editor should be a mind reader.

A man named Hall works the linotype machine that sets the printed words. He has to have great patience to untangle corrections and directions in the writing of the editors. Others help with the printing and preparation for mailing.

Dr. Harcastle writes his notes in the study at the Newport News Church. I can see him now—in that pleasant room as he works on the Sunday Schools Lessons week after week, always a week in advance. You must remember that the work never ends. When you read this week's issue, next week's is already half done. This causes me to sometimes be a week in advance of myself—a person will say, "I saw it in THE SUN," and believe me, they did in last week and I'm already on next! Quite confusing!

Dr. Truitt writes from Elon as do Dr. Smith and Dr. Scott. These gentlemen have their offices there and they mail their material week after week.

The editorials are usually written upstairs in the back room of the Richmond Church parsonage and this page is almost always written in the downstairs study. That enables me to keep an eye on the door, kitchen and yard.

Some folks like short articles, some like long. Some like the paper, some don't. Some would have this or that or the other, but they forget we have little money and limited time. Yet, for over a hundred years the people of our Church have received their weekly paper with good and bad items on its pages. It has told of life and death, marriage and ordination. It has called for support and received it again and again.

And so, even tonight at the foot of Broad Street hill lies next week's copy, red penciled and proof read, ready to go to your home with its Christian message. If we would have a better messenger for our words we must—from the smallest of us to the largest—help make it so with subscriptions, gifts, actually reading the paper, and seeing that we provide more for it. It reminds me of the mustard seed, it will not die—it continues to live and I hope it does for a hundred years more.

A RED TRICYCLE.

By JANE CARPENTER.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

My four-year-old Laura and I had that morning returned from a three-week visit at Leicester—my parents' home. As I sat sewing I thought about our new next-door neighbors, who had moved in during our absence. I was hoping that we could be friends and that their little daughter—apparently about the same age as mine—would prove to be a well-behaved child. Laura was so easily influenced. I had thoroughly realized that when she was with her adorable but decidedly boisterous boy cousins in Leicester. Then suddenly I thought, "Where is Laura?"

Stepping to the window, I at once caught sight of her yellow dress in the new neighbor's yard—and what was she doing? Actually, pulling the little girl, who belonged there, off of that child's own bright red tricycle. Laura then climbed onto the seat and started for home. I tried to call to her but was too benumbed to speak. The small neighbor's mother was looking on, and I was sure she must be saying, "Oh, what a dreadful child!"

Instantly I understood. My father had given Laura a red tricycle—the exact counterpart of the one on which she now sat. Father, Mother, and I had always spoken of it as a "tricycle," but the little cousins called it "Laura's bike," and she herself had called it "my bike-tricycle."

"No, Laura," I answered. "Your tricycle has not yet come from Grandfather's. This one belongs to the little girl from whom you took it. You pulled her from her own tricycle, Laura, and rode off with it. What are you going to do about it?"

My daughter's eyes were large with surprise. "Is it her bike-tricycle?" she said slowly. "Then I'll take it

BE STILL AND KNOW. A VESPER SERVICE.

PRELUDE

CALL TO WORSHIP:

*Hear us, our Lord, we know thou wilt hear us,
Nor need our voices ascend far away;
Thou art around us, about us, within us;
Thou wilt attend when we earnestly pray.*

SPECIAL MUSIC: "Tread Softly."

SCRIPTURE: Psalm 139:1-12, 23-24—

Thou searchest me, Eternal One, thou knowest me, thou knowest me sitting or rising, my very thoughts thou readest from afar; walking or resting, I am scanned by thee, and all my life to thee lies open; ere ever a word comes to my tongue, O thou Eternal, 'tis well known to thee; thou art on every side, behind me and before, laying thy hand on me. . . . Where could I go from thy spirit, where could I flee from thy face? I climb to heaven: but thou art there; I nestle in the nether-world: and there thou art! If I darted swift to the dawn, to the verge of the ocean afar, thy hand even there would fall on me, thy hand would reach me. . . . Search me, O God, and know my heart, test me and try my thoughts; see if I am taking any course of wrong, and lead me on the lines of life eternal.

PRAYER—

Help us, O Father, to learn to be still that we may hear thy voice and know thy will.

(Silence)

Thou who didst find strength in seclusion, grant unto us a renewal of our spirits.

(Silence)

Thou who speakest not in the earthquake, wind, or fire, but in a still small voice, save us from a feeling of worthlessness.

(Silence)

Thou who dost speak above the storm and stress of life, may we hear thy still small voice above the clamor and strife.

(Silence)

Thou who canst give a peace which the world cannot give, grant us the serenity which comes only from communion with thee.

CHORAL RESPONSE: "Bethany Blessing."

TALK BY LEADER:

A junior boy rushed home from school, ran breathlessly into the house, calling, "Mother, O Mother, what do you suppose happened today? The greatest things you ever heard! I'm first on the Honor Roll, and the teacher showed my report to the principal, and he said, 'That's very well done, James. We're proud of pupils like you.' And that wasn't all. On the way home I met Uncle Jim, and when he saw the card, he said, 'Well, namesake, we'll have to celebrate! How about a motor trip Saturday afternoon?' O, Mother, isn't it lovely?"

He could scarcely wait to talk it over with his mother, who, he knew was also happy in his success.

On the very same day, another boy came home from school quietly. Something had gone very wrong. He met his father, who noticed the downcast face. "What's the matter, son," he asked. The boy told him of failure and misunderstanding and of a mistaken action of which he was ashamed.

The father put his arm about his shoulder. "Never mind, son, we all fail sometimes. Next time you'll do better, I'm sure." And the boy was comforted because his father understood.

Sometimes it is father or mother, sometimes a chum or friend with whom we like to talk over our successes and failures, our ambitions and dreams of the future, or perhaps just something we enjoyed or disliked. It is a great help to us if we find them sympathetic and ready to listen. But sometimes they are busy with their own interests, and our joy is lessened because they do not listen to us.

When Jesus lived among men, he had the same experience. He had twelve friends who went about with him, with whom he could talk; but he found that they did not always understand or want to hear what he had to say, and sometimes when he needed them most they disap-friend who listened, who was always glad or sorry with him, and always helped him, especially when he felt the need of help most urgently. We read very many times that Jesus went away into a mountain or desert place to talk with God. He always came back strong and happy, with courage for every-pointed him. But he had another thing. No doubt he talked to him often when he was in the city or country with his disciples, or when he was on the Sea of Galilee: but he liked to talk to him quietly, too, where no one could interrupt.

He helped us know that we, too, may talk things over with God, at any time, and that he will always listen. He will rejoice with us or sympathize with us. He will strengthen us, and make us brave. He will help us to be a friend to others as he is to us. Sometimes we like to speak to him in church or among groups, but we may also speak to him quietly and may always hear his still, small voice among the turmoils of life.

POEM: "Be Still and Know"—

Be still and know
That God is in his world,
Though clouds shut out the light,
Though ghoulish specters stalk,
And all is night.

Be still and know
That God is in his world,
Though Mammon clamors loud,
And Mars lifts flashing steel,
Untamed and proud.

Be still and know
That God is in his world,
Though men with reckless waste,
May seek they know not what
In feverish haste.

Be still and know
That God is in his world
God speaks, but more may hear
That voice except he have
The listening ear.

HYMN: "Be Still My Soul" (first and second verses).

BENEDICTION:

Thou who hast renewed our strength, send us out to bear a more worthy part in the struggle for righteousness and peace. Amen.

Whoever first brewed beer has prepared a pest for Germany. I have prayed to God that he would destroy the whole brewing industry. I have often pronounced a curse on the brewer. All Germany could live on the barley that is spoiled and turned into a curse by the brewer.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

PSALMS FOR DAILY LIVING.

By DR. D. J. BOWDEN, Dean, Elon College, Guest Editor.

LESSON XII—SEPTEMBER 18, 1949.

SCRIPTURE: Psalms 15; 24:1-6; 143:8-10.

MEMORY SELECTION: "Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; for I lift up my soul unto thee."—Psalm 143:8.

Lord, who shall sojourn in thy tabernacle? Who shall dwell in thy holy hill? Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? These are questions of the psalmist, and they are answered with clarity and conviction. Here, in the works of David the poet, we find an early statement of the requirements which God places upon his subjects. One must walk uprightly; speak truthfully; avoid slander and gossip; be thoughtful of his friends, overlooking their shortcomings; despising evil, but showing respect for the good; keeping his word, at all costs; lending money in times of need, without thought of personal gain.

Thus the Fifteenth Psalm gives a preview of the Eighth Century Prophets whose teachings emphasized moral conduct and inner spirit more than ritual and outward practices.

"Wherewith shall I come before Jehovah," writes Micah: "He hath shown thee, oh man, what is good, and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God?" Your burnt offerings are a stench in the nostrils of God, writes Amos, unless your deeds are tempered with justice. God is a god of mercy, says Hosea, and he expects of his subjects that they be merciful and forgiving toward their fellowmen.

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? And who shall stand in his holy place?" David answers with keen insight: he that hath clean hands and a pure heart; he that speaks truth; he that fulfils honestly his vows. Isaiah realized this in his memorable vision: "In the year that King Uzziah died I saw the Lord. . . . Then said I, woe is me, for I am a man of unclean lips and I dwell among a people of unclean lips." Who shall stand in his holy place? It was not until Isaiah had been purified that he was able to hear the voice of God saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Only he who hath clean hands and a pure heart can hear the voice of God.

The Sermon on the Mount.

Compare these words of wisdom from the Psalms and from the Eighth Century Prophets with those of Jesus in the Sermon on the Mount: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God!" "Ye have heard that it was said to them of old time . . . but I say unto you . . . thou shalt not be angry . . . thou shalt not look on a woman with lust . . . thine integrity shall make swearing unnecessary . . . resist not evil . . . love thine enemies." These are the teachings of Jesus, and they are of one pattern with the insights of David and the Prophets: none but the pure in heart shall see God.

The Moral Precepts of David.

In the time in which David wrote, it was believed by all peoples that one could enter into contract with his God and thereby obtain his protection. The Phoenicians held the view that one thus became a "client" of God. But for David, the obligations of the contract were more than external ritual and worship; to fulfil his contract, man must "walk uprightly." His moral character was considered more important than his literal agreement. What one does is only a reflection of what he is, and in the words of Jesus, if one is to be a part of the kingdom of God, he must live in the Spirit of God.

None But the Pure in Heart.

None but the pure in heart shall see God! None but the pure in heart shall stand in his holy place! None but the pure in heart shall dwell in his holy hill! Thus it was, in the legends of King Arthur, that only three of his knights, Sir Gawain, Sir Percival and Sir Galahad were permitted to see the vision of the Holy Grail: Galahad, "pure in thought, in word and in deed."

And so it is with us: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Purity opens the eyes of the blind to spiritual things. God is love, and only those who have love in their own hearts can ever experience the meaning of true love. When jealousy, hatred, selfishness fill our hearts, we cannot know love; one finds true love only by surrendering his selfishness to the purity of love in his own heart. None but the pure in heart shall see God!

God is beauty, but one is ignorant of beauty and is unconscious of the beauty in his surroundings unless he has beauty in his heart. Only by being inwardly beautiful can one experience true beauty about him. If we are ugly inside ourselves, we see nothing but ugliness about us. To the beautiful spirit all things are beautiful.

God is truth, but one cannot know and appreciate truth unless he, himself, is truthful. He who is suspicious of everyone, who finds it impossible to trust anyone, who doubts the motives of his friends and neighbors is most likely reflecting his own lack of trustworthiness. He trusts no one because he, himself, is not trustworthy.

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart! Only the pure in heart can see God; only the loving can know love, only the beautiful can appreciate beauty; only the truthful can recognize truth; only the good can know goodness!

REVIVAL IN ALPINE.

volunteer labor to dig a basement lunchroom under the school building. Ten-cent hot lunches help today's children build resistance to illness.

Then the people of the larger parish, led by their ministers, got together to build a tuberculosis clinic, for even distant sanatoriums were overcrowded and only a local program could answer their immediate need. The Presbyterians furnished a building, the Methodists a nurse and the Disciples equipment such as an X-ray machine, while local people raised funds for operation of the long-needed rest home.

Taylor's dream is coming true. The churches, working together, are helping to relieve poverty and illness among their people, and their people in turn are coming closer to a better life that centers naturally around the church.

One local pastor has called this larger parish one of the most significant experiments in interdenominational cooperation in the South today.

Taylor himself says that he and his staff have found the thrill of cooperative Christian work is always new.

LETTER OF RESIGNATION.

Presented July 17 and Accepted by the Church July 31, 1949.

The First Christian Church,
Burlington, North Carolina.

Greetings:

Almost five years ago in the providence of God this church extended to me a call to become its pastor. After much prayer and consideration I deemed it to be the will of God that I accept the call. The work of church, its development and progress during this period has made valid the conclusion that it was the will of God that I assume the work of this pastorate.

During the period of my ministry among you, the records show that there has been approximately a 10 per cent net increase in the membership of the church and a 5 per cent increase in the Sunday school enrollment. The attendance at the public services of the church have increased more than 50 per cent as compared to the recorded attendance for the year of 1944. The average attendance at the Sunday morning services of the church is about 300 in the fall and spring and approximately 200 in the summer, and the average attendance in the Sunday school is up this year by about 20 per cent. These are symbols of spiritual growth which should warm the hearts of us all.

When we examine the material side of our church life, we also find some very encouraging things. The present budget and contributions of the church are now at an all time high in the 65-year history of this church. In the year 1948 this church contributed through its various working organizations, the sum of $7,956.90 to missions and benevolences, and the sum of $39,974.76 for local expenses, as compared to contributions in 1944 of $6,996 for missions and benevolences, and $13,459 for local expenses.

Last year the church secured a much needed parsonage, which is both attractive and adequate, at a cost of approximately $27,000, all of which has been paid with the exception of a few hundred dollars which we expect to pay within the next few weeks. This is an accomplishment for which every member of this church should be eternally grateful to God. During my pastorate the church has also secured modern and adequate equipment for the three offices of the church and added needed personnel to the church staff. In addition much equipment for the work of the church has been secured, such as visual aid equipment, furnishings for classrooms and departments, etc.

During my ministry here I have made myself available to literally hundreds of people who have come to me for personal counsel and help. I have ministered for 75 funerals, and more than a 100 weddings. In the name of the church I have served the civic interest of the community through many agencies for social and moral welfare of the community, and had the privilege of sharing in many worthwhile projects in the community through which I have tried to bring credit upon my church and respect to my Lord and Master, Jesus Christ.

Through these five years I have tried to keep true to my commitment to God without respect of pressures and desires of men. This I shall continue to do so long as God gives me life.

Now in the providence of God he has led me to believe that it is his will that I transfer my labors to other fields. Therefore, I have the honor to present to you at this time my resignation as pastor of this church to be effective as of October 31, 1949, or at such other time that may be mutually agreeable. I take this step at this time so that I might be in position to reach a decision as to my future work and so that this church might be free to proceed with the calling of my successor.

I express to each of you my warm affections and deep appreciation for your kindness and cooperation during these years. I recognize that there are those who have not and do not now approve my ministry, but I assure them that I believe that their feelings are out of their hearts, and that they have acted in their conclusions with sincere purposes. My affections go out to them now as they always have.

May the blessings of God attend you individually and as a group of God's children. Stand firm in the faith of Christ. Never let your loyalty and devotion to your church be detoured by any individual or any event.

With prayers and sincere best wishes, I am,

Faithfully yours,

W. MILLARD STEVENS.

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

grams, and under her leadership I feel we have gone forward.

These have been busy months bringing various duties and tasks that make us eager to work in the Master's Name.

Highlights of the year are as follows: The month of October we had a very inspiring and impressive service of the installation of officers by our pastor, Rev. W. Stanley Carne; October 3—World-Wide Communion Sunday was observed at the church; November 7—The Thank Offering Service was held in the church and a splendid offering received, Rev. Pryerin was guest speaker; November 11—Mr. B. L. Sawyer spoke on "Our National Family"; December 9—Mrs. Harry Lee led our Christmas program and a group of ladies served at the Post Office to sell seals; January 6—Mrs. George Poole was our speaker, relating some of the work being done at Quito, Ecuador, Rev. and Mrs. Poole having been missionaries there and Mrs. Poole being such a lovely speaker the program was enjoyed by all; January 25—Woman's Missionary Society served a supper to the young people of our church; February 10—Public Meeting at the church and Mrs. Harry Lee spoke of the Jacksons' work in China, Rev. George Poole showed pictures and told of his work in Quito, there was a special offering amounting to $21.20; March 4—World Day of Prayer at Court Street Baptist Church, the service was most inspirational; March 10—Mrs. Mamie Rudd was in charge of the regular meeting.

Rev. Stanley Carne reviewed the study books of the year in such an interesting manner, I'm sure they were enjoyed by all. Mrs. M. L. Parker, spiritual life superintendent, led the devotionals from the book of Galatians.

On April 5 the Eastern Virginia Missionary Rally was held at Berea with seven of our members attending.

The May meeting was led by Mrs. Carne in her usual efficient manner, the theme being, "Our Church Colleges." Some of the business women of the church took part and we had a covered dish supper. The program and evening was enjoyed by all.

Mrs. Frank Laubach, wife of one of our missionaries, spoke at the church.

May God's richest blessings be with us the rest of the year and may he lead us to a closer relationship with God through the year to come.

MRS. EMILY C. LEE,

Secretary.

It would be better to abandon our over-rapid development of the intellect and to aim rather at training the heart and the affections.

—Victor Hugo.

The Orphanage

DEAR ORPHANAGE FRIENDS:

Banks Watkins fell from a big truck while he and some other boys were hauling corn along with adult workers, and was seriously crippled. He will have to lie in the Alamance General Hospital for six or eight weeks. He has been there now more than a week and is getting along fine. Drop him a card, or letter, and if you would like to share in his hospital bill send the money or check to the Orphanage, Box 157, Elon College, N. C. The above mentioned hospital is addressed at Burlington, N. C. When one has a family as big and as alive as this, there are many visits to the physician—tonsils, appendix, and bumps and bruises that are of such nature that they require some attention. Which reminds me to tell you that the Kiwanis Club of Burlington has just sent us a check for $226.00 for a large number of tonsilectomies. A thousand thanks to them!

This week is all a-stir with the prospects for Home Coming. More than thirty families, and some of them not small families, have written in to say, "I'll be there," and by the time I write you again I can tell you the story of what and who. But now chickens are being cooked, beef is being boiled, and vegetables are being gathered for the big, big serving of brunswick stew. The lawns are newly mown, floors are waxed, and tables are being built for the occasion. And I mean it is an occasion, for there is nothing just like going back to the old home whether it has been sunny or sort of cloudy at times, and I want you to know these men and women who are coming back home—a home that saved the day for the dear, dear days of childhood for them. One mother sent $25.00 with her reply to the invitation to be here. I shall welcome them back home for Uncle Charley, I cannot do it like he could, but I can be just as sincere and appreciative of their coming, and I can tell them for all of you that we are glad for any service we have all been able to render them. I shall remember you and the Board of Trustees, and all the kind and generous people who are saying: "Go on, Truitt, make the little fellows and the fine girls who are there now a real home, and God bless you."

Pleasant Ridge Church and Sunday School in the Western North Carolina Conference are coming here the third Sunday in October. They are going to load up several automobiles and drive up here. What Sunday are you coming? Make it soon, and see what we are, who we are, and what in the years to come we may be! How do you like our report this week. Thanks.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

A GREAT MAN OF GOD.

the Lord in his mouth was truth." This text is the epitome of his life and ministry.

He was a faithful, sincere Christian and a great preacher of the Gospel. He had a fine sense of humor. He brought laughter and joy to many people. Those who sat under his ministry came to appreciate those rich spiritual messages, mixed with humor and pathos, laughter and tears, sometimes very eloquent and at other times rich in the elevation of the commonplace to a high level of spiritual significance.

He magnified the gospel ministry. He loved his calling. He was devoted to his many friends. He moved among his people as an humble servant of God, having an understanding mind and a sympathetic heart. He challenged people to greater faith and spiritual living. The word of the Lord in his mouth was truth.

We shall miss his presence among us. But we should rejoice in his triumphant life and gracious ministry. We thank God for him. We have been enriched by his life and service. "By this I know that thou art a man of God and the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth." This should challenge us to prove our relation to God by the same token. The light of God was in his face. The word of the Lord came from his lips. Hope came from his inspiring presence. Life was enriched by his spiritual touch.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

back. I'll tell her I thought it was mine. I'll say, 'I'm sorry.' "

"And I must tell her mother how sorry I am," I thought. And we started. It would be simple enough to establish the claim of mistaken identity regarding the small vehicle, but how could I ever excuse my child's rough behavior in pulling another child so rudely from her seat? Surely a well-brought-up little girl would never behave like that.

We arrived. Laura delivered her speech very well, but Margaret, the victim of her recent onslaught, was not to be so easily mollified. She directed a hard push at Laura, who, losing her balance, fell over in the grass. But my daughter's three weeks with her cousins now proved of value. She took both the push and the tumble in good part and laughed so contagiously that Margaret soon joined in, and the two, right then and there, were friends. Meanwhile, rather haltingly, I had explained the mistake and asked pardon for my child's behavior.

My neighbor looked from me to the two children. "For once, I'm glad Margaret was ill-mannered," was her surprising remarks, followed by, "She has been feeling a bit superior—an attitude I should much dislike to have her develop. Later, she and I will have a talk on the courtesy with which one accepts an apology. Guiding our offspring is a full-time job, isn't it? Do come up and have some tea. Margaret knows how to prepare a tiny tea table of her own, and I feel sure she will be able to induce Laura to have 'tea' with her. Please?"

Of course I accepted. And what do you think we talked about—children? No, not then—ours were too near by. We discussed landscape gardening!

In Observance of Rally Day

SOME DAY IS TOO LATE

A little girl with shining eyes—
 Her little face aglow,
 Said, "Daddy, it is almost time
 For Sunday School, let's go.
 They teach us there of Jesus' love,
 Of how He died for all Those who on Him will call."
 "Oh, no!" said Daddy, "not today,
 I've worked hard all week,
 And I must have one day of rest,
 I'm going to the creek
 For there I can relax and rest,
 And fishing's fine, they say,
 So run along; don't bother me
 We'll go to church some day."
 Months and years have passed away
 But Daddy hears that plea no more:
 "Let's go to Sunday School,"
 Those childish days are o'er.
 And, now that Daddy's growing old,
 When life is almost through
 He finds some time to go to church.
 But what does daughter do?
 She says: "Oh, Daddy, not today—
 I stayed up almost all night
 And I've just got to get some sleep,
 Besides, I look a fright."
 Then Daddy lifts a trembling hand
 To brush away the tears,
 As again he hears the pleading voice
 Distinctly through the years.
 He sees a small girl's shining face
 Upturned, with eyes aglow,
 As she says, "It's time for Sunday School;
 Please, Daddy, won't you go?"

News Flashes

Dr. Luther B. Grice preached at Windsor last Sunday evening.

Rev. Will Wood conducted revival services in his church at Wakefield last week.

Rev. W. M. Stevens is assisting Dr. I. W. Johnson in revival services this week at Oakland Church.

Supt. W. T. Scott met with the members of the Pulpit Committee of the Richmond Church on Wednesday of this week.

Dr. Will B. O'Neill, president, announces that the Eastern Virginia Ministerial Association will convene for their first fall session next Monday at Suffolk.

Rev. Johnson L. Griffin was a visitor at the office of publication the first of this week. His spirit of the work at Berea (Norfolk) indicates that he has a most progressive and cooperative membership, and that the young people of the church are sharing increased interest.

MISSION BOARD TO MEET.

The Mission Board of the Southern Convention will meet in the Henderson, North Carolina, Church, on September 20, from 10 to 4 o'clock. All persons having business with the board should contact Dr. F. C. Lester, 801 Sunset Drive, Asheboro, North Carolina, or Supt. W. T. Scott, Elon College, North Carolina, or make arrangements to be present at the meeting.

JOINT BIBLE SCHOOL HELD AT EURE.

A joint Bible School for Harrell Methodist and Eure Christian Churches was held the last week in July at the Eure Church, Rev. T. A. Collins, pastor.

The school continued through the week with the hours of study scheduled from 7-9 p. m. each evening.

Pupils were divided according to age groups—Primary, Beginners, Juniors and Intermediates.

Mr. Collins served as dean of the school and presented a nightly lesson in scriptural magic. Features of the program were study courses, workshop classes, worship and recreation. All children and youth of the community were invited to attend. It was a great success and well-attended.

Eure Christian Church is situated in Gates County, Virginia.

BELEW CREEK.

The series of revival services were held at Belew Creek July 16-23. Rev. Walter Hall was the visiting speaker from the Albemarle Congregational Church. His sermons were very appropriate and well delivered. The attendance increased from sixty to ninety-five on the closing night. Two new additions were made to the church membership—one by letter and one by profession. The meeting was very successful.

The church held a Vacation Church School July 17-21. The total enrollment was fifty-nine, an increase of thirty-three over the previous year. Thirty children attended all five sessions. Fifty-one certificates were awarded to those who attended three days or more.

Misses Edith Pegram and Lura Neal taught the Beginners; Mr. William Tolly and Rev. Walter Hall, the Primary; Mr. Allen Hurdle and Miss Margaret Neal, the Juniors. Mr. Tolly was the supervisor of the school.

The staff of workers did a commendable work and the loyalty of the pupils was excellent. The results were very satisfactory.

SALEM CHAPEL.

The annual revival services were held at Salem Chapel August 21-26. Rev. Millard Stevens, from the Burlington Church, was the visiting speaker. Mr. Stevens' sermons were timely and adapted to the need of the church. The young people were especially loyal in attending the services. Each night they filled the choir and under the direction of Mr. Abe Gerry, the Sunday school superintendent, they contributed greatly to the song service. One addition was made to the church membership by letter of transfer.

The church held its Vacation Church School July 4-8. The attendance was very good. Nine children attended all five sessions. Thirty-two were enrolled with 66.5 per cent attendance for the whole school. Certificates were awarded to 26 who attended three days or more.

Miss Joe Ann Johnson and Miss Mary Marshall taught the Beginners;

Misses Helen Jackson and Pauline Marshall taught the Primary group, while Mr. Allen Hurdle and Miss Nancy Marshall taught the Juniors. The spirit of the school and the response of the pupils was excellent. Miss Jackson, the Sunday school worker, acted as superintendent of the school. A picnic was held the closing night. The results of the school were highly satisfactory. The Methodist, Baptist, Moravian and Congregational Christian Churches were represented in the school.

MISSIONARIES TO GREECE.

A significant service took place Tuesday evening, September 6, in the First Congregational Church, Concord, New Hampshire, when Rev. and Mrs. Paul Herbert William Olander of West Palm Beach, Florida, and Rumford, Rhode Island, were commissioned as career missionaries by the American Board. The Olanders will go to Athens, Greece, for evangelistic and educational work. They will be the special representatives of the First Congregational Church, Concord.

Mr. Olander has been pastor at the Union Congregational Church, West Palm Beach, Florida, since 1946 and previous to that has served pastorates at Dover-Foxcroft, Cherryfield and Ellsworth, Maine, and Palmer, Massachusetts. In 1942 Mr. Olander entered the U. S. Navy as a Chaplain, leaving the service in 1946 with the rank of Lieutenant Commander.

Mr. Olander was born in Bayonne, New Jersey. His boyhood was spent in Cambridge, Massachusetts, where he attended the public schools. He received his B. D. from Bangor Theological Seminary and his B. A. from the University of Maine, with further graduate study at Hartford Theological Seminary.

Mrs. Marion MacLaughlan Olander was born in Blaine, Maine, and her girlhood was spent in Van Buren, Maine. She was educated at the Sacred Heart High School of that town and attended the University of New Brunswick. Prior to her marriage she had four years' of teaching experience.

Of his new work Mr. Olander says, "As a child I wanted to be a missionary and the vision of this type of Christian service has never left me. I do not believe that anyone can achieve his destiny apart from fellowship with God and it is this conviction that makes me anxious to serve Him wherever there is need."

On the Trail of the Alcohol Problem

The liquor traffic is profoundly disturbed and alarmed when men and women begin to think about the alcohol problem. If people will think about that problem, the liquor traffic is determined to divert their attention from the heart and center of the matter.

These diversionary tactics are featured at present by two movements:

1. The effort to convince the people that there is no alcohol problem but only a problem of alcoholism.

2. The effort to convince the public that alcoholism is not due to the use of alcohol but to underlying personality deficiencies which constitute the true problem.

If there were no alcoholism whatever, there would be an alcohol problem of vast social and economic significance.

We hold in our hand, a clipping from the Louisville Courier-Journal, of Sunday morning, August 7—the dispatch is from Chicopee, Massachusetts. It reports that a peace-maker father was shot to death when he intervened in a fist fight between his two sons. One of the boys was critically wounded and the other arrested on a murder charge. At the end of the story, we find the significant words, "James and his brother had been out drinking together."

These two young men were not alcoholics. The unfortunate affair was no part of the problem of alcoholism. There is no fact in the reported evidence that either of the two young men was drunk. It seems they were just "under the influence."

Hundreds of such news reports pour into the offices of the Clipsheet. They come from all parts of the country. They present an infinite variety of detail. In the aggregate, they constitute a national disaster every day. It is a problem of alcohol and the alcohol custom, and the common use of alcohol as a beverage. It is in only small part, a problem of alcoholism. The thousands of men who appear in our courts every morning, particularly after the weekend or a holiday, are not, in the majority of cases, alcoholics.

Alcoholism, as a matter of fact, despite its being our fourth public health problem, is not the major part of the alcohol problem. When the liquor traffic or its fellow travellers say the contrary, they are serving the interest of the liquor traffic, but not the interest of their fellowmen. It is clearly absurd, not to say reprehensible, to pretend that all alcoholism arises out of the psychological peculiarities of abnormal individuals. It is true that a large proportion of the problem has such an origin, but an even larger proportion arises out of the custom of drinking alcohol.

The Clipsheet has before published and it now publishes again, authoritative information on this matter:

Doctors Leo Alexander, Merrill Moore and Abraham Myerson say: "Irrespective of what anyone may claim about underlying personality problems in the chronic addict, the fact remains that without alcohol taken to excess alcoholism does not occur."

Dr. Albion Roy King states it well when he says: "While all authorities are probably agreed that certain personality types incur a greater risk in the use of alcohol than others, no completely convincing effort has yet been made strictly to define the types. In fact, so confusing are the suggestions that grave doubt may arise whether there is any person who may not have some trait which might easily result in alcoholism."

Listen to Dr. E. M. Jellinek, Director of the Yale School of Alcohol Studies: "In a complex society, with so many tensions at work, we have the neurotic or diseased personality. It is natural that they should take recourse to intoxication to a larger degree than others. They probably constitute 40 per cent of the inebriate population, but 60 per cent comes to alcoholism from an entirely normal origin and only in the course of drink. They are not seeking release. They are conforming to certain habits of their set."

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

HOLY NECK

The writer spent a very happy week in revival services with Dr. Luther Grice at Holy Neck Church. Those who have never attended this church may be puzzled or amused by the name, but one visit is sufficient to sense its fine spirit and its remarkable strength. The roots of strength reach back through two centuries of worship at this holy place. Many families with industry, education and culture fill the ranks of the church and supply its leadership. Many leaders in other churches had their first training and inspiration at Holy Neck.

Through the years the church has enjoyed preaching of a high calibre by such ministers as George D. Eastes, Ben F. Black, Charles H. Rowland, N. G. Newman, Arnold Slater, Henry E. Crutchfield, and Luther B. Grice. The church is fortunate in securing the able leadership of its present pastor. Dr. Grice announces that the church is ready to go to Conference with its increased apportionment paid in full.

New Sunday school rooms were added to the side rather than the back of the church, thus enhancing the appearance as well as adding essential space and equipment. The large and enthusiastic school functions under the superintendency of Mr. Harry Lee Weaver.

Seven members were added to the church last week and other additions were assured. It was a privilege and joy to sing and preach the gospel to such fine congregations of earnest people. Ministers are in danger of losing their evangelistic note in their preaching, and congregations forget that the New Testament saints were evangelists. A week of evangelistic effort brings those in the pulpit and those in the new back to the central New Testament emphasis.

The revival meeting has come in for rather severe criticism. As a special service it does have its limitations. Evangelistic effort is limited in many churches to "that season between fodder pulling and 'tater digging time." Many preachers who have set the pattern of American revivalism have been limited in their theological outlook and interpretation. Consequently, many churches have abandoned the revival as a recruiting agency. The majority of these churches have fallen inadvertently into the other extreme of limiting their evangelistic efforts largely to Lent or Easter. But in countless churches revivals are conducted in ways that are wholesome for the church and the community. Converts are assimilated in a program of Christian education. We should exercise care in criticizing revivalism lest we find ourselves guilty of criticizing New Testament evangelism.

PROTESTANT CONCERN OVER CATHOLICISM

The Catholic-Protestant feud broke into the open with the bald charge by The Reverend W. Russell Bowie, Dean of the Union Theological Seminary in New York, that religious and civil liberties of all Americans will be jeopardized if the Roman Catholic Church succeeds in its stated purpose of making America Catholic.

Dr. Bowie, writing in the September "American Mercury" on the "Protestant Concern Over Catholicism," charges that the Catholic hierarchy is responsible for the growing religious tension in America.

"The fundamental reason for that tension," Dr. Bowie stressed, "is that Roman Catholicism, as it impinges upon the community and the State, is totalitarian."

The eminent and often-quoted Protestant clergyman pointed out that in every country where the Roman Church is strong enough, it controls education, the laws concerning marriage and divorce, and regulations about morality generally, not only for its own communicants but for the population generally.

Dr. Bowie points out that in March 1949 the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, in arguing the need for religious people to stand against the persecution of religious leaders in Communist countries, went on to say that "We cannot be silent about the fact that in Spain, the Argentine and elsewhere, there are today grievous abridgments of religious freedom."

Citing as examples the current situation in Italy, the Argentine and Spain, he says these "are not sporadic accidents. They are backed by the Roman Catholic authorities beginning with encyclicals of the Pope. In his encyclical Immortale Dei, Leo XIII declared, 'It is not lawful for the State . . . to hold in equal favor different kinds of religion.' In a catechism put forth by the Roman Catholic Church for use for religious instruction in Spain, 'freedom of conscience, freedom of worship and freedom of the press' are listed among 'the principal errors condemned by the Church.'"

Here in America, charges Dr. Bowie, the Roman Church is trying the same tactics. He quotes from a book written by Father Paul L. Blakely. "Our first duty to the public school is not to pay taxes for its maintenance. We pay that tax under protest. The first duty of every Catholic father to the public school is to keep his children out of it."

The Reverend Bowie further charges Cardinal Spellman with "fantastic representations" when he, the Cardinal, complained on June 11, 1947, "that Protestant resistance to any use of public tax funds for the support or furtherance of Roman Catholic parochial schools was Protestant 'bigotry.'"

"If the public school is one bulwark of American freedom," says Dr. Bowie, "certainly free speech and free discussion, whether by the spoken or printed word, is a still more crucial one. But Roman Catholic pressure is frequently, and often successfully, exerted to prevent expression of views which the Church opposes." He cites the examples of the banning of The Nation and the threatened boycott of the San Francisco News as typical of the methods used by the Church.

Dr. Bowie concludes that the only hope for religious democracy in this country is if the Catholic hierarchy will sit down with Protestant leaders to "find out the reasons for the friction and whether they can be allayed."

AN ANSWER.

Father John Courtney Murray, S.J., said today in answer to the article, "Protestant Concern Over Catholicism," that the real "concern" of Protestant leaders is the refusal of the Catholic Church to acknowledge the equality of all churches.

The eminent Catholic authority on the relationship between Church and State writes in the September American Mercury that the Protestants are not seeking official Papal assurance that Catholicism will never become in the United States 'the religion of State,' in the Spanish sense; they seem to want the Pope himself to take his seat, as an equal among equals, at the table of the World Council of Churches."

Father Murray flatly stated that "this refusal will continue to be made; for it is the obverse of an affirmation cardinal to the Catholic Faith."

The Catholic priest pointed out that Dean Bowie overlooked the "oppressive" anti-Catholicism in countries where the majority were Protestants. Father Murray cited the situation that existed in the First and Second German Reichs and the current situation in Norway and Sweden.

Father Murray further charged that "a man of logic can see" the identity between the thesis adopted by Dr. Bowie and the thesis being proclaimed at the moment by Mr. Cepicka in Czechoslovakia. It is likewise the identical thesis recently sustained by Mr. Paul Blanshard, the "undiluted secularist," whom Dr. Bowie "reverently" quotes.

"It is not easy to know what Dr. Bowie is for," says Father Murray, "but Mr. Cepicka (quite clearly) and Mr. Blanshard (up to a point) know what they are for. The former is for a Communist world order; the latter is for the democratic social-welfare State."

The Jesuit theologian stated that Dr. Bowie's seven examples of "alleged Catholic attempts at a 'censorship' over the 'whole field of our public life' were taken out of context and were reported by Dr. Bowie with such lack of factual detail as to quite misrepresent their significance."

A Summarized Report on Experiences at Yenching, December 1948 to July 1949

By LUCIUS C. PORTER

American Board Missionary and Professor of Philosophy at Yenching

Fighting between the XIII People's Liberation Army (Jen Min Chieh Fang Chun, Ti Shih-san Chun) and the Nationalist (Kuo Min Tang) armies began a few miles north of the Yenching campus on December 13, 1948, about 10:30 a. m. Within two days the battle front had moved to the south of the campus, and of the adjacent town of Hai-tien. The front line was maintained between the campus and Peiping walls for about eight weeks before the city was surrendered. Officers of the political bureau attached to the XIII Army visited the campus on Saturday, December 18, inquiring as to our needs and explaining their plans. The leader of this group was a graduate of the Kung-li-Hui (Congregational) Middle School of Paotingful, and knew well both the principal, Yang Shengwu, Yenching '23, and Mr. Hugh Hubbard. Arrangements were made for an address to the student body on the next day, Sunday, by Liu Tso-min, who is the head of the political bureau.

From this time on members of the People's Government frequently visited the campus, consulting with Chancellor C. W. Luh on question of food supply, arrangements for financing the university during the interval before settled political controls could be established, and other matters. Members of the Western group of faculty personnel met some officials and discussed general matters, including questions of courses of study. In all these discussions the officials were friendly and helpful. No change in courses of teaching or in religious activities were suggested. From this time on until my departure from Yenching the university region was under the control of the People's Government. A summary of Yenching experience during this period follows, under four main heads.

I. Unity of Spirit—

The unity of spirit within the universality in facing the adventure of the overturn of authority and control of this region by the People's Liberation Armies, and throughout the whole period of eight months was a striking fact. We have recognized the value of Yenching Spirit before, but the reality of this spirit, the unity of the faculty members among themselves, the sense of comradeship between students and faculty, and the sense that the servants and workers of the university were a real part of the whole team, was never more dynamically expressed. We felt it among ourselves and other people spoke of our united spirit, in contrast to the cliques and divisions that marked other universities and organizations.

II. The Non-Interference of the People's Government With Academic Program—

The academic work of the university was continued throughout the period, with only minor dislocation in the time-table, viz.:

1. Postponement of the examinations for the autumn semester from mid-January to early in March; at the request of our students.
2. Postponement of the opening of the spring semester.
3. Postponement of Commencement and cancellation of the spring recess, in order to have a full semester of 16 weeks of work.

The regular program of studies was in no wise interfered with. All courses announced in September 1948 were taught as planned, with no suggestion of changes made by the People's Government.

However, the People's Government suggested that three new courses be offered in the departments of history, political science, and economics respectively, in which the Marxian viewpoint of these subjects could be presented. The university authorities accepted these suggestions and new instructors were selected to teach the courses. Though qualified to present the Marxian viewpoint none of these new instructors was a member of the Communist party.

III. Non-Interference With Religious Activities—

The religious life and activities of Yenching have been continued without any imposition of restrictions or regulations. The entire program previously planned for the Christmas season was carried out without any change only ten days after the university had fallen within the lines of the People's Liberation Army. Daily chapel services, Sunday worship, small fellowship group discussions, religious services for workers, etc., were neither inquired into nor examined. Government authorities repeatedly stated their intention to maintain religious liberty, but reminded us that such liberty included the liberty of anti-religious groups to express their views and criticisms.

The chief effect of the new regime upon our religious life was to inspire a review of the essentials of Christian faith and conduct, and the effort to present the Christian message in forms adequate to meet the challenge of communistic ideology. At the same time Christians realized more clearly the need to revitalize the Church in China. Dr. T. C. Chao, from the first, helped us to understand that to complacently accept the indifference of the new government to religion and Christianity would be a great danger; active persecution would have stressed the need for a vital faith. Dr. Chao and the students of the School of Religion, with the help of many members of the Yenta Christian Fellowship, have been active in the task of rousing Christian leaders and church members of Peiping churches to the task of reinterpreting the Christian message, and re-energizing Christian effort. Christian students shared in the work undertaken by all our students of helping the people of Peiping understand the attitudes and purposes of the People's Government by spending ten days in the city talking to student groups, people in homes and on the streets, etc., disarming their fears of ruthless cruelty, and reporting the treatment Yen-ching had already received. The Christian students lived with the other students at the Normal College, but devoted themselves to the students of Christian Middle School, and the pastors and leading laymen and members of the churches. Each day spent in this work was followed in the evening by group discussion on results achieved, criticism of mistakes in methods, etc., and plans for the next day's work. In this procedure Christian students adopted the methods in which Party leaders had trained other students.

IV. Signs of Encouragement for the Future—

Instead of imposing a cut-and-dried program for Higher Education, the People's Government, through its educational authorities, seems eager to consult with the experienced educators of Peiping with regard to the best procedure to be followed in facing the problems of Higher Education for this region and for China generally. The government authorities frankly acknowledged its ignorance and inexperience in this field, and sought guidance in consultation with educational specialists.

As affecting Yen-ching's future the following particulars are significant:

1. Yen-ching was named as one of the four universities of Peiping that was to be continued. The other three are: Peking National University (Peita), Tsing Hua National University (Tsing Hua) and The Normal National University (Shih-ta). Other colleges and universities were amalgamated with these three, or reduced to some form of junior grade, or closed.

2. Yen-ching was asked to share in the formation of the commission on higher education, composed of some 20 experienced educators. Chancellor C. W. Luh, Prof. Kit-king Lei (Mrs. Yen Ching-yueh) of sociology, and Prof. Chang Tung-sun of philosophy, were appointed to this commission certainly, and probably Prof. Weng Tuchen, of history, also. The program worked out by this commission will undoubtedly have a much wider influence than mere application to education in North China. The fact that two of the Yen-ching representatives of this commission are professed Christians is significant of the government's attitude toward religion.

3. Yen-ching has been given high praise for its practical vocational courses.

Yen-ching has been urged to develop more vocational courses, but also to plan for more research work, as the government realizes China's great need for men and women with high technical training to guide in the work of "productiveness" which the government emphasizes in all its publicity statements.

4. Yen-ching has been held up to other universities as a model of economic administration. In its efficient use of a small and limited income, in the small number of its faculty staff and technicians and janitors, etc., as compared with other institutions of the city, along with the quality of training and devotion to service shown by its graduates, Yen-ching has been made an example for others to follow.

5. There was much uncertainty in the minds of Dr. Chao and his colleagues as to the future of the School of Religion. However, it was found in consultation with government representatives that the fact that the name was School of Religion instead of School of Theology, was an item in its favor. Moreover the government authorities recognized that some study of religion was a necessary part of any study of human culture. No opposition was expressed for the continuance of the usual courses of the School of Religion if these courses were not scheduled as a group but, instead, were divided among the several departments to which they were naturally related, such as philosophy, history, sociology and literature. As you know, even the Nationalist Government never gave official recognition to the School of Religion as an integral part of the registered Yen-ching University, and recognized no degree in religion.

MISSIONARY TO INDIA DIES.

A cablegram announcing the sudden death of Mrs. Moulton Phelps in Kodaikanal, India, has just reached the American Board, under which Mrs. Phelps has been serving with her husband, Carl Wright Phelps, since 1921.

Mrs. Phelps was born in Middle Haddam, Connecticut, 56 years ago, and was educated in Connecticut schools, graduating in 1919 from the Hartford School of Religious Education.

In 1920 she went to Mt. Silinda, East Africa, as a single woman missionary but her marriage to Carl W. Phelps in 1921 took her to India and later to Ceylon. Since 1932 Mrs. Phelps has been at the High Cleric School for the children of missionaries and other Europeans and Americans living in India, which is located in Kodaikanal and of which her husband is the Principal.

Mrs. Phelps leaves her husband, Carl W. Phelps who was born in Dorchester, Massachusetts, and is the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Phelps of Springfield, Massachusetts; a daughter, Mrs. James A. Lovett, 3901 Victory Circle, Fort Smith, Arkansas; and two sons, Roger Wilbur Phelps, 17, and Robert Irving Phelps, 15, who are with their parents in India; two brothers; G. Burleigh Moulton of New Hampton, New Hampshire, and Rev. Joseph L. Moulton of Ahmednagar, India, who is now home on furlough in Auburndale, Massachusetts.

Mrs. Phelps died September 4, according to the cablegram. While word had been received in the early summer that she had been receiving medical care at the Christian Medical College in Vellore, nothing had been said to indicate the seriousness of her illness.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

WELCOME TO FRESHMEN.

(The following is the address of welcome that President L. E. Smith gave to the Freshmen of 1949-50 on September 9.)

It becomes my privilege and pleasure to welcome you to Elon College. Whatever I may say will doubtless seem trite. You have already been welcomed by many old friends and new acquaintances. At any rate, I would like to add that we want to assure you that you are welcome—welcome to all that we have, our grounds, our buildings and social privileges, our cultural opportunities and our educational advantages. We give you our friendships, our hospitality, our hearts, our all. Could we give you more?

We are anxious that you feel welcome, that you feel at home, and that you have a happy and profitable experience at Elon College. This depends to a great extent on you, depends on your intentions, your purposes, your attitudes. As you come to Elon College, I trust that you come full of expectancy.

1. Expecting to have a good time. We want you to have a good time. We want you to be happy while you are here. We have tried to create conditions and provide facilities that will make your stay full of happiness and pleasures. You will note that this is a co-educational school. Some have found that this fact has added to their pleasures and multiplied their happiness, not only while they are on the campus but after they leave the college and all along the journey of life. We have our Student Union, our Society Hall, our old gymnasium and parlors in the girls' dormitories. These are all for your use and pleasure.

2. We trust that you have come expecting to improve your social and cultural life. I don't know what your home advantages have been but there are certain advantages on a college campus that you have not had heretofore. We have amassed here in the personalities of our faculty and their families a great group of people who have been about in the world, who know how to live and how to act in society. They will be examples to you in your preparation for the finer things of life. I know that there is a tendency today to disregard certain standards and accepted rules of society, to dress slovenly and slouchy, to discard coats and skirts and don blue jeans and dungarees, to flout all formality as to dress and special occasions. You may follow that line if you like, if you are determined. There is little that anyone can do about it. We can show you the proper way but you do not have to walk therein. Should this be your attitude, I warn you that some day your efforts will bear fruit. The fruit will not be insipid. It will be bitter. You will prefer not to gather it, but gather it, you must, and gather it, you will!

3. I trust that you have come expecting to improve your minds, to enrich your minds with information—information concerning man, from whence he has come, how he has developed, what he has accomplished, and what he proposes to do.

There is still a bit of information on this campus, to be sure. I know, because the freshmen bring in some each year and seniors carry but little, if any, away, so there is bound to be an accumulation of information on the campus. You will find this information stored in the minds of professors and fellow students. We have on our faculty more than two score of men and women who have spent years preparing themselves for your advancement. You will find this information waiting in the library, shelves on shelves of books numbering more than forty thousand, products of the best minds that the world has produced. This information is here. I have told you where it is but you will have to dig for it. It will require consistent and conscientious application of the power that you possess and of all the hours of study and research at your command, but it can be had.

4. I trust that you have come expecting to improve your spiritual life. These tragic and disastrous years have revealed the value and necessity of trust in a personality and power greater than man. This personality we know as God who is not a mystic, imaginary, and evasive kind of personality but a living, ever present, dynamic being who cares, loves and is sympathetic with each of us in any and all of our experiences. Do you know where you may find Him? He walks on this campus. He lives in these dormitories. He lingers in the classroom after the class session is over. He abides in human hearts that belong to Him. His ways and His loves are recorded between the lids of the Bible. Turn its pages often. Meditate upon its truths and rejoice in its promises. He is here and you may have Him if you desire. If with all your heart ye seek Him, ye shall surely, truly find Him.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

We have a fine group of people in our Southern Convention. They number more than thirty-two thousand. Among this vast number, there are prosperous business and professional men, farmers and tradesmen of various types. These people love their church and her institutions. They are willing to share what they have that the Kingdom may come through the established agencies of our church. They belong to local Sunday schools and churches. They make their contributions to the causes of the church through these local organizations. These contributions are voluntary notwithstanding the fact that the Convention, acting in its official capacity, requests that certain amounts be given for certain causes. In many instances, these contributions are made late. When they are late, the causes that look to them for support are hindered in their progress. The weeks and the months are slipping away. The end of the year is not as far away as you might think. It would be well if all would take this matter of the support of the college seriously and make their contributions accordingly. We are far behind at this date. Let us pull ourselves together and make our contributions as generous as possible.

It may prove beneficial to you if you will get firmly fixed in your mind the difference between an excuse and a reason. You did not meet with the saints last Lord's day. If you were asked, "Why?" would you give an excuse or a reason? One cannot give a reason for not being a Christian.

Christian Missions

At Home and Abroad

DARKNESS AND DAWN IN CHINA.

By GRACE AND HAROLD MATTHEWS.

June 30 finds us still in Foochow, still feeling that we are needed here and still happy and proud to be among those missionaries and Chinese Christian leaders who elected to stay by and face whatever is to come. The month of May was even more tense than that explosive month usually is in China. The Communist Radio announced that Foochow would be liberated on May 15. Missionaries were free to withdraw before the curtain might fall, but only one American Board family and a few Methodist families decided to evacuate. Their decision was not easy and was sympathetically supported by all: but to those who remained it is clear that staying by has given a big lift to the general morale and courage, which has been ample reward. During the tense days in early May we telegraphed American Board missionaries in Shaowu, 200 miles up country—"Strongly urge all of you come Foochow immediately," and received a reply telegram—"All sticking by our posts," signed by Richard Jackson. Since that exchange of messages there has been silence from Shaowu, and only a few days ago a letter from Boston informed us of a cablegram received there via Arthur Rinden, Shanghai—"Shaowu quietly liberated May 18." It seems reasonable to believe they are safe and well. Since Foochow has not yet been "liberated" (and we see no immediate prospects for a turn-over in government) there will be scant communication with Shaowu. Until we are all under the same government, we can only communicate through Chinese travelers who may be allowed to go inside and outside of the bamboo curtain.

And that reminds me of the Commencement Address we heard last week at Hwa Nan College when 27 young women received Bachelor degrees. The speaker, Dr. James Ting, speaking in Mandarin with a strong Foochow accent (we were delighted that we could understand him) reviewed some of his former writings in which the idea was: "These are darkest times we have ever seen but holding God's hand we struggle forward." His quotations sounded exactly as if written for today and the audience laughed when he told the dates 1927, 1938, 1942, etc. The church has come through all those dark days of the past, victoriously, and now again facing what seems the darkest and most difficult time yet—we must remember, he said, that "when it is dark enough, you can see the stars."

Here in this Foochow area of China the American Board enjoys its closest fellowship with the Methodist Board, where we work together in union institutions such as Union Hospital, Union Kindergarten Training School, Union Theological College, Union High School (industrial and agricultural), and Fukien Christian University. Each one of these institutions is like an oasis in the desert and I feel profoundly grateful to all who have worked together to provide these "green pastures." Union High School has a Christian Spirit so real that it is daily winning the battle against Red propaganda—just as the warm sunshine won out over the cold strong wind in the old fable. Our son, Alden, and family moved to Union High School from Diongloh in May, when local disturbances made it unwise for them to be isolated outside of Foochow, and are now happily at work there training Christian leaders, while Alden, at the same time, assists in Farm Mechanics classes. When Foochow changes government he will be classified as a teacher of farm mechanics (highly approved by the Communists) instead of evangelistic missionary (considered by them to be undesirable).

Fukien Christian University is finishing the academic year with Commencement, and our veteran American Board missionary, Miss Eunice Thomas, is free to retire from her service on the faculty and return to the United States. She will go on the first boat available from here (if and when there will be a boat being a question because the British shipping companies have had much trouble trying to control the hordes of Nationalist soldiers who are determined to escape by boat to Hong Kong). I hope she will take these letters and mail them at the first opportunity to use U. S. postage. This spring, when azaleas were in bloom all over the mountains, we spent several days at the University—on the beautiful campus on hills along the Min River. We were house guests of Eunice Thomas in her attractive mountainside home which she designed, financed and built—to be a wonderful setting for her grand contribution to F.C.U. The large living room is on two-floor levels, lower in the middle with a platform alcove at each end so that her classes in drama and other groups have used one end as stage and the other end as balcony. Large picture windows in the middle section look out at the distant mountains across the picturesque river where junks float lazily along and little sampans bustle to take off passengers or cargo from occasional steam launches that travel to Diongloh or to the ocean port at Pagoda Anchorage. Now Miss Thomas leaves her home to the University to be used in the new era by new workers. This truly seems to be the end of an era for the American Board at the University since our two other quota missionaries, Professor and Mrs. Roderick Scott, just recently forced to go home for health reasons on pre-retirement furlough, after serving the University for thirty-three years as two generously full-time workers—Mrs. Scott in Music and Dr. Scott in Philosophy. Another day in a new time is coming and our missionaries in this past day have builded well.

During the flood days Miss Helen Smith was our only amphibious missionary who managed to go about to various parts of the city. On one of those days she was scheduled to lead our weekly Compound Prayer Meeting but we had no expectation that she would be able to get here from her home at Wen Shan Girls' School. To my wondering, "How did you get here?" she blithely replied, "Oh, I had to change boats down at the intersection—the boat I was on wasn't coming up this street." Because of the rain June has been cool, but now it is getting hot and families with babies will have to escape to Kuliang Mountain, just a few miles away from the city. The rest of us may take turns going to the mountain top for short vacations and standing guard over our homes in the city to keep the Nationalist soldiers or invading armies from taking them over in our absence.

Only a little news comes to us from North China. We piece together all the bits we get from here and there until we think we have a fair idea of the situation which is different in

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

THE SOCIETIES REPORT.

ROSEMONT.

The Rosemont Woman's Missionary Society under the very able leadership of Mrs. J. A. Herrington has been having very interesting and inspiring meetings.

Mrs. Herbert Council, our pastor's wife, invited us to meet at Ocean View in the home of her mother, Mrs. R. A. Culpeper. We held our business meeting in the morning, after which everyone enjoyed the picnic luncheon, the hostesses serving iced drinks and dessert.

Later, those who wanted to, went bathing. There were as many children as members attending, and everybody had a good time.

We have had a variety of meetings—having as speakers Mrs. Frank Laubach, a pastor from the Methodist Church, a good worker from the Baptist Church.

Mrs. J. F. Morgan taught the Mission Study Book China—Twilight or Dawn. Seven of the ladies from our society reviewed the Study Book On Our Own Doorstep.

The ladies have sent boxes to China and to the Fort Berthold Indian Mission.

We hope that we are meeting all the requirements to be a Superior Society but at some of the meetings the attendance has been a little discouraging.

RUTH L. HASSELL, Sec'y.

PALM STREET, GREENSBORO.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Palm Street (Greensboro) wish to report a good year's work under the leadership of Mrs. Pearl Hall, president. Mrs. Hall is counselor and also a member of the Service Guild (our young people's society).

Interesting programs were planned in advance and given each month by different members of the society.

We have met all requirements of a Superior Society and have doubled our apportionment this year. We have gained a few new members and have good attendance at each meeting.

Mrs. Rachel Wallace reviewed the Book of Galatians for us at a public meeting.

We were invited to the First Church, Greensboro, to study our foreign book and Miss Coghill spoke to us at that time. Mrs. Sloan of Elon College gave our home book, at which time the ladies of First Church returned our visit.

The World Day of Prayer was observed by a service at the church, which was well attended. We observed World Community Day and packed several towels for the project.

Our Friendly Service gifts consisted of used clothing and quilt pieces and went to the Indian Mission. We carried 78 gifts to the children at the Elon Orphanage. We presented Timothy Chang with shirt and tie and a cash donation.

Our society sent three delegates to the School of Missions and Convention held at Elon College in June.

Family Life Week was observed by a picnic supper for both the Young People's Society and the older group. The entire church and Sunday school were invited at this time. Rev. Percy Ricketts visited with us and showed the pictures made on his recent trip to the islands off the coast of Cuba.

WINSTON-SALEM.

The following new officers were elected at the September meeting of the Winston-Salem Woman's Association: Mrs. W. L. Padgett, president; Mrs. George Clancy, vice-president; Mrs. C. E. Nelson, secretary; Mrs. James Fulton, assistant secretary; Mrs. E. M. Whitman, treasurer; Vearl Linville, chairman, Friendly Service; Mrs. L. G. Reich and Mrs. W. J. Andes, program committee.

MONTICELLO.

The Monticello Missionary Society lost its first member by death, when on September 22, 1947, God took Tora Rudd.

Wishing to honor her memory, the society, on October 10, 1948, held Memorial Services at our morning worship hour and presented the family with a Memorial Certificate. These services consisted of appropriate music by the pianist and choir, a resume of Tora's life by Mrs. W. F. Burton, Jr., a talk on "The Gift of Memory" by Mrs. W. E. Wisseman; and the presentation of the Memorial Certificate by Mrs. M. C. Faucette. Grace Noel Crowell must have had some one like Tora in mind when she wrote:

I think that God is proud of those who bear
A sorrow bravely—proud indeed of them Who walk straight through the dark to find him there,
And kneel in faith to touch his garment's hem.

Oh, proud of them who lift their heads to shake
Away the tears from eyes that have grown dim,
Who tighten quivering lips and turn to take
The only road they know that leads to Him.

How proud He must be of them—He who knows
All sorrow, and how hard grief is to bear!
I think He sees them coming, and He goes With outstretched arms and hands to meet them there.

And with a look, touch on hand or head,
Each finds his hurt heart strangely comforted.

In our meetings this year, we have used the plans and program material furnished by the Conference. For World Community Day, World Day of Prayer, and May Fellowship programs, members of other churches in the community were invited.

In November, we packed a towel for a junior in the war-torn countries and in the spring a bag of clothes was sent to Elbowoods, Indian Mission in North Dakota.

Our officers for the year 1949-50 are: Mrs. Vergil Smith, president; Mrs. Phillip Faucette, vice-president; Mrs. E. Jenkins, secretary; Mrs. H. R. Faucette, treasurer.

These officers will be installed at our September meeting.

MRS. J. W. FAUCETTE.

The International Record of London recently published the obituaries of 40 temperance leaders in the United Kingdom. Of the 40, eight were over 90 when they died; 16 were in their 80's; the average age worked out at 89.7.

Shakespeare, in As You Like It, has Orlando say:

"Let me be your servant;
Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty;
For in my youth I never did apply Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood, . . .
Therefore my age is as a lusty
winter,
Frosty, but kindly: let me go with you."

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

The mountains again—still not clearly but hung with the fog and midst! As we approached the summit the mist drifted away like shreds of ripping lace curtains. It was lovely. A carload of us went to Winchester for a meeting of the Convention's Women's Board. Mrs. W. B. Williams of Newport News was once more our careful, efficient driver. Her passengers were: Mrs. Garland Spratley, Mrs. Lily Stagg, Mrs. William Harrell and me. On her return Mrs. Williams added another passenger. Mrs. W. V. Leathers.

If you have never tried it you do not know what fun a group of women can have on a trip. Besides us, there was a carload from North Carolina. The women of the Valley had invited the Board many times. They have so far to travel and it was only fair to return the mileage, so to speak. We were given a royal welcome and lots of food. The table in the Winchester Church overflowed with food. We met in the handsome parsonage of the Winchester Church. After being entertained overnight by members of the church we were given breakfast in the home of Mrs. R. H. Nelson. It was beautiful to see and tasty. Our lunch was provided by Mrs. R. A. Whitten, the minister's wife, and it, too, was good to see and eat.

Coming home I said to my traveling companions that I never ceased marveling at the pleasures that come from service to the church. In a church family one may have friends in Winchester and Greensboro, in Antioch Church and Shallow Well. All of us different, all of us working for God's children far away whom we had never seen.

After my return I had a short visit with my family at Newport News and then went to a meeting for young people. And then to Holy Neck for the last night of their revival. The moon was full and the church looked splendid in its silver light. So long have our people worshipped there, so many loved dead have been laid to rest, so many marriages, and many, many fun times: eating, frying fish and picnicking, so many sermons have been preached there, so many have found Christ—it is a shrine. I have never been there without feeling the sacredness of the spot. It is holy ground. I have the same feeling about Liberty Spring and Cypress Chapel, neighboring churches. I can close my eyes and see our early church fathers propound the faith and then discuss business and burn their minutes to be able to be free of spirit at their next meeting. I fear that we have fallen into a rut. We don't burn our minutes (and I'm not recommending it) but we often look at last year's in order to do the same things over this time.

It was a long way from the home of Mrs. Golden Carter with whom I stayed in Winchester to the home of the Davis family with whom I ate Friday night dinner but we are members of the same church with the same troubles and successes.

There are safe and unsafe ways of doing nearly anything. The knowledge or the knack of doing things safely is gained by experience, properly directed.—Ralph Budd.

COPYCATS.

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Are children ever more content than when, arrayed in some of Mother's or Father's castoff garments, they parade—indoors or out—assuming the dignity or graces and airs of their elders? Happy little copycats!

And here is Paul. "Don't go too fast, Daddy," he appeals. "I'm coming along in your tracks." And he tries to hold his head and swing his arms just as his father does, as he carefully steps where Daddy's large footprints show in the snow.

Sarah Maxfield is the mother of a big family. She has long had a habit of using much slang and, too, quite frequently uses words even less desirable. Can you imagine the language of her boys and girls as, in their speech, they exaggerate her example, and do you wonder that mothers hesitate to invite them to play with their children?

Did you ever happen to think that children are often like community newspapers? We may read of many habits of family life by watching the boys and girls at play and listening to their conversations. If teachers are careful and thoughtful readers, they will obtain helpful information regarding the home life of their little pupils. For instance, Tom is kind to little children; when they are hurt, he picks them up and amuses them until they feel better. Tom must always have been treated kindly and must have had practice in being kind, or he would not do such thoughtful acts so naturally. Linda runs to accompany her great-grandmother as she walks out to the automobile. She feels that she is helping, and Grandmother enjoys watching her bright eyes and their happy expressions when she is holding her hand. Jack quickly picks up the pencil his teacher has dropped. Marcia never forgets her "thank you" and "please." Susan, when coughing, always remembers to put her handkerchief over her mouth. Clifford rises when Mother's friends speak to him.

Yes, this does represent careful teaching and practice, but what makes the practice enjoyable? Boys and girls are discriminating. When there is someone they like very much, they are apt to copy that person's ways and acts. Two little girls whom I know love to watch two sisters, Jane and Laura, who live several doors from them. If one observes the little

HOLY NECK PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

The Pilgrim Fellowship of Holy Neck has been under the direction of Miss Virgie Whitfield this year, her assistant being Mrs. Anne P. Umphlett.

The first meeting of the year was a get-together in the form of a Tacky Party. Miss Margaret Harrell has served as president during 1948-49.

On December 31, we held a watch-night party, a social hour of games, contests, etc., followed by holiday refreshments. At eleven o'clock, we began our regular meeting, closing with a worship program. As the midnight hour approached, we all joined hands, formed a circle, and sang "Blest Be the Tie That Binds." Just as the new year came in, we sang "Happy New Year to You" to each other. It was a very inspiring and enjoyable evening.

In March, we had a rare treat in the form of a Travelogue with pictures presented by Miss Elizabeth Hare (now Mrs. Joseph Lasley), who represented the Friends Meeting on a study tour of Europe for 12 weeks last summer. We thoroughly enjoyed this.

In April, Mary Davis presented a program on Family Life.

Our young people presented the playlet, "The Citadel of Faith," at the May Fellowship program. Flowers were secured and pinned on all who attended church on Mother's Day.

Dr. Luther B. Grice gave us a very interesting review of our home mission book, Forty-Eight Plus, and the review of our foreign book, Rising from the Dust, was given by Mr. Edward Felton, a member of the Baptist Church.

Vesper services were held each Sunday night during the month of August on the Holland High School lawn, sponsored by the Holland Woman's Club with Mrs. Thomas B. Jones, Youth Conservation Chairman, serving as adult adviser. A number of our young people took part in these community services.

Our group with the aid of church members served as host to Mattie O'Neal, a child from the Elon Orphanage, for two weeks during the month of August. We planned entertainment for her and paid her way back to the orphanage. We mention this hoping other groups will consider this as a Friendly Service project for another year.

Our apportionment is paid in full, and we consider this a very successful year, leargely because of the efforts of our splendid leadership.

I CONSECRATE MYSELF.

(A VESPER SERVICE.)

PRELUDE

CALL TO WORSHIP—

*Master, I hear thy call,
Somewhere I know thou canst use
me;
So I must surrender my all.
Yielded am I to thee,
Take me and mold me and make me
As thou wouldst have me be.*

SPECIAL: "Dear Lord, We Give Our Youth to Thee."

SELECTED SCRIPTURE: For Moses had said, consecrate yourselves today to the Lord, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother; that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day; the gold for things of gold, and silver for things of silver; and for all manner of work to be made. And who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?

My son, give me thine heart, and let thine eyes observe my ways.

If anyone wants to go with me, he must disregard himself. For whoever wants to preserve his life will lose it, and whoever loses his life for me will preserve it. What good does it do a man to gain the whole world and lose himself.

If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.

PRAYER: Almighty Father, enter thou our hearts, and so till us with thy love, that, forsaking all evil desire, we may embrace thee, our only good. Show unto us, for thy mercies' sake what thou art unto us. Say unto our souls, I am thy salvation. So speak that we may hear. Our hearts are before thee; open thou our ears; let us hasten after thy voice, and take hold on thee. Hide not thy face from us, we beseech thee, O Lord. Enlarge thou the narrowness of our souls, that thou mayest enter in. Repair the ruinous mansions, that thou mayest dwell there. Hear us, O Heavenly Father, for the sake of thine only son, Jesus Christ, our Lord, who liveth and reigneth with thee and the Holy Spirit, now and for ever. Amen.

STORY: "The Hill Road"—

God had a song he wanted to sing and when he finished it he created a man to sing it. You see, it was a mighty song and needed a Godlike singer. And the man was Jesus, a carpenter of Nazareth. He went up to Jerusalem, and as he walked up and down its narrow, crowded streets, God's song swept across the hearts of people.

Some ran to meet it, it was so full of strength and beauty. But others ran from it, trembling with fear. And these were those who dreaded lest it rend the hate and uproot the falsehood in which their lives were so comfortably grounded.

When the rulers of Israel—priests, scribes, and Pharisees—heard it, they shuttered the windows of their souls and barred the gates of their minds against it; that is, all of them except Nicodemus and one or two others who, when they heard it, stopped to listen.

Nicodemus was no longer a young man, and at first listened with gentlemanly indifference of one who is tired of life. But a day came when the clean swift words cut through the mist of indifference, and with a lightning flash revealed Nicodemus to himself. . . .

That night he took the hill road to the Mount of Olives. He had heard that Jesus was in the habit of spending his nights there. In his eagerness he hurried. But it was not long before his footsteps faltered, heavy with weariness. He swayed with fatigue, caught hold of a rock, and sat down to rest. His hands trembled as he wiped the sweat from his face. But his soul's need was more urgent than that of his body, and soon his determined tread fell softly upon the silence and Nicodemus was on his way.

The road became a friendly path, ending abruptly among a clump of olive trees, as though it knew that Nicodemus could not possibly take another step.

As he stood looking down upon Jerusalem, he felt the presence of long-forgotten memories, and the

WHAT MANNER OF CHILD SHALL THIS BE? I

A Sermon

By SAMUEL L. JOHNSON, F. Ph. S., Park Manor Congregational Church,
Chicago, Illinois.

There are two texts that I would like to call to your attention and ask you to bear in mind: "Bring up a child in the way he shall go and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Secondly: "I tell you that whoever looks at a woman and cherishes lustful thoughts, he has already in his heart, committed adultery." The first is to be found in the twenty-second chapter of the Book of Proverbs and the other in the New Testament, the twenty-eighth verse of the fifth chapter of the gospel according to St. Matthew.

Perhaps, at first, you will not see too much of a correlation between these two texts, but just a moment and I think you will.

We Americans are nearly all of the "Missouri" type. We believe, we accept that which we can see, hear, feel, smell; or, in others words, everything has to be proven to us. By and large, that's all right. Well, here in these two texts we find facts which have been tested, scrutinized, studied, examined, worked over, thought about, considered, from every possible angle and have been proven correct and right. A child grown into manhood by you becomes what he is in his heart. He becomes the result of his hopes, his aspirations, his ideals, his frustrations, his fears, his jealousies, many of which are your responsibility. The child who becomes a man is the sum total of all of these things.

In a recent issue of the American Journal of Orthopsychiatry (Vol. 15, 1947), Roy Graham Hoskins is quoted as saying: "The price we pay for rugged individualism is individual neurosis." The author goes on to write, "Observation supports this view. Parents who are rugged individualists (and what American is not?) are often dictators within their homes, while demanding that their children practice true democratic behavior. This double standard, one for the children, and another for the adults, creates confusion for the weak-growing ego as to the nature of reality. For instance, it is demanded of each child that he cooperate, be honest, be kind to his syblings while the adult, the rugged individualist, competes aggressively with others in business, tries to avoid paying taxes, often measures kindness to others solidly in terms of direct personal gain. Childhood experiences in such a family do not prepare the child for adult life in a democratic community."

In other words, the author indicates that we all too often say to our children, perhaps in not so many words, but nevertheless we convey the idea realistically enough: "Now look here, I want you to behave as I tell you and not as I myself behave," or "I want you to practice what I preach."

It doesn't do one little bit of good to tell a child that he must do this or that, if we in turn do exactly the opposite. One can't tell children to stay off the streets at night if we ourselves chase around. One can't tell children not to read this or that noxious magazine or book and we read it. One can't tell a child to attend to his school work if we ourselves go out to parties, or any number of a host of things and let our own work slip. There's no value whatsoever in scolding a child about being nasty to his friends when we, his parents, chew over a nasty bit of gossip along with our potatoes and roast beef at supper. You won't get very far in telling a child to be honest, and then yourself brag about some deal you put over on some fellow in business. And don't tell your child and expect him to pay any attention to you, that it will do him good to attend Sunday school on Sunday morning when you yourself do not attend either church school or church.

Mrs. Roy Jameson came to me one day not long ago and said that she didn't know what she was going to do with her eight-year-old son. "He is absolutely vicious," she said, "constantly picking on little children in the neighborhood, bullying this one and fighting with that." To quote her, she said, "The Lord knows why a son of mine should act this way."

True, the Lord does know perfectly well why that youngster acts the way he does, and so I believe, do some of your neighbors. Frankly, Mrs. Jameson is a completely a-social individual and there has not been a day in her child's life but what he has heard his mother laugh at Mrs. Roach's new hat; question why Mrs. Loring doesn't buy a dress at Marshall Field's instead of always making her own; call up the Ewing home and ask pleasantly, "And how is Mr. Ewing today?" and then turn from the phone and mutter, "It's a shame he doesn't die. They'd be better off if he did."

It's not what Mrs. Jameson has told her child that has made him the way he is. Furthermore no amount of spanking or scolding will have the least effect upon that boy's behaviour. He has been conditioned for quite some time now by a vicious, back-biting heart, the heart of his mother.

Mr. Jones is in a way proud of his daughter. She is a beautiful appearing girl, about eighteen now, most attractive physically, but she has one fault, and I quote him, "No amount of talking has been able to correct her. She steals money from any one, members of her family, and buys herself elaborate clothing. Accused of her theft, she readily admits it. Oh," cries Mr. Jones, "what have I done to deserve a child who is a kleptomaniac."

If Jean is a kleptomaniac it is her father who has made her one. He is a broker and has learned how cleverly to manipulate stocks and bonds which come through his hands, in order to get possession of them, or at least, partial possession (all within the law, you understand). "Smart business," he calls it and delights in relating his triumphs to the rest of his family. "I've learned in the university of hard knocks," he says, "to be a shrewd businessman and if I do say so myself, I'm not doing too badly."

Why shouldn't his daughter Jean lay her hands on everything? She's been taught ever since she was a little child that that's the way to get by in life. And all of her daddy's pietistical words about honesty and integrity are like so much chaff in the wind. "Why," says Jean to herself, "hasn't daddy been able to buy this home, drive a Packard car and have all these things by stealing? Certainly he has." And Jean has no qualms of conscience whatsoever about taking what she likes.

So it's not what we say that has very much effect, rather it is what we do.

Attitudes and actions on the part of parents are of decisive importance in establishing a child's pattern of life. The way in which parents react to particular emotional experiences will condition the actions of the child throughout life. For example, in the case of John, who was four years old and lost a leg in an automobile accident. His parents accepted the tragedy realistically, recognizing it as a great misfortune but one to be overcome in every way possible. They obtained professional advice and treatment, both medical and psychiatric and the boy's success as it has been evidenced through adolescence and college in overcoming this handicap stands in marked contrast to the prolonged crippling results of a similar fracture of a leg in the case of Tom, who had his accident at the age of five. His family was offered the same opportunities for adjustment as John's but the emotional maladjustment of the mother prevented her co-operation. The mother was lame emotionally and Tom, although a boy with more native ability than John, has completely, utterly failed to make any adjustment whatever. It is what we are and what we do, how we act and think which conditions the development of a child, not our words.

I said a few moments ago we are of the "Missouri" type as individuals—all right—clinical investigations have proved conclusively that a mother's conscious and unconscious attitude is conveyed to an infant directly in everything she does for him. Studies have shown the importance of a mother's attitude in handling the child not only during dressing, but in undressing, holding, tucking him in and so on. And the evidence that mounts in favor of a mother's nursing her offspring is very impressive.

Have you ever noticed how when some individuals take a little baby into their arms, the baby invariably squalls and you wonder why. Another person smiles and whispers to the child, seems so gentle and so careful, but the child yells as if it were being beaten. What's the reason? The answer why is very simple: The child knows exactly that person's attitude toward it. The child can feel instinctively through the externals and knows what is underneath.

The realization of these facts places upon us a much greater responsibility than we are generally aware of. It should make us a good deal more careful and considerate about the things we do.

A young woman was admitted to one of our large Chicago hospitals and there cared for for a long time. Working with her and studying her, the doctors became well aware of her character. Some of them were very much depressed by it. One day while making rounds with his resident and interns, a famed physician visited this young woman and said to her, "You are the most depraved person I have ever known." (Perhaps this is true. Personally I don't believe the physician had a right to say what he did, but I am merely relating the story as it happened.) Then one of the young interns spoke up and said to his chief, "Doctor, I don't believe she is to blame for what she is, rather the blame lies squarely upon the shoulders of her parents. Her mother, for example, always said that she should have freedom to make her own choices, but the girl never was given any basis for judgment. Her father always said she had to learn to stand on her two feet, but he never gave her solid ground upon which to stand. They exercised what they called discipline, but their discipline was a discipline of words."

Furthermore, from the very beginning this daughter had been considered an incumbent. She had stood in the way particularly of the mother's having what she considered a good time. The unfortunate thing is that the girl had to suffer. She does not like herself the way she is, but what is she going to do about it. She has been conditioned and developed according to a pattern established for her by her parents and that pattern was continued by the immediate associates of her mother and father.

A child does not grow up in a vacuum but within a family and later in an ever-widening world of adults. It is the attitude of those who make up the early family which determine the character and the life of the child. Do you wonder then that those who have studied these things are so very anxious for mothers and fathers to be associated with the church of Jesus Christ, to be a part of that only stabilizing force that we know in the community, to be honestly, effectively and actively a part of the church, for here again, lip service is often worse than no service at all.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

girls closely, they can be seen acting and even speaking in the way that Jane and Laura do. In another family the big sister puts a kerchief on her younger sister's head, and the little one twists and turns before the mirror as she has seen the older girl do.

This "copycatting" is just as natural as breathing. As long as it does not eventually develop into "keeping-up-with-the-Joneses," and as long as the model is a good one, there is no danger from it. It is full of possibilities to the alert parent. Take, for example, the book friends of our children. Book friends are much loved—often we do not realize how close they are to our boys and girls. Some children live with their heroes and heroines day after day.

So mothers, we should be careful to whom we introduce them. Peter Rabbit, Black Beauty, all the little Rugbises in the care of Big Sister, Tiny Tim and the rest of Bob Cratchit's interesting family, Meg, Jo, Beth, and Amy—each one of these characters and their associations have a very special meaning for every boy and girl. They are friends, and they will be friends of long standing, leaving their influence and increasing it as memories bring them back. As we have said before, children copy many of the characteristics of those who appeal to them.

I heard a mother say, "I do wish people wouldn't give my boy books for Christmas presents. I like to help him select his reading myself. Some of the books he has given to him have no characters worth knowing." How well she understands the influences radiated by those about whom a child reads.

"If you are going to copy other people's traits, do choose their good qualities," many a mother exclaims in exasperation. And one says definitely, "Why copy Uncle John's less pleasing habits? Observe his nice ones and copy those."

different places at different times. I'm looking forward to that "best seller" which Mary Dewar surely will write about her life behind the bamboo curtain. According to our information there is nothing which will prevent Americans in North China from leaving now in case they are willing to take a chance on not being able to return.

Svenska Morgonbladet, well-known free-church Christian newspaper of Stockholm, Sweden, will celebrate its sixtieth birthday next summer. In honor of that occasion the paper will send forty of its readers and several editors on a trip to the United States, where, especially in New York, Washington and Philadelphia, they will visit places and scenes of importance, including churches, religious institutions, colleges and church hospitals.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS OF THE ORPHANAGE:

The Home Coming Day was the big success we anticipated. More than three hundred luncheons were served. Pretty speeches were made in the chapel in the business session. Everybody said nice things about everybody. We sang songs, too. One gentleman reared here arose and called for "Count Your Many Blessings, Name Them One By One," and how they sang it! One of them came with me to my office after the luncheon was served, and as we talked he counted me out four nice, crisp bills—and I was thinking, well, there are at least forty dollars. They were four hundred dollars. The Suffolk folks know well enough that a tear of gratitude popped into both my eyes, and the gentleman reached back into his pocket and handed me a loose five, saying this on the next one hundred, please. That doesn't happen every day, but a goodly number of the "boys" and "young ladies" told me that they would follow their custom of making a special contribution at Thanksgiving. All of us were saying we shall look forward to Home Coming a year from now. And many of them were saying that this was the best yet. At any rate Mrs. Truitt, and Ann and John, were everywhere with me throughout the day helping to make each one glad they could come back home to see us.

Banks Watkins is returning today from the hospital. His grandmother and uncles who live in Burlington are going to keep him in their home for a few weeks until he is able to wait on himself to help us out that much. We appreciate this very much. And one of the uncles handed me twenty-five dollars on his hospital bill. By the way, Dr. Harold Kernodle is giving his services, and for that we are thankful. I see why people think he is such a fine physician—his good work, his personality, and his great spirit.

Billy, Al, Gene, and Barbara came to us last week to make this their home. I wish you could see what fine children they are! They are seven, nine, eleven and nearly thirteen. And they are well bred, bright as a shiny new silver dollar, and needed a home. Their father gave his life in World War II, and their mother wants to train to become a registered nurse—and you, and you, and you are on the job to help all their best dreams come true! God bless you for helping to help them and the seventy others here in your children's home.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

THE ALCOHOL PROBLEM.

may become an alcoholic."

In the words of Dr. Robert Fleming of the Harvard Medical School: "It takes some people longer than others to attain addiction but no human being can be regarded as immune.

The majority of alcoholics are average people, no more neurotic than the rest of us." Their alcoholism is the result of drinking alcohol because of the "compulsions of their environment." As Dr. Fleming says: "What-

And again: "Any normal person ever the initial cause of drinking, be it social or physical or psychological, and whatever the nature of the person be it normal or neurotic, true addiction will ultimately develop if heavy drinking is continued long enough."

Dr. Horatio M. Pollock of the New York State Department of Mental Hygiene says: "The great majority of persons who develop alcoholic mental disease are average citizens who showed no marked abnormality prior to the formation of the alcohol habit."

The tap-root of alcoholism is not neuroticism but the drinking custom. It is not to the discredit of any person if he is neurotic—neuroticism is common among men and women of high intelligence. The stresses of our complex, modern civilization uncover latent neuroticism. If no degree of neuroticism is latent in the individual psychology, the possibility is that the subject is a stupid clod, whose intelligence is dim and whose basic ganglia is reptilian. Alcoholism, in the majority of cases, has many basic social roots. The best way to "cure" it is to prevent it. The way to prevent is to stop the use of alcohol as a beverage. If it cannot be prevented, it can be reduced in extent by reducing the consumption of alcohol and probably in no other way. "Teaching moderation" won't do it, and we know this because it never has done it—teaching abstinence will help.

Another argument, far-reaching for mischief, is the contention that "gentlemen," those whose consumption is controlled, never become addicted to alcohol. The "upper" four per cent of the population supplies us with 20 per cent of our psychotic alcoholics.

The higher in the social and economic scale the individual is, the more likely he is to suffer addiction and alcoholism if he drinks.

The most terribly damaging effect of alcohol upon this country and upon every European country, is the impairment of leadership.

The people of America should face the truth, the truth undiluted by the vicious efforts of those having an economic interest in promoting the use of alcohol as a beverage. No total abstainer ever became an alcoholic.

"Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free."—The Clipsheet, Methodist Board of Temperance.

We shall have "better business" when everyone realizes that while it pays to invest money in their industries and develop natural resources, it pays still higher dividends to improve mankind and develop human resources.—H. E. Steiner.

In Memoriam

TUCK.

Mrs. Charlie W. Tuck passed away at her home near Nathalie, Virginia, on May 25, 1949. She was born October 7, 1875, the daughter of John A. and Sarah Tuck Bray, and was married to Charlie W. Tuck December 29, 1897. Funeral services were conducted at Liberty Christian Church, Nathalie, Virginia, by the pastor, Rev. M. W. Andes, and Dr. C. E. Newman.

She is survived by her husband; one daughter, Mrs. G. W. Love, of Nathalie, Virginia; a foster daughter, Mrs. Clarice Alread, of Miami, Florida; three sisters, Mrs. Nannie Dixon, Mrs. Henry Tuck, both of Nathalie, Virginia, and Mrs. Pattie Stovall, Virgilina, Virginia; two brothers, John H. and Bernette E. Bray of Nathalie, Virginia.

Mrs. Tuck united with Union Congregational Christian Church, Virgilina, in her early teens and carried her Church membership to Liberty when this Church was organized.

May the Father God bestow His blessings of peace and comfort upon the family and friends.

GAMMON.

Mr. K. S. Gammon of Great Bridge passed to his heavenly home on July 28, 1949, after an extended period of illness. His funeral was conducted at Berea Christian Church July 30, 1949, by his pastor Rev. Ellis N. Clark.

He is survived by three daughters, and one sister. Mr. Gammon was a member of Berea for sixty-five years. He was thirteen years of age when he joined Berea by experience in the year of 1884.

Mr. Gammon was elected to serve on the board of deacons October 19, 1912 and he was elected treasurer of the church January 2, 1915. He was to serve both of these emiratus. He also served as teacher of the men's bible class for a long number of years. Our church sustained a great loss, when he had to retire from our fellowship due to his illness. He was sincere in his devotion for his church, home and community.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to his Master's will.

2. That we hold in lasting remembrance his love, loyalty, and his service to his Master, and his patience and quiet endurance of his long illness.

3. That we extend our love and sympathy to his loved ones and pray God's blessings may comfort them.

Mrs. W. S. SOREY

HARCUM.

Whereas, God in His Divine Providence has seen fit to remove from our midst, Mrs. Mary Ella Morgan Hareum, on July 17, 1949, the Woman's Missionary Society of the Liberty Spring Christian Church has sustained the loss of a most devoted member.

We, as a Society and as individuals desire to record our sorrow in her passing and our appreciation for her long and useful life among us.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That in her death we have lost a faithful member and the family, a devoted mother.

2. That we bow in humble submission to God's will who doeth all things well.

3. That we express our heartfelt sympathy to her bereaved family.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this Society, that a copy be sent to her family, and that a copy be sent to "The Christian Sun" for publication.

I CONSECRATE MYSELF.

tall, broad-shouldered dreams of his boyhood seemed to rise from the city of pinnacles and towers lying there so quiet and clean in the white radiance of the Eastern night. Unconsciously he lifted his face toward heaven and stretched out his hands, palms upward, in prayer. In the light of the moon and stars his thin tired face was like an exquisite cameo of old ivory, carved against the onyx shadows of the olive trees.

Jesus saw him there. The beauty and pathos of the old man tugged at his heart and quietly, lest he break in upon the prayer, Jesus came and stood beside him.

Nicodemus looked up. "You are here. I am so glad."

"Yes, during the time I am in Jerusalem I almost always spend my nights up here. Wide, unwallied places are good to refresh oneself in after being jostled the whole day long in the crowded streets. But you are tired."

"You are a teacher come from God. . . ."

"Are you sure, Nicodemus?" asked the Master.

"Yes, and only you can tell me, and my need is too great to be denied—how I, an old man, may find life, eternal life?"

Jesus said, "By knowing the God within you, by catching a vision of his kingdom."

"But it is so long since I have felt God within me—and the eyes of my soul have grown too dim to see so divine a thing as his kingdom. Surely you know I cannot do these things. And if I could—how?"

"There is only one way; you must be born anew."

"How can old man be born again?"

"You said your soul seemed like a barren, hemmed-in plain. Break down its barriers, widen its horizons, and let God's light flood it. Lift up the Son of Man within you and this new life will be eternal.

That's what it means to be born again. Nicodemus, not once, but every day, every hour. Reconsecrate yourself."

As Jesus spoke, night gave way to dawn. "I come to you in the night," said Nicodemus, "now in the dawn I go back—re-born."

Nicodemus turned thoughtfully homeward to march forward in an ever-broadening spiritual experience.

POEM:

With all my heart I'll strive to serve; walking the Christ-like way.

O make me pure and give me strength and courage every day.

I'll dare to do what's right and true willing to pay the price

That I might follow Jesus Christ through love and sacrifice.

HYMN: "Jesus As I Am Thine Own To Be."

BENEDICTION: By a pastor.

* * * *

This is the last in the series of Vesper Services that were used in Junior-Hi Camp this summer. This service, being the climax, is a consecration service. The other services were sub-ordinately leading up to this dedication service.

Throughout these services, though their themes may have been misleading, the aim was preparing for consecration. The first service was one to merely make us aware of God in nature; the second, for self-examination; the third, a call to service; the fourth, a preparation of the soul; the fifth, how we can serve; and the sixth, consecration.

LOIS LONG.

Let every man come to God in his own way. God made you on purpose, and me on purpose, and He does not say to you, "Repent, and feel as Deacon A. feels," or, "Repent, and feel as your minister feels," but, "Come just as you are, with your mind and heart and education and circumstances." You are too apt to feel that your religious experience must be the same as others have; but where will you find analogies for this? Certainly not in nature. God's works do not come from His hand like coins from the mint. It seems as if it were a necessity that each one should be in some sort distinct from every other. No two leaves on the same tree are precisely alike; no two buds on the same bush have the same unfolding, nor do they seek to have.

—Henry Ward Beecher.

"GET THE BUSINESS"

By BISHOP WILBUR E. HAMMAKER, Executive Vice-President
Board of Temperance of the Methodist Church

That slogan fits the latest whiskey advertising exploration like a glove fits a hand. No matter what the cost, "Get the business."

Forget the proprieties and the promises. Put them away as outworn.

"Get the business," no matter what usages of decency may be brushed aside.

Schenley's is setting the pace. They are, according to the New York Times and Advertising Age, negotiating with the broadcasting companies. Thirteen years ago, the Distilled Spirits Institute adopted a resolution declaring radio advertising to be "out of bounds" for the makers of distilled liquors. Schenley, although not a member of the Institute, has followed this policy.

But now comes Schenley, doing a "right about face." Reason: the need of more business. A man's home is to be no longer his castle. He is to be cornered at his own fireside by the importunate pleaders for the use of more liquor. His children, too, must hear the high-pressure presentation of the values and virtues of Schenley's liquor.

It is an arrogant procedure. Senator Edwin C. Johnson of Colorado, Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the Senate, recently wrote a vigorous letter to Honorable John W. Snyder, Secretary of the Department of the Treasury, concerning this new threat. As head of the Treasury Department, Mr. Snyder has general supervision of the Alcohol Tax Unit. The Senator asked for the exercise of authority by the Tax Unit to prevent this outrage, which he characterizes in a different part of this communication as "blind" and "selfish" and "vicious."

It is all three of these—also "stupid." "Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad," is an ancient saying. It is still true. Liquordom can go too far. Becoming mad (that is, insane) in its greed for gain, it can go beyond the long-suffering patience of the people. Far-seeing thinkers in the liquor group see this and sound forth intermittent warnings to their fellows. Their refrain is: "Do not tempt the American people to take drastic steps because of our excesses."

To advertise whiskey on the radio and by television involves jeopardy. Good advice is, "Better think twice before such a dangerous step is taken." It will be the clear and complete repudiation of pledges and promises made by liquordom across the years, beginning with the days of "Repeal" agitation back in the late 20's and early 30's. Greed can over-reach itself.

A similar indirect caution to the broadcasting companies was voiced in a letter written by Senator Johnson to Honorable Paul Walker, Acting Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission. In this communication, the Senator suggests that the Commission consider the total implications of the proposed whiskey radio advertisements and issue a warning. It would be as unseemly for the broadcasters to take the money as it would be for the distillers to give it. Common decency should restrain both crowds. If they are without self-imposed restraints, then it may be necessary for the people, through government, to take a hand. Distillers and broadcasters had better "stop, look, listen."

Psychologist Cites the Importance of Religious Education Week

By HENRY C. LINK, Ph. D.

Author of The Return to Religion, The Rediscovery of Man,
The Rediscovery of Morals

If Religious Education Week (September 25-October 2) helps to highlight the importance of religious education, especially in these times, it will have served a great purpose.

In recent years, psychology and sociology have found some remarkable proofs of the beneficial effects of religious education. My own nation-wide studies of personality, in connection with the development of the "P. Q.", or Personality Quotient Test, show that adolescents who attended Sunday school or whose parents were members of a church tended to have better personalities than those who did not.

About seventy independent psychological studies have found that there was no relation between scholastic intelligence and personality. These findings add tremendous significance to the studies which prove that religious education does tend to improve personality and social harmony. To mention only one further evidence, it is now well recognized that marriages made under the auspices of a church have a far higher likelihood of success than marriages by civil ceremonies.

In a nation-wide survey conducted by The Psychological Corporation, 55 per cent of adults believed that education by churches and Sunday schools could do most to create race and class harmony, as against 54 per cent who mentioned the public schools. Even though some named both agencies, the large number who believed in the efficiency of religious education, which occurs only one or two days a week, represent a gratifying result. News Flashes

Observe Religious Education Week
September 25-October 2.

Rev. John Gwyn has resigned his pastorate at First Church, Norfolk.

Rev. W. J. Andes is assisting Dr.
W. W. Sloan in revival services at Shallow Well this week.

Rev. F. C. Lester received two families and christened their babies last Sunday at Asheboro.

Rev. O. D. Poythress conducted the annual revival services at Mt. Carmel in Eastern Virginia the first week in September.

Wm. T. Scott, Jr., was guest speaker at the Congregational Christian Church in Franklin, Virginia, Sunday morning, September 11. On Monday he left for New Haven, Connecticut, where he will enter Yale Divinity School.

Rev. Ira Black, a staff member of the Board of Home Missions, preached at Rosemont Church last Sunday.
Mr. Black is conducting a survey and program of visitation evangelism in three Norfolk churches: Bay View, Rosemont and South Norfolk.

Superintendent Scott was guest speaker at the Shelton Memorial Church in Portsmouth, Virginia, on September 11. Following the service an important business meeting of the church was held and plans made for procuring a successor to their late pastor, Dr. Frank H. Lewis.

Roger Fogleman, a student at Elon
College and resident of Alamance County, was killed early Monday morning when a blowout caused his car to overturn. Funeral services were conducted in the Burlington
E. and R. Church with Dr. Harvey A.
Fesperman, pastor, officiating.

Mr. Roy A. Larrick of Winchester, a former president of the Virginia Valley Conference, is attending the 44th Triennial Conclave of the Grand Encampment of the Knights Templar of the U. S. A. Mr. Larrack goes as Grand Commandery representative of the Knights Templar of Virginia.
Mrs. Larrick is sharing the trip with her husband.

Mr. Percy H. Ricketts, who has served as assistant pastor at the Third Avenue Church, Danville, Virginia, for the past 23 years, has resigned his office at the church, but will continue in the work of the Sunday school and as a layman in the church. Mr. Ricketts has distinguished himself in his zeal and earnestness in his good work in the Danville Church. We congratulate him on his long and faithful efforts there and we are glad that he will continue to work in the church there. Mr. Ricketts is a member of the Board of Superannuation in the Southern Convention.

REV. H. RUSSELL CLEM.

RETIRED MINISTER PASSES.

Rev. H. Russell Clem, Burlington, North Carolina, passed away at his home following several years of declining health and two days of critical illness on Saturday, July 30, 1949.
Mr. Clem was born at Powell's Fort,
Virginia, the son of the late Ashford and Caroline Clem. He was a graduate of Defiance College in Ohio and was a public school teacher in Ohio for several years before entering the ministry of the Christian Church.

Mr. Clem was ordained into the ministry of the Christian Church at Alliance, Ohio, in August of 1904.
He served the following pastorates:
High Street Church, Springfield,
Ohio; First Christian Church, Greensboro, North Carolina; First Christian Church, Fall River, Massachusetts; and Christian Church, West Mansfield, Massachusetts. He was secretary of the Mount Vernon (Ohio) Conference for 25 years, president of the Ohio Conference for six years, and secretary of the Christian Publishing Association for eight years.

In 1904 Mr. Clem was married to Miss Mary Stanford of Craton, Ohio, who died in 1918. Children born to this union were four sons, Kenneth Stanford, Wendell Phillips, H. Russell, Jr., and William Ashford.

On September 14, 1921, he was married to Miss Bessie I. Holt of Burlington, who survives, along with one sister, Mrs. B. F. Harmon of New Carlyle, Ohio, and one brother, J. R.
Clem of Bucyrus, Ohio, one half-brother, Mahlyon Clem of Edinburg, Virginia.

Mr. Clem retired from the active ministry several years ago and came to make his home in Burlington,
North Carolina, where he has been a faithful and helpful member of our church. Funeral services were conducted from the Burlington Church on Monday, August 1, 1949, by the writer assisted by Dr. G. O. Lankford.

Mr. Clem served our church and the Kingdom of God with distinction.
He was a true liberal and was always ready to encourage our younger ministers in their work and to urge them to a high conception of their calling and of the Gospel.

W. MILLARD STEVENS.

TO THE LAYMEN CHAIRMEN IN THE CHURCHES OF THE SOUTH- ERN CONVENTION.

DEAR FELLOW LAYMEN:

The Layman's Fellowship of The Southern Convention has gotten off to a good start. Last year we had several interesting meetings in local churches, in conferences, and in areas.
There was a fine participation on Layman's Sunday. We want to strengthen our work and to make a real place for the layman in the life of our churches.

Sunday, October 16, 1949, is to be observed as Layman's Sunday in The Convention. We would like to have a layman speak in as many churches of The Convention as possible. We hope that your church will have a special laymen's program on that Sunday. Where it is possible, we would like each church to provide its own layman speaker, but we will try to supply speakers for churches requesting us to send one. I am enclosing a copy of a letter I am sending to your pastor. Will you please talk this matter over with him and try to arrange a special program on October 16?

Some of our churches have several laymen who are willing and able to make talks at the church service. Other churches do not have laymen who will take such a part. Perhaps you have in your church some men whom

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE LIMITS OF CHURCHMANSHIP

Religious Education Week is a good time to take an inventory of our churchmanship and perchance to enroll anew in the School of Christ.

The Kingdom is penalized constantly by limited churchmanship. On the one hand we find leaders who are active in their local churches but never venture forth into conference, convention, interdenominational and ecumenical work. They grow in usefulness to a given stage, then cease developing. On the other hand, we find leaders who are very active in denominational and interdenominational work who break down when measured by their effectiveness in the local church. They enjoy basking in the spotlight of great conferences, but lack the humility and patience required to put their self-enunciated principles into effect.

In the Sunday school classroom, in the official roster of the church, in the choir, yes, and the pulpit, we find leaders with minor but marked limitations. So many of these leaders fall short of attainable goals. A bit of study here and a bit of coaching there; better English here and more consecration there—in far too many cases these deficiencies or needs rob churchmanship of its excellence.

The Kingdom will never come in all its fulness as long as it is at the mercy of the mediocre leadership. Churchmanship for convenience, churchmanship for personal gratification and exaltation, churchmanship with remediable handicaps, churchmanship with a superiority complex, churchmanship which avoids Calvary can never save the world.

What a pity to see churchmanship bog down when it should take wings! Some criticism, too much flattery, a taste of success, mild sickness or misfortune are sufficient in many cases to halt the progress of churchmanship if not actually throw it into reverse.

What are limitations of your Churchmanship, dear reader? Are you disappointing your best friends and falling short of God's glory? To whom much is given, much shall be required. The Divine Potter is still shaping the lives of those who are yielded to his sway. St. Paul knew the secret of churchmanship. Said he: "I count not myself to have attained; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind; and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

IS DENOMINATIONALISM OBSOLETE?

Some people are willing to scrap denominationalism altogether. They have no denominational loyalty whatsoever. They feel called upon to apologize whenever a denominational label is used. This enables them to go very conveniently from one fellowship to another as may be most desirable or advantageous to them. These people do not stop to think that they are debtors to denominations, that they reap where others have sown, that if everyone followed their example the foundation of our ecumenical superstructure would collapse.

Others bury their heads in exclusive denominational obscurantism. They refuse to recognize the manifest fruits of church union. No issue or proposal is judged upon its merit, but simply on the strength of its denominational alignment. These frustrated Christians live in retrospect and cling tenaciously to a past which will never return.

Some of those who mourn the so-called passing of the Christian denomination lay all the blame on church union. They see only external forces encroaching upon their domain. They jealously guard their scattered precincts of power. They were unaware of the tragic enemies of strength and progress within the denomination. Scattered churches precluded efficiency and anything approaching unanimity in membership transfer. Inadequate ministerial salaries, lack of superannuation, watered down the denominational leadership to a point of obvious mediocrity. Dozens and scores of our members would go (and still do!) from one vicinity to another and never bother to look up the church of their denomination. Others would attend the church occasionally but never transfer their membership—never! In their anonymous or intermediate states they enjoy immunity from all. These denominational barnacles or parasites impede our progress and sap our strength. Visionless leaders, dull doorkeepers, powerless pillars, absentee lords, self-appointed rulers and unyielding bosses have forever barred the door of progress in many of our churches. There is no need to look elsewhere to assess the blame.

Denominationalism is not obsolete. This is a time for healthy denominationalism. We must recognize the service, but not the sovereignty of denominations. We are to seek first the Kingdom, not the denomination; but the Kingdom is now constituted very substantially by denominations. Now we see through denominational glasses darkly, but we shall see perfectly only in the rarified atmosphere of eternity. Denominationalism is the indispensable seed bed of the Kingdom of God.

Our beginning and our end are out of our hands, but they excite our curiosity, and particularly we should like to know of what this life is the sequence, and where the end of it is really a new beginning. But, meanwhile, regarding ourselves, as we may, as a phase of something beyond our comprehension, we at least should realize that each one of us is a fresh experiment in intellectual and moral behavior and development, and we should so act as to show that we accept the responsibility and are ready to do our utmost to make the experiment succeed.—Hollis Webster.

What We Have Learned About Alcohol

Excerpts from an Address by DR. HAVEN EMERSON, Professor of Public Health Administration, Columbia University

The medical sciences have learned enough concerning the effects of alcohol to teach the truth simply and without equivocation and complication. The same things are being taught now that were taught a while back, but they were often repudiated, contradicted, and mistrusted because of lack of agreement among scientists as to the truth. We have come so far that we can now teach the truth simply.

The assured truth is not difficult to teach.

We have learned that misinformation developed by advertising, and ignorance resulting from off-balance common school education, are largely responsible for the social habits of many who become drinkers of alcohol. I count that nation derelict in its duty in education if it teaches a child about milk and fails to teach him about alcohol. The child has milk as part of his diet until he leaves school. When he leaves school he has to face a choice about alcohol, and he has no information with which to meet the situation.

We have learned that the taste for alcohol is not a hereditary or genetically acquired condition. We have learned that, whether congenital or acquired, a state of mental irresponsibility is fertile soil for problem drinking, and that such people can never take a drink of alcohol without being at the mercy of the drink.

We have learned that alcohol, as commonly used today, causes more disease, disability and death than any other cause of ill health which is wholly in the power of the individual to prevent and avoid.

Since the end of the war in the European theatre of operations, there have been more deaths among American troops in Europe from alcohol than from all communicable diseases combined, according to the Chief of Preventive Services. Men in the Army in the last stages of the European offensive died in larger numbers from use of alcohol to the point of self-destruction than were lost by all the communicable diseases put together.

We have learned that alcohol as commonly used today is the largest cause of disease and disability of any condition that is within the entire control of the individual to prevent.

Medical sciences have learned and found that alcohol is not a food, a stimulant, or harmful only in drunkenness. That was the former belief. The liver, stomach, and heart were supposed to suffer only from drunkenness. Those are the least of the damages alcohol causes. Deaths from alcoholism are the least of the harm that alcohol causes. It is the constant and severe interference with human relations, the disturbance of the conduct of people to each other, that is the major damage that alcohol does in our society today.

Alcohol is a depressant, narcotic drug, and not a stimulant. That cannot be too often repeated, and has many social implications.

The effects of alcohol are almost entirely, if not wholly, to be explained by its toxic damage to the central nervous system, the brain, and spinal cord. It is upon those tissues that the action of alcohol shows most strikingly. The other effects are so minor as to have little, if any, part. It depreciates the divinity of man. The only thing that distinguishes man from the brute is his power of self-direction, self-control, judgment, discretion. Those things are the first qualities of man that are destroyed by alcohol, long before there is any obvious interference with the muscle and motor functions of the body.

Alcohol is not describable as a food which forms any part of a wholesome diet.

In recent times, it has been observed that the life-saving reflexes of the body are all slowed from 5 to 10 per cent by amounts of alcohol too small to be socially appreciable, and in amounts far smaller than can ever be registered under the law or by the police as indicating intoxication. In the beginning states, in amounts too small to be appreciated, alcohol slows the reflexes of the body, which we are endowed with to protect ourselves from destruction—the nervous reflex action of the eye, the ear, the muscles—which we depend on for safety in this world of speed and power and uncontrolled human association.

The evidence shows that there is no form of human activity so far tested which does not show inferiority of performance as the invariable sequel of the absorption of alcohol. I do not care what you try—adding machines, typewriting, taking dictation—there is no small or large accomplishment that does not show an inferiority of performance after the use of alcohol in amounts smaller than would be recognized as of toxic significance.

Perhaps the most important of all, is the positive statement that no evidence of improvement in human health has so far been found to result from the use of alcohol in the normal human being.

Alcohol, as used, causes many times more deaths than the infectious diseases.

Civil authority is limited to reducing opportunities for exploitation by alcohol. Responsibility for correcting conditions rests with the public school system, also on the family physician, the health officer, the visiting nurse, the ministry, the libraries, the press, and the broadcasting stations. No health department, local or state, is to be considered adequate in its program of public service if it fails to use its authority to deal with alcohol as a cause of preventable disease for which it should have a policy and a program.

DR. SOCKMAN RETURNS TO "NATIONAL RADIO PULPIT."

The Rev. Dr. Ralph W. Sockman will start his 14th year as presiding minister of NBC's "National Radio Pulpit" Sunday, October 2 (10:00-10:30 a. m., EST). Dr. Sockman is pastor of Christ Church, New York.

As in past seasons, the weekly program will be conducted along the lines of a Protestant church service, with hymns by the Radio Choristers, prayer and sermon.

Subject of Dr. Sockman's opening sermon will be "Whence Cometh My Help." Topics for subsequent Sundays will be "The Worth of One," October 9; "When Confidence Crumbles," October 16; "How Secure Can We Be?" October 23, and "How Free Can We Be?" October 30.

"RELIGION IN THE NEWS," WITH DR. VAN KIRK, RETURNS.

The Rev. Dr. Walter W. Van Kirk will return to NBC with his weekly analysis of the latest news in the world of religion on Saturday, October 1 (6:15-6:30 p. m., EST).

Dr. Van Kirk, who has been the "Religion in the News" commentator since 1935, is executive secretary of the Department of International Justice and Good Will of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

"Religion in the News" will be produced in cooperation with the Federal Council.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK SEPTEMBER 25-OCTOBER 2.

"The world of tomorrow is born at the birth of each child. The future of our country—and the world—lies germinating in the children of today." If this is so, the following conditions have appalling implications:

(1) Half of the children and young people in the United States receive no formal religious training.

(2) Of our 5,783 Congregational Christian Churches, some 975 have no church schools or programs of religious education at all.

(3) Approximately 5,000,000 more children in the United States have been born since 1940 than statistical predictions would have accounted for. . . . Many of these children are being reared in unchurched communities where the religious life suffers from sheer default.

It is the avowed purpose of our Congregational Christian agencies to hasten the day when children everywhere will be receiving, from infancy through youth, the sort of ministry and guidance which make life emotionally, morally and intellectually sound.—Andrew Vance McCracken.

ENDORISING RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK.

By PAUL G. HOFFMAN,

Administrator of Economic Cooperation Administration.

If man is to handle the problems created by his technological advancements, he will need all the strength a sound and sane religious education can give him. If he places all his dependence upon the material, he will be lost.

Never greater was man's ability to destroy himself physically. He must be educated, both materially and spiritually, if he is to find the right answers to the problems the new forces present.

NOTES IMPORTANCE OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK.

By STYLES BRIDGES,

Congregational layman and U. S. Senator from New Hampshire.

In some areas of the world today the freedoms which we in this country take for granted as a part of our birthright are being subjected to the forces of persecution. Events in some corners of the earth bear out the truth that the freedoms of religion and religious education are in jeopardy. Thus it follows that the united observance of Religious Education Week in this country this year is even more significant. The importance of the week cannot be overemphasized and I am sure that its observance will demonstrate more emphatically and clearly than ever before not only to all Americans but to all peoples of the world how invaluable and precious is religious freedom.

MANKIND NEEDS GOD.

By WARREN R. AUSTIN,

United States Representative to the United Nations.

It is daily becoming clearer that man cannot expect to work out his destiny independent of God. Everything in the teachings of the Master Christian pointed to the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. That life of great humility, lived so long ago in a distant land, has shone down the centuries until today men of different races, creeds, and colors, have united to implement its ideals in subscribing to the Charter of the United Nations. To achieve its purpose we shall need the understanding spiritual support of citizens everywhere, for "of ourselves we can do nothing," but "with God all things are possible."

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION BASIC NEED.

By MILLARD E. TYDINGS,

U. S. Senator from Maryland.

A basic need of humanity is Christian education for all. No greater boon can be given our children than acquainting them with the life and teachings of Christ, and emphasizing the paramount importance of the life of the spirit. True religion is the source of peace of mind, peace with our neighbors, peace in our foreign relations. It is the secret of a well-adjusted personality, of mental health, of lasting happiness—in short, of successful living. Without it, our lives, no matter how successful materially, lack purpose and direction and significance.

SOCIETY NEEDS RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

By CLARENCE E. PICKETT,

Executive Secretary of American Friends Service Committee, Philadelphia 7, Pa.

Effective religious education concerns itself with two main points; namely, informing the mind concerning the religious experience of devout and great souls, and also sensitizing the spirit to the reality of the presence of God and to a personal responsibility to meet human need.

From the place where I work I am deeply impressed with the lack of development of people in these two areas of their lives. For handling refugees, displaced persons, distressed or underprivileged peoples one can find men and women with technical skills and even with generous impulses. But finding persons whose lives are rooted back in great religious tradition and who have a mature sense of the reality of God, this is most difficult.

One of the most characteristic social phenomena of our day is the existence of so many foot-loose, uprooted peoples. They are numerous in our own national life and, even more so, in many foreign countries. One may even find persons rooted physically to one spot of earth and to one job but very much detached from the world of sympathy, understanding, and affection.

This all means that religious education in its deepest sense is one of the most important needs of the society of which we are a part. One can but hope that it will be extended and deepened.

POPULAR POET ENDORSES RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK.

By EDGAR A. GUEST,

Detroit, Michigan.

I have always thought it unfortunate that there appear to be so many families and homes where, and by whom, religious education is neglected. I think one of the earliest memories I have is that of my mother reading from the Bible to me and telling me some of the great and beautiful stories it contains. I remember a little English Sunday school to which I was taken, and I was taught the beginnings of the great faith that she had. I think now, as I look back, that she was constantly trying to impress upon the minds of her children that there were inheritors of a great love and an abiding care and were

PAYMENT OF PLEDGES.

There are a great number of people who refuse to make pledges. When pledges are made, they, of course, are expected to be paid. Our social and economic conditions are of such a nature that regardless of what may be our attitude toward assuming obligations for the future, practically everyone is compelled to do it. If we own a home, we have got to obligate ourselves to pay taxes. If we rent a home, we have got to obligate ourselves to pay rent. If we carry life insurance, we have to pledge to pay premiums. If we have a telephone, the bill comes due every month. When in the routine of things we have to pledge for our own livelihood, conveniences, and comfort, there isn't much argument in refusing to pledge for the support of causes and institutions that make definite contributions to our lives in various ways. If no one had ever made a pledge to Elon College to be paid in after years the college would never have been built and could not be supported today. Elon College was built on pledges and it is supported by pledges. The progressive program now in full swing at the college is dependent upon pledges made by loyal and generous souls.

Some years ago, many of our churches and a large number of individuals who are friends and supporters of Elon College made pledges to the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Fund. This fund was for the Department of Christian Education. The college desired to increase its services to the church directly. In order to do this, it was necessary to expand the Department of Christian Education. To make this expansion possible additional finances were required. The Convention voted to establish the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian education at the college. It gave the churches and individuals an opportunity to raise this amount. You have been generous. Pledges were made freely. A sum of $86,254.60 have been received in cash. The remainder of the $100,000.00 was pledged. Payments are due on practically all unpaid pledges. The college is greatly in need of funds at this particular time. It would be of great assistance if these pledges would be paid in full or if a payment could be made. The college has always depended upon the church and its friends and it feels secure in continuing to place its dependence upon the generosity of its constituency. Your help now will mean much.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Of course, conference apportionments are not assessments. The local church is at liberty to do as it pleases about conference apportionments. The local church, however, realizes that it is a member of a group of churches, that, as a single organization it could do very little but as a member of the group and with an overall program and all churches uniting their contributions for the support of the larger program that it can do something worthwhile. In uniting efforts for more than a half century, our institution of higher learning has been built and supported. No individual or church need feel the necessity of making any kind of apology for our college, nor should they feel the freedom of failing to support the college. Whatever contributions you or they may have made to the college may be looked upon now as a worthwhile investment—one that has paid dividends in character building as well as in economic stability. A contribution made on time to any cause that is in need means much more than if it is made late. Elon College's needs are present as well as future. Naturally, it looks to the church and its larger constituency to assist in meeting these needs.

A DAUGHTER'S VACATION MEDITATION.

DEAREST DADDY:

While driving in the country today, I had some thoughts which I decided to put on paper and send to you.

While driving along the country roads, new life was promised me—all around. But somehow the flowers—even though they were in all their glory—did not seem so beautiful as they have in years past. The birds sang their songs to me 'tis true—but their voices and the notes they sang did not seem so clear and true as they have in their previous recitals.

I tried to interpret this change. Yes, I know there is the threat of war; and the times—our reactions and the lives we live—are anything but normal. There is a tenseness about all we do and bear and live. But why the change of the birds and flowers?

Then I really thought—"The change is not in them—but in me!" I looked into my heart. Were there not discords there—little thoughts that were not clear and true—big thoughts of hatred against the powers that seem to be?

And, I said to myself, "This is not what God wants—I am not being and living the way He planned. 'Tis true all about us seems grotesque and disheartening, but I can with the help of God, make my own heart and life beautiful. Faith is my inspiration and it will help me meet every day as it comes. God help me to really live."

I looked again at the flowers. I listened again to the birds. Never have I seen nor heard such beauty. God was with me—in the midst of all this. It was He that made the difference!

SOUTHERN BAPTIST CONTRACT FOR YEAR-ROUND BROADCAST.

The Southern Baptist Convention has contracted with the American Broadcasting Company for year-round broadcast of a Sunday afternoon half-hour program—beginning October 2. The announcement was made by Dr. Sam F. Lowe, director of the Convention's Radio Commission, at the conclusion of its annual meeting at Nashville, Tennessee.

One hundred and thirty-one stations across the South, the Southwest and up the Pacific coast will carry the program. Other supplemental stations will be added to get complete coverage of the states in the Southern Baptist Convention area.

At Home and Abroad

TRACHOMA COMMUNISM, AND THE BIBLE.

Robert Grant of the Doshisha in Kyoto describes facets of life in Japan.

DEAR FRIENDS:

I went down to Awaji Island for a few days this month, to escape from the constant demands even during vacation here. It was fun meeting the friends I had made last summer. One of my friends' little daughters had trachoma, and remembering the trachoma clinic that we got started here in the school of my neighborhood last year, I hunted up the village doctor and the high school principal, and we made plans for starting such a clinic there. There are about 70 children in the grammar school there with trachoma. If we can get the American army to give the medicine, the doctors and the teachers are willing to give the treatment and a special educational program to the children and their parents on trachoma prevention and cure. This is interesting, I think: while I was conferring with the village doctor, a young fellow, about the problem, I noticed a Bible on his desk. I asked him, "Are you a Christian?" He said he wasn't, but that his nephew had gone to Doshisha and had told him about Christianity. And he pulled out from the drawers of his desk several Bibles—in English and Japanese, including a Moffatt edition—all marked and annotated in a fine hand. (I'll bet he has been studying the Bible harder in the last six months than most of our Christians outside of seminaries.) Then he said to me, "The reason you are concerned with the trachoma in Gunge is because you are a Christian, isn't it?" I started to say that it was because I was a human being that I was concerned. And then I realized that it was because I'd been brought up in Christian values that I was concerned, but that those values had so become part of my culture that I had forgotten the source.

Communism has been growing here quite fast; its strength has increased. I think it will grow stronger, and it affects our work, and will, I think, affect it still more. So I want to tell you something about it here.

Of all political parties in Japan,

the Communist party is not only the best organized, but it is the only one that seems fighting for the under-dog. For example: The government asked the Occupation to lend them some soldiers this year at tax collection time. The soldiers were to do nothing but stand at the tax collection office where the people came to pay their taxes, and they did. Taxes were terribly high. But the presence of the MP, supplemented by the raised eyebrow glance of the tax clerk to the citizen paying, helped the collection and discouraged protests or request for explanations. So the Occupation got the name of supervising tax collection, and from there, the story grew that all tax money went to the Occupation. Now a sur-tax, with a second collection of taxes has been called, and in the people's minds, this second tax is for the Japanese; the first having been for the Americans. To make things worse, tax assessments were greatly exaggerated, sometimes 300 or 400 per cent, in order to smoke out black marketeers. The theory behind this was that if there was an unjust tax, in protesting the citizen would reveal his actual income and the tax could be adjusted to that. But the presence of the uniformed MP discouraged protests. The Communists saw their chance, and opened up tax assistance offices all over the cities and in the towns to help with advice and in some cases trying to bring pressure on the tax authorities to lower their assessments. No other organization did this. So the Communists got the justified credit for trying to help the "little" man.

But the main point that Communism is promoting is nationalism—not a militant nationalism, but a cultural and economic nationalism. It directs its arguments directly against the Occupation. It pictures the Occupation as trying to stifle Japanese culture and impose upon a colonial Japan an American culture, while at the same time, keeping Japan economically weak to permit economic exploitation of the country. According to the Communists, this is to be done by permitting the pre-war industrial magnates to operate again but within Occupational control, thus choking out the rise of the middle and lower classes; and at the same time, permitting this by supporting an Occupation-controlled conservative government. The function of us missionaries, according to this line, is to act as a soothing "front" for this Occupation policy by keeping the Japanese lulled and thus to prevent the development of nationalism and, of course, Communism.

This appeal to a non-militant nationalism is effective among students who are confused and discouraged at the chaos about them, and who had their former beliefs so shattered by the war. And there are many things that seem to give credence to these charges of the Communists. One of the missionaries who has just finished a survey of student work in Japan estimates that if Japanese students had to choose a certain party to be affiliated with 85 or 90 per cent of them would choose the Communist Party. This doesn't mean that they are Communists. They aren't. Many of them want to avoid all party affiliations. But of the existing parties, at least 85 per cent of them think the Communist party is the only effective party. In the Communist Party, there is the chance for an individual to make his weight felt, they think.

The keen Christian students feel that for them it is the task of seeing if they can work with the Communists and still keep their Christian faith. The Communists, of course, are encouraging them to do this. And many students think it is possible—work for social reforms with the Communists, but keep one's Christian faith separate. One of the Protestant ministers in Tokyo has been read out of the church because he has tried to do this, and he is one of the Communists' most powerful weapons right now. Unfortunately, the Christian Church in Japan has been unable to meet these Communist arguments head on, either theoretically or practically.

It is against such a backdrop that we work.

ROBERT GRANT.

Miss Grace Storms, secretary of children's Work, Congregational Christian Churches, Boston, Massachusetts, worked on a filmstrip for the more than 4,000 church schools of her denomination during the Sixth International Workshop in Audio-Visual Education held at Green Lake, Wisconsin. To be used with all age groups from grade three and up during January, February and March, 1950, the filmstrip will be entitled, "Living as a Christian," and will tie in with the Lenten theme.

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

Mrs. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE OCTOBER 4.

Long's Chapel women will be hosts to our Fall (N. C.) Woman's Conference this year on October 4. Just a few more days remain before that date. Don't let it slip up on you, but make plans now if you have not already done so to attend the North Carolina Woman's Conference on October 4 at Long's Chapel Church, near Haw River, N. C. You turn off the Burlington-Durham highway to the left after you pass Haw River, and go about two miles. The church is also on the left side of the road with a cemetery nearby and the parsonage next door. Rev. G. H. Veazey is pastor of this church, and the women are planning a fine day for us all.

THANK OFFERING DREAMS 1949-50.

It is always a lovely thing to see a dream become a reality. This summer, those of us who attended the School of Missions had the opportunity to see the fulfillment of the dream toward which we had contributed in our 1947 Thank Offering gifts—the lovely home of our Superintendent in Elon.

This year, we are planning to help the dreams of others come true—others whose lives and work are dear to our hearts. The executive board of our Woman's Convention wrote to Dorothy and Dick Jackson to ask if there were not some great need in their work in Shaowu for which the Women's Thank Offering gifts could be used this year. Dick wrote on April 29, 1949:

"We appreciate your thinking about our work in relation to the Thank Offering. Sometime in the future, we'd like nothing better than to have a jeep for our work. Now, I would say, our greatest need is for assistance to the Han Mei Primary and Middle School (Junior High). As you know from reading THE SUN, we opened it last year for the first time since about 1931. Silas (Timothy's brother) was principal. He did a fine job of getting it off to a good start. Then, he received a scholarship in agriculture at the University of Michigan, so he left about a month ago. We have not yet selected someone to take his place, but we hope to do so soon.

"You cannot imagine the difficulties children have to go through to get an education in China. The buildings are in extremely bad shape. There is practically no glass. The students from outside sleep on borrowed beds and do not even have a table in their rooms. There are practically no books in the library and little athletic equipment. The chemistry laboratory is without equipment. Two to three children sit at one desk. It breaks our hearts to see how little they have when we know how many opportunities American children have.

"Therefore, I would like to suggest that the Thank Offering be designated to help Han Mei School—not as part of the general operating expenses (these are taken care of by a $1,000 grant from the Board plus money paid in as tuition by the children), but to repair the buildings, buy books for the library, equipment for the laboratory, and a kerosene pressure lamp and kerosene for night study as well as beds, tables and athletic equipment."

This project has a great appeal and I feel that the women will want to express their thanks for our well-equipped schools to which we may send our own children and for the wonderful work our friends, the Jacksons, are doing. We should make this year's Thank Offering the best we have ever given.

DOROTHY POWELL.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES.

HOLY NECK.

The Holy Neck Missionary Society is closing what they consider a very successful year under the leadership of Mrs. H. L. Worrell, president.

They have observed the three special days—World Community Day, World Day of Prayer, and May Fellowship Day, with the churches of other denominations in the community taking part.

In January, an all-day meeting with a covered dish luncheon was held in the church hall. At this time, the study book China—Twilight or Dawn was reviewed by members of our own group.

Sunday, January 16, was observed as Family Day. The worship service was centered around the theme of "The Christian Family" with a sermon by our pastor, Dr. Luther B. Grice. At 6:00 p. m., families and friends gathered for a "Pot-Luck Supper." After the supper, a worship service was held and a most inspiring talk on "Christian Family Life" was given by Mrs. B. D. Jones.

One of the most enjoyable occasions of the year was on January 9, when we were delightfully entertained by the members of the Holland Society at a dinner. Following the dinner, the foreign study book on China was most ably presented by Mrs. Wilkerson Holland.

The Bible study on Galatians was used monthly in our devotionals. Afterward, it was given in three lectures by our pastor. The home study book On Our Own Doorstep was reviewed by our own members. In July, Mrs. A. C. Moore reviewed the book for us with members of the Holland Society attending.

Four of our group attended the School of Missions at Elon in June.

A Life Membership has been given a past president and two Memorials, one in memory of Mrs. T. B. Hall, and the other in memory of Mrs. B. D. Jones, who was a charter member of our Missionary Society and served as president for a number of years.

During the year, 100 chairs, an electric stove, and other equipment have been purchased for the church hall. We bought venetian blinds for the Sunday School annex.

Under Friendly Service, we have contributed to a colored family whose home was burned. A contribution has been sent to the Indian Reservation in North Dakota. Christmas baskets were distributed to shut-ins in the community. We are also helping a family in which the father and mother are patients in a sanatorium.

We have 53 members on roll, and a fine spirit of cooperation exists. We feel we have been greatly blessed this year, and we hope and pray that even greater works may be accomplished in the coming year.

MRS. JOHN R. ELLIS,
Secretary.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

GOOD AND BAD.

The week that school opened in Virginia a mother sent a note to her daughter's school teacher asking that the little girl be excused early to go to the dentist for much needed dental work. The teacher was agreeable and she called the little girl's name and asked her to come to her desk, but no one came. As the time drew closer and closer the mother became anxious and called the school. The principal visited the room and still no answer from a child. Since it was the first week of school, the teacher did not know all of the children. She finally asked the mother to help look for the little girl. They found her sitting in the classroom where she had been all the time. You may imagine how her mother and teacher felt. When the mother demanded, "Why didn't you answer the teacher?" The shy little girl replied, "Because you told me to be good and not to talk in school."

Was that good or bad? The little girl was trying to be what she thought her mother called good. Her mother thought she was helping her daughter to be a quiet, helpful pupil. Neither was right. It would have been better if the mother had said, "Your teacher will be talking, you be quiet and listen when she is talking. Sometimes she will let you speak to your friends, she may let you speak alone at times." That would have been more helpful.

It looks as if most of the things that are fun are called bad by grownups. Things like whispering, chewing gum, blowing bubble gum, giggling, shoving, for-fun-only wrestling, swinging legs and banging them—on and on—you can add to the list. Are they bad or do they annoy adults?

If you are a very good child your parents' friends will probably tell them so; and they will be proud of you but prouder of themselves and try even harder to make you mind. Besides it is easier for parents if their children behave, do not tear up the house and keep things orderly.

Since I have been a child and am now a parent I am trying to see both sides. The parent side says children do need to know good from bad. But I need to know what part of the badness is caused by me. Yes, children do have a lot of trouble with their parents. My child-side says that very good children aren't fun to play with. They are stuckup and so goody!

Children need to learn that badness leads to trouble and unhappiness. Goodness leads to friendship, love and pleasant life. True goodness is to be able to see if what is done will hurt someone, or help someone; if it will make the doer happy or sad.

Good parents will have good children for they will tell them so often and forget about badness. Don't you agree? Maybe it's bad of me to be telling you this. . . .

BEDTIME STORY HOUR.

By MABEL-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Shirley, stop that!" shouted Jackie. "Mother! Shirley won't let me alone! She spoils everything I try to do!"

Marion Chatsworth sighed. Was she being an unnatural mother, she wondered, in looking forward to the time when the children would be in bed, asleep? She managed very well during the day, but now, the dinner dishes done, she longed for rest and relaxation. If only there were some easy way to keep the youngsters contented until eight o'clock, their bedtime, what a relief it would be. Jackie was eight and Shirley a little past five—a difference in age that would not amount to much when they were older, but now quite important.

Her husband lowered his newspaper. "Youngsters tire you?" he asked sympathetically. "Guess it's my turn to do something—you've had them all day."

Marion flushed a little but said, "Oh, if you only would!"

"Suppose I read a story to them?"

She shook her head doubtfully. "We'd both have to read—in different rooms. Tiny Tot Tales for Shirley, and something of more mature interest for Jackie."

"Maybe not," smiled her husband.

"I think Shirley will listen to anything that interests Jackie and will understand enough for it to hold her attention."

He went over to the bookcase, glanced thoughtfully over the rows of fiction, selected a volume and turned it to display the title for Marion's inspection.

"Uncle Remus!" she exclaimed.

"Well—perhaps. They both enjoyed the Walt Disney picture made from his stories."

"Jackie, come here," called his father. "I've something to show you."

Jackie came, wondering, with Shirley trying to run ahead of him.

"Sit down, children, I'm going to read you a story."

Magic words! Jackie settled himself in a chair and Shirley leaned against her father's knee, looking up into his face.

And that is the way the bedtime story hour started in the Chatsworth home. Only one story a night, and that read slowly, allowed for interruptions, questions, and discussion by the children. It was fairly exciting to their childish minds, but not too much so.

Shirley, of course, did not understand everything that was read, but she grasped enough to hold her interest, and Marion was often amused, the following day, to hear Jackie explaining some of the happenings in the story to his little sister.

Marion took time to visit and to

Youth at Work in the Church

ANN TRUITT, Editor; HELEN JACKSON, C. B. TWIDDY, Associates.

MT. OLIVET YOUNG PEOPLE ORGANIZE FOR WORK.

In September, 1948, the young people of Mt. Olivet (G) Church of the Valley Conference organized an activities group. It was not only to be the Youth Fellowship of the church, but a social group for all the young people of the community. The group which meets twice monthly has had an average attendance of about fifteen.

Aside from the regular meetings, the group has had movie parties, hay rides, weiner roasts and home parties.

The organization has also had charge of Sunday school and church worship. At Christmas the group gave the pageant, "Star of Bethlehem." Following that, they, with others, had a pleasant time caroling, especially in the homes of the sick and aged.

As a money-making project the young people played an active part in a yard party sponsored by the church. They presented a program which consisted of a very successful "Male Fashion Show," which was highly hilarious. They also sponsored the baby popularity contest which was interesting and profitable. A very humorous monologue was given by Miss Thelma Morris during the program. Proceeds from the two projects amounted to $175.00 and the entire sum was given by the young people to the church for the building fund. The group hopes for a basement in the church in the near future. What we lack is a part of the funds!"

The organization, which is continually adding to its membership, has included in its plans for the coming year, a play. This will be one of its many activities that perhaps will be on this page later.

We are very fortunate in having as our leader Miss Isabelle Sheetz of Winchester, Virginia, who was at one time the president of the Virginia Valley Youth Fellowship. She is at present a public school teacher in our community and the school is located very near the church. She has been a great help to our young people, as well as to the church.

Our monthly programs have been very interesting. We have used the packet, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and the Missionary Herald. The Bible study was taught by one of our members, Mrs. W. H. Johnson.

We observed the World Day of Prayer in March with the other churches of our town attending. Three of our members attended the School of Missions at Elon College.

Our Mission Study books were reviewed by our pastor, Rev. J. E. McCauley. We met in an all-day meeting at the church, with the ladies of Spring Hill and Centerville attending. Lunch was served and all present enjoyed the day. We have sent clothing to the orphanage and to Fancy Gap. We also sent cards and took fruit to the sick and shut-ins of the community.

We increased our apportionment ten per cent and have met the other requirements. We are proud of our year's work, and by the grace of God we hope to be able to do a greater work in the coming year.

talk with the head of their local library, from whom she received many helpful suggestions. Increasingly, she and her husband found themselves enjoying the stories with the children—renewing their interest in the adventures of many an old-time friend.

"How many things the story hour accomplishes," Marion thought to herself thankfully. "It is a period of physical relaxation for the children at a time when it is definitely beneficial; a way for Father to become better acquainted with his children, since he is of necessity away most of the day; and a chance for me to get at my heaped-up basket of darning and other mending—work which seems much less irksome when done to the accompaniment of the reading."

THE SERMON THIS WEEK.

In this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN there appears a sermon delivered by Rev. Charles Rush Sine of Gore, Virginia, on the occasion of his 75th birthday at Timber Ridge Christian Church. Rev. Mr. Sine is a Disciples minister but his grandfather, Rev. Christy Sine, was a pioneer Christian minister in the Valley of Virginia, being an associate of Joseph Thomas ("The White Pilgrim"). Mr. Sine was named for Henry Rush, a prominent minister of the Christian Church in New York. For a number of years Mr. Sine was connected with the National Board of Education and with Northland College before returning to Virginia in 1938. Mr. Sine has many historical documents pertaining to the Christian Church which he is considering depositing in the Church History Library at Elon College. The readers of THE SUN will find the sermon by Mr. Rush most interesting because of its peculiar relation to the pioneer leaders of our denomination in the Valley of Virginia.

Sunday School Lesson

THE CALL OF ISAIAH.

LESSON I—OCTOBER 2, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for me? Then I said, Here am I; send me.—Isaiah 6:8.

LESSON: Isaiah 6.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Hosea 14.

By Way of Background.

Uzziah had had a long and peaceful and prosperous reign. Indeed except for the reign of Solomon, Israel had known no greater glory as a nation. The king had ruled wisely and well at home, and he had won respect abroad. For forty years the fact that he had been at the head of the nation had given his people a sense of safety and security and strength. Even though Uzziah had spent the closing years of his reign isolated from his people because of a case of leprosy, his great name stood for national prosperity, and his reign still had a large measure of glory.

And now the king was dead. It seemed to the people of Israel that the world had come tumbling down on their heads. Furthermore a powerful and ambitious ruler had arisen in Assyria, a kingdom which had been dormant during Uzziah's great reign. Taking the name of one of his illustrious predecessors who had been a scourge among the nations, this new Tiglath-Pileser was already taking the road that led westward, and one by one he was subduing the free nations that lay in his path even to the Great Sea.

It did not help matters any to know that although there was great material success and splendor, and although there was a great show of religion, the heart of the nation was fast disintegrating, and religion has become in large measure a mere and meaningless formality. Ritual had taken place of righteousness, and religion had become merely something pretty instead of something powerful. It was a situation that would give pause to a sensitive spirit like Isaiah, the young prince and patriot.

The Vision.

"In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple." The account of this vision must have been given and written several years after it actually took place. But this man of God never forgot the vividness and the vitality of that vision. He saw the Lord, he saw him sitting on a throne, he saw him high and lifted up. He does not describe the Lord, for the simple reason that he could not describe the Living God. The vision was too great and too grand for words. The important thing is that Isaiah saw God the Holy One of Israel, saw him in all his majesty and his might, saw him in all his holiness, which in the sense in which it is used in the vision means his "separateness," his "apartness," his "difference from sinful men." The vision of the holiness of God is described in language that seems strange to us, but it is an attempt to put in words what cannot be put into words. The beings from another world themselves could not look upon the glory of God. And the temple could not confine his glory and holiness—the whole earth is full of his glory.

Here is the critical and crucial need of men, not only of ministers, but of all men—to see God in all his purity and glory. This is the thing that gives meaning to religion, and the only thing that can give it power. For look what happened when this young man saw the glory of God.

He became conscious, painfully conscious of his own sins. He cried out in agony of spirit, "Woe is me for I am a man of unclean lips." He was a pretty good fellow measured by any man-made standards. But he was painfully aware of his sins when he stood in the presence of the living God of Israel. Let a man see God as revealed in the face of Jesus Christ and instinctively he will feel himself a sinner and in the need of a Saviour. One of the values of worship is to keep one sensitive to sin.

The man also became conscious of the sins of his fellowmen, and he knew that he shared in their sins. He had a social consciousness of sin. He knew that they were unclean as he was unclean, although perhaps in other areas of life. But there it is all written out in words that all those who are not spiritually blind can read—a vision of God brings a sense of sin and of the need for cleansing and forgiveness.

It is significant that this man, steeped in the religion of his people, a religion that made much of ritual and sacrifice, makes no mention of the importance of these in the cleansing, forgiving process. He brought no offering, he made no sacrifice. But in response to his confession of sin and in answer to his need, one of the angelic beings touched his lips with a live coal from off the altar, and lo, his iniquity was taken away, and his sin was forgiven. He had discovered of course that these things are but paths to God; that when the soul comes into direct touch with God, nothing else is needed. Forms and ceremonies have their place, but they are but means to ends. They are vain unless they lead us to an experience of the living God.

The Voice.

"And I heard the voice of the Lord saying Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" This voice came after he had been cleansed from his sin. One great reason why God does not and cannot speak to us is because our sins dull our ears and deaden our hearts, and keep us from hearing him. It should be noted that the voice speaks not in a command, but in a question. It did not say, "Isaiah, you go," but "Who will go?" But when a man gets a vision of the living God, when he comes to deal at first hand with God, he must of necessity, face the fact of his relationship to human need in all its forms. Calls come in many ways, but the crux of a call according to the norm of Isaiah, is a vision of God and the needs of one's fellowmen. One thing stands out—this man gave himself in absolute and irrevocable consecration to the service of God. There were no "ifs" or "buts" in his decision. Only thus can men be prepared for the long, hard way ahead in any form of sacrificial service.

The Vocation.

"And he (the Lord) said, 'Go!'" Here was the divine commission. Here was the seal of his ministry. Here was the secret of his success. He felt that he had been commissioned to go and to speak for the Lord. He knew who had sent him and why he had been sent. He knew that he did not go alone. He knew that he would not be responsible for results—he was simply to be faithful in proclaiming the word of the Lord. Indeed there came to him, perhaps later, in fact, surely later, the realization that he

A REVIEW OF HISTORIC TIMBER RIDGE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, HIGH VIEW, W. VIRGINIA.

A Sermon

By REV. CHARLES RUSH SINE.

"And when they were come, and had gathered the Church together, they rehearsed all things that God had done with them and that he had opened a door of faith unto the Gentiles."—Acts 14:27.

In the city of Antioch, the Missionary Church that had sent out its pioneer preachers, gathered to hear the story of the great victories that had been achieved by these devoted heralds of the Cross. It was in this City of Vision and Understanding that earlier followers of the Man of Nazareth had been called Christian (11:26). Here was given the name by which the followers of Christ were to be called into a religious movement of America at the beginning of the 19th century.

The War of Independence in the United States had its declaration on July 4, 1776. Following the successful Revolution for freedom, there arose the idea of freedom in the Church and men lifted their voices for freedom from ecclesiastical bondage and a determination to go back to the New Testament for guidance and the Spirit of Christ that made men free. "If the truth make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

Hence, at the beginning of the 19th century, we find a group of leaders, born about the same time, standing for this simple premise: "The Scriptures are our sufficient rule of Faith and Practice." Such were Elias Smith in New England, O'Kelly in North Carolina, Barton W. Stone in Kentucky, and others. In 1801, the famous Cane Ridge Camp Meeting was held by Stone in Kentucky. A military man on the grounds estimated the crowds to be from 20,000 to 30,000 people. Stone was born in 1772. There was a group of men who labored in this general area whom I should like to present: Lorenzo Dow born in Connecticut (1777), Joseph Thomas born in North Carolina (1791), Christy Sine born in York County, Pa. (1798), Simeon Ward born in Virginia (1803) and Isaac N. Walter born in Ohio (1805).

Lorenzo Dow, the Cosmopolite, labored through the Valley of Virginia, attended Camp Meetings—once in Winchester, Virginia, a crowd of 6,000 were present to hear him. He so influenced my grandfather, Christy Sine, that he named a son after him and my father, the oldest son of Christy, named his eldest Lorenzo Dow. My grandfather was ordained in the Walnut Springs Church in 1824. After laboring in this general area as evangelist and pastor, he died in 1858 and was buried beside his first wife in this cemetery. In the life of Isaac N. Walter, he is referred to several times and quotations are made from his letters. In the same life of Walter there is reference to Simeon Ward.

Isaac N. Walter refers in glowing terms to the Timber Ridge Church regarding a meeting held 101 years ago. He went to New York City and had a great ministry in that city called "The graveyard of preachers." Rev. McWinney was his worthy biographer and states that on one occasion Rev. Walter baptized eight converts in the East River with the temperature standing at 26 below (?) zero; once in Sunbury, Ohio, during a Camp Meeting where Joseph Thomas was preaching, the rough element took over the meeting and turned out the lights, putting on a mock religious service, even proposing some one should pray. In the darkness a voice started to pray but not the rough element. It was the young Walter, but then 23 years of age. When he had ended his prayer, the rough element was subdued and never again attempted to disturb the Camp Meeting.

In the earlier day, the churches of the Valley—Zion, Strasburg, Walnut Springs, Cedar Creek and perhaps others—were Christian Churches as Timber Ridge. In 1812 R. F. Ferguson arrived on the scene and was pastor at Walnut Springs for 21 years. The speaker has in his possession the Personal Journal of Christy Sine, telling his story from his birth to the year of 1829. He wrote out a license to preach for Simeon Ward dated 1830. It is signed by Christy Sine and R. F. Ferguson. This is also in the possession of your speaker.

This shows the close connection of R. F. Ferguson and Christy Sine with the Valley churches. There was formerly a church at Concord, Hampshire County, in which connection all the early preachers are mentioned, and the minister who preached at the time of my grandfather's ordination, Rev. Dickinson, is buried at Concord.

Timber Ridge goes back in history to 1812 when Joseph Thomas is said to have held a meeting near the present home of Albert Fletcher. A log church was the first structure used for worship by this congregation and stood at the foot of the hill along the stream, east of the present site. The next—a frame building—stood on the present location and was built in 1818. The lot was given by William Groves. The present brick building was erected in 1875. The bricks were made in the field at the end of the cemetery. Elias Lafollette was builder in charge. Practically all materials, except roof and windows, were donated by the members. My brother, Alfred Sine of Law, Oklahoma, is the only known living person who helped in the construction of the building. He is approaching his 88th birthday. My grandfather was at one time pastor of this church.

I have personally known all the men who have served as pastors since 1875, except one short-timed pastorate. The first pastor was John Barney. Among others were his brother, Joseph Barney, William and James Dofflemeyer, William and A. R. Garland, A. J. Kibler, W. T. Walters, Ira Mellott, A. W. Andes, Robert Whitten and Roy Coulter, the present pastor. Among the visiting clergymen have been Peter McCullough, who dedicated the new building, H. Y. Rush (after whom I was named), Dr. J. P. Barrett, J. T. Kitchen, W. O. R. Spaid, John Tampkin, whose son at 90 still lives in the Valley, and perhaps many others worthy of mention.

The cemetery is filled with the honored dead. The first grave was my half-aunt, my mother's half-sister, buried in 1823. Simeon Ward, Christy Sine and a number of lay preachers rest in God's Acre here. Soldiers killed in action; distinguished men and women of the community; teachers, sea-faring men, pioneers of the country side. From east, west, north and south, relatives come to visit the sacred soil still holding the holy dust of beloved ones on Memorial Day each June.

The church lives on because of the loyalty and devotion of the descendants of these earlier families. For the first time in its history Timber Ridge now has full time preaching. Rev. Roy Coulter, B. D., is the pres-

The Orphanage

DEAR ORPHANAGE FRIENDS:

The Orphanage will need to close this year with total receipts of $50,000 if it is going to pay for the several thousand dollars worth of repairs which have been made this summer, and do that which is very, very badly needed now. "Tell the people what you need, Truitt, and they will give it," is what many have said. Well, I know the people love these children, and want them to live in an environment that is sufficiently comfortable. There are still several large, ward-like rooms where some of the most charming little girls on our campus live without a sign of closet, or locker for their clothes and shoes—same for the boys—except perhaps they are not quite as "charming," unless you look at them with eyes to see their fine places in the future. There are storage rooms still that are—well, I shall not put it in print, but they need almost everything they do not have; and much they do possess they do not need at all. V. R. Holt has shown us what can be done if we have the money, by the way he has gotten started on renovating the Baby Home. I sort of know you folks would not like to have many of the quarters here as they are now, and you will want to have a share in making it different.

So let me suggest that right now you, who are able, look over your plans for making your final income-tax-for-the-year reports and save a goodly place for your own Orphanage. We have a number of our best Burlington business men and women in three miles of this place to help us wisely plan all the renovations and to make the best and most use of your funds. And do not think they will not do their part in furnishing the funds, too. Help us make this home reasonably comfortable for the high and beautiful purpose which it serves. That is all I ask. That means that we must be remembered in your hearts, in your prayers, and in your faithful cooperation. Jerry, and Hubie, and Larry have just concluded a friendly conversation with me. They are in the grades their ages would suggest. They are bright as a pen and ready to cooperate just like good boys do where a certain amount of discipline and cooperation is essential. Mrs. Truitt happened to overhear the talk and when they left she remarked: What three fine little fellows! We are trying to build real men and women here, and the record of past years show that our efforts are well repaid.

Three Sunday schools are signed up to pay us visits on certain Sundays. They will bring their adult classes, their teachers, their little folks, and their friends. They will be shown about the place. The Orphanage people will assemble for songs, their greetings, and ours, which will be a program of about thirty minutes giving everyone a chance to see each other, and to join with each other in enriching our common Christian faith. I hope all who come will feel that the One who loved little children is here in His Spirit and goodness.

ent able pastor. The church owns a modern parsonage and successful business men and women direct its affairs.

On this 75th birthday, may I be pardoned for a few personal remarks. My father, F. J. Sine, was the eldest of the family of Christy Sine. My mother was the daughter of Frederick Spaid, a family that served in the Revolution and can number its offspring by the thousands. As a boy I attended a one-room public school. I was fortunate in having as a teacher one considered by our county superintendent as the best grade teacher he ever met. The superintendent was M. M. Lynch, an attorney of Winchester, and the teacher was C. N. Garvin, who lies amidst his large family in this cemetery. One brother was lost at Shiloh.

At 17, I began teaching and taught five years before attending college, at Hiram—President Garfield's school. I finished a B. S. course at Shenandoah Normal College, then a B. A. at Hiram and the Master's degree at the University of Virginia. Later, special work in Chicago and New York. The Lord has called me to preach the Gospel for over 50 years. My pastorates have been Duluth, Minnesota; Charlottesville, Virginia; Hamilton, Ohio; and Tonawanda, New York. Hamilton covered 13 years, longest pastorate up to this time while seven years were spent at Tonawanda. Nine years were spent with Northland College, a Congregational Institution, as Field Secretary. Then back to Virginia and West Virginia where I have served churches as ad interim pastor, in building enterprises, and am still serving a rural church as pastor. To grow old "gracefully," as was one man's wish in Virginia, can best be answered by "just keep busy" and there is joy in a ministry that continues the three score, ten and five.

Prosperity can be only for the free; that Freedom is the sure possession of those alone who have courage to defend it.—Thucydides.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK.

truly the children of God. She did her best to teach us that there was a life beyond this. She never pictured Heaven to us as a place where the angels sat upon cloud banks and strummed harps or hell was a place of fury and fire where the evil spirits would suffer eternal torture. She taught us that as we were happy here and in good company we should surely find even a richer happiness there as we deserved to be in good company. I have made her belief my own all down the years and tried to follow in her way.

HAILS RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK.

By FRANK E. GANNETT,

President of The Gannett Newspapers, Rochester, N. Y.

Never in modern times has the need for religious education been greater than it is today. Properly carried out over the years, it can be a key to many of the problems of nations and of races that beset us so sorely. Let us unite in prayerful observance of Religious Education Week, a period set aside to call attention to church education activities throughout the United States. Here is a call that no thinking adult can fail to heed.

ENCOURAGES RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK CELEBRATION.

By KATHERINE L. LENROOT,

Chief of Children's Bureau, Federal Security Agency, Washington, D. C.

The spiritual security and moral values that are derived from religion are of paramount importance in the world today. It is particularly urgent that the religious needs of youth be met as fully as possible. Religious Education Week affords an opportunity for churches to re-examine their programs of religious education to determine the extent to which they are reaching children and young people in each community and their relationship to the other institutions of society responsible for the nurture and rearing of youth.

ENDORSES RELIGIOUS EDUCATION WEEK.

By DR. JOHN S. STAMM,

President of Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and Bishop of Evangelical United Brethren Church Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

Christian education is an integral part of the thought, purpose, and program of the Christian Church. Men need to know the truth if they would respond to the truth. The observance of Religious Education Week offers a splendid opportunity to bring to the attention of the church and the community the spiritual ministry of Christian education.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

would not meet with a ready response, that hearts would not be open to his words, that he would not be successful from the worldly standpoint. There would be apparent defeat and appalling heartache in his long ministry. But he had seen God, he had been cleansed and forgiven by God, he had been commissioned by God, he would therefore in season and out of season, speak for God. Thus would he fulfil his prophetic function, for a prophet is primarily one who speaks for God.

Vindication.

The centuries have vindicated the vitality and the validity of the vision. Isaiah was the major prophet of the major prophets. He stands high on the list of the world's greatest men.

Virginia Christian Rural Overseas Program

Dr. B. L. Hummel, Virginia Extension Rural Sociologist, who recently returned from European theatres of overseas relief operations of the Christian Rural Overseas Program, told a meeting of State CROP leaders in Richmond that CROP aid "will be urgently needed in Germany and Southern Europe this coming winter."

Others in the picture are (left to right): The Rev. C. Ralph Arthur, the Rev. F. Harold Nott, and the Rev. J. J. Scherer, Jr., who represent CROP's national sponsors, Church World Service, Catholic Rural Life, and Lutheran World Relief, respectively; and Dr. Paul Sanders, most countries. People with low incomes are terribly hard pressed in meeting the cost of living."

Schedule for 1949 Campaign

October 23 - November 13 — Crop Sunday in Churches, to be followed by Crop Week in County; normally follow CROP Sunday with week of house-to-house solicitation, selecting week to fit commodity harvest.

November 14-19—Reports and Collection, and follow up on not-at-homes. Monday—all Canvassers' Reports to Local Chairmen, with cash; Wednesday—all Local Reports to chairman of the Virginia CROP executive committee, who presided at the meeting, called to make final campaign plans.

The goal for the Virginia campaign was set at 150 carloads of farm commodities from Virginia counties to fill CROP's Friendship Food Trains for overseas relief in Europe and Asia, by the CROP group, which included members of the State and executive committees and district supervisors.

Professor Hummel said that "excellent 1949 crops in many parts of Europe are being offset by the inability of many countries to import their usual large amounts of food products because of the international exchange situation. This leaves substantial shortages in countries where home production is even above pre-war point, and prices of food products very high in County, with cash; Friday—preliminary County Report to State Office, with rent. All commodities collected, converted, assembled.

November 20-22—Dedications and Shipping in Counties. State Office will arrange big dedication of first County Carload. All shipping to be completed by counties by Thanksgiving Day, November 24.

November 22—State Dedication, Richmond or Norfolk, to mark end of Collection Campaign.

November 20 - December 3—Completion of all canvasses, collection, gathering reports, etc., in all counties.

December 8—All final County Reports in State Office.

December 15—State summary of final CROP report issued.

The United Evangelistic Advance

Each of the three words in the designation of the program is important.

The movement is united. It is not limited to a certain area nor to a single denomination. It is a concerted and nationwide effort on the part of the twenty-seven denominations cooperating in the Federal Council to reinforce one another and to gain the advantages that come from their doing the same thing at the same time. Each will work in its own way according to its own methods. No standardized pattern is imposed upon any group. The unity that is sought is that which is derived from a concentration upon a great common objective.

The movement is evangelistic. It does not forget the need for social and economic and political betterment. On the contrary, it receives much of its stimulus from a sober recognition of the present state of society, whether in the local community, the national life or the international realm. But it proceeds on the assumption that a better world must begin in the individual soul, in his own understanding of the real meaning of his life, and be carried out thence into his home, his work, his citizenship.

Unless within my heart I hold Abiding peace,
No league of nations can succeed
Nor will strife cease.

At the deeper level, the movement is evangelistic in its conviction that for producing a change for the better in human lives the fundamental requisite is to bring them into personal relationship to God in Christ and to secure clear-cut decisions to do God's will as Christ reveals it.

The movement is designed as an advance. It recognizes that the present practice of Christian witnessing is too slight, too casual, and limited to too few. No sensational methods are contemplated but it is hoped that by a rekindling of the evangelistic and missionary spirit thousands of Christian people will be led to bear their simple personal testimony for Christ among their friends and neighbors. If so, every congregation may feel itself part of a forward movement that involves the Church as a whole.

It might even be that the Holy Spirit could use such faithful witnessing of Christian people, accompanied by penitence and prayer, to bring about a great spiritual renewal in our country. The word of God to Israel is still a timely word to America: "If my people, who are called by my name, shall humble themselves and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven and will forgive their sins and heal their land."—Roswell P. Barnes in The Federal Council Bulletin.

News Flashes

Dr. Guy Black will conduct a program of visitation evangelism for the Protestant churches of Richmond next week.

Rev. George W. M. Taylor is the supply minister at the Norfolk Christian Temple, following the resignation of Rev. Peter Young.

The Board of Publication met at Elon College, at 9:30 last Friday morning. Mrs. Kernodle accompanied the managing editor and they were guests of President and Mrs. Smith until Saturday.

We learn with regret that Dr. C. E. Newman of Virgilina, Virginia, fell on last Friday, sustaining severe injuries. We have received no late report as to his condition, but hope that he is improving.

Rev. J. Howard Smith, who spent the summer studying and traveling in Europe, visited relatives in Newport News last week, and has now returned to the teaching staff at Arnold College in Connecticut.

A tea was given by Mrs. L. E. Smith at the president's home at Elon College on last Friday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock in honor of Mrs. Sadie Drummond Liles, the new Dean of Women, Mrs. John G. Truitt, wife of the new Orphanage Superintendent, and other new members of the college faculty. There were about 150 guests, including those from Greensboro and Burlington. The refreshments were delightful and the decorations were most attractive, yellow roses and chrysanthemums forming the basis for the color scheme.

RADIO PROGRAMS TO LAUNCH INTERDENOMINATIONAL EFFORT.

Two radio programs over more than 100 stations each will help launch the 37-denominational effort to evangelize America, on Sunday, October 2, World Communion Day.

As World Communion Day calls Christians in America to the Lord's Supper on the opening day of the 15-month-long United Evangelistic Advance, Dr. Jesse M. Bader announced that other millions at home will hear special programs arranged by the Protestant Radio Commission, with the cooperation of the National and American Broadcasting companies.

Dr. Bader, executive secretary of the United Evangelistic Advance, announced that prominent Christian laymen will be heard on Sunday, October 2, on nationwide broadcasts of the Radio Pulpit, and National Vespers. The laymen will each deliver four-minute talks on "America's Moral and Spiritual Needs and How to Meet Them," and the moderators, Dr. Ralph Sockman and Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell, will devote six-minute sermonettes to the Advance.

On the Radio Pulpit (NBC, 10:00 to 10:30 a. m., EST) the radio audience will hear Mr. Walter Disney, Hollywood, California motion picture producer, and Hon. Florence Allen, Judge of the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals of Cleveland, Ohio.

Governor Luther Youngdahl of Minnesota, and Mr. Branch Rickey, president of the Brooklyn Dodgers and recently signally honored by the Federal Council of Churches, will speak on National Vespers (ABC, 1:30 to 2:00 p. m., EST).

RELIGION AND CRIME.

By JOHN EDGAR HOOVER, Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Powerful forces are today struggling to control the souls of men. Deep-seated evils—of sin, crime and iniquity—are abroad in the land, intent on destroying the tenets of democracy and Christianity and undermining the progress achieved by mankind through centuries of effort.

Crime, unfortunately, is one of the most powerful divisive forces in contemporary life—disparaging the fundamental concepts of truth and righteousness and impugning the sanctity of law and order. Crime sets brother against brother, neighbor against neighbor, father against son.

Each year crime exacts an appalling toll in America—a toll of death, suffering, and the blighting of human life. In 1948 alone an estimated total of almost one and one-quarter million serious crimes were committed, or more than three every minute!

Many Youths Commit Crimes.

Moreover, the utter seriousness and tragedy of current crime conditions are underlined by F.B.I. statistics which reflect that of all persons arrested and fingerprinted last year almost 32 per cent were under the age of 25. The problem of the criminal is the problem of society at large. The young person, by taking the law into his own hands, blights not only his own personality, either temporarily or permanently, but violates the moral fiber of society itself.

The eternal truths of the Bible which have served as indestructible guideposts for generations past, represent the blazing beacons which light the paths of the future. A world not practicing the teachings of Christianity is a world of despair, division, and expediency. Christianity promotes the dignity of the individual, encourages the development of moral integrity and spiritual strength. It offers the hope of a better world—a world where the forces of sin shall have melted into the beneficent influences of love, mercy, and hope.

Religious Opportunities Often Lacking.

The criminal has scorned, belittled, and mocked Christianity. He has impugned the very principles which would have given him the strength and fortitude to overcome the temptations of evil. In many instances, the criminal, the young lad who has robbed a bank, burglarized a store, or stolen an automobile, never had the opportunity, as a youngster, to learn the way of Christianity. The teachings of Christ were absent from his home, he never went to Sunday school or church, nor read the words of the Master. He became, to all intents and purposes, a non-Christian personality. This individual, lacking the profound guidance of Christian instruction, was unable, on his own initiative, to quickly and correctly make the decisions required in life. He measured his future in terms of expediency, and mundane pleasures. The strength of character, fashioned by Christian ideals, was denied him—and he strayed into the path of crime.

The world which lies ahead will be, to a large extent, the world of our own creation. For this reason, the observance of Religious Education Week, September 25-October 2, holds profound and deep significance for a nation which is troubled by many forces of evil. Religious Education Week should alert each of us to the crying need for religion today—for spiritual values to guide us to a world of peace and harmony.

The struggle to maintain the cause of freedom, truth and moral decency is not easy. Halfhearted or part-time efforts are not sufficient. The task requires the energetic support and wholehearted encouragement of men and women of good will throughout the nation. Religious Education Week should cause a rededication towards that purpose.

Religious Education Week Emphasizes Practical Evangelism

By HARRY H. KALAS, Director, National Christian Teaching Mission.

On World Communion Sunday, October 2, 1949, the Department of Evangelism of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will begin a 15-month program known as the United Evangelistic Advance.

This is an attempt on the part of Protestant Christian Churches in America to end the most tragic half-century in the world's history with an aggressive emphasis upon spiritual values.

In hundreds of communities, Protestant churches will re-examine their present facility for meeting the needs of people in our generation; clearly identify all the people in their community who have no church relationship; strengthen their educational fellowship and service programs to better absorb unchurched people and carry forward an aggressive program for bringing the church to the doorways of America.

Religious Education Week has become a recognized institution in America. By good coincidence, it occurs one week before the opening of the United Evangelistic Advance, the dates being September 25 to October 2. The International Council of Religious Education, which sponsors Religious Education Week, has exhibited a good example of teamwork in that it has chosen as its theme for 1949, "The Community for Christ." This theme was deliberately chosen to give educational support to the United Evangelistic Advance.

Evangelism Touches All of Life.

Those who are interested in practical, down-to-earth religion, frequently look somewhat askance at big evangelistic programs, and say, "Evangelism for what?" This cry for relevance in religious emphasis requires a definition for evangelism which touches every area of life, socially and individually. The International Council of Religious Education emphasizes a functional approach to religious thought and experience. The theme, "The Community for Christ," emphasizes the relevance of the Christian religion to every aspect of life. This emphasis should lend a practical note to the United Evangelistic Advance.

Both the International Council of Religious Education and the Federal Council of Churches have been historically committed to the proposition that the good community is impossible without good people. Both know that ultimate human goodness and consequent peace of mind come only when persons deliberately come to terms with God. The theme, "The Community for Christ," does not ignore the personal aspects of evangelism. It emphasizes the importance of revitalizing the life of the church in its community so that many more elements in the normal environment will point God-ward.

Theme Points to Teaching Mission.

One of the most effective ways of achieving the theme of Religious Education Week is the National Christian Teaching Mission, which will be held in 75 communities during a fifteen-month period. In this enterprise the Protestant Christian churches attempt to relate evangelism to the individual needs of all the people.

In this program, the churches are put through a rather rigorous self-study, by which their capacity to meet the needs of all the people of a community is tested. The program calls for a complete religious census, as a result of which every person of a community is placed on the responsibility list of some local church. The third phase of the program is entitled, "Fellowship Cultivation," because it uses the group life of the church to assimilate unchurched people into the normal fellowship, learning and service aspects of the Christian enterprise. The fourth phase of the program is entitled, "Program Enlargement." This means that the churches are helped to improve their programs at

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE MISSION BOARD MEETS

An extra session of the Convention's Mission Board was held at Henderson, North Carolina, on Tuesday of last week. Plans were made to carry out the commitments of the Board and take care of emergencies arising during the present interim before entering on the new fiscal year, January 1. Dr. F. C. Lester is president of the Board and the Rev. W. J. Andes is the secretary. Those in attendance included the president and secretary, Messrs. J. P. Dalton, A. H. McIver, L. L. Vaughan, the Revs. H. S. Hardcastle, W. B. O'Neill, O. D. Poythress, R. L. House, Mesdames O. H. Paris, J. G. Truitt, Misses Pattie Lee Coghill and Dorothy Scott. Superintendent Scott, who gives considerable time to our mission churches, was present to report on the achievements, assets, problems and needs of our missionary enterprises.

The report of the treasurer, Mr. George Colclough, was submitted by the assistant treasurer, Miss Dorothy Scott. The scope of our Convention missionary task is suggested by excerpts from this report covering our last fiscal year: Salary aid to pastors, $6,557.75; building aid for churches and parsonages, $4,675.05; National Board of Home Missions, $1,220.51; The American Board, $16,677.80. The impressive figure for the net income is $42,434.85.

We rejoice in the capable leadership of our Board, the efficient services of our Convention Office personnel, the heroic and constructive work being done by our missionary representatives, and the generous giving of all who support this grand enterprise. The scope of our missionary endeavor next year will be conditioned materially by our Conference apportionments. Some of our missionary opportunities must be forfeited if churches do not raise their apportionments in full. There is time yet for every church in the Convention to meet its obligation and honor the claims of its Conference. Let's make it unanimous.

"SOUPED-UP" RELIGION

"Youth on Wheels" is our new American frustration. It has been stated that "Sixteen, when a driver's license can be taken out in most states, is a far more important milestone in the life of the typical American male than 21, when he reaches his majority and can vote, because 'cars are more fun than anything in the world.'"

The new pattern of youthful adventure is the "hot-rodder," a boy who has acquired an old car, stripped it down to the chassis and "souped up" the engine to make a racer of it. Suping up an engine to make a hot rod is done by installing dual carburetors, dual exhausts, supercharger, heavy-duty magneto, high-compression head or planed-down head, high-lift camshaft and oversized pistons and valves. Hot rodders keep police alert in many cities. Public highways are used as racetracks. Although fatalities are frequent, there are other dangers. The guidance counselor of a large high school has been quoted in the following statement which indicates the detrimental effect of student-owned cars: "It's too tempting to jump into a car and take a long jaunt for soda that could be bought just around the corner. 'Riding around' consumes time that could be spent more profitably studying or reading. The auto is a great robber of sleep which teen-agers need, and it lowers the sense of values when an adolescent is handed an expensive machine which he did not earn, and for which somebody else will pay if he smashes it up."

Youngsters claim that old folk are slow drivers, that they clutter up the highways and cause bottle necks in traffic. One does not need to endorse all the wild antics and exploits of the hot rodders in order to find here a parable of our times.

A Methodist Bishop said recently: "We march with Christ or get in his way." Individuals and denominations may clutter up the ecumenical highway and cause bottle necks in the ongoing program of the Kingdom.

Much of our contemporary religion needs to be "souped up." Our church attendance auto, our evangelistic excursion, our Sunday school survey, our financial flivver, our missionary omnibus, our journalistic jalopy, our race relations rickshaw, and our church union trailer—all need the impetus of a few spiritual hot rodders.

The Psalmist cried, "By God's help I can leap over a wall." David "encouraged himself in the Lord." Said Christ: "Ye must be born again." The disciples were filled with the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost. St. Paul avowed: "I can do all things through Christ which strengthened me." These are Biblical examples of the religiously accelerated life.

The saints were those whose spark of religion had been fanned into a flame, whose meagre resources had been conserved and skilfully shared for the feeding of the multitudes.

Christ, with his undeviating loyalty to the will of the Father, his passionate devotion to the Kingdom sustained at white heat, his inexorable warfare against evil, his genius for imparting himself to others, and his lifelong practice of investing the last atom of time and energy with spiritual significance has demonstrated to the world the superlative power of religion in one life.

St. Paul, an afflicted tent-maker, evidenced a strange and dynamic propulsion as he almost catapulted himself and the glorious gospel of Christ from city to city, from country to country, and from continent to continent. He threw aside all the weights which would hinder him in running the race set before him. He kept his eyes and attention fastened on the Ideal. He lived the accelerated life. He redeemed the time. Eternity was in his footsteps. No wonder he ran a good race!

The prophetic spirits have had one prayer upon their lips: "Lord, revive thy Church—beginning with me."

*Revive us again, fill each heart with Thy love;
May each soul be rekindled with fire from above.*

Wherever and whenever consecrated people have brought their talent and means to the altar, they have been met by others of like consecration, and through the providence of God their gifts have fed the multitudes. The religion of Christ is a religion of power. Faith has mountain-moving power. With God all things are possible. "Thanks be unto God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

37 Denominations—40,000,000 Church Members Behind Evangelistic Crusade

The United Evangelistic Advance, backed by 37 Protestant and Orthodox denominations with 40,000,000 members, will launch a 15-month program to win America for Christ, at the Lord's Table on Sunday, October 2. On that day millions of Americans, each in his own church, have been asked to participate in a global observance of World Communion Day.

Their participation in the Communion Service, itself symbolic of the Christian faith, will signalize the beginning of what it is hoped will be the greatest evangelistic movement of the century to revitalize the moral and spiritual forces of the nation.

Behind it are aligned the greatest church forces ever marshaled for a single program since the Protestant Churches began doing together what can be done better together than separately.

This places behind the United Evangelistic Advance a potential force of many millions. The 37 denominations estimate a combined total membership of 40,000,000 and the ICRE counts more than 29,000,000 pupils enrolled in Protestant Sunday schools.

The local parishes number at least 150,000 and there are many more Sunday schools than churches. The latest count shows 232,672 Sunday schools.

Conceivably, with this number of potential avenues available, this united evangelistic crusade during the closing months of the first half century may reach more people, and more communities, with the message of the Christian gospel than any previous effort in the history of American Protestantism.

Starting on World Communion Day, the united program will be formally launched by all the participating denominations in a vigorous "go to church campaign" during the month of October and will gather momentum in the subsequent months of 1949 and throughout 1950.

"Fill the Pews" is the slogan that will be used to encourage regular attendance. The importance of this phase of the Advance is underlined by surveys indicating that only about 30 per cent of the nation's 46,000,000 Protestant and Orthodox church members attend services with any degree of regularity.

Another highlight of the October program will be a widespread observance of Reformation Day, Sunday, October 30. Pastors are being asked to devote their sermons to an explanation of what Protestants believe and why. More than 100 communities have planned interdenominational observances.

A detailed report from each denomination is expected next month but in mid-August only scattering and informal reports from a few secretaries were available. For the insight they provide into the tremendous response being made generally by the denominations the following are quoted:

Congregational Christian Churches—Rev. Wofford Timmons, executive secretary of the Commission on Evangelism and the Devotional Life, reports, "Our Commission is behind the United Evangelistic Advance wholeheartedly. This autumn we will hold seven Regional Workshops on Evangelism across the nation. We are making much of World Communion Sunday, October 2, and can be counted on to join in the Church Attendance Crusade in October. Our Commission is training and using the pastors and laymen and women of the denomination in visitation evangelism."

Disciples of Christ—Rev. Spencer Austin, Director of Evangelism, states, "Our communion is making an unusual effort to make these next fifteen months of the United Evangelistic Advance the best it has ever had in evangelism. We began a special three-year program of evangelism two years ago to reach 900,000 new members and to organize 200 new churches. Our 8,000 congregations will make every effort to achieve this great goal during the United Evangelistic Advance."

Northern Baptist Convention—Rev. Walter E. Woodbury, Secretary of Evangelism, states, "The Northern Baptist churches are committed to the program of the United Evangelistic Advance. In fact, we have made this program our denominational evangelistic program for the next fifteen months. We are making great plans for participation in World Communion Sunday on October 2, and the Church Attendance Crusade on the five Sundays in October. Our whole denomination has been alerted to make evangelism one of the dominant enterprises during the next fifteen months."

Methodist Church—Harry Denman, Executive Secretary of the Board, reports, "The Methodist Church has a four-year goal to win two million new members. The United Evangelistic Advance comes within this four-year period. For the next fifteen months, we are seeking to enlist the 20,000 Methodist preachers and eight million members in helping to win America for Christ. The Methodist Church can be counted on to do its full part in bringing about a revival of religion in America."

Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.—Rev. George Sweazey states, "The Presbyterian Church will be a part of the United Evangelistic Advance beginning on World Communion Sunday, October 2. Our denomination can be counted on to participate with all other denominations in all cooperative evangelistic projects. More than 200 Presbyterian conferences will be held to prepare the churches organizationally for evangelism. A national visitation week will be held November 27 to December 3. The present New Life Movement will come to its climax on January 1, 1950, on New Life Sunday. The General Assembly voted recently to continue the New Life Movement after January 1 under the title, 'New Life Advance.'"

A more complete picture of the scheduled interdenominational activity was provided by the calendar in Dr. Jesse Bader's office in the Federal Council building, nerve center of the Advance.

This is what the calendar showed in mid-August:

National Christian Teaching Missions—39, from Florida to California, in the fall months of 1949; 35 during 1950 and five in 1951! These are eight-day missions sponsored jointly by the Federal Council and the ICRE

A THEOLOGY FOR EVANGELISM.

A Sermon

By SAMUEL L. JOHNSON, F. Ph. S.

The last words of famous men are always interesting, but the last words of Jesus the Christ are positively exciting: Go therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all that I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you always to the close of the age.

Here is the urge to Christian evangelism. Here is the basis of evangelism: the proclamation and promotion of faith in Christ and his works for the salvation of man. You must do your share. The command is imperative! "Open in the name of the King! Open! A door into a man's heart and mind. The Spirit is waiting."

Sometimes Christians overlook or seem to forget these last words of the Master, and the program of missionary endeavor within the Christian Church has lagged, and in some cases almost lapsed. In recent days, however, there has been an increased interest on the part of laymen and laywomen in the Protestant Church in the whole program of evangelism. The problem creating greatest interest at the moment is the general Protestant "Advance."

Christian evangelism is the means by which a man is brought into a sense of personal relationship with God through Christ! Evangelism is a mechanism or a method of procedure.

A very crude illustration would be that of the automobile; however, we must divide the automobile into parts—the engine, representing evangelism, and the chassis-body, the evangelized. The fuel we will liken to the power of God. As the gasoline remains in the tank it is inert; but when drawn into a properly tuned or adjusted motor it can be transformed into an energy that will propel the vehicle along the highway.

The energy of God, the person of God, is always nearby and may be drawn upon for health and strength, if one only knows how to do it.

Men practice evangelism because they themselves have come to know this power of God, they've been helped by it. They have been irritated into action and have felt the "peace which passeth all understanding," and become aware of a desire to share all this with their fellowmen. Oftentimes this desire to share is something which the evangelist cannot explain, cannot understand, but he knows, nevertheless, that it is real.

"You'd better go to the 'Kungsholm,'" said a friend shortly after we moved to Chicago, "you'll get one of the best meals served in the city, and one of the finest evenings of entertainment." And he continued to describe in glowing terms the appointments of this restaurant and the excellence of the puppet operas, given after the dinner. Because of the pleasure he had experienced, this friend became a super-salesman for this famous eating establishment. So a man who has felt the regenerating spirit of Christ becomes an enthusiastic exponent of His way of life.

A few weeks ago when preaching from my pulpit I coined the phrase, "a man who has surety has security." The man who has found God through Christ has surety and a comfortable mind.

Evangelism is like a cataclystic agent which brings man and his God together. This is to be taken in two ways: first, it brings the evangelist and his God together, for the evangelist is one who is aware of the purpose of God, aware of God's desire to be accepted into each and every human soul.

Last winter, one cold gray morning, I took a handful of crumbs and flung them out upon the snow, hoping to feed some birds that were perched in one of our cherry trees, then I went into the house and watched. But the birds didn't come down to get the crumbs—they didn't trust me—they were not sure that what I had thrown out was food at all—and the snow drifted over the food that would have given them warmth and health. Again I went out and, wading through a drift put more crumbs in a sheltered spot beneath the tree. After a long time one or two birds did fly to investigate and stay to eat—two or three times they flew back to the others—then again to the bread 'till finally the others came.

God offers, watches, waits, offers again; the evangelist sees the crumbs—recognizes them for what they are—food, life, the fullness of joy in Christ—he eats of the food and uses all his powers to tempt others to eat.

Secondly, it brings the evangelized and his God together. The evangelized, when he accepts God as the controlling factor of his life becomes a "son of God." We are not all "sons of God," but we may become "sons of God" by adoption. Being a "son of God" is a matter of free will choice given by our Heavenly Father to the individual.

One of the major emphases of the evangelist is the gospel of redemption which he knows is the "fountain of renewal for the life of all mankind." It is his earnest hope to see all men as "sons of God."

When one becomes a "son of God," one becomes a new creature. The evangelized is something different under the sun. He is changed from an inactive individual into an active person; from an idle, quiescent, dormant, sluggish soul into an alert, vibrant, lively spirit.

The early church made no attempt to define theologically the title "Son of God," but recognized Christ to be such a person because of his God-likeness and unique relationship to the Father. Christians called themselves "Sons of God" when they came to regard their sonship as similar to His in spiritual significance, but they adored Him as having in Himself a divinity which they could never expect to possess.

A "son of God" is bound to the Father by an exceptional unity with Him through Christ by attempting to make himself in the likeness of the Master. The "son of God" is the ideal man. Hope hangs upon this man—he is the means through which men and Christ meet—he is the means through which salvation can come to this bruised world.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

THE ELON COLLEGE ALUMNI MEMORIAL GYMNASIUM.

I am sure that THE CHRISTIAN SUN readers and our friends will be glad to know of the progress that is being made in constructing our new gymnasium building. To begin with, it is taking more materials than was first calculated which, of course, means increased costs. The original calculations indicated that 450,000 bricks and 1,800 slag blocks would be required. It is now pretty certain that 600,000 bricks will be required and games and public gatherings, there are a multiplicity of rooms for instructors, classrooms, offices, press rooms, ticket booths, lounges, rest rooms, dressing rooms and showers.

A salesman was in the office last week who has been selling equipment for gymnasiums throughout the country. His estimate of the cost of this building was $500,000 to $600,000. When I told him it was costing $200,000, he remarked that it was impossible and unbelievable. The cost of construction has been kept down due

ELON ALUMNI MEMORIAL GYMNASIUM

2,800 blocks will be needed. It was also estimated that the northeast corner would be four feet lower but instead we had to go down eighteen feet to strike a solid foundation. It was necessary to strengthen the foundation with reinforced concrete, four feet thick. This difficulty accounts in part for the excessive number of bricks and blocks. This is an illustration of the necessary requirements to construct the building as it should be. Allowing liberal costs for the additional construction, the total cost of the building will be within $200,000. When you consider the size of the building, the quality and quantity of materials used, the workmanship and everything else, the cost is very low.

The seating capacity for basketball games will be 4,250 and for assembly purposes, 6,000. At present, there are only two gymnasiums in the state whose seating capacity surpasses or equals that of our new gymnasium. In addition to the accommodations for to the fact that the college with but a little additional personnel is installing plumbing and heating facilities and electric wiring. This, of course, is being done by licensed and experienced mechanics and under the supervision of a foreman and the architect. The brick work and roofing were let to competent contractors in mid-summer. These and other steps taken by the administration are giving to us a very fine and well constructed gymnasium at the lowest possible cost.

Even though the cost is exceedingly reasonable, this cost must be met. I know that if the members of the church, alumni, and friends of the college understood the economies that are employed in the construction of this building that everyone would be glad to make a contribution to make sure that the college and alumni would be able to pay all bills promptly and in full.

This is not only a report on the progress made in the construction of the gymnasium but an appeal to our friends and the friends of Christian higher education to join their contributions with ours that we may be able to meet the payroll and pay for materials as received. My friends, it would be good if you would make your contributions now.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The time for the holding of our annual conferences is rapidly approaching. At the instruction of the Convention, our several conferences apportioned definite amounts to their local churches for the support of causes, boards, and the institutions that are supported fully or in part by the churches through the Convention. These apportionments are supposed to be paid in full during the calendar year which means that money contributed after the conferences meet, before January 1, 1950, will be counted on 1949 apportionments. This will be advantageous to the churches. It will give those churches who are unable to raise the full apportionment by the time the annual conferences meet an opportunity to discharge their obligations entirely before a new year begins. The Convention was considerate and generous enough to include Elon College in the apportionments. The churches have been apportioned a total of fifteen thousand dollars for the college. This amount is sorely and badly needed. It is hoped that this amount will be raised and paid to the college through the Convention Office before the year closes. We have a splendid enrollment at the college this year but we face the most difficult budget in the college's history. We shall certainly need the cooperation and help of every individual and every church. Please remember that the college exists only for the interest of the church—not for itself but that it may instrumental in providing capable leadership for the whole program of the church. If the fifteen thousand is to be reached, and it must be, we have a long way to go yet.

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE TO MEET OCTOBER 4.

At 10:00 a. m. on October 4, the North Carolina Woman's Conference will meet in annual session at Long's Chapel Church near Haw River.

The theme for the day will be "We Dedicate Ourselves"—the same theme which women of our denomination are using for the coming year.

Speakers who are expected to appear on the program are: Timothy Chang, Pattie Lee Coghill, Mrs. O. H. Paris, Dr. W. W. Sloan, Baxter Twiddy, Mrs. J. G. Truitt and Mrs. Fesperman from the E. and R. Church in Burlington.

Other persons who will appear on the program to make reports are: Mrs. Kenneth Register, Mrs. Carl Key, Mrs. Mark Andes, Mrs. Russell V. Powell and Mrs. W. J. Andes.

All Congregational Christian women in North Carolina are invited to attend this meeting, and each church is especially urged to have representatives. The local president and the program chairman are two people who should definitely attend. All others who can possibly attend should come and spend a profitable day at Long's Chapel. If you have not already bought your literature for this year, be sure to bring along enough money to purchase some.

EASTERN VIRGINIA WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE TO MEET OCTOBER 6.

Our one-time-a-year Annual Event is at hand. The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference will meet at The Christian Temple on Thursday, October 6 at 10:00 a. m.

What do we have to offer? A day of fellowship, reports, talks and worship. A chance to chat and see old friends.

Who should come? The presidents of societies, members, church women and mothers of children if they can arrange it.

If you want to shop—we hope to be through by 3:30 p. m., and you will still have time. Come, hear Miss Pattie Lee Coghill tell about our Japanese mission study and . . . Just come and see!

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Pres.

THANK OFFERING—1949.

At this season of the year, as we start our youngsters off to school, what a satisfied thankful feeling it gives us to know that they have the security of a good home, that they have the needed supplies, the proper equipment, in fact all that is necessary to make their school days happy and pleasant and profitable. There is nothing that parents crave more than the best advantages for their children. Yet, what we want for our own children we should seek for all children.

Richard Jackson tells us that at the Han Mei Primary School in Shaowu the children do not have even the meager necessities—very few books, pencils, note paper, crayons. They are without proper desks, no library books, with buildings in a terribly run down condition. The school itself is operated and run on funds from the American Board and tuition from the students, but there just isn't enough money to meet all these extra needs. That's where our Thank Offering comes in.

The Woman's Convention meeting last June voted, as you know, that the 1949 Thank Offering should go for the Han Mei School in Shaowu—not for the over-all operating expenses, but for those extras which will be to them a real luxury.

Now, as for the goal we set for ourselves. We certainly do not want to give less than our $3,479.44 offering of last year. We should not even be satisfied to match those figures. We can do better than that. I'd like to see us make it $4,000.00. I believe we can. The women of the Southern Convention have been quite generous toward our Shaowu project and I feel sure we can expect their whole-hearted support in this undertaking.

On these lovely fall mornings as you start your child to school—well fed, well clad, and with all the other conveniences and comforts of life, won't you breathe a prayer for the children yonder in Han Mei School and at the same time drop a contribution in your Thank Offering box that they too may have better advantages and a more abundant life.

Your Thank Offering Committee—Mrs. R. V. Powell, chairman, Mrs. J. D. Strader and Miss Virginia Brinkley—are busy getting together information and preparing the program for your Thank Offering service on November 6. You will be hearing about all the details at your Woman's Conference. In the meantime, watch THE CHRISTIAN SUN for further information.

Mrs. O. H. PARIS, Pres.,
Woman's Convention.

NEWS FROM SOCIETIES. LIBERTY SPRING (VA.)

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Liberty Spring Church have had a very active and interesting year.

In February, we entertained in honor of our young people at church. After an impressive devotional period the movie, "Beyond Our Own," was shown in the church auditorium. A reception was held in the social hall for all members of the Missionary Societies.

We have derived much from the fellowship of worshipping with our sister churches. The ladies of Berea Church studied with us the Home Mission book On Our Own Doorstep; on the World Day of Prayer, we were hosts to the Ladies' and Young People's Societies of Bethlehem and Cypress Churches.

We collected and packed a box of clothing and essentials for the Indian Mission at Fort Berthold, North Dakota, which was joyfully received.

Mrs. J. F. Morgan taught our Foreign Mission book, China—Twilight or Dawn, very impressively and beautifully.

We closed our summer's work with a Vesper Service on Sunday night, August 14, inviting the public. We learned of "God's lessons as shown in Nature," with a very beautiful musical background.

Although we are saddened to have lost three of our members by death, yet we find joy in the fact that we have enrolled six new members to help us in our great missionary work of God's Kingdom.

Mrs. J. E. HARRELL, JR.,
Secretary.

REIDSVILLE.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Reidsville Church has had a good year and is making plans for better work in future years. The four circles have been divided into eight, with good captains for each circle.

A very successful year has passed, with goals reached and offerings sent in to the Conference Treasurer. The Auxiliary sponsored the buying of a pipe organ, which has been installed and is in use. It adds a great deal to the church music.

We are glad to cooperate in the City Council of Church Women, one of our members, Mrs. John Briggs, being first vice-president.

The missionary emphasis was promoted by the Auxiliary in January with Miss Pattie Lee Coghill presenting the study book on China. Pattie Lee was at her best, and everyone enjoyed her program.

Our new pastor, Rev. Tucker G. Humphries, and his wife are a wonderful help in our work and with the young people. The Young People's Missionary Society, Daughters of Ruth, Willing Workers, and Cradle Roll have paid their goals for the year and have made a good record in all their work.

We are very grateful for the privilege of serving God in this good work and pray His blessings on our societies.

MRS. D. E. MITCHELL,
Secretary.

CYPRESS CHAPEL.

Our society has had a very successful year under the leadership of our efficient president, Mrs. J. W. Jones, and reached all goals for the year. We have had regular meetings with well-planned programs each month. We observed World Day of Prayer with the Liberty Spring Church.

The thank offering was held at our church with a good attendance. In May, Mrs. Wallace Brinkley reviewed our mission study book on China. We sent two large boxes of clothing to Harold Case for the Indian Mission at Elbowoods, North Dakota; also $10.00 in cash. We sent a box to Miss Angie Crew in Japan, a box of wash cloths and towels to Franklin Institute, 16 boxes at Christmas to sick and shut-ins, $5.00 to Red Cross, $5.00 for cancer control. Observed Family Sunday—a box to Elon Orphanage.

In June three other mission study books were reviewed at church by Mrs. James Lewter, Mrs. Wallace Brinkley and Mrs. William Proffitt.

Our Spiritual Life leader, Mrs. Grady Brown, has had well-planned devotionals from the Book of Galatians. Our Junior Superintendent, Mrs. Roy Brinkley, has done a good work this year. Also, our Cradle Roll Superintendent, Mrs. J. P. Byrd, had a very interesting Rally in May at the church.

We are very thankful we have no Memorials this year. One Life Membership was given the Agnes Brittle Circle. This Circle, with the leadership of Mrs. R. E. Brittle, has been busy with all duties to be done, and raised money for a lot of needed things in the church work.

Our new pastor, Rev. Earl T. Farrell, and Mrs. Farrell, will join with us as soon as they come, and we hope by the help of the Lord we can go forward and do a greater work this year than ever before.

MRS. W. L. HARRELL,
Reporter.

MT. AUBURN.

The Woman's Missionary Society of Mt. Auburn has just completed another year of worthwhile work for the Kingdom.

We started out last year with the intention of undertaking each obligation requested, as the dates arrived.

We observed World Community Day and World Day of Prayer in connection with the Methodist Church of our neighborhood.

The Home Mission book was reviewed by Mrs. Bernard Munger of Chapel Hill, also with the Methodist ladies, with luncheon served. The book on China was reviewed by Miss Pattie Coghill. Both events were attended and so much enjoyed. We were sorry not to have had the men of our church present also. We sponsored a Christmas program with a Sunday school treat. Also took up the Thank Offering publicly as suggested.

We have sent some cards and flowers to sick and bereaved persons near us. We all use the Upper Room in our private devotional reading and think it is fine.

We used the Envelope of Helps, and what a help they were!

One of our members interestingly presented the Bible Study on Galatians each month.

We attended the Spring Rally and hope to be at the State Conference in October.

As we look forward to a new year of further endeavor we ask God's blessing on all Kingdom work.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

The Michaelmas daisies are blooming, their pretty purple, pink and white heads are nodding a hello to fall. Many people are raking their leaves and in the evening we smell them burning, smoky and nose-tickling. The last roses are blooming too and look even more lovely than the first ones in spring.

Now is a good time for drying flowers. Dried flowers make interesting winter arrangements. Late hydrangeas, straw flowers, sea lavender, and other flowers may be used. Pick in bunches, tie a string around their stems and hang them in a dark, even-heated place until thoroughly dry. Leaves to be used or ferns should be pressed between clean sheets of paper with heavy weights on top. Seed pods, milkweed vine and pods, lantern plants and many other things may be used to make interesting arrangements. Colonial Williamsburg specializes in this type of flower and has as lovely winter bouquets as summer ones. A small bowl with dried flowers can add to your Sunday school room or worship center. Handle them carefully to avoid shedding.

If you live in an apartment house or some place where you can't pick or dry flowers there is a fall treat for you also. You can make Apples on a Stick. They are favorites at the fair, at parties and for nibbling. This recipe is for a large amount; divide in half for a few.

8 apples (red preferred)
2 cups of granulated sugar
2 cups of brown sugar
1 cup of vinegar
1 cup of water
A dash of salt

Wash the apples and cut out stems. Stick in skewers (wooden sticks that you can buy at meat counter of grocery store) or old popsickle sticks. Mix sugar, water, vinegar, salt in a pan and boil rapidly until the syrup is brittle when dropped in cold water. Holding apples by stick dip and twirl until coated in syrup. Let dry on waxed paper.

A CHILD'S RIGHT TO BE HEARD.

By JANE CARPENTER.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"That little visitor across the street has the grace of a fairy," remarked my sister Helen. "With her golden hair and fluffy white dress she might easily be the 'Fairy Queen of the Garden.'—Oh—but see what she is doing!"

"Yes, I do see," I answered. "She is pulling off the heads of Mrs. Jobs' border marigolds—and she is tossing them one by one into a basket. Where is Mrs. Jobs, I wonder—or the child's mother?"

I stepped to the telephone, but the line was busy, and I returned to the open doorway. Another tiny child had joined the first. Now two were bent on beheading marigolds—no, on looking closer, I saw that the newcomer was no respecter of blossoms; other flowers were losing their heads. However, this evidently displeased the "fairy." We could not hear what she said, but she must have been expostulating, and with good effect, too, for after that only marigold heads were dropped into the basket.

"I'm going over there," said Helen.

Again I tried to reach Mrs. Jobs by telephone, but the busy signal still sounded, so I gave it up and followed my sister across the street. Before either of us reached the children, however, the "fairy's" mother appeared.

"Mirriam Stone Matthews!" she exclaimed. "What are you doing?" Then, after watching a yellow head make its way to the basket, she followed it, looked in, and was filled with dismay. "You naughty child! You shall be severely punished for this. Go to our room and wait there until I come," she said. Then, seeing two strangers, she asked courteously, "Were you looking for Mrs. Jobs?" She gazed with fresh apprehension into the basket as she added slowly, "She went to town to deliver a lecture on The Parent Is Responsible."

"Oh yes, I remember about that lecture now," said Helen. "We live across the street, Mrs. Matthews, and seeing with the children were doing we came over. But may I beg you to give Mirriam a chance to explain before you punish her?"

"What possible explanation could excuse such—such vandalism?" she answered with renewed indignation. "Mirriam is over six years old, and, although we live in the city, she has been taught to appreciate flowers."

"Then I think there must be some explanation," replied my sister. "There was another child here—"

"She ran off as soon as punishment was mentioned," I interrupted.

"This other little girl," continued my sister, examining the contents of the basket and picking out a fragment of a forget-me-not, "was pulling off the heads of other flowers."

"Yes, I corroborated, "and the 'fairy' stopped her."

"The fairy?" questioned her mother.

"That is what we called Mirriam," I said. "We did not know her name and she looked so dainty and graceful."

"An ill-disposed fairy, I'm afraid," sighed Mrs. Matthews despondently.

"I don't think so," persisted Helen. "Has she been away from you at all, lately?"

"She was at my cousin's for two days last week," was the answer. "But—well—would you like to question her? I'm afraid I'm too upset."

"Yes, I'd like to do so, very much," said Helen. "Please call her down."

Mirriam's face was tearstained

Youth at Work in the Church

ANN TRUITT, Editor; HELEN JACKSON, C. B. TWIDDY, Assoiates.

A LAST REMINDER!

The Eastern Virginia Young People's Missionary Conference will be held Wednesday, October 5 at 8:00 p. m., at Suffolk Christian Church.

A very interesting program has been planned and I hope all our young people will attend.

HARRY LEE WEAVER,
President.

LIBERTY SPRING YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Liberty Spring are very happy to report a year of splendid work under the efficient direction of our Superintendent, Mrs. R. Wesley Harrell.

We held all of our monthly business meetings, with a well-prepared program and spiritual life lesson taught at each meeting.

We held our thank offering program in November.

The young people presented David Brown Harrell and his choir in a public program in December.

At Christmas we went caroling and gave 15 boxes of fruit to shut-ins in the community.

Youth Week was observed by the young people. Sunday school was conducted by the young people for two Sundays. They also helped conduct the regular church service with a special sermon to the young people by our pastor, Dr. I. W. Johnson.

We were guests of the Woman's Missionary Society at a special program and social. A movie, "Beyond Our Own," was shown at this time. The women left out no detail in order to provide an enjoyable evening for us.

We observed World Day of Prayer with the Woman's Missionary Society at a public program.

We were host to the Youth Fellowship at their spring rally.

We were invited to Cypress Chapel to hear our home mission study book taught. We were invited to Bethlehem to hear our foreign book taught by Mrs. Thomas Woodward.

The young people had charge of a public sunrise service at the church on Easter Sunday.

As our Friendly Service project we sent $10.00 to the Indian Mission in Elbowoods, North Dakota.

The Missionary Society paid one member's way to Junior Camp at Crabtree.

We gave a Life Membership to Mrs. James Lynch, a former superintendent.

We not only helped in missionary work but helped in improving our church. The main improvement was an electric fan in the church.

As we come to the close of the year we feel, as we look back, that we have much to be proud of.

We ask God's blessings on us as we continue our work with enthusiasm.

PEGGY BRADSHAW,
Secretary.

NEWPORT NEWS JUNIOR C. E. SOCIETY.

The Junior Christian Endeavor Society of Newport News, Virginia, would like to share a few of their activities for the past year.

We meet each Sunday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock and have our regular meetings. These meetings consist of worship and discussion. One of the Juniors leads the meetings and the rest participate in some way.

At Christmas we prepared a box for the sick children at the Buxton Hospital. The box contained crayons, color books, story books, games and other articles.

We celebrated Christian Endeavor Day on February 2, with a special program followed by a C. E. birthday party.

Our regular business meetings are held the first Sunday in each month.

We had our mission study book on Puerto Rico reviewed to us in May by Mrs. W. B. Williams.

In June, one Wednesday afternoon, we met at the church and rolled over 300 bandages and sent them to the Ryder Memorial Hospital in Puerto Rico. After that, we went to Huntington Park for a picnic.

We do not meet regularly during the summer months, but we do have a full program the remaining months of the year.

During the past week we received a "thank you" letter from Ryder Memorial Hospital. It seems the bandages were very much needed. This is only a small job, so if you would like to do the same, it would be much appreciated.

GRACE SPIVY,
Superintendent.

WILLING WORKERS, WINDSOR, VIRGINIA.

The Willing Workers of Windsor Church meet on the third Sunday of each month. There are twenty-seven members and attendance is usually very good. Dues are collected from the members and a collection is taken up every third Sunday from members of the Sunday School. A total of $35.83 has been sent to Mrs. Williams this past year.

We have completed two mission study books, Mingo of the Merry-Go-Round and Dike Against the Sea. Everyone enjoyed these.

We have sent a box to Miss Angie Crew containing Christmas cards, lesson pictures and stories.

We are now collecting money to buy a share in Morning Star VI.

We are looking forward to another good year. MARIANNE STEELE, Leader.

MT. CARMEL JUNIORS.

The Junior Missionary Society of Mt. Carmel Congregational Christian Church has been divided into two groups this year—the "Smaller Group" and the "Teen Age Group." We had to do this because of space. We have found it worked out fine, with both groups working toward the same end—an Honor Roll Society.

We have had our study books taught for the year. At each meeting we studied two or three chapters. I think the children have enjoyed these books. They can appreciate more the high standards of living the boys and girls in America enjoy.

At Christmas, instead of exchanging gifts at our Christmas party as in previous years, the boys and girls wrapped their gifts and we mailed them to the Christian Orphanage for the boys and girls there.

In July the Juniors enjoyed a weiner roast and swimming party at Culpeper pool.

On Sunday morning, August 21, the Juniors held their public meeting. They presented to the church a play, "House Cleaning." The theme of the little play was "Soul Cleaning."

The Juniors have met all requirements for the year and also taken out a Life Membership for Mrs. J. Frank Morgan, our former pastors' wife, whom we all loved as we did Mr. Morgan.

With good leaders, prayers and encouragement in the years ahead. I feel these children will do a great work in spreading God's Gospel over the entire world.

THE MORAL BASIS OF TRUE WORSHIP.

LESSON II—OCTOBER 9, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Cease to do evil; learn to do good.—Isaiah 1:16, 17.

LESSON: Isaiah 1:10-20; Jeremiah 7.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 24:1-6.

Worship May Be Meaningful.

Man engages in no higher enterprise than when he worships the living God. It is life's supreme quest. For worship at its best is an intimate, personal relationship between the soul and God, an experience of friendship between God and man. Such an experience cleanses, renews, uplifts, empowers, sustains, delights the soul of man, and if we are to take the words of Jesus please God, for Jesus said that the Father seeks those who worship Him in spirit and in truth. Men neglect worship at their peril and at great personal loss.

Worship May Be Meaningless.

Alas, this most meaningful act of man may become most meaningless. It can become a dull and deadly thing. It can be cold and formal and dead. One may go through the forms thereof but miss all the uplift and the power thereof. Indeed that which ought to be a means of grace, can become a snare and a stumbling block. For worship must be wedded to morality if it is to be vital. Worship without a moral basis is worse in a way than no worship. This does not mean, of course, that a man must be perfect before he worships, but it does mean the forms of worship do not mean anything apart from an effort to live uprightly, and the proper attitude of mind and heart on the part of the worshipper. True worship calls for a lot of heart-searching. True worship produces a lot of changes in character and conduct.

Isaiah Has Something to Say About Formal Worship.

As was suggested in last week's Notes, religion flourished in Isaiah's day, and worship was practiced on a large and an elaborate scale. Burnt offerings and sacrifices were offered in abundance and profusion, feasts and solemn assemblies multiplied, prayers filled the heavens, and worship was given a foremost place in the religious life of Israel. But alas, it was all meaningless and worthless, because it had no sound moral basis, it was divorced almost completely from life. Worship had become a substitute for right living, prayers were substituted for performance, and ritual had taken the place of righteousness. The people worshipped as a form of religion, but they did not work at their religion. Their ways were evil, they were unjust to their fellowmen, they were greedy for gain, they took advantage of the helpless, their hands were full of blood. It was all sham and shame.

And the man of God told them so. He did not mince words. He did not spare any. "Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah" he boldly proclaims as he begins his biting and bitter denunciation of his fellow-countrymen. That was strong language—comparing these people, supposedly so religious and in their eyes, so good, to the people of Sodom and Gomorrah, people who represented the worst and the wickedest manner of life of an early civilization. It must have stung them to the quick thus to be branded with this nasty name. Then the prophet portrays Jehovah as being actually nauseated and sick at His stomach at the whole business. He wants no more of their burnt offerings and sacrifices, no more of their oblations, no more of their solemn feasts, no more of their prayers, until they have been washed from their sins, until they have stopped their evil ways, until they have ceased to do evil and have learned to do well, until their religion had found expression in kindlier feelings to their fellowmen, and in humane service to the underprivileged. Jehovah demands obedience and not sacrifice. And true to His gracious nature, He invited the people to sit down and talk things over with Him, assuring them that although their sins were as scarlet, they could become as white as snow, if they repented and turned to Him in sincerity and in penitence. But He warned them of the consequences of their continued disobedience and rebellion.

Jeremiah Has Something to Say About Formal Worship.

A hundred years later, Jeremiah was dealing with the same curse of formalism in religion. Then, as in Isaiah's day, religion was a form, but it had no power. It was a kind of good luck charm, a fetish, a rabbit's foot. For instance the people thought that because the Temple was in Jerusalem no harm could come to them. "The Temple of the Lord, The Temple of the Lord, The Temple of the Lord," they would chant almost as a good luck charm. And as in Isaiah's time they performed elaborate rituals and took part in elaborate ceremonies, but lived unrighteous lives. Jeremiah's arraignment crackles with the divine wrath after all these centuries. "Will ye steal and murder and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and turn incense unto Baal, and walk after other gods whom ye know not, and come and stand before me in this house which is called by my name and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations?" God bluntly tells them that they have made his house of prayer a den of thieves. But He has seen it. "Well, what of it," they might ask.

Let them go back to history. Let them see what happened at Shiloh years before. There the people thought that the presence of the Ark would save them, but they suffered a humiliating defeat, and the Ark was taken. No, religion is not a good luck charm that work irrespective of the morals of the devotee of religion. Merely chanting the name of God, or going piously through the ceremonies of religion, are no substitute for right living. Again the clarion call comes for obedience, for correspondence between profession and performance, for the spirit of worship rather than the mere forms of worship.

What About Us?

All this has meaning for us today. There is always the danger that religion will solidify into forms, and become nothing but formal. There is always the danger that men will divorce religion from morality. There is always the danger that men will worship to please God on Sunday and then live as they please through the week. There is always the danger that men will think that religion has magic and is a rabbit's foot that will give them immunity. For instance there are people who think that the fact that there is a church in a village or town means God's special favor and protection, regardless of how the people live. There are people who think that there is some value in having a Bible in the home or on the living room table. There were men who thought that there was absolute safe-the discernment of the church leaders themselves. It is in this point of program enlargement that the churches' ministries to the community are here considered in correlation with church programs and those of other agencies for human betterment.

PRACTICAL EVANGELISM.

THE SUN'S PULPIT.

Jesus was the great evangelist. Like John the Baptizer He came preaching repentance. Repentance in the Greek sense of the word meant a complete change of mind. Often we confuse the word repentance with the word penitence, but penitence means something entirely different—it suggests that one becomes sorry for what one had done. Jesus did not preach penitence—he preached repentance.

Mere sorrow for sin is not enough: Judas was sorry enough to kill himself, but that only showed that he was not truly repentant. Many persons are sorry enough that they are in prison, but that is because they were caught and does not prove they would not do the same thing again. Peter, on the other hand, "wept bitterly" then became a new man.

The word "conversion" implied something similar to repentance, for it implies the transformation of the old man. Paul pictured this change by saying, "When I was a child I thought as a child, but now that I have become a man I have set aside childish things." New birth means salvation, the deliverance from sin and its consequences. Therefore, the evangelist tries to bring about a genuine repentance, a sincere determination to forsake sin and obey God, an at-one-ment with Christ.

The process of evangelism is the working of a great change in the heart of the sinner. Evangelism is the means whereby the evangelized is impregnated with the Holy Spirit.

With the entrance of the Holy Seed the evangelized feels growing within him a new power to do what is right in the sight of God. The former love of sinning is replaced by the love of God, the pleasing of the self yields to the pleasing of God and "behold all things have been made new."

The new creature lives on a new spiritual food; in a new spiritual world; enjoys new relationships, new companionships, feels new desires.

Evangelism is the means by which one passes, or rather is passed from death into life and gains a blessed sense of regeneration making one capable of keeping God's commandments. It is not to be wondered at that the greatest satisfaction that can come to the practicing Christian comes when he is able to institute this process in the life of a non-practicing Christian.

Evangelism may be a continually expanding process. I think I can best point this out by an illustration, once used by Dr. J. H. Jowett: "Someone gave Richard Baxter a tract one day—he read it and through it was brought to Christ. He in turn, wrote a book entitled A Call to the Unconverted which brought many others to the Master, among them Phillip Doddridge. Phillips Doddridge wrote The Rise and Progress of Religion which led many into the Kingdom, among them the great Wilberforce. Wilberforce wrote A Practical View of Christianity which evangelized a multitude, among them Legh Richmond. In his turn Legh Richmond wrote a book called The Dairyman's Daughter which was instrumental in the conversion of thousands." The process may begin in a small way but grow into a many branched tree.

Backslidding on the part of the evangelized is a very easy thing. All too often men come to think that once an individual has been evangelized that that's all there is to it. But, just as water evaporates from an open glass, so the power of God may be drawn away. In work and play it may be consumed and evangelism must continue to replenish, build up within the soul of the evangelized, new spiritual power.

One of the duties of Christians is to labor with one another. We owe that labor for the satisfaction we derive, for the peace of mind that has been ours as "sons of God."

In this whole process it is most gratifying to know that indeed God is faithful on His side, and that it is only on our human side that anything ever becomes disorderly. The task of the church is to put man in the way of the revelation of God that man may come out of his disorder into order. Evangelism is an agent of reconstruction. Through it a new world is made known to the man, by an ever reoccurring procession of vision.

Evangelism is the power which opens the doors leading to God. Or we may speak of it as a pipe through which may flow the creative nature of God to be poured upon dependent, frail, and sinful man that he may have a complete change of life, a whole life.

To be a part of this process, whether in the capacity of the tool of God, the evangelist, or the soul worked upon, the evangelized, is a blessing, a means of redemption.

The church is the body of Christ on earth—but we, the members, are the hands, the fingers, the feet, the toes. We are her voice. It is through us that the work of the church is carried on. The great commission was not given to churches, rather it was given to individuals who make up the church. The church cannot carry on a program of evangelism, the church cannot draw people to Christ, cannot bring men and women into the very presence of God, cannot make them "sons of God," unless we do these things as individuals. Evangelism is a personal process and must be conducted in a personal way. The members of the church must be the "leaven which leaveneth the loaf."

"Go, therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all that I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you always to the close of the age."

FOR THE CHILDREN.

when she made her appearance, but my sister has a wonderful way with children, and before long she and the little girl were chatting merrily. Finally Helen said, "Did you have a nice visit with your cousin?"

"Yes," she said. "I did. We—" Then looking up at her mother she once more burst into tears. "Cousin Bertha said we should always take off their heads," she sobbed.

Helen thought a minute. "Were they dandelions?" she asked.

"Yes, dandelions—yellow, like those," pointing to the basket.

"Those are marigolds, not dandelions, Mirriam. Marigolds make pretty borders and don't send tiny, winged, mischievous seeds over the lawns as dandelions do. Come, and we'll see how many nice buds are almost ready to open. Soon there will be a row of new yellow blossoms."

"Os, I'm so thankful I didn't punish Mirriam," said Mrs. Matthews, as soon as the child was out of hearing. "I shall tell her I'm sorry I misjudged her. One should always give a child a chance to explain—I know that. But, dear me, what will Mrs. Jobs say?"

"She lectures on Child Development," I reminded her. "This little incident will be worth much more to her than thousands of marigolds."

She smiled understandingly. "I hope you're right," she said.

The Orphanage

MY DEAR FRIENDS:

Our children are in school. What a pretty sight it is to see them all cleaned up freshly and calling to one another as they go out across the railroad to school. The public school here is crowded just as it is almost everywhere but our boys and girls are fitted in. We go all the way from some of the best students in school to—oh, well, not everyone can be "best." It is a real thrill to have them crowd around me at times on the campus and tell me about their good grades. One young lady said: "Dr. Truitt, you notice we only tell you about the good grades." I laughed and told her that a great many of her elders were like that. I told her it was called "putting the best foot forward," but I reminded her that if we were going anywhere much we would need two good feet—it is that other foot that makes a great deal of difference. By the way, if any of you are feeling "blue" just come around and let a half dozen of these bright, happy children get ahold of you all at one time and put a little of God's "other sunshine" in your soul.

Is there any need to tell you that 73 pairs of shoes go on 73 pairs of feet. They have to be good, strong shoes. They go so many places, and most of them are handled pretty rough by their little wearers. We want our children—yours, your and mine—to look like the other children, and not to feel repressed, embarrassed or backward. The other day I drove by the school grounds at recess time. Two little orphans were standing together, alone. Parents gone, no home but this, and lonely. Such must not be if we—you and I—can help it. "Christ has no hands but our hands to do His work today." His hands are sacrificial hands.

Among our hundreds of friends who delight to give to the welfare of these children there are two kinds of giving—that which furnishes clothing, food, and daily goodwill and wealth of spirit; and that which upbuilds the capital investments in better housing, better farming and better dairying; as well as that which gives for more efficiency in better equipment in kitchen, laundry, storage and conservation of food of all kinds, in farm machinery and in keeping our excellent dairy up to its proud A-grade standard. Many wise givers have set up a definite program of giving to both these aspects, namely, the daily consumption and the permanent investments. We stand in need now of both such gifts. Thank you for your good will, prayers, and your contributions. I thank you in behalf of the boys and girls here who have asked me to do so.

EVANGELISTIC CRUSADE.

to develop a four-fold program: (1) a one-day community-wide religious census; (2) a self-study by each church of its program, resources and responsibilities; (3) a fellowship cultivation program; and (4) expansion of the church program to care for the enlarged membership.

Visitation Evangelism—21 communities in 1949; 32 cities and towns in 1950. This means a door-bell pushing crusade by scores of Christian laymen to reach the community's unchurch, an effective form of personal evangelism.

University Christian Missions—14 in the fall of 1949; 13 during 1950, under the sponsorship of the National Committee of the University Christian Mission, a joint effort of the Federal Council and the United Student Christian Council. It carries a message of religious emphasis to youth on the university and college campuses.

Teen agers will not be overlooked. Many high school missions are planned. Chaplains of the Armed Forces and preaching missions will carry the Gospel to servicemen in army camps and naval bases and other missions will be held in jails and prisons.

One of scores of Protestant preachers and evangelists who will participate in preaching missions that will travel from city to city, Dr. E. Stanley Jones will visit Danbury, Connecticut, October 2-7, starting point of an itinerary that will take him to ten communities from coast to coast during the fall. The famous Methodist evangelist also is scheduled already for 17 preaching missions in 1950.

Mindful that "prayer changes things" the preachers upon whom fall much of the burden of the Evangelistic Advance are planning to share in a fellowship of prayer each Saturday during the 15-month crusade. The hour of prayer for the preachers of the nation will be from 8 to 9 o'clock. In addition it is expected that prayer cells and prayer groups will be organized by laymen in hundreds of local churches.

The magnitude of the challenge facing the United Evangelistic Advance will require the active participation not only of the men and women whose lives are dedicated to the church, nationally and locally, but also of thousands of lay men and women. For example, the National Christian Teaching Missions, this fall, each requiring 30 men, mean that 1,170 men will be needed for this phase of the program alone. More than 200 men will provide the leadership for the scheduled Visitation Evangelism programs and 10-man teams conduct the University Christian Missions, a total of 140 needed this fall, or a total of more than 1,500 for these three interdenominational phases of the Advance.

The genius of the program of the United Evangelistic Advance is that it may utilize in any community both the denominational and interdenominational approach. The denominations have joined in developing a common approach and each is committed to carrying it out in its own parishes across the land. In addition, all the participating churches, in any community may, as they see fit, jointly work together in carrying out some phases of the program. Whether working together or separately the direction is always forward.

DIRECTOR OF CHURCH WOMEN.

Miss Edith L. Groner, former YWCA executive director, has been named administrative secretary of the United Council of Church Women, in charge of finance and work with administrative committees, it was announced by Mrs. W. Murdoch MacLeod, executive secretary of the organization.

The United Council, with offices in New York City, represents 10,000,000 American church women of 83 Protestant denominations.

Before assuming her present post, Miss Groner spent a year as executive director of the YWCA in Des Moines, Iowa, and 14 years as director of the YWCA in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. She was active in local councils of church women in both cities.

In Harrisburg, Miss Groner was chairman of the Status of Women committee of the Women's Society for Christian Service of the Grace Methodist Church and served on a similar committee for the American Association of University Women.

Miss Groner also helped organize a group of civic and church leaders in Harrisburg in the 1930's to work for world peace.

Born in North Tonawanda, New York, the United Council's new secretary was brought up in Syracuse, where her father, S. B. Groner, was YWCA secretary for nearly 30 years.

A graduate of Syracuse University and the National Training School of the YWCA in New York City, Miss Groner has attended most YWCA national conventions since 1922 and has attended international educational and religious conferences in Switzerland, Denmark, England and Canada.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

ty for them in war if they carried a New Testament or a crucifix with them into battle. There are those who think that our nation is supreme and secure because we are a so-called Christian nation. There are, to bring it closer home those who think that because they go to church or say their prayers or give alms or perform their religious rites according to form, that they are pleasing God. But these things, desirable as they are, may be but forms. It is easier to give than it is to live. It is easier to say prayers than it is to pray. It is easier to perform religious rites than it is to live a religious life. True religion makes searching and high demands on the soul. Only the grace of God is sufficient for these things.

Evangelism, Door to Door

CANVASS OF HOMES IS KEY TO "ADVANCE"

By H. H. McCONNELL

The early church won its phenomenal victories because it was a witnessing church. The message of the redeeming love of God in Christ was so new—so amazing—that they could not be silent about it. Over the ancient world echoed the cry, "We cannot but declare the things that we have seen and heard." Their authentic experience of Christ and enthusiastic witness about it ran like an electric shock through a tired, jaded and hopeless generation. Those undiscouraged witnesses would agree with a modern disciple that "'Impossible' is a miserable word that should have no place in the vocabulary of a Christian." They would not be daunted or denied. They shook their generation from center to circumference. When they appeared in a community men said, "These who have turned the world upside down are come hither also." That message still has its ancient power and such thrilling victories today wait upon the development of a witnessing church.

The United Evangelistic Advance seeks to provide the channel through which that kind of witnessing will be increased to a great swelling tide. There have been stupendous developments in that field in recent years. The various communions through their Departments of Evangelism have trained a great army of men and women and youth and sent them forth to "speak a good word for Jesus Christ." It is a conservative estimate to say that more than a million men and women have shared in this program and have discovered a new sense of missions as well as a new joy in their own Christian experience.

A year ago a young man graduated from the Seminary. He went into a new residence district of a western city. He had no nucleus at the beginning. He gathered around him a few men and trained them to be witnesses. Two by two they visited the homes of the community to tell the story of Christ and His church. When the church was dedicated after a year's labor, it had three hundred and fifty members and people were turned away from the first service in the new building.

A layman came to his pastor after he had participated in a Lay Visitation Campaign and said, "I want to keep this up. I think I can make a living for myself and family by devoting four hours a day to my business. I want to give the other four hours to the Lord under your direction." What has been the result? During the last three years that layman has won an average of 200 people annually for Christ and His Church.

Such thrilling stories could be multiplied across the church. If the story of this army of a million witnesses could be told it would read like a modern "Acts of the Apostles." Our earnest prayer is that the vitality and power of this movement will not be lost in the mechanics of organization. Prayer must be at the heart of it all.

We are stressing the fact that this is no mere campaign for church membership. Witnesses are to go forth to share their experience of Christ and to seek to bring others under the sway of His life and spirit. Strong emphasis will be put upon adequate training for church membership and drawing these new people into the inner fellowship of the church after they have made their commitment.

Columbus Day

(WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 12)

By REV. ARTHUR BARDWELL PATTEN
Claremont, California

Columbus Day still holds a wide world vision,
That links the East and West,
A challenge to high venture and decision,
In man's achieving quest.

Now no new continents remain untaken—
Columbia you are last,—
So may you dream of nobler deeds, and waken
To prospects yet more vast.

Be yours the vision of World-Federation,
The sacred trust and plan,
To realize the global consummation,
The Brotherhood of Man.

Your ships have multiplied on every ocean,
And now they fill the skies,
To sail beyond Columbus' wildest notion
The airways of surprise.

Of all your ships which is the best and rarest,
Which bears the richest freight?
A hundred million voices answer, "Fairest
Is your own Ship of State."

O Ship of State, outdo Columbus' daring,
Explore the comrade world,
Sail on, all autocratic aims for swearing,
Old Glory still unfurled!

Sail on, sail on, across all seas and airways,
Sail on to bless the earth,
And make the crossroads of the nations fairways
For Freedoms brave new birth!

News Flashes

The Executive Board of the Convention meets on Tuesday, October 11, at 10:00 a. m., at Henderson, N. C.

On October 1, Miss Pattie Lee Coghill began her work with the Convention as Educational Secretary. Miss Coghill will serve all the interests of the Convention as a field worker.

Attendance at Timber Ridge Church increased from an average of 91 to 126 at morning worship through August and September at regular services.

Because of ill health Rev. B. J. Earp has resigned the High Point Church as of October 31. Rev. Weldon T. Madren has been called to, and has accepted a call to succeed Mr. Earp.

Congratulations to Rev. Robert A. Whitten, Winchester, Va., on the beginning of his fourteenth year as pastor of our Winchester Church. The church has prospered under the leadership of Mr. Whitten and he and Mrs. Whitten have filled important places in the Valley Conference.

Supt. Scott visited the New Hope-Beulah-Oak Level Pastorate in the Eastern North Carolina Conference on Sunday, September 25, to assist them in obtaining a pastor to succeed Rev. Thos. D. Sutton, who has resigned to become pastor of the Seagrove Pastorate in the Western North Carolina Conference.

Dr. H. S. Hardeastle taught in a Training School in Virginia Beach the last week of September, 26-30, sponsored by the Virginia Beach and the Oceana Methodist Churches. He and Mrs. Hardeastle were entertained in the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Manson, former members of The Christian Temple. Mr. Manson is now Superintendent of the Sunday School of the Virginia Beach Church, and is a member of the City Council. Mrs. Manson is active in the woman's work of the church, and is President of the Woman's Club of Virginia Beach.

On Wednesday evening the Reverend David McKeith, Jr., will give the address and will be installed as the Executive Vice-President of the American Board.

GOING TO CONFERENCE.

Eastern Carolina Delegates who desire overnight entertainment should notify Mrs. C. L. Austin, Southern Pines, North Carolina.

Eastern Virginia Delegates who wish overnight entertainment at Conference should notify Rev. W. Stanley Carne, 117 Greenway Drive, Portsmouth, Virginia.

AFTER THIRTEEN YEARS.

By REV. ROBT. A. WHITTEN.

[Message preceding the sermon, to the congregation of the Winchester Church, Sunday, September 25, it being the last Sunday in thirteen years of continuous service as pastor and people together.]

Today marks the end of thirteen years of continuous service together as pastor and people. It is a day that stirs my heart with sacred and holy memories. Looking back, we find disappointments and failures, mistakes and sometimes, misunderstandings, for which let us seek God's forgiving mercy. If, however, mistakes and misunderstandings were for the progress of the church and the glory of God and not for vain or selfish ends these may be instruments in God's hands to advance His kingdom.

Your minister is grateful for the growth and development of your church. He is deeply appreciative of the loyalty and love that you have given your Lord through our labors together. The job that your pastor has done, though imperfect, has been done with one purpose: for the glory of our God and with an effort to win precious souls to our Lord Jesus Christ. It has been a happy service, even though at times there have been shadows. God has richly blessed us.

If now, after thirteen years, you have found God more real, Christ as your Lord and Master, and your fellow creatures, however broken by sin, as worthy a place in the fold of God's love, then we can gladly leave the result in the unerring hand of Him who doeth all things well.

Some of the details of the service your minister has rendered I submit as follows: sermons preached—1,399; addresses delivered—145; 217 souls have made a profession of faith in Christ; 250 souls have been received into fellowship of Winchester, Timber Ridge and Timber Mountain Churches; 196 of this number were received into the fellowship of this church. Your minister has conducted during the years of ministry to this church 146 funerals, and baptized 118 persons.

The foregoing are but a few of the duties of the minister. There are social, economic and domestic problems to be solved. There are many times when counselling is sorely needed. In every case where your pastor could render the least service, he did so in the name of our blessed Lord and with the consciousness that he was representing you, for it is you who make this ministry possible to those who seek his help.

A GIFT TO HOLY NECK CHURCH.

As a tribute to, and in loving memory of, his father and mother, Mr. Walter C. Rawls of St. Louis Missouri, gave a gift of several hundred dollars to the Holy Neck Church this summer. Such a deed is a lovely thing to do. It shows one's appreciation of the faith of their parents, the spiritual upbringing, and is a tribute to the power of the church besides. Here is a son who has been blessed with a good personality, a good business mind, and a Christian training remembering "the rock from whence he is hewn." Could his parents follow the path of their son's relationship to his own—the Pilgrim Congregational Church of St. Louis, where he is a trustee—and could they follow the path of his gifts to worthy religious and church enterprises they would rejoice in the fact that in it all he did not forget their old home church. Mr. Rawls has remembered many persons and enterprises in appreciation of the fact that God has blessed him, given him a lovely home and fine sons, and blessed him with ability to serve his family and others unselfishly as a good steward. Holy Neck is my wife's home church, and has been a sanctuary of inspiration and grace to many generations.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

BISHOP BRENT ON UNION

Charles Henry Brent was an Episcopal Bishop in the Philippines and in Western New York. His influence was felt far and wide through his books. He died in 1929. One of his comrades wrote of him: "The love and homage that a company pays to one of its noblest banner bearers is in itself a high thing. He embodies the ideal they do not reach, strive as they will. And when he departs, they cry out against oblivion, 'Keep his memory green!' And a further nobleness ensues: they know now that he was not just theirs. Proud though they are that he was born of them, they are purged of their possessiveness. They let him go. He belongs to all mankind."

The oft-quoted statement of the Bishop was: "The world is too strong for a divided church." Now the Bishop, like Confucius, said many things that were worth quoting, and one of his major points of emphasis was that of church union.

Ponder a few additional quotations from the writings of this modern prophet:

... We must have unity, not at all costs, but at all risks.

... The unity of Christendom is not a luxury but a necessity.

... Do not be deceived, without unity the conversion of great nations is well-nigh hopeless.

... The way to recover unity is to practice fellowship.

... Unity of heart and hands among the churches is the sole hope for the Great Peace.

... The world will go limping until Christ's prayer that all may be one is answered.

... A unified Church is the only offering we dare present to the coming Christ, for in it alone will He find room to dwell.

Our denomination is one of the few great Protestant laboratories for the testing of these self-evident truths. Thank God, ours is not a "closed shop" system. Congregational Christians may find invaluable inspiration and guidance from the writings of an Episcopal Bishop.

THE CHURCH AND THE CHURCH PAPER

Did you read the list of Sun subscribers and quotas in our September 22 issue? Were you proud, surprised or disappointed when you read the number of subscribers in your own church?

Congratulations to Chapel Hill, Berea (Norfolk), Little Creek, Pfafftown and Winston-Salem, who exceed their quotas. Pleasant Cross in the Western Conference has reached its quota. Thirty-five churches, according to this report, are without a single subscriber to their church paper. Imagine! God will certainly hold us responsible for our sins of omissions as well as our sins of commission. There is reasonable assurance that subscribers could be secured in these churches if the pastor or some designated person were to promote our church paper.

We are part of a great family or fellowship and we like to know what the other members of our church family are doing. Knowledge creates interest and points the way to progress. Through the columns of our church paper we are kept informed about the church at large and the important things that are happening in other areas. This enables us to gauge our programs of progress by the example and achievements of others.

Should we have more subscribers in your church? If so, perhaps you are the person to help get them. Thanks to many Sun representatives who are doing a grand job.

MORE POWER TO CHAPEL HILL!

Some of our pastors send copies of their church bulletins regularly to the editor. Many of our news items come from this source. Some of these items receive editorial comment. It would help us greatly if other ministers would put the editor on their regular mailing list for all church publications and announcements.

The United Builder is an occasion publication of our church in Chapel Hill. The September issue is printed in good taste and carries information of special interest to students in the University. Since there is no Disciples nor E. and R. Church in Chapel Hill, the following statement is pertinent:

There are usually about seventy Congregational Christian students, one hundred and twenty Disciples of Christ students, and thirty Evangelical and Reformed students on the campus. If you are one of these students, this congregation wants to extend its ministry to you.

The publication lists the services of the church which includes a number of unusual and interesting features: a Christian Education Institute and a Better Churchmanship Forum. A Service of Worship, a Church Directory and an Invitation to Membership round out the contents.

The Rev. Bernard V. Munger is beginning his third year as pastor of the church. During the two-year period of his ministry all indebtedness has been paid off, a new furnace has been installed, new electric wiring installed, the outside woodwork of the church has been painted, the contract let for the repair of the belfry, and a considerable amount of new Sunday School and kitchen equipment has been added. During the same period, the amount of financial aid received from denominational sources has been reduced over fifty per cent, while the benevolent giving has increased over fifty per cent.

Do you have a son, relative or friend in school at the University of North Carolina? Be sure and speak to them about our church in Chapel Hill.

Faith Missions

By KENNETH J. FOREMAN.

"They reported how God had been with them, what he had done, and how he had opened a door into faith for the Gentiles."

—Acts 14:27 (Moffatt).

The word "faith" is more glamorous than the words "Presbyterian" or "Baptist" or "Episcopalian." It is also more profound and more important. So the "Faith Missions," some of which run, in effect, a direct competition with the missionary work of the established churches, have the edge on us when they come before the Christian public for support.

But don't let the insinuation get past you that ours are not faith missions just as much as any that use that specific label like a trademark. Faith enters into our denominational missions at every point. Take our own Presbyterian Church, US, for example. In her very first days she declared her faith that her divinely ordered business is to preach the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth. It took faith to say that in the midst of flaming war, ringed around by contracting walls of steel. In the bitter years after defeat, it took even greater faith to follow up that declaration with action.

Those who believe in missions always have to breast the undertow of popular opinion, even in the church, that does not understand either the motive or the purpose of missions. When the first missionaries went out, there were any number of people in the church who thought they were wasting their time. Our own first missionary to Japan, and our first to Africa, went against the judgment of some of the leaders of the church. Every one of our missions has been opened in the face of opposition, sometimes even from official sources.

At the present moment there are young missionaries under appointment by our church who will sail this fall in spite of parents who tried to hold them back. That calls for faith. In this time of wars and rumors of wars, when the always-unstable world seems less stable than ever, it takes tremendous faith for any missionary of any church to suppose that he can be maintained where he is another twelve months. To say nothing of the constant need for faith in the missionary's daily life, there come special crises, as when the children have to be sent home for their education, when old age or illness come on and retirement seems necessary, when armies sweep an established station to rubble, when the young church has to be turned over to less experienced leaders—crises when all the faith of a lifetime is not more than is needed.

But the faith is not all on the part of the missionaries. The Committee (we should now learn to say, Board) of Foreign Missions itself goes on faith. Never at the beginning of a year is there what a business man would call a guarantee that the money will be forthcoming to support our existing projects, let alone make any advance. The appointment of every new missionary calls for a good deal of faith on the part of the appointing officials. Who knows whether they can stand the stress and strain of the mission field? Other promising young people have failed; will these? But the church has faith in her missionaries, both new and veteran. Much of our mission policy is determined by the decisions, plans and forecasts, in short, by the wisdom, of the older missionaries on the field. How do we know they will not make dreadful blunders? We just have faith that God will guide them.

No "faith" mission can ask or claim more. Now it is true, some of these claim to show more faith than we, in two ways: they "never ask for money," and they have no invested funds. As for the invested funds, we, like many other denominations, have thousands and thousands of dollars in stocks and bonds here and there (see the annual reports), bringing in more or less steady returns. If this is lack of faith, then let all who claim to have faith refuse to put their money into banks and never take out life insurance! As a matter of fact, it takes a good deal of faith, in these times, to hope for returns from any investment. If it is a sign of lack of faith on the part of the Board of Missions to have a nest-egg, then it is a sin for an individual to go around with as much as ten dollars in his pocket. Ten dollars is not much of a start; and neither is the Board's income from investments much of a start on what we hope to do.

As for asking for contributions, the claim that the "faith" mission never does it, as a quibble. A certain little girl of our acquaintance never tells her parents in the middle of the night that she wants a drink. She only says,

"I need a drink." If you tell people you need money and hope to get it, and if they know very well that you hope they will contribute, it makes no difference whether you say "Please give" or not. Anybody can understand the sign-language of the passed hat.

So when the representatives of some faith mission come your way, as come they will if you give them encouragement, you have the right to say to them, "Fine! But I am already contributing to a faith mission, the one my own church operates. When ours ceases to be a faith mission, look me up again."

But we should also thank the faith-missioners for reminding us of the importance of faith. For above all, the enterprise of missions calls for faith in our Lord—the belief that "he is faithful that promised."

In the face of the world's evil, choking in the indifference of the church itself, challenged by pagan cultures older than our own, harassed by the rivalry or distorted forms of Christianity, the bravest must at times cry out, Who is sufficient for these things?

What right have we to hope? It is not faith in ourselves, after all, not faith in the church, or in our youth; it is faith in God that really counts. And it is not even our faith that wins, it is the God to whom our faith looks up, who works in us both to the will and to do of his good pleasure.—The Presbyterian Outlook.

NIEMOELLER CONDEMNS BACKWARD LOOKIN CHURCHES.

"I could not tell you how often during the last few months I have thought of that saying of St. Paul's addressed to the Churches in Galatia, 'Ye did run well; who did hinder you that ye should not obey the truth?' Apparently once again all we want is security. Anybody engaging in conversation with a Social Democrat or two is suspect; anybody talking to Communists as if they were human beings to whom the Gospel is addressed is beyond the pale; 'Christianity' is becoming once more practically the equivalent of a bourgeois society looking at the past. In the constitution of the EKD we find the words, 'Confessing Church,' tucked away . . . and it is hard to find them. God grant that even yet a community may exist, may arise, for which it is an inescapable duty to be truly the 'Confessing Church.' "—From a volume of essays The Confessing Church Stands Again published in Germany.

CHRISTMAS GREETINGS FOR OUR EUROPEAN FRIENDS.

Thousands of our Christian friends in Greece, Italy, France, Germany, and England will not only have no Christmas but will go hungry on that day unless you and I do something about it now. The Congregational Christian Service Committee, 110 E. 29th Street, New York 16, New York, is prepared to send food parcels overseas for distribution to worthy families at Christmastime. The price of these food parcels is $5.00. These contributions may be credited to your church on the Relief and Reconstruction program. If you would like to share the Spirit of Christ by providing food and Christmas cheer for those less fortunate than you, please send $5.00 to the Christian Service Committee directly or to the Southern Convention Office. Please indicate clearly the name of your church so credit may be given. We hope many of our people will respond to this opportunity to share with others at this time.

THE UNITED EVANGELISTIC ADVANCE IN THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

It is earnestly hoped that many of our churches of the Convention observed "World - Wide Communion" on Sunday, October 2, and in that service or otherwise launched its program of sharing in the United Evangelistic Advance to run through 1950.

The participation in the United Evangelistic Advance signalizes the beginning of what it is hoped will be the greatest evangelistic movement of the century to revitalize the moral and spiritual forces of the nation.

Behind the United Evangelistic Advance are aligned the greatest church forces ever marshalled for a single program among Protestants. Thirty-seven (37) Protestant and Orthodox denominations with 40 million members are engaged in this great crusade for Christ and the Church. Cooperating in this Advance are 150,000 local churches and 232,672 Sunday schools.

Three major emphases of the program of Evangelism should be noted: It is a united movement. It is evangelistic. It is designed to be an advance. The moral and spiritual forces of our land need to be filled with the vitality of the Holy Spirit if we are to cope with the numerous evil forces which threaten to destroy all that is sacred, and then we need to bear witness to our faith in more effective ways.

The churches of the Southern Convention need to be committed to this United Evangelistic Advance. Our record in evangelism ought to stab us awake to the fact that we are not "about the Father's business." We have better church buildings, a more capable ministry, and a better financial record. We have thus become "more respectable" but have we grown spiritually? Our record of a net gain of 27 in church membership for the whole year of 1947, and only 1,043 received by confession of faith in 1948 by all our 197 churches with 34,278 members clearly reveal the need for a revival of religion in the Southern Convention.

Participation in the United Evangelistic Advance will give us a stimulation and program which we need. In this Evangelistic Advance churches will seek a revitalizing of the life of their members. Churches will be asked to re-examine their present facility for fulfilling their Christian commission to "make disciples of all." A rigorous self-study by each church is designed. Each church should take inventory of its spiritual state and its record. Each church is asked to make a complete religious survey in cooperation with other denominations or by itself, that the church may know what it is doing, what it is failing to do, and what remains to be done, if that church is to keep its claim of "being of the Body of Christ."

The program will urge each church to promote regular church attendance by its members, and to identify with it all the people in its community who have no church relationship. In it will be promoted an aggressive program to reach uncommitted and unchurched people. In the Advance each church will be asked to intensify its teaching program in the Sunday school that our youth may be brought to Christ, committed and trained up in the faith.

Let us of the Southern Convention find our way of engaging ourselves earnestly in the United Evangelistic Advance, and by a new dedication to Jesus Christ let us go forward!

WM. T. SCOTT, Supt.

TO THE LAYMEN'S FELLOWSHIP OF THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION.

GREETINGS:

We are happy to send some information we think will be of help to you in promoting laymen's work in the Congregational Christian Churches of the South. We are especially anxious that this be of help to you in formulating your plans for celebrating Laymen's Sunday, October 16.

There is a great task ahead for the Laymen of our church. Too many of us have neglected our responsibility and, in many cases, we have watched our church lose its influence in our community.

If we can arouse our Laymen to the cause of the church, the next few years can see a revival of interest and accomplishments that will amaze even the most optimistic. We must learn that the paid employees of our church cannot do all that is to be done if the influence of our church is to be felt as it should in our community. It is a sincere hope of your Laymen Fellowship officials that the information contained in this booklet will serve as a means to challenge you to do more for your church.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE D. COLCLOUGH,
Laymen's Chairman.

ELON COLLEGE, N. C.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

ANOTHER STEP FORWARD.

Shortly after the turn of the century there was only one telephone in Elon College Community. This was installed in the home of the late Dr. J. O. Atkinson, then editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and a member of the Elon College faculty. Later, the Reverend L. I. Cox installed a community telephone system for the convenience of the citizens of the town. The Central Carolina Telephone Company proposed that if the community system would be turned over to them that they would connect the system with the switchboard in Gibsonville which would give the college and community contact with surrounding communities and the outside world. The company served Elon College for a number of years. Subscribers could talk with other homes in the community and Gibsonville without charge but any call to Burlington or elsewhere in the county was counted as long distance and regular long distance charges were made. This arrangement was unsatisfactory. Through long years of negotiation and insistence, the Central Carolina Telephone Company agreed to sell its franchise and equipment to the Southern Bell Telephone Company. The Southern Bell Company agreed to buy. The transaction was consummated during the spring months and they began working toward the installation of a new telephone system for Elon College. The system was completed as of Wednesday, September 28 at noon so that at present, telephone subscribers in Elon College may talk without charge to any other community in Alamance County. This is as it should be.

There has been great interest in this forward step by the community. A banquet was held Wednesday evening, September 28, as a congratulatory jesture to the Southern Bell Telephone Company for coming into our community and giving us the advantages of the dial system. When we want to talk beyond our community all we have to do is to dial "seven" and then dial the number desired. The officials of the company announced at the banquet that 259 phones had been installed. There is a private telephone exchange located in Elon College. The company bought a lot, erected a building, and installed the necessary equipment. It is all automatic. This effort on the part of the telephone company cost the company $68,500.00. Indications are that the number of telephones in this community will exceed three hundred by Christmas.

I know that this sounds impossible to those who were familiar with Elon College Community prior to 1945 but you have known little of the community since. George D. Coleclough, Secretary of the Burlington Chamber of Commerce, stated yesterday that Boone Station Township in which Elon College is located was the fastest growing township in Alamance County, that during the last four or five years more than two hundred new homes have been erected in this immediate community. In addition to these new homes, by the assistance of the Government, Elon College has sixty-six family units for the accommodation of married veterans who are in college. This, together with the new homes erected, multiplies the population of our community over again.

A good telephone system is essential to the progress of any community. The telephone has proven to be the forerunner of progress along all lines for any community in our state and nation. Elon College is fortunate and grateful for this new convenience.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Our churches in the Southern Convention should remind themselves that apportionments for the college this current year total $15,000 which is $2,500.00 more than last year. Naturally, you would expect that the contributions for the college thus far would be proportionately more. To the contrary, the total is more than two hundred dollars less. This would be disturbing but for the loyalty and interest of the churches themselves. Since this apportionment has been voted officially, I am confident that it will be paid. The college's obligations are rather heavy at this time of the year. There are so many things to be paid for. It would be of great convenience and considerable help if the Sunday Schools and churches would begin now to pay their apportionments in full for this calendar year. The college is conscious of its indebtedness to the church for its support and is most appreciative of any assistance given.

NEWS IN THE WORLD OF RELIGION.

The leading English-speaking denominations in South Africa—Anglican, Congregational, Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Churches of Christ—have jointly set up a School of Theology, Livingstone House, at Rhodes University, Grahamstown. Two years ago four of these denominations established cooperatively a department of divinity at Rhodes University College, with an English Congregationalist as professor. The number of students increased so rapidly that a full-time Church of Scotland minister was added. There are also part-time lecturers for the Anglican, Presbyterian and Methodist sections. One Dutch Reformed student has been enrolled.

"A great sense of loneliness has gripped the American people," says Dr. Louis H. Evans, Hollywood (California) Presbyterian leader. "Seventy per cent of our population has moved to other cities since the last war. They have broken ties of church, kindred and community. They feel no one cares. The church must pursue these migrants of body and soul to every trailer, middlesex village and farm, hamlet and city with the love of Christ. New churches must spring up everywhere as hearthsides for the souls of men. The burden of the heavy taxation in this country arises largely from our failure to change the human heart. Education, secular, increases our capacities for destruction while yielding us few safeguards against the destructive functioning of our clever minds. Of all the billions of dollars, skimmed off the people's money in taxes, not one dollar of it may be used for the maturation of the

LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

Shaowu, Fukien,
May 11, 1949.

DEAR FRIENDS:

If I live to tell the tale, this experience of being liberated by the Communists will probably prove to be unequalled in my experiences thus far in thrill and excitement. My adrenal glands have surely been getting a workout. I wrote to you on Sunday about the sudden turn in events and about the evacuation of Leona Burr, Dorothy and Lewis to Ershihtu mountain summit, some twenty miles from Shaowu. The next day, all the troops left and Shaowu became almost defenseless. The radio reported Communist columns coming south into Fukien from Chekiang and Kiangsi. Local rumors reported bandit gangs headed for Shaowu for the purpose of looting and pillaging before the Communist troops got here. The latter were the greater to be feared.

On Tuesday night, the secretary to the county magistrate came to my house to listen to the radio. He listened to the Communist broadcast from Nanking and said to me, "Things are really bad. We will probably leave soon. Do you want to evacuate with us?" "No," I told him, "I am staying by. Aren't there local soldiers here?" "Yes," said Mr. Tsung, "there are about 300 but their guns are no good and they have only two to three rounds of ammunition apiece. If a few bandits appear, they will shoot once and then flee. Aren't you afraid?" I tried to explain to him that we Christians placed our faith in our Heavenly Father and didn't need to fear. "I've been wanting for sometime to learn something about Christianity," he said. If I get through this experience I will come back later and ask you to tell me more about this faith that doesn't fear danger. I'm scared to death and I'm going to run." As this attractive young man passed out into the night little did I dream that that was probably the last I would see of him. Orders came that night for the local government to flee. The next morning the remaining local soldiers with their useless guns and few rounds of ammunition left with the government workers. The gates, which once had been so carefully guarded, were opened wide. I was a bit apprehensive as I had been led to believe that with the military gone, local bandits would appear immediately.

The next morning (May 11) I discovered why the local government left. "Kienyang," it was reported, "forty miles from Shaowu, had fallen." A student coming from that city reported looting and pandemonium. Residents had largely gone and Nationalist soldiers coming from Chungang, had helped themselves to what they wanted. When the telephone office reported that the wire was out and no calls could be made to Kienyang, people generally assumed that the city had fallen. The radio has not reported this yet, so we have no way of knowing whether or not it is true.

One of the most difficult things about this kind of situation is that there so many rumors and no one knows what to believe. I have heard reported from many sources that American, British and Japanese troops have arrived in Tsingtao by the thousands and are intent on driving the Communists out of China. One day we heard that a person we knew had evacuated. The next day he appeared and said he had no intention of going. Mr. Chang Wen Wei says he thinks about two-thirds of Shaowu residents have gone, but who can tell. When the majority of people are illiterate, when there is little or no contact with the outside world and where there is no local newspaper, rumors strike like fire at the heart of the people. Not knowing what to believe, they believe the worst and flee.

We naturally want to protect, if possible, our household things and the things useful in our work such as the organ, slide projector and mimeograph. Therefore, I prepared a closet which will be difficult to break into and put two locks on it. I added one thickness to the door. Everything which we consider indispensable, we put aside.

In case bandits come to loot the house, I have prepared for them also. I have in the attic of our house a cot, a book and food for at least two days. I have the materials on hand to barricade the door so that I think it will be hardly possible for them to get up to me. The Shaowu residents have buried many of their possessions and others have put their things in the homes of poor people. The wealthiest people and leaders in the Kuomintang have all gone—some to Foochow—others to the country. Those leaving, not able to carry things with them, have sold what they could and as a result prices have hit a new low. Because of the currency situation—no one has money to buy. Pork is now 12½ cents (US) a pound. One silver dollar (about 80 cents (US)) will buy 70 eggs.

On Monday, May 9, a letter arrived from Dr. Matthews, our China secretary now in Foochow, which was a follow-up to a telegram he had sent a week before advising us to evacuate to Foochow immediately. When the telegram arrived, we decided that, if possible, we wanted to stick it out here. The Communists have broadcast that they would protect the lives and property of foreigners already here. But, so far, they have been unwilling to permit foreigners to go back into Communist territory or to move freely about. Therefore, we reasoned, if we go out now, even to seek the comparative safety (?) of Foochow, we might not be able to get back up to Shaowu at all.

When Dr. Matthews' letter arrived, I called in some of our Christian leaders. I told them about the situation and that Dr. Matthews suggested that we evacuate, perhaps to Japan until things settle down a bit. They pointed out that we could probably not get out now if we wanted to. The boats had all been commandeered by the soldiers and the boat with the truck battery on it had not yet arrived from Foochow. They also said that, except for the danger from local bandits, the prospects for Shaowu seemed pretty good. As there were no soldiers here, there is not likely to be any fighting. They hoped we would stay.

It is my guess that soldiers coming from the North will go first to Kienou, Nanping and Foochow and only later come to Shaowu. The hardest part of this whole affair is the endless waiting and the uncertainty. People are all sitting or standing in groups talking over the latest rumors and wondering when they will come. Remembering Communist atrocities of the early 30's, the Shaowu people have reason to be afraid.

So, standing by our post, we are hoping and praying for the best. Several nights ago when things

WOMEN WORKING TOGETHER.

The women of the world are working together. At least the church women of the world seem to have caught a vision of what can be accomplished in the name of our Christ when we cooperate—work together on a given project with a single purpose. Any busy woman of the Southern Convention who would steal time out to read the pages of a single copy of The Church Woman would be convinced that a great deal is being accomplished by the united efforts of the church women of America. By the way, this little publication can be purchased from the United Council of Church Women, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York 10, New York, for $1.00 per year. It is filled with helpful and inspirational articles concerning matters of interest to church women.

The purpose of this article is to call attention of society presidents and program leaders to program plans and suggestions for the Three Special Days we try to emphasize especially.

It is sincerely hoped that these days can be observed in cooperation with churches of other denominations in your own community. In cases where this is not possible, won't you make a special effort to secure the program guide for your own group. The programs are inspiring and the gift projects are always those, to which when we contribute we feel ourselves enriched, because we have helped those less fortunate than ourselves.

Because of the growing demand for program materials for the Special, it has been necessary to place a deadline for mailing. Won't the societies of our Southern Convention cooperate by ordering before the deadline and by using the materials to plan programs that will help our women to feel themselves a part of the glorious and wider fellowship? Following are the dates and deadline for mailing:

World Community Day, November 4, 1950—deadline: October 21.

World Day of Prayer, February 24, 1950—deadline: February 10.

May Fellowship Day, May 5, 1950—deadline: April 22.

NEWS FROM WOMEN'S GROUPS.

WINDSOR.

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Windsor Christian Church has enjoyed some very interesting programs during the past year. We were so happy to have Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Morgan with us the first part of the year. They were such an inspiration and help in all work. We hated so much to give them up. Mrs. Morgan conducted our public meeting the fifth Sunday night in January. She gave an unusually interesting talk on China.

During Youth Week we entertained the Young People of our church at a supper.

We observed World Community Day with the other churches in town and packed towels to be sent overseas.

We were delighted to have Mt. Carmel and Antioch to meet with us and observe World Day of Prayer. The film strip, "March of Missions," was used in connection with our program.

A box of clothing, etc., was sent to the Indians in Elbowoods, North Dakota, as the Friendly Service project.

Mrs. J. M. Raby, the Spiritual Life Leader, has made the study of Galatians very interesting and helpful this year.

Our society was saddened by the death of two of its members during the year—Mrs. Lorenzo Bailey and Mrs. Janie R. Fulgham.

We are now getting ready for the year 1950. We have our material and packet and have appointed the program committee to have the programs ready at the beginning of the new year.

MRS. C. E. FULGHAM.

HAW RIVER.

Our society, with the leadership of Mrs. Artelia Pool, our president, has had interesting and inspiring programs during the year. We used the packet prepared by the superintendent of literature in these programs.

At a special meeting in April, the ladies of the society served a covered dish supper and invited all members of the church as their guests. Following the supper, Mrs. Pool introduced Mrs. W. W. Sloan of Elon College, who reviewed our mission book On Our Own Doorstep. In connection with her discussion on Puerto Rico, she showed movies which she and Dr. Sloan had made while on a recent visit there. This was a most enjoyable occasion for both society and church members.

In May, Rev. Earl Farrell, pastor of our church at that time, gave a most interesting review of our mission book, China—Twilight or Dawn.

In June, a recreational program was held in the form of a Chinese party. Chinese games were participated in by the group. Delicious Chinese refreshments were served.

We sent two delegates to the School of Missions at Elon College. Our society gave one Life Membership. For Friendly Service, we sent clothing to the Indian Mission in North Dakota.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: Mrs. Artelia Pool, president; Mrs. J. C. Wilkins, vice-president; Mrs. E. N. Byrd, secretary; Miss Pearl Smith, treasurer; and Mrs. Lillian Garrison, reporter.

As we begin our new year, with the theme, "We Dedicate Ourselves," we shall strive to dedicate ourselves truly to Christ, who is our Lord and to the Church, which is His body.

Publicity Chairman.

APPLE'S CHAPEL.

As we come to the close of our third year in Mission work, there is a feeling of joy mingled with sorrow—joy because we have had a delightful fellowship in our work, one with the other—sorrow because we have not done more for our blessed Master and those less fortunate than we are.

The Thank Offering service was held at the church under the direction of Mrs. Homer Andrews.

Towels were packed for World Community Day, World Day of Prayer was observed on March 4 with two denominations cooperation. Mrs. R. E. Apple had charge of the service. May Fellowship and Family Life Week programs were given with Mrs. J. T. Andrew, leader. Spiritual inspiration was given the group by Mrs. P. L. Summers, Bible Study Book Leader.

The Home Mission study book On Our Own Doorstep was reviewed by Mrs. W. W. Sloan, Elon College, N. C. The Foreign Mission study book China—Twilight or Dawn was reviewed by Mrs. R. E. Apple.

A Life Membership was given to Miss Mary Thomas, a charter member. Clothing was sent to the Mission at Elbowoods, North Dakota. A Christ-

A RIDE FOR AUDREY.

When the sun began to shine, Audrey's eyes were already open. It was her birthday—three years old! She climbed over the side of her bed and skipped to mother and daddy's room. With one plop she landed in the middle.

"I'm three! I'm three!" Mother, sleepy-headed and snuggly-warm, rolled over. "Three?" Audrey pounded on mother and daddy, "It's my birth-birthday." "So it is," said daddy.

By breakfasttime Audrey wanted to see her presents. But she had to wait. After breakfast she looked at her cards. Some had feathers on them—ducks with tail feathers. One had a monkey who tipped his hat when Audrey pulled a little string. Audrey thought this was a lovely day.

At lunch time her birthday cake appeared. It was frosted white and had three pink circles of frosting. Atop those sat three fat marshmallows and in them were stuck the pink candles. Daddy helped with blowing them out. Audrey ate her slice of cake carefully and enjoyed every bit of it. Next she opened her presents: a plaid raincoat from mother and daddy, a dress from one of her grandmother's and socks from another. Last of all she opened a big box that had a fluffy, furry, toy cat. Audrey rubbed him over so gently.

Mother asked daddy, "Ready now?"

"Yes, I think so."

Audrey wondered what they were going to do. Mother soon told her. "We are going to take you to ride on a pony. Would you like that?" Audrey thought about it. Three was growing bigger but she felt afraid of animals that were so much larger than she. But she went with them in the car to the place where a man kept lots of ponies to ride. Some were small and gentle, some were larger and liked to gallop and trot.

After watching awhile, Audrey decided to ride. Her pony was named "Lucky." He was white with brown spots. His harness was polished and trimmed in silver with red glass ornaments. The man lifted her onto the saddle, put her feet in the stirrups, and fastened a belt around her waist.

"See, little girl, you can't fall," said the man. He handed the reins to daddy who led "Lucky" and Audrey around the circular track. At first she felt as if she would fall, but soon Audrey liked to ride. She patted "Lucky's" soft and sleek back. She nodded and swayed as they walked. Three times around they went.

Audrey threw back her head and laughed, "Look, mommy, she called, "three times to ride for three years old."

IMPROVE CHILD BEHAVIOR BY SUBSTITUTION.

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"What shall I do with Donald?" asked a young mother. "For three mornings he has crept out of bed very early and taken all the things from his father's brief case and scattered them over the room. Each time he was punished, and he still goes ahead with the same naughty act."

I asked quickly, "Why does his father leave his brief case within Donald's reach? Evidently the child's interest in the brief case and the temptation to look inside and then to play with the contents were too strong for him."

Then I tried to explain to her how I felt about it. "Donald is only three years old," I said. "Why not put the brief case out of sight—so that it will not be a temptation? Why not put something else where he will find it in the morning—a box of pictures, for example; it should not be crayons, for those he might use in an undesirable way."

"But Donald has to learn that he musn't touch things that do not belong to him!" his mother insisted.

"Yes," I replied, "but so great a temptation for so young a child should be avoided. We must help him; children have to creep before they climb. Why not put the brief case where Donald cannot find it? This would prevent disobedience and remove the need for punishment."

I was very much interested in this little boy, and the next day I made up a small box of playthings from the ten-cent store and took it to his mother for his early morning amusement. The brief case was forgotten, and, because he had plenty with which to occupy himself, he did not get into mischief.

There is another side to this situation. Young fathers and mothers have something very important to do, and it should be done—not always the easiest way, but the right way. It is well to let Donald have a toy in his crib with which he may entertain himself in the early morning. If, however, he gets up, the parents should take turns in getting up with him. Of course, the parents want to sleep, but there is a job to be done—the most important in the world—character building.

The activity of the mischievous child needs constant supervision—his energies need outlets, and he should have frequent opportunities for change of play. After a while he will become stabilized. It takes time, and it takes patient, unobtrusive guidance on the part of parents.

Froebel said, "Let us live with our children." That with is an important word. As used here by Froebel it means in sympathetic understanding of.

Not long ago we had a sweet little four-year-old with us in the car. She had been playing mud-pies in our back yard, happy as a lark. As she stood on the seat of the car, I turned

MID-CENTURY CALL.

Enlistment of a million Protestant youth of a thousand communities during 1950-51 in a Mid-Century Call to United Christian Youth Action was approved by the North American Council of the United Christian Youth Movement, meeting in Westerville, Ohio.

Before final adoption, the plan will be reviewed by the International Council of Religious Education and member denominations.

In addition to reaffirmation of faith and enlistment in volunteer service and evangelistic projects in local communities, the nation, and the world, the million young people will contribute $1.00 each to raise a special fund of one million dollars to be administered by the U. C. Y. M. and the I. C. R. E.

A score of new projects are proposed. Included are: work camps in Europe, the Philippines, India, and Latin America; international exchange of youth leaders; youth participation at strategic international meetings; reconstruction and development abroad in youth work; a national radio or television program; series of seminars on the church's ministry to youth; peace action caravans; national mission on Christian vocations.

Started in 1934, the U.C.Y.M. has been a coordinating agency of the youth of 40 denominations, 34 state councils of churches, and 16 national agencies. Development of this plan accelerates the trend toward more effective united youth action among all these denominations and agencies.

U.C.Y.M. has had an annual budget of $78,000. This new plan will expand its activity by several times.

The slogan proposed is "One in a Million." The enlistment will be held during Youth Week of 1951.

Democracy in Japan means movies, Coca-Cola, holding hands, and many other new things, declared Rev. Robert Tesdell, who just returned from a five-month tour of Asia and Europe.

Because the occupation has not been able to give the Japanese a true understanding of democracy and Christianity, the missionaries are trying to divorce missions from the occupation, stated Mr. Tesdell in his report to the North American Council of the United Christian Youth Movement, of which he is social action secretary.

"Christian youth of Nagasaki and Hiroshima think the new world peace movement ought to start there," he observed.

Having studied work camps and church youth work in more than 10 nations, Mr. Tesdell concluded that communism sows its own seeds of destruction. Reaction has begun to set in.

"Our problem is not communism, but people who want a fair share of the world's goods," he pointed out. "There is a better day ahead if we care enough to show the love of Christianity in our lives."

BELEW CREEK YOUNG PEOPLE.

The young people of Belew Creek Church met September 15, 1949, to reorganize and elect officers for the next six months. Miss Lura Neal was elected president; Miss Jean Martin, vice-president; Miss Margaret Neal, secretary; and Miss Edith Pegram, treasurer. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Fuller who have worked loyally and faithfully with the young people this year were chosen as the adult counselors. The program committee with Jean Martin as chairman consists of the following persons: Miss Ruby Neal, Miss Faye Neal, Miss Ann Crim and Miss Sue Pegram.

It was decided that every two months a social would be held on special seasonal occasions. Instead of meeting on Sunday evenings as formerly, the group will meet at 7:00 p. m. each Thursday evening. This is a fine group and we look forward to its growth in Christ Jesus.

SALEM CHAPEL YOUNG PEOPLE.

The young people of Salem Chapel, Walnut Cove, North Carolina, recently met at the church to reorganize its youth fellowship and elect new officers for the coming six months.

Miss Joe Ann Johnson was elected as president; Miss Mary Marshall, vice-president; Mr. Jimmy Stevens, secretary; and Miss Darlene Marshall, treasurer. In addition an entertaining committee and program committee were designated.

At the last meeting, Tuesday, September 13, there were 19 young people present and an interesting program on "Race Relations" presented.

Mr. Abe Gerry is the adult counselor.

We are well pleased with the response and interest shown by the young people.

FORSYTH YOUNG PEOPLE'S RALLY.

On Sunday, September 25, 1949, from 4:00 to 8:00 p. m., the young people of Forsyth County Congregational Christian Churches held a rally at Lake Waussickett between Walkertown and Walnut Cove, North Carolina, on highway No. 361. The rally included the young people from Winston, Pfafftown, Salem Chapel and Belew Creek Churches.

Miss Lura Neal, from Belew Creek, assisted by the pastor, had charge of the program. The program of worship had Mr. Baxter Twiddy as the main speaker. Baxter has visited Europe during the summer and did work in camps there. He told us of his experiences and the existing conditions as he saw them.

A weiner roast was held from 5:30 to 6:30, followed by campfire songs and the closing devotional period.

She looked at me with squinty eyes, as if she had never seen me before, and replied, "I'm not talking now!"

I might have laughed at her. I might have reprimanded her. Instead I exclaimed, "Oh, look at that beautiful blue jay!" This diverted her, and she was herself again and was happy all the rest of the drive.

The offices of the Japan International Christian University Foundation will move on October 1 from the present location in the Church World Service Building, 214 East 21st St., New York, to more commodious quarters in the Kenny Building, 23rd St. and Fourth Ave. The address will be 44 East 23rd Street, New York 10, New York. The move, which is being made to meet the need for additional space and a more central location will give to the Foundation twice the room it has at present and place it within a few feet of the subway and two bus lines.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

GOD AND THE NATIONS.

LESSON III—OCTOBER 16, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Look unto me, and be saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else.—Isaiah 45:22.

LESSON: Isaiah 1:21-28; 10; 13; 19:19-25; 31.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 9:1-11.

Officer, What Is the Charge?

Israel stood before the court of the Lord. Isaiah was the prosecuting attorney. He was giving a bill of particulars. He boldly stated that Israel was guilty. He spoke in language that though figurative, was clear and understandable. Jerusalem had become a harlot. "How is the faithful city become a harlot! From of old God had referred to the chosen people or to the nation in terms of wedded life. He was espoused to Israel. Hence he had a right to expect that Israel would be true to Him, even as a husband has a right to expect the wife to be true to him, and for that matter as the wife has a right to expect the husband to be true to her. But Jerusalem had broken her vows—the faithful city had become a harlot. Isaiah, speaking for God, gave a bill of particulars. She had formerly been full of justice and righteousness, but now she lodged murderers. Her leaders had become proud and rebellious, and they consorted with thieves. Bribery was common, and leaders and people alike were concerned with rewards regardless of how they came by them. The rights of children were flaunted and disregarded and the cause of widows received no attention whatever. On every hand there was compromise with moral ideals, and mere formality in religion. There was only one verdict—guilty.

The Sentence.

"Guilty," pronounced the Lord of hosts, the Mighty One of Israel. And He pronounced sentence upon the guilty nation. Disciplinary action would follow. God would purge away the dross of the nation's life, and take away their impurities. It would be a painful process, even as if by fire. It would not be the arbitrary act of a vindictive God, or mere petulance on the part of a disgruntled deity. Such punishment as came upon the nation would be the result of the sins of the nation. Thus does the judgment of God work on the individual and the nation.

"O Assyria, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is mine indignation"—Jehovah is speaking in Isaiah 10:5. Strange words indeed. Assyria, a heathen, godless ruthless nation, the instrument of Jehovah in executing the divine sentence, in effecting the divine judgment. God works in mysterious ways. It has a modern touch. What about World War II? Could it not be that it was God's judgment on the nations. Could it not be that Nazi Germany with her pagan philosophy of life, her theory of the "master race," her blatant nationalism, and her vicious leaders, were the "rod of God's anger," instruments of God's hand working out the natural results of the sins of the nations. Hitler was a symptom, not the whole cause of the war. Nations in their relations with other nations had become nationalistic, greedy, suspicious, ambitious, rebellious against moral restraints. And the workings of the law of the harvest are as inevitable concerning nations as they are concerning individuals.

Reformatory Punishment.

All of God's discipline is reformatory. In the same breath in which Isaiah pronounces judgment on Israel for her sins, he promises hope for the redemption of the city of Jerusalem. Whereas the faithful city had become a harlot, under the disciplinary hand of Jehovah, she would become "the city of righteousness," a faithful town. Zion was to be redeemed with justice, and her converts with righteousness. But those who persisted in transgression and unrighteousness would be consumed. Out of the crucible of World War II have come some things that give promise of better things to come if the nations but learn their lessons.

God of the Nations.

One of the greatest contributions which Isaiah made to his day and to our day was his emphasis upon God as the God of all the nations. Israel knew that God was the God of Israel. Israel knew that the other nations had their gods. It remained for Isaiah to declare the fact unequivocally that not only was God the God of Israel, and also the God of all the nations, but that beside God there were no other gods. This was a milestone in the religious pilgrimage of the race. This was an epoch-making word. God is the supreme ruler of the nations. Nations as well as individuals are subject to His sovereignty and are answerable to Him for their action. His will is law. His demands are absolute. Disobedience to His laws inevitably brings punishment.

All this is also pertinent to our modern world. Referring again to Germany and her rulers it needs only be said that they boldly and blatantly asserted that the "state" had the last word and the final allegiance over men. The welfare of the state and not the will of God was the touchstone of their action. And unfortunately in their case the welfare of the state was that which furthered their own selfish ambitions. The doom of Germany and of Japan, too, for that matter, was inevitable because the will of God was disregarded.

The same thing can happen in our nation. We need to be on our guard lest we exalt the state and make it the final authority over the mind and conscience of men. We need to be on our guard lest the state, constantly encroaching on the domain of the conscience does not claim final and complete allegiance and obedience. Doom may not come at once, it seldom does. But come it will. God is not mocked. Whatsoever nations as well as men sow, that shall they also reap.

AFTER THIRTEEN YEARS.

What has been accomplished by your church through gifts, which always represented your love, loyalty and devotion to Christ and your concern for others, many of whom may not yet have found the way of life, stands now and for eternity: a monument to your faith and love. Yours has been a love that has reached its helping hand across the oceans to many and has also ministered to some who live close enough to hear the tolling of the church bell in our own community. You may never know the whole story of the influence of your gifts until one day, God permits you to hear it fresh from the lips of some redeemed soul in glory, for whom you made it possible to know God's saving grace.

Let us then: "Pass the time of our sojourning here in fear." (I Peter 1:17.) "Finally, be ye all of one mind, love as brethren." (I Peter 3:8.)

seemed to have reached a climax, I, alone in our big house, slept very little. Since then, each evening before retiring I have found great comfort in respecting the 23 Psalm, musing over the deeper meaning of each thought. I have slept soundly since. Truly, our God does not desert His people in times of affliction.

Our ministers, the workers in our hospitals and our teachers, with the exception of one, are all standing by. All schools have closed temporarily but the hospital is busy seeing patients and treating the sick. We do not yet know what Communist control will mean, but we believe that God will not permit His work to be stopped, and that He will open before us new and unexpected paths of service.

Our best wishes to you all.

Sincerely,

DICK JACKSON.

While life was not normal, yet conditions could have been much worse. You will enjoy reading these exciting epistles, and we hope you will utter a prayer for these consecrated workers as you read. CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN CHINA.

Despite the cancerous drain of civil war and their country's whirlwind inflation, more than 12,000 Chinese students flocked to the thirteen Christian colleges in the fall of 1946, according to the annual report of the United Board for Christian Colleges in China which has just been made public.

Pointing out that the quest for education is growing in all parts of China today, the report states that "50,000 eager young Chinese applied for admission to the colleges although only 4,000 freshmen could be accommodated.

"From America, too, came students. Lingnan University in Canton in 1948-49 admitted twelve Americans from ten institutions including Dartmouth, Tufts, the University of Washington, Harvard, Stanford, and Kansas State College, on scholarships providing for undergraduate study. Three other Christian colleges—Yenching University in Peiping, the University of Nanking, and West China Union University in Chengtu—also welcomed several American students for regular and graduate work."

During the winter and spring months as Mao Tse-tung's armies advanced southward, the colleges found themselves enveloped in territory occupied by the Communists. "Despite the unsettled conditions, however, the morale of faculty and students remained high for the most part.

"All the colleges remained open and on their home sites, and throughout the changeover carried on their work in a psychological atmosphere that was amazingly calm and hopeful.

"How determined most students were to continue their education in spite of the turbulent military situation is evidenced by the fact that 10,500 registered for the spring term—approximately the normal number expected for the second semester.

"As the second semester began, food—and all other items making up the daily needs of the staff and students of the colleges—sky-rocketed in price. For example, the price of flour at Yenching University was about twelve times as high as it had been a few months previously. For a time, meat was practically unobtainable. Indeed, for several weeks Yenching faculty members and students got along with a ration of twenty-two ounces of millet a day, plus one pound of meat a month. When flour was on hand it was exchanged for corn and vegetables."

Despite meager food, internal economic and political chaos, and low staff salaries, the report continues, teachers and students alike "met their day-to-day hardships and problems with fortitude and dauntless spirit."

Each of the colleges, the report points out, sponsors one or more special extension projects to serve the Chinese people. "West China Union University send out a mobile dental clinic; the University of Nanking produces and distributes scores of educational motion pictures; sociology majors at Soochow University sponsor a free school for deserving neighborhood students; while at Huachung University in Wuchang students have been conducting a night school for the manual laborers and servants on the campus."

With recent publication in twelve new languages, some part of the Bible has now appeared in 1,108 languages and dialects. The American Bible Society lists some of the new languages as Fanti Kare, Mundag, Nosu, Panaleti, Bamileke, Barrow, Eskimo, Batua Gondi, Keripako and Terena. . . . Can you tell where they are spoken?

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

mas gift was sent to Timothy Chang. Cards, books, magazines, fruit, flowers, and trays were sent to sick and shut-ins of our church and community. A picnic supper for our families is an annual event. Gifts are exchanged at Christmas. .

We have enjoyed the programs contained in the packet, and feel we have been spiritually blessed.

We hope we have met all requirements for a Superior Society.

We are entering the new year with greater determination to help send the good news of the Kingdom of our Lord and Savior to those who know it not.

WAKEFIELD.

As we look back over the year, though small in membership, we feel we have had a very successful year. God has blessed our every effort. Our very efficient and capable Mrs. W. C. Seeley as our president has left no stone unturned to see that each meeting was well planned and well attended. For her we are grateful.

We have tried to make our programs as interesting as possible, using the packet. At each meeting we have had a well-planned devotional service.

The Home study book was reviewed by two of our members. In January, we joined the Dendron Society and enjoyed the Foreign study book, reviewed by Mrs. J. F. Morgan.

Our Bible study was given by our pastor, Rev. W. L. Wood.

We observed World Community Day, when we packed a towel for a teen age girl.

The Burton's Grove Society joined us in observing World Day of Prayer and May Fellowship Day. The other churches in town were also invited. Mrs. T. E. Reese of the Baptist Church gave the address.

We presented our Thank Offering program at a public meeting, at which time a good offering was received.

We sent a Friendly Service gift box to Fort Berthold Indian Mission and one to Miss Angie Crew in Japan.

Our society gave a purse for Timothy Chang's family.

We are giving a Life Memorial for Mrs. J. B. Kitchen, an honorary member for a number of years.

We pray God's blessing on our society and may we go forward in His work.

MRS. W. A. BAILEY.

The Orphanage

MY DEAR FRIENDS:

It was a joy to us all to have the members of the Board of Trustees with us in semi-annual session on this past Wednesday. Only four were unavoidably kept from coming: Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Carlton, Paces, Va.; Mr. Clyde W. Gordon, Burlington, N. C.; and Mr. Loren P. Waldo, Jr., Holland, Va. We missed them very much. Present were: Mrs. Walter R. Sellars, Mrs. James H. McEwen, and Mr. V. R. Holt, President of the Board, from Burlington; Dr. J. P. Cross, Mr. L. R. Jones, and Mr. C. D. West, Vice-President of the Board, from Eastern Virginia; Mrs. Stanley C. Harrell and Mr. D. L. Boone, Sr., from Durham, N. C.; Mr. J. W. Balfentine, from Fuquay Springs; Mr. Thomas W. Walton from Greensboro; and Mr. I. H. Vickery from Henderson. Supt. W. T. Scott of the Southern Convention and Dr. Stanley C. Harrell of Durham were visitors for part of the session. One of the items of business was the adoption by rising vote of the following resolutions presented by Mrs. James H. McEwen and Mrs. Walter R. Sellars, committee:

Resolutions Adopted by the Board of Trustees of the

CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE
Elon College, North Carolina
September 28, 1949
In Memory of
CHARLES D. JOHNSTON
Superintendent

Whereas, Almighty God in His Sovereign wisdom and goodness called Superintendent Charles D. Johnston to his eternal home, February 27, 1949; and

Whereas, He faithfully served this Orphanage and Board of Trustees for thirty-three years; therefore

BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That we record our deep sense of loss in his going, and bow in humble gratitude to God for the long years of active service in which he was spared to us.

2. That we record our appreciation of the fact that Charles D. Johnston, out of love for the Christ, His Church, and the children of the Christian Orphanage, gave up a career in public service to his country and State, being at the time Register of Deeds of Alamance County, to become Superintendent of our Orphanage; and at a time when the Institution was in serious need of such leadership as he could offer. Superintendent Johnston had the wisdom and business judgment as well as the bigness of spirit and personality to inspire confidence from those in financial ability to give aid, as well as the entire church constituency; thus during his years all debts were paid, the one main building, many other lesser buildings, a dairy, and a good size farm.

3. That we record our appreciation of the fact that he held during that time several position in the Church which indicated the confidence in his judgment and bigness of spirit;

4. That we record our appreciation of the way in which he trained the children, loved them, and inspired them to make good citizens; which fact is well attested by the positions of honor and trust many of them hold as citizens of their respective communities; and

5. That we place a copy of these resolutions upon the records of our Board, send a copy to members of his family, and mail copies to the Christian Sun, and the secular press.

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. JAMES H. McEWEN,
Mrs. WALTER R. SELLARS.

In conclusion let me add: We cannot feed and clothe these children on the amount of money coming in each week and pay the regular current bills on the amount of money coming in, much less put these buildings in fairly acceptable repair. A large contribution from some, and small contributions from many are greatly needed right now.

WOMAN ELEVATED TO HIGH OFFICE.

Dr. Gloria M. Wysner, formerly of Mount Vernon, Ohio, a minister of The Methodist Church and a recognized authority on Moslem affairs, is the first woman to be appointed as a full secretary of the International Missionary Council, highest consultative agency in the Protestant mission field.

Dr. Wysner, whose appointment was effective October 1, has been secretary of the Near East Committee of the Foreign Missions Conference of North America since 1942.

Dr. Wysner will be in the IMC's New York Office as secretary with territorial responsibility for the Near East and North Africa and work among the Moslems. She will be in charge also of work on women and the Christian home.

Missionary for The Methodist Church in Algeria, North Africa, from 1927 to 1939, she is the author of The Kabyle People, a book on the natives whom she served there.

A book on the Near East, which she visited extensively is in preparation for publication.

Born in Anderson, Indiana, Dr. Wysner spent most of her early life in Mount Vernon, Ohio. She taught in the public schools there for four years and spent three years in Cleveland as a social worker.

Receiving her B. A. from Ohio University in 1923, and her Master's degree from Western Reserve University in 1926, she was the first woman to earn a doctor's degree from the Kennedy School of Missions, Hartford Seminary Foundation, in 1942. She was the first woman ordained as a minister of The Methodist Church in North Africa.

Dr. Wysner is a member of the American Anthropological Association, of Kappa Phi and of two honorary scholastic societies, Mortar Board and Kappa Delta Pi. She is also a trustee of Hartford Seminary Foundation.

In Memoriam

FARMER.

Joseph H. Farmer was born in Halifax County Va. on May 9, 1866. He fell asleep at Elon College, North Carolina on September 10, 1949; being 83 years, four months and one day old.

Mr. Farmer moved to Elon College, with his wife and daughter, thirty-seven years ago. His life was a demonstration of what Christian Faith should mean to the person who has it. He was of quite disposition, devoted to his family and to his God. He was a great, good man.

A service of remembrance and honor was conducted at Elon College on Monday, September 12, by the writer and Dr. L. E. Smith. A final tribute was paid him at Pleasant Grove, his old home church, where the pastor of that church, Rev. Robert T. Woodruff, was in charge, assisted by Dr. Smith and the writer.

His daughter, Miss Josephine Farmer, survives of the immediate family. May Our Heavenly Father Comfort and keep her, and may the mantle of his goodness fall upon all of us who knew and loved him.

JESSE H. DOLLAR

ARLINE.

We the members of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Liberty Spring Christian Church, were deeply grieved August 19, 1949, by the passing of a beloved Co-worker, Mrs. Nettie Ashly Arline. Christain humility, devoted loyalty, and sincere consecration to the work of the Kingdom were outstanding qualities which made her life beautiful and exemplary.

Despite intense suffering during a prolonged illness, she was very patient and bore her pain with fortitude and heroism, maintaining faith in her Savior to the last and being wholly resigned to His will.

In recognition of her faithful service, we offer these resolutions of high regard and esteem:

1. That we gratefully remember and cherish her friendly spirit so well expressed by deeds of kindness and love.

2. That her wholesome influence inspire us to more zeal for the missionary cause so dear to her heart.

3. That we extend our sincere and heartfelt sympathy to her loved ones, and commend them to the Loving Heavenly Father for sustaining grace and comfort.

4. That a copy be sent to the bereaved family, one to The Christian Sun for publication, and another placed on our Society records.

HARWARD—ATKINS—GRAY—YOUNG MASSEY—LEA—LEA.

During the Church year 1948-49 of the Congregational Christian Church, Durham, North Carolina, some of our beloved and loyal members—J. E. Harward; R. J. Atkins; Mrs. Pattie Umstead Gray; C. E. Young; Mrs. J. P. Massey; S. B. Lea; and Mrs. S. B. Lea—passed to their eternal reward. We deeply mourn the loss of these friends and co-workers, but being assured that they have entered into the joys of the HOME COMING AND REVIVAL AT BEREÄ.

Berea held its annual home coming August 28, 1949. There were two services during the day and an evening service that opened the two weeks of revival meetings. The morning service was conducted by our pastor, the Rev. Ellis Clark, with his choir assisting him by their special message in song. Everyone was invited to stay for lunch served on the church grounds at the close of this service.

A wonderful spirit of Christian fellowship was enjoyed during the lunch hour by members, friends, and visitors. There were between two and three hundred present.

The afternoon service was opened with merioal services led by Mr. Clark and Mrs. W. S. Sorey. After the memorial service our home coming message was brought to us by our former pastor, the Rev. B. H. Watkins. The church was filled to capacity for both of these services.

The evening service opened a wonderful revival for Berea. The Rev. Johnson Griffin of Bay View Christian Church was the guest preacher. The junior and adult choirs participated in each service with special music each evening. The choir of Bay View visited with us on Tuesday evening, bringing us a special message in song which was greatly enjoyed.

The first services of the week were opened with a great revival of members answering altar call for reconsecration. During the second week of the revival special services were observed. Tuesday night was "Family Night," with fifty or more family groups present. Thursday night was "Youth Night." The youth choir led the singing for the service. A wonderful message, "I Dare You," brought by Mr. Griffin, was a challenge to the youth of today. About 75 of the young people answered the altar call for reconsecration. Friday night was "Guest Night," with every-one inviting guests for this service.

The following Sunday morning our blessed, we are humbly resigned to the will of the Heavenly Father.

Therefore be it resolved:

1. That we recommend their example of faith and love for Christ's Kingdom to all.

2. That we express gratitude for having worked with them in our Church and Church School, and to have felt their Christian influence.

3. That we keep in memory their high Christian standards and their ideals of service, kindness, patience and joyfulness, that we strive to emulate them.

pastor conducted the baptismal service, receiving four members in the fellowship of the church. God's saving power was revealed throughout the revival as the altar was filled during the two weeks.

human soul! Billions for medical work, for leather punching, art, schooling in the languages, but not one dollar is available to the church for its all important task. From the treasures of the people of God alone it comes and we must go back and ask for more and more!"

—o—

At the close of a recent visit to China, and conferences with Chinese leaders of the Christian church, the noted world-traveler, author and churchman, Dr. Sherwood Eddy, takes the view that "the church is now forced to return to apostolic conditions under which the early Church thrived." He quotes a pastor from Shensi Province where churches have been cooperating in communist-held territory for ten years, that pastors are free to lead their churches under four conditions: their mode of living must be like the common people in dress, dwelling and food; they must earn their living by farming, trade or industry, since preaching is not regarded as a "productive" vocation; their character must be Christlike, as testified to by their neighbors in the recurring trials and purges conducted by the communists; and their faith must be apostolic, fearless, sure of the Gospel, patient under persecution, and ready to die for their faith if necessary—as the communists themselves are ready to die for theirs.

"It was felt that it would be impossible for some Christians to adjust themselves to the new social order which had arisen, partly because these Christians have not borne witness to the evils of the old order," says Dr. Eddy. "Many Christians will have to adopt new methods and new ways and sometimes a new spirit." He believes also that "the churches and individual Christians will survive in China as they have in Soviet Russia; medical missions can probably be carried on as long as we are willing to support them; Christian education, while probably tolerated, will gradually be eliminated. Education will be regarded as a function of the state for training in citizenship, and completely dominated by communist propaganda.

By CHARLES A. WELLS

America's economic leadership is profound and complete in the world today, but not necessarily successful. In fact, there is great concern that success is slipping from our grasp—because there are things our dollars could not buy. We have fed men with our dollars, but we have not changed the bitterness and suspicion in their hearts. We have rebuilt their buildings and factories, but we are disappointed to learn we have not made them live with greater cooperation and productivity among themselves. Where they have been greedy; where they have been filled with hatred, they still hate; where they have been slothful and indolent, they are still lax in carrying their own responsibilities. We didn't give them the one thing needed—far above dollars. Our world leadership needs the sign of the cross today above the dollar sign.

ROSEMONT CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Rosemont Church is located in what was once the Village of Portlock, in Norfolk County, Virginia, now included in the Greater Norfolk area. The church has been one of the stronger churches of the outlying or rural districts. Some of the outstanding preachers of the denomination have served here, and many prominent laymen have been counted among its members. The present structure was built during the ministry of Rev. J. Frank Morgan. Mr. Morgan was succeeded by Dr. H. S. Hardcastle, who resigned his work at Christian Temple to become its pastor. When Dr. Hardcastle went to Newport News, the present pastor, Rev. Herbert Council, Jr., was called to the work. A most interesting account of a special service recently held is given elsewhere in this issue.

News Flashes

Dr. N. G. Newman is supplying the pulpit of the Suffolk Christian Church during October.

Rev. W. J. Andes is conducting revival services this week in the Pfafftown Church, Winston-Salem.

Dr. Will B. O'Neill, president, announces that the Eastern Virginia ministers will meet Monday at Bethlehem Church.

Wake Chapel observed a pleasant day on October 2 in their Sunday School. They experienced 100 per cent attendance on Sunday. There are 229 on roll in the Sunday School and there were 237 present, and the morning worship service attendance was larger than the Sunday School. In cooperation with the other churches in its community Wake Chapel is observing October as "back-to-church-month."

On October 2 the Haw River Congregational Christian Church observed its annual home coming service. The sermon and a brief history of the church was given by the pastor, Rev. William P. Smith. During the morning worship service special recognition was given to Mrs. Nannie Gillespie, who is the only living charter member of the church. Communications from former pastors were also presented. After the morning worship a fellowship meal was served at the home of Dr. and Mrs. J. C. Wilkins.

A GREAT HOUR AT ROSEMONT.

Sunday morning, October 2, the 11:00 o'clock service of worship was a "Great Hour" for the people of Rosemont Church, Norfolk, Virginia. Several things took place that morning which made it stand out in the minds of our people as a moment rarely experienced, yet never to be forgotten.

In the first place, a 72-page History of Rosemont Church had been prepared and was to be given out free to all members and friends of the church. Mrs. Mary Halstead Booth of Raleigh, North Carolina, had worked for several years doing study and research into old records, examining old family albums and talking with members of the church, to complete the project. Through the generosity of Mr. O. F. Smith, a member of the church who has a deep interest in its past history as well as its future growth, the book had been made possible.

REV. HERBERT G. COUNCILL, JR.
Pastor, Rosemont Church.

Mr. M. K. Hassell, chairman of the Official Board, made the presentation address in the absence of Mr. Smith, who was unable to be present. Mrs. Booth, author of the book, was then introduced by Mr. Hassell. She spoke of the work that had gone into the making of the book, and closed by challenging the congregation to make Rosemont's future just as great as their forbears had made her past.

Included in the book was a poem entitled "My Prayer for Rosemont," composed by Mrs. Booth. These verses were set to music by our church organist, Mrs. Elizabeth Mills Goforth, and were sung by our choir director, Mrs. Dorothy Reane Gallop:

Lord, I would breathe a prayer for Rosemont,
I would pray for unity;
I would ask Thee for thy blessing
On each member personally.

I would thank Thee for thy guidance
Through the years gone on before;
I would thank Thee for thy servants
Now passed on to "Yonder Shore."

I would ask Thee to inspire us,
That we do more work for Thee,
May we ever seek Thy guidance
As we labor faithfully.

May our love for Rosemont deepen
As we come often to her shrine;
May the love and peace she teaches
Dwell within this heart of mine.

Mrs. Goforth represents the third generation of B. F. and "Aunt Betty" Gibson; Mrs. Gallup represents the 4th generation of Mary F. Morrison, all early members of the church.

In the second place, this service was a "Great Hour" for Rosemont because the pastor and a few faithful workers, under the direction of the Rev. Ira D. Black, Associate Director of City Work, Division of Church Extension and Evangelism, of the Board of Home Missions had been busy September 18 through 21 conducting a Visitation Evangelism Program in our community. This was "Membership Sunday" for those people who had been contacted during the campaign and had made the decision to accept Jesus Christ as their Lord and Saviour and purposed with His help to live a Christian life, and others who had decided to unite with Rosemont Church by transfer of their church letter. As a result of our work during the campaign and the follow-up work done by the pastor the following week, 26 people united with the church that morning, 12 by profession of faith and 14 by transfer of their church letter. In addition to these, one man who was contacted said that he was very sorry that he had become so indifferent to the church in recent years, he had been an active member of Rosemont in past years, that he desired to reunite with the church and by the grace of God to do better in the future. Of the 12 who came in by profession of faith, 10 were baptized at the evening service of worship.

In the third place, this was a "Great Hour" for Rosemont because two fine young men, Charles Cherry and Robert I. Evans, Jr., were ordained as deacons in the church. This very impressive service, taken from the Manual of the Southern Conven-

"IT IS THE SPIRIT THAT QUICKENETH."

We had an impressive service in our Newport News Church on World Wide Communion Sunday. The commodious sanctuary was filled, the choir was present in large numbers, and there was a spirit of reverence and reality about the service. I spoke briefly on the theme, "God's Family Table," and then with the assistance of the deacons, the Sacrament of the Holy Communion was administered to the members of the congregation. It seemed as if the Spirit of God was present in a gracious way. Back of the forms and ceremonies, and giving meaning to the beautiful cross that was the central feature of the Communion Table, was the Spirit that quickened the whole service.

That afternoon I took the little case containing the accessories for the Communion Service into ten homes of our congregation, or rather into the hospitals and the homes where there were members of our congregation, and in the quiet of the rooms I administered the Sacrament of Holy Communion to men and women who had burdens heavy and grievous to be borne. Two were hopeless invalids, one was blind, the others were sick and afflicted. And again "the Spirit quickened" the service. Our hearts were strangely warmed, as apart from the setting and the ceremony of the sanctuary, we ate the bread and drank of the cup, in "remembrance of Him." And more than one recipient of the sacred elements testified that "hearts were brave again, and arms were strong." "It is the Spirit that quickeneth."

H. S. HARDCASTLE,
Pastor.

CYPRESS CHAPEL "STORMS" PASTOR.

On Thursday night of last week approximately fifty members of Cypress Chapel Church stormed their pastor and his wife, the Rev. and Mrs. Earl Thomas Farrell who reside at Sunbury, North Carolina, at a surprise miscellaneous shower. The party was sponsored by the Ladies Aid Society of the church.

The guests of honor were the recipients of many lovely gifts including a beautiful Early American 18th Century mahogany end table and an antique brass lamp with imported raspberry filler given by the Ladies Aid Society.

Latter in the evening refreshments were enjoyed by the group served by the members of the Ladies Aid Society.

HE LIKES THE ORPHANAGE.

My little orphan boy only about seven knocked on my door with special permission from his house mother to see me. I already had visitors so he just insisted on standing on the stoop outside the door and "seeing me" right there. He had just come home from the public school. A little friend of his had been without lunch "and Dr. Truitt, his clothes were ragged with his elbows sticking out through his sweater sleeves. He lives with his grandmother because his parents are dead, and she is real poor. I want to share my room with him. Can't he come and live with us. He says he would like to, 'cause I asked him."

My little friend went on to tell me that he had told him what a good home we have, and what good food, and plenty. I cannot put on paper how eager and sympathetic he was. He was indeed a man in his plea for a little friend. I am looking into the whole matter for this fine young fellow. If he keeps that unselfish spirit through life he will amount to something in his day. As a lawyer, in the not far off tomorrows, he would be a great advocate, or as a minister he would be a power. He deserves consideration and so does his little unkempt friend.

At the big State Conference of Orphanage Workers held in Winston-Salem they discussed the problem of run-aways. My little friend showed quite well that at least one of our boys does not desire to run away. He likes his home, and so do they all. True some of them have to go out of my office with their desire for shoes, or a better suit yet unanswered, but through their disappointment they still like their home, and they know full well that they are going to get

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

LAY POTENTIAL

We salute the laymen. Many of them will stand in pulpits Sunday and deliver messages appropriate for the occasion. It will be a wholesome experience for those in the pulpit and those in the pew. The experience should be a revelation and an education; a revelation of lay talent, a revelation of larger spheres of service and an educational experience in the practical expression of Christianity. Experiences, illustrative of the lay potential in local communities, abound. Consider this example:

About five years ago a Methodist layman caught a vision of what could be accomplished if the Methodist men of Nashville could join together in one group to work for the extension of the Kingdom of God. From this vision the Nashville Methodist Laymen's Club was born. The purposes of the club are:

1. To stimulate personal spiritual growth.
2. To encourage Christian fellowship.
3. To prepare young men for the ministry and young women for mission work.
4. To extend the Kingdom among the unchurched.

Under the sponsorship of the club four new churches and Sunday schools have been established in the district and all are doing well. A city-wide revival was sponsored, bringing outstanding speakers to the pulpits of four different churches. Pre-Easter services have been sponsored at an uptown church for the past two years, with laymen taking an active part in the services. These meetings are to be continued. The club has a fund for the education of young men preparing for the ministry. Three old churches in the poorer sections of our city have been reopened. These churches are now being served by a regular pastor and a full-time lay worker will assist him, beginning this fall. These churches serve sections unserved by other churches and the need for the Gospel of Jesus Christ in these areas is great. Assistance is also given to other churches and missions in the poorer sections of the city.

The projects of the clubs include improving the parsonages, by remodeling or building new ones; re-opening and remodeling churches; furnishing transportation to bring children to Sunday school in the rural districts; and, supplying laymen to fill the pulpits where the Circuit preacher has more than one church.

BACK UNITED NATIONS WEEK

October 17 to 24 has been proclaimed by the Secretariat of the U. N. as United Nations Week. October 24 is an international holiday. Why not see to it that your church and your men's group have some sort of an observation—if not now, later on in the fall? Have a young people's service, a family night, a forum, a panel discussion, a worship service or some meeting where the work of U. N. is set forth, questions asked and answered.

Back U. N. efforts for peace by knowledge and support at home. Here are some fresh, pertinent facts:

One year ago some 500 million people were either engaged in or making plans for killing one another; today they are at peace. These are more people than live in the whole of Europe; they make up almost a quarter of the earth's population. But it was possible, within twelve short months, to halt their wars, without resort to any weapon but one: They were literally talked into peace.

"This action—in Palestine, in Kashmir and in Indonesia—did not involve the use of military or police force; indeed the Security Council has no such force at its disposal. The only force used by the United Nations has been its moral force and its power of persuasion toward reasonable compromise and peaceful settlement." Thus wrote Secretary-General Trygve Lie in his annual report on the work of the UN during the year from July, 1948, through June of this year.

It may occur to the thinking citizen that the mere suspension of warfare no longer means peace. Not in our age. Neville Chamberlain once thought it might; we have learned it does not. Not in a world stalked by hunger, by disease, by fear and insecurity. You cannot contain these simply with persuasion and reason, because people have become wary of words, of talk substituted for action.

When the United Nations was born four years ago, it was looked upon as the last refuge of a world terrified of the atom. Give us another chance to talk, the nations seemed to say, and perhaps we can stave off the certain annihilation of another war.

The nations sent their wisest men, who were, by the same token, also the most frightened, to the councils of this new international body; and they began to talk for dear life, to harangue and contradict, to veto, charge, deny and report, waving their hands in emphasis, and keeping the typewriters clacking in pace with their words.

Those are still the only sounds that many of us in this country think we hear from the UN—those of us, that is, who have so much as bothered to take note of its work since our wave of fear subsided shortly after the war. Few of us have troubled to listen further, to learn the meaning of those sounds of talk and debate issuing from Lake Success and the other meeting places of the United Nations.

We would have discovered that here, at last, the words did mean peace—not alone the uneasy peace of the unfired weapon, but the securer peace that comes when nations get into the habit of reasoning and compromising instead of fighting out their differences, that grows even more strongly when action really gets under way to free the world of hunger, disease, poverty and ignorance. Those are the very things now being achieved by the United Nations. In its brief life, it has become in fact one of the strongest forces for enduring peace the world has ever known.

Through its specialized agencies, the UN daily feeds four and one-half million children in Europe and Asia. It is giving political, economic, social and educational training to over 200 million people throughout the world so that they may one day soon govern themselves independently and successfully. It recently checked a cholera epidemic in Egypt in the shortest time in medical history. It reduced the malaria rate in parts of Greece from 80 per cent to 5 per cent. In one year it cared for more than 600,000 homeless, and helped 374,000, women and children find homes and a new life in 70 countries.

It has developed methods and is now teaching them to farmers and governments across the earth for greater food production, and for the control of vermin that in 1947 alone destroyed enough food to keep 15 million adults alive for a whole year. It has arranged, amicably, tariff agreements among countries doing 70 per cent of the world's import and export trade. The list goes on, touching in one way or another virtually every part of the world and the people in it.

Meanwhile it has stopped wars in different parts of the world, and it has developed international cooperation in almost every field of human activity on a scale never before attempted.

"The United Nations," as Secretary-General Lie has said, "has become the chief force that holds the world together against all the conflicting strains and stresses that are pulling it apart." Abundant proof of that has accumulated since the UN charter was ratified on October 24, four years ago. It started, then, with 51 members. Today it has 59, with the applications of several more now pending.

It costs money and talent to belong to and support the United Nations. Yet the member governments are giving it their best of both. Would they, if it were little more than a debating society?

Take our own share of the costs. There were some skillful and apparently reasonable arguments against it when the matter of the United States appropriation for the UN came up before Congress. But Congress agreed it must be paid, and this year it will cost every American 12c to help keep the UN going. Expensive?

It is costing all the 59 member nations a total of $43,487,128 to support the United Nations during 1949 in behalf of the 1,700,000,000 people belonging to those nations. It is costing the city of New York a total of $102,011,008.64 to support the New York City Police Department in behalf of the 8 million people living in that city.

Statistics frequently juggle beyond the average ability to follow them; not these. Twist them as one may, they come to rest on fact: That—quite aside from the millions of men, women and children in other lands who are alive with reason to live because of the UN—the individual American is better off today because the United Nations was created four years ago.

His test is not a matter of comparison with Utopian or perfectionist formulas; it is the simple, single matter of comparison with what the world would be like if there were no international organization at all. By this test, it is obvious to the most cynical that the current international tensions would have been more widespread, more dangerous had there been no United Nations.

The individual American is safer, better off, and more at peace with his soul, too, because of the dramatic accomplishments of the UN's specialized agencies. FAO's agricultural improvement projects better the nutriment and amount of our food, as it does the food in other countries; ITO's reduction of trade barriers opens markets for us, too; WHO's magnificent campaigns against malaria, tuberculosis and venereal disease teach our doctors and sufferers short cuts to health; the saving and rehabilitation of thousands of lives by IRO, and the programs of education for democracy by UNESCO—these and the hundred more instances of practical, effective international action improve the body and, more important, we think, lift the heart of the American citizen.

There has been a malaise, a sickness of the soul rooted in vague guilt feelings, that has swept America since the war. In a world corroded by want we are the richest; we are also the strongest, and therefore to us falls the lot of safeguarding the weaker peoples. The responsibilities of power are enormous, and many of us would gladly shed them. But the alternative is less difficult this year than it was four years ago.

With each year of the United Nations, the habit of peace grows stronger throughout the world. In time, it will penetrate, from the nations to the parts of the nations, the individual. There has never been, in all human history, a better reason for hope than lies, potentially, in the United Nations today.

Health is most worth while to conserve. I do not mean simply the abounding vigor of youth, with abundance of fresh air and exercise and with its reserves which seem to mock the warnings of elders. I mean, rather, the sustained and protected strength which is based on the conservation of physical resources and gives promise of a long life well lived. In our onward journey the ranks are rapidly thinned by the passing out of those who have had their brief stay and were soon done. When their notes matured they were unable to meet them. Nothing is sadder than these physical bankruptcies, which deprive men and women of opportunities when, with the capital of experience well invested, they should have the most ample returns.—Charles Evans Hughes.

No one has ever made a study of the enormous number of perfectly sane, kind, friendly, decent creatures who form a large proportion of any mass of human beings anywhere and everywhere—people who are not vicious or cruel or depraved, not as a result of continual self-control, but simply because they do not want to be, because it is more natural and agreeable to be exactly the opposite things, people who do not tell lies because they could not do it with any pleasure and would on the contrary find the exertion an annoyance and a bore; people whose manners and morals are good because their natural preference lies in that direction.—Frances Hodgson Burnett.

Chairman Colclough Urges Observance of Laymen's Sunday October 16, 1949

THE CHURCH AND THE LAYMAN.

Address by Gov. LUTHER YOUNGDAHL of Minnesota at the Christian Youth Conference of North America.

Christianity is desperately in need of lay members who will give more than half loyalty, secret discipleship and lukewarm fealty, surreptitious lip service. There are too many laymen who hope to gain heaven without losing hold on earth.

Now I say to you with desperate sincerity that the Christian Church represents the one great moral hope of society today. Clearly the lines are being drawn for a struggle between the Church of Jesus Christ and the godless materialism that would destroy men's souls. Leadership in this great moral struggle must come only from a revitalized church.

Christianity has not failed so far. We have failed. We have failed to put it into practice in our daily experiences. Too many of us have been unwilling to pay the price for it.

We have failed to put it into practice in our homes. That is why we have one out of every three marriages terminating in divorce, and juvenile delinquency is an acute problem.

We have even failed to put it into practice in our very churches in many instances. That is why we have disunity and ineffectiveness in much of our work.

We have failed to put it into practice in management-labor relations and that is why we have work stoppages, vindictiveness, bitterness between these two great groups in our society.

We have failed to put it into practice in politics and government. That is why we have dishonesty and corruption—disregard and disrespect for law.

We have failed to put it into practice in our treatment of minority groups. That is why we have race riots, intolerance and bigotry.

We have failed to put it into practice in our international relations. That is why we have war.

In all these great areas of human relations, we, as Christian laymen, have the opportunity to effect a miraculous change in affairs by practicing Christianity, in setting an example for the rest of the people who do not believe or who pay only lip service to the teachings of Jesus.

I AM A LAYMAN.

Every hour of every day I am either helping or hindering God's purpose for the world. My influence is often greater than that of the clergy because they are looked upon as professionals. Also I am one of millions of Christian laymen while the clergy are numbered only by the thousands.

I have a family.—Either as father or mother do I realize that what I do has far more influence than what I say? Do I take my children to church

A LAYMAN.

Leave it to the ministers, and soon the church will die;

Leave it to the women-folk; the young will pass it by;

For the church is all that lifts us from the coarse and selfish mob,

And the church that is to prosper needs the layman on the job.

Now a layman has his business, and a layman has his joys;

But he also has the training of his little girls and boys;

And I wonder how he'd like it if there were no churches here

And he had to raise his children in a Godless atmosphere.

It's the church's special function to uphold the finer things,

To teach the way of living from which all that's noble springs;

But the minister can't do it single-handed and alone,

For the laymen of the country are the church's cornerstone.

When you see a church that's empty, though its doors are open wide,

It's not the church that's dying—it's the laymen who have died;

For it's not by song or sermon that the church's work is done—

It's the laymen of the country who for God must carry on.

—Edgar A. Guest.

services or merely send them? Or do I do neither? Is God remembered at our table and in private and family worship?

I have a job.—In that job I am making contacts with other people at frequent intervals: fellow-workers, customers, salesmen. Does my acceptance of Christ as my Lord and Master determine my attitude toward these people? Do they recognize that they are talking with a Christian rather than with a pagan? This does not require a soft "piousity" but rather those qualities which are inherent in a true Christian: strength, confidence, decency, helpfulness, and justice.

I am a church member.—Is my attitude regarding this membership, church attendance, and religious conviction one of concealment or apology, or one of justifiable pride, not of myself but of the cause in which I have enlisted? Do I know which of my associates are church members? Has my reticence on the subject prevented them from sharing their convictions? Why do I hesitate to talk about religious matters when I know their supreme importance? Is it from a natural reluctance to seem better than others or is there in my silence an element of cowardice, a fear of being laughed at?

I live in a community.—Do I take adequate part in activities for the welfare of my fellow citizens? Do I consider this work as part of my responsibility and privilege as a Christian? Do I obtain strength and inspiration for this work through my private and public prayers? Do I insist that Christian principles govern the operation of the agencies with which I am connected?

I have many friends with whom I enjoy fellowship. In my decisions as to conversation or conduct am I governed by the test, "Everybody is doing it," or by the harder test of what is right and expedient in God's sight? Would Christ be a welcome guest at my parties?

I am a witness wherever I may be. Perhaps I do not like the idea but I cannot avoid the fact. My light is shining before men. What path does it illumine?

—A Layman.

THE NEEDED LAY PROGRAM.

Adopted by the Federal Council of Churches.

It is important for the welfare of churches to increase lay participation and leadership. Such increase in lay activity in the churches is also essential to the soundness of our democracy.

The predominance of clerical leadership into which many of our churches have drifted is not in keeping with our desire. It is time to begin actively working toward a better balance between lay and professional activity to greatly strengthen the total work of the church.

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

THE STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FUND.

When the churches were asked to contribute $100,000 for the establishment of the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Foundation for Christian Education at Elon College, it was understood that a church or individual could have, if desired, a period of five years in which to pay. Some of our churches did not make their pledges until 1945—and 1946. This means that part of these pledges is not due. Many have paid their full pledges in full. Others have balances yet to be paid. In the past few weeks, we have received the following payments:

Suffolk Church (Hugh Holland) ..$	250.00
Christian Temple:
Friendship Bible Class	50.00
Mordaunt Etheredge	200.00
Waverly Church	160.00
Newport News Church	250.00
First Christian Church, Portsmouth	400.00
Total	$1,310.00

This makes a total of $87,514.60 paid on the $100,000 obligation, leaving a balance of $12,485.40 due.

It will be recalled that the college financed out of its undesignated funds the balance due on the $100,000. In our building and expansion program the college is badly in need of funds to repay the loan. If our churches that have unpaid pledges could find it possible to pay these or to make a payment, it would be of great assistance to the college at this particular time. It is good of the church to establish this fund. The college and our whole Christian Education program is indebted to the church for the same.

THE MEMORIAL GYMNASIUM.

Work on the Memorial Gymnasium on our campus is progressing slowly but surely. Even so, I am afraid that the work is progressing more rapidly than payments from friends and interested persons are being received. We are so very anxious to get the roof on the building before bad weather sets in. This will give an opportunity to work inside regardless of the weather and make it possible to put down the cement floor, install the seats in the balcony (1,750) which will make it possible for us to begin playing our games and conducting Physical Education classes inside. If it were possible for you to see the building in its present stage, I know you would agree that it is a wonderful structure and will be a marvelous addition to our program at Elon College and a great asset to the college itself. Then, too, I know that you would want to have a share in this great undertaking. Jimmy Darden, our alumni secretary, received this note from an honored and honorable alumnus: "Here is my contribution for $110.00 to the 1949-50 Elon College Alumni Fund. Ten dollars is for Alumni Fund; $100 is for Gymnasium Fund. Any investment for the betterment of the youth of America is a good investment and will pay large dividends. The gym is such an investment." I am sure that there are scores of others of our alumni and church membership who would say Amen to this statement. I am sure, also, that each one will want to make an investment in this worthwhile enterprise whose contribution will be greatly appreciated. Send the same to Jimmy Darden, Alumni Secretary, Elon College or to the writer of this article.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

There are a few of our churches who pay their apportionments to the college in advance. There are others who meet this obligation either by the month or by the quarter. There are others who pay as the money is available but unfortunately for the college practically all of our churches pay their apportionment for the college in full at the end of the conference year. Payments that are received in advance mean more to the college. It is a great advantage when the college can meet its obligations promptly and receive discounts for cash. We are nearing the end of the conference year. When you consider the fact that only a little more than one-third of the apportionment for the college has been received, you are made to wonder just how we are coming out this year. I know that our churches are interested in the college, that they realize the actual needs that are upon us, and that they will if possible pay their apportionments in full. The church is proud to have a clear record and the college must meet its obligations one way or the other.

CATHOLICISM HELD LOSING GROUND IN LATIN AMERICA.

Roman Catholicism is losing the loyalty of South Americans, according to a report by leaders of Protestant Churches in South America.

"Four centuries of Roman Catholicism have not succeeded in giving our people a Christian idea of life," the report claimed. "The prevailing religious spirit is chiefly one of forms and externalities."

The meeting, held from July 18-30 in Buenos Aires, was hailed as "the most representative Latin American Evangelical conference" yet held by Dr. Jorge F. Wenzel, executive secretary of the River Plate Church Federation. Twenty denominations in 15 countries were represented among the 70 delegates and official visitors, nearly all of whom were Latin American nationals. Approximately one-third of all the participants were Methodists.

The report on the present situation in Latin America and Protestantism's place in it, said: "The Roman Catholic Church is—above all else watching out for its control over the governments and its material interests. As a result, it is losing the adherence of the people, which is becoming indifferent, if not hostile, towards religion; only a small part of the population are conscientious, practicing Catholics. . . ."

"Despite the isolated efforts which the Roman Church has been making lately, ignorance of Bible teaching is very great, even among cultured people. . . . The void by Roman Catholicism leads to a religious negative attitude on a large scale: intellectuals and students boast of their scepticism and labourers give themselves over to materialistic ideologies with an almost religious fervour."

In justification of the work of the Protestant Churches in Latin America, the report states: "We do not hesitate to declare that the Evangelical

At Home and Abroad

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

No. 2 of a Group.

Shaowu, Fukien,
May 17, 1949.

DEAR FRIENDS:

While I'm waiting for the Communist troops to arrive to "liberate" us, I'll start a letter to you. Today word has come that Kuandze (20 miles from Shaowu) fell yesterday and that troops would probably arrive here today. I want to tell you about one of China's greatest problems which is likely to become more serious in the future—the Nationalist wounded soldier.

On Saturday and Sunday afternoons I watched them arrive. There are probably 700 here now. They came from a so-called hospital in Linchuan. They were all wounded in the recent fighting between Peiping and Nanking. As I watched them come along on crutches and canes (they had walked 20 miles that day), some with wives and babes in arms, my heart was filled with pity for them. I heard one woman say to her husband, "We can't go on tomorrow. I can't walk another step." They didn't even have vessels to cook their meagre ration of rice. Their salary is about one cent in U. S. currency per day. A Communist victory will mean that even this is cut off. They sleep in schools, temples or any other place that has a roof. "Many were lost by the roadside," one told me. "They couldn't walk any further."

The officer in charge coming ahead on a truck together with thirty of the wives were reported all killed when their overloaded truck turned over about 50 miles from Shaowu. Now without a leader, without a destination, with little hope for the future, their plight is pitiful to behold.

"What is the news from Shanghai?" they ask. But they know without asking that Shanghai's days are numbered. The cause for which they gave their legs, their arms and their sight is doomed. When our American soldiers returned from the war, they were honored for the victory they had won. Jobs, education, business—nothing was too good for them. The Nationalist soldier's cause is lost, he not only receives no glory but he receives no opportunity for training and no pension.

While in Shaowu they lined the streets selling blankets, clothing, china and hundreds of personal things. Some are selling the clothes off their backs to get enough to eat; others are selling things they "picked up" along the way from homes and shops where occupants had fled. Some quartered in Shaowu homes helped themselves to the hosts belongings. They are unwanted guests.

As I am writing this, although it is pouring rain, they are leaving Shaowu. If they are caught by the arriving troops, they will probably be forced to carry their enemies' loads for a period and then be taken into the Communist army. So, off they go, one step ahead of the Red Army which will one day catch up with them. More will fall by the roadside, a fortunate few will walk hundreds of miles to return home; others will escape to the hills and become the bandits of tomorrow for bandits are only desperate men who have no other way of earning a living.

There has only been one bright spot in the whole picture. On Sunday morning, one young soldier was at the morning worship service. Afterward, we walked home from the church together. He said that he was from Honan and had become a Christian at Chiuchang (Methodist Mission). Yesterday, he and a friend came by to call and we had a most pleasant visit together. Their fathers are both farmers. They were drafted in the army in the usual way (captured while at work in the fields and impressed into the service). They had not seen their folks since. There was something about the appearance of my new friend, which revealed that he was different from the others. His ready, winning smile and the lack of a haunted expression on his face attested to a calm spirit within.

"I have only recently become a Christian," he told me. Then he told me this story:

"Formerly I didn't believe in Christianity. When in the army, I met a Christian who read his Bible and prayed regularly. He didn't smoke tobacco or opium, drink or curse like the others. Everyone made fun of him. Wherever we went into battle, he prayed. One day as he was praying before a battle, our officer came along. He cursed him for praying and landed a kick which sent him sprawling to the ground. At that moment a bullet came along where my friend had been standing. It got the officer in the heart.

I was so impressed with what happened that I asked my friend to tell me about this Christian faith. We read the Bible together, and he taught me to pray. After I was wounded, I went to a hospital in Chiuchang where there was a church. Then I got a Bible of my own and went regularly to worship. I became a Christian.

"My fellow soldiers make fun of me, now, too. I know what Jesus meant when he spoke of persecution. But I don't care. Once I was afraid of everything, now I am not. My wound is practically well. When I get back home again, if I have the opportunity, I want to study for the ministry. My friend here is from Szechwan. I am now teaching him about our faith and when he studies a little more, I believe he will make a good Christian. But I can only do my best to teach him; the Lord, Himself, must open his heart."

I could tell by the look in his friend's eyes and by his words that his greatest desire was to be a "real Christian."

As I talked with these two young men, both in their middle twenties, I received an inspiration which I shall not soon forget. These past few weeks have been difficult and the days ahead are uncertain. It would have been so much easier to return to our native country where life runs comparatively free and smooth, where one isn't haunted at night by the spectre of hungry faces and empty rice bowls, where violence is rare. But as long as, by our staying, we can enable God to reach the hearts of others like this young man, we shall not have stayed in vain. We shall go on with our work. We hope and trust that you, in America in the Southern Convention, will uphold our hands by your gifts and prayers.

Cordially,
DICK JACKSON.

We sow our actions, and we reap our habits;

We sow our habits, and we reap our characters;

We sow our characters, and we reap our destiny.

CONCERNING OUR THANK OFFERING—NOVEMBER 6.

Following are two letters concerning Han Mei School, the object of our Thank Offering this year. One is from Timothy Chang, and the other is from his brother, Silas Chang. The short sketch about Silas is given by his brother, Timothy.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF HAN MEI SCHOOL IN NORTH FUKIEN SYNOD.

By TIMOTHY CHANG.

"Where is Han Mei School? At Shaowu."

"How was it? Nice school."

Of course, Han Mei School was one of the best high schools in North Fukien twenty years ago, and it was well known among the people in North Fukien Province. The quotations I mentioned above were easy to get when you are traveling in North Fukien Area.

The highly educated people, governmental workers, and the school teachers today in North Fukien area are 90 per cent educated and graduated from Han Mei School, if they are natives of North Fukien Province.

The faithful Christians and church workers today in North Fukien Synod are 90 per cent from Han Mei. I studied in Shaowu just a very short time when I was in junior high school, but most of my teachers were graduated from Han Mei High School.

Christianity—the people used to call it the religion of love, charity. The Christians' responsibilities which Jesus taught are being proclaimed to the whole world and help all men to know God and to build the Kingdom of God on earth as it is in heaven. Everybody knows that the doctrine of Christianity will not be ably proclaimed by power, force, and hurry, but by understanding and experience gradually and naturally. The church school is needed for this job.

Dr. Joseph Walker came to Shaowu around seventy years ago. The churches were established there. After a few years, according to the Missionaries' experience, the Han Mei was established and other educational institutions as woman's school and girls' high school, primary school and kindergarten were opened for helping the people, especially the young, to understand the need of Christianity.

I would say that the churches still stand in North Fukien since the church, schools and hospitals were ruined by political changes twenty years ago, because of the successful educational work. The people deeply understood the doctrine of Christianity and they feel that Christianity is needed. They recognized that the Christianity is more complete than other religions. The seeds that the teachers, ministers, and missionaries have sown in their hearts are bearing fruit.

Rev. R. L. Jackson came to Shaowu and he was asked by some people, "Will you reopen Han Mei?" "When is Han Mei being reopened?" It shows that there is a great need for Han Mei School.

Han Mei was reopened last fall. The Central Daily newspaper editors have written some articles congratulating Han Mei and hoping Han Mei will be permanent. Yes, the Han Mei alumnae are of course all old or grown up and the second and next generations need Christian education beside Sunday School and specialized curriculum in the church. The church school is needed for nurturing Christian faith.

My brother, Silas (now in Michigan State College), helped to reopen Han Mei last fall as principal. He has been working very hard for the reopening of Han Mei. It means a lot to Shaowu people to have help from the love of our people in Southern Convention and American Board. Han Mei already had a good start, but we hope she is getting better. Of course, the situation in Shaowu is changed, but we look at the history that the faith has never been moved by forces and Christianity is still standing in the world through the bad situation. The truth is still truth. The truth has never failed.

Shaowu is a good place for our gospel because the people need very much and Han Mei is one of the best places as our starting point for the Kingdom of God.

We hope you pray for Han Mei School continually.

SILAS CHANG.

By TIMOTHY CHANG.

Silas Chang was born on November 16, 1919, in Shaowu, Fukien, China, but grew up in Foochow. He was graduated from Fukien Christian University, 1943, in agricultural department. He had the highest scholarship "Sher-te-tang" when he was studying in F. C. University.

He taught in Fukien Christian University Agricultural High School one year and became the dean of that high school. He was asked to work as a dean of Provincial High School in August of 1946 and had a very good reputation among the people.

Last summer, Rev. R. L. Jackson and the Board of Han Mei School asked him to go back to Shaowu and help to reopen Han Mei School there.

He came to the United States in April of this year and studies in Michigan State College Agricultural Department for his advanced degrees.

His successful works are because of his knowledge, practical mind, and his Christian character.

SOMETHING ABOUT HAN MEI.

By SILAS CHANG.

Two years ago, when I was going to leave Shaowu for working as a Dean of Provincial High School near Amoy, Mrs. Jackson talked with me and asked me to help Han Mei School if she is opened. I promised that I would help if it is necessary. Last year, the Board of Han Mei and Mr. Jackson sent me a letter asking to help them reopen Han Mei School.

The idiom says, "It is hard to begin a new work." Han Mei was closed twenty years already. Of course, it was not a new school, but it was a reopened school. Everything for the school would be started. I thought that God would help us to rebuild this school for His gospel. I decided to go back to Shaowu and the work began.

In the limitation of the teachers and furnishings, 196 students were enrolled. Twelve workers were working for Han Mei at the beginning. It was a good start.

The first work we had been prepared for in reopening Han Mei was repairing the ruined buildings. They were used by Fukien Christian University during the war. We were sorry that the five stories of the main building of old Han Mei were burned five years ago. Therefore, we could repair only some of the small old buildings.

Even the furniture was simple and of temporary style, but the students

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Are you a stamp collector? I am not a serious one because I do not have the money to spend on unusual or hard-to-find items. Several years ago someone told me that it was worthwhile to save commemorative stamps and I have done so ever since. This doesn't cost anything the way I do it. Look at the letters coming to your home. If the stamp marks a special occasion or event, take it off and save it. They may be stored in envelopes or boxes. There are albums with pages to be added or with places already marked for commemorative stamps. It is fun to look them over from time to time. Last year there were more special stamps issued than usual and my collection swelled. I make it a point not to buy any, just to use the ones I received. A serious collector would scoff at my system but I am saving them in hopes my son will enjoy them when he is older.

When a new stamp is issued, the Post Office sets the date and place for the first ones to be sold and cancelled. Last week Richmond sold the first of the Poe stamps. These were issued in honor of Edgar Allen Poe, Richmond's great poet. Much to my surprise, I was sent a Poe cachet—that's the cover of the envelope bearing the stamp and the mark—first issue. Since I'm fond of poetry, Poe, Richmond and stamps, it seemed a most fitting gift and I treasured it above many other things. I can keep it for a long time and remember the day, the thought behind the gift and the history of the man.

If you receive mail from abroad you may collect foreign stamps in the same way. From time to time a few come my way, but all of us have a chance to receive American stamps. If you don't have much mail and know someone who does, ask them to save them for you. People are usually cooperative about stamp saving.

When you see a stamp on a letter it represents a lot of work: an artist designed the stamp, Congress approved it, it was printed and issued. And there follows the mailing, cancelling, carrying and delivering of the letter. Stamps are a part of our way of life.

TIME TO ENJOY BEAUTY.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Must you always hurry?"

"Is there no time in your lives for relaxation and repose?"

"Can you not see what harm such constant haste is doing to your children?"

Never have I asked any of my friends such startling questions, but I do wish very many of them could have the problem of needless haste placed before them in a way that would cause them to give it their serious attention. They come into the library every day—hurried and worried mothers—too busy to let their children linger over the beautiful displays we have prepared for them.

This morning it was Marcia Denman. She dragged her little Gary away from a table of snow scenes that intrigued him, saying, "Come on, Gary. We haven't time to look at Miss Mallory's pictures today. Mother has too much to do at home." Then to me she confided, "I'm busy every single minute, but the pile of unfinished work ahead of me seems to grow bigger all the time!"

Had Marcia taken a few moments to look at the fine color-photographs of winter landscapes, I am sure she would have gone home refreshed and ready to take up her duties with renewed zest. She would have delighted as much as Gary in the pictures of furry forest creatures in their winter homes.

I wish all mothers who are like Marcia could have shared a happy experience that came to me one evening last summer. I was occupied with some book lists when my young friend, Bobby Barron, came to the door.

"We're going to drive up to Table Rock, Aunt Lucia," he informed me. "Wouldn't you like to come with us? Mother and Daddy are waiting out in the car."

"Oh, Bobby, I haven't time—" I started to say, looking regretfully at the stack of papers on my desk. Suddenly the thought came to me that Bobby's parents are busy people, too. Tom's work as secretary of an immense welfare organization demands all of his days and many of his evenings. Flora, as the mother of five energetic children, has very little free time. If those two could stop their work long enough to drive into the mountains and watch the sunset, why couldn't I? "I'll be glad to go with you, Bobby," I said, and putting aside my papers resolutely, I followed the little boy out to the waiting car.

As we left the city and began to wind through the hills, the beauty of the evening seemed to unfold us in a blue and golden light. Already I was glad to be along.

This is Tom's favorite spot," declared Flora as we neared the summit of the huge flat peak that overlooks our valley. "He'd find his work very wearing if he couldn't come up here once in a while."

Gazing across the wide green valley that stretched below us into the sunset, I could well understand my friends' feelings. Even the children stood still to watch the twinkling strings of lights spring up to outline the streets of the city and to follow the jeweled lines of headlights that marked the roads to the farms.

"Pretty! Pretty!" exclaimed small David.

"You're right, Son," answered his father. "The view from here is always beautiful, but evening is the best time to see it. Now we must start (Continued on page 11.)"

Youth at Work in the Church

YOUTH FELLOWSHIP COUNCIL.

On October 7 and 8 the Southern Convention Youth Fellowship Council met at Elon College to discuss the plans and suggestions for the coming year. There is always a spirit of fellowship and enthusiasm at these meetings. The young people leave with ideas for their offices and plans for action. It is up to you to help them see it through.

The meeting was called to order by the president, C. Baxter Twiddy, who followed that by a short devotional service. The group was in session from 3:30 p. m. on Friday until 10:00 p. m., and reconvened on Saturday at 9:00 and adjourned at 2:30 p. m. We were served our meals in the college dining hall.

The first topic which came up and was discussed was publications, the new youth paper of the United Church and the Youth Outreach.

One of the more important efforts was the planning of the rallies and meetings in the conferences for the coming year. Plans for each conference were discussed with ideas for speakers, organizational needs, camps for the summer and suggestions for activation.

The budget was relegated to the finance committee after suggestions by the entire group. They turned in their report which contained suggestions for conference apportionments. A specific report of the committee as affects your conference will be sent to your president.

An interesting project was taken up by the council, that of sending someone to Europe next year. We would like to have a representative from the Southern Convention participating in building peace and friendship for the world.

Goals, of which you will be informed, were set up to determine which organizations, and that includes pilgrim fellowship groups, missionary groups, and Sunday school classes, shall have qualified for recognition as group which have worked toward and accomplished the goals suggested by the convention. This feeling that young people all over Virginia and North Carolina are working toward the same goals should help to bring them closer together.

The Commission Chairman gave brief reports and asked for ideas and suggestions from the council. The commission action was planned.

Teams to go into churches to present programs and answer questions about the convention organization were discussed and decided upon. It was agreed that a method of training young people for this work should be devised, and the plan of a retreat, or week-end training school was accepted.

Those attending the council meeting were officers of the council: Baxter Twiddy, President; Helen Jackson, Secretary; John Truitt, Jr., Treasurer.

Commission Chairmen—Evelyn Moore Graham, Interdenominational Action; Lois Long, Social Action; Fleta Moffatt, Personal Action.

Dorothy Ballinger, President, N. C. and Va. Conference; Dorothy Scott, Chairman, Junior High Work; Ann Truitt, Editor of the Youth Outreach.

Councillors—Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Christian Education Secretary of the Convention; Rev. W. J. Andes; Mrs. W. B. Williams; Mrs. J. D. Strader and Mrs. Mark W. Andes.

We feel that a good start was made on the year 1949-50, and ask for your earnest support in bringing the young people of our church to the Christian life.

STUDENT WORK AT U. N. C.

Among visitors in our services of worship during the past four weeks, there have been students from seven denominations: Baptist, Congregational, Disciple, Evangelical and Reformed, Methodist, Presbyterian and United Presbyterian. These students have come from Connecticut, Kansas, Kentucky, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Virginia, the District of Columbia, and the Territory of Hawaii. But, there has not been a single student from one of our churches of the Southern Convention. During this period we have had three student suppers at which attendance has been small. One student from one of our Southern Convention churches attended one of these student suppers, giving our congregation at least one glimpse of a student of our own denominational fellowship here in North Carolina and Virginia.

back, because Daddy has to go to a committee meeting. Then turning to me, he said, "I wish we could stay longer, Lucia, but even a few minutes on Table Rock make the trip worthwhile."

"Yes, indeed," I replied. "I'm sure my work will be done more easily and more quickly because you have helped me to take time out to enjoy all this beauty!"

And so it proved.

ISAIAH TEACHES TRUST IN GOD.

LESSON IV—OCTOBER 23, 1949

MEMORY SELECTION: I will trust, and not be afraid; for the Lord, even the Lord, is my strength and song.
—Isaiah 12:2.

LESSON: Isaiah 7; 12:2; 25-26; 30:1-17.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 27.

A Nation on a Hot Spot.

Judah was on a hot spot. Assyria was on the prowl. Like Germany under Hitler she was bidding for the domination of the world, and perhaps for the "next thousand years" in her thought. Her main adversary was Egypt, a nation that was already decadent and riding for a fall. Egypt therefore was desperately looking for ways and means of resisting Assyria, and bidding for allies. But Egypt was not the only nation that was shaking in its boots. Little Syria, and little Israel were even more fearful, and they were feverishly looking for allies themselves. They suggested to Judah's king, Ahaz, that he join them in an alliance, along with Egypt. Thus it was that with his nation on a spot, Ahaz was on the spot himself. For the kings of Syria and Egypt bluntly told Ahaz that if he did not join them in the alliance, they would join each other in a campaign against him, defeat him, and set up a puppet king who would join them in the alliance.

This is the background of Isaiah's message to Ahaz. Meeting the king while he was inspecting the defenses of Jerusalem, Isaiah told Ahaz to have nothing to do with the whole business. Assyria was a sure bet to crush Egypt, and the little nations allied with him. If Judah was involved in the matter, she would suffer the same fate as did the other nations. But if she had nothing to do with the high-powered diplomacy and secret alliances, sitting as she was off the beaten path of the armies, and among the mountains she would escape the fury of Assyrian might, and be spared. Thus spoke the prophet. It was sound advice, based on a shrewd knowledge of international affairs and spiritual insight direct from God.

The Prophet and the Politician.

Ahaz, however, was too worldly wise to take Isaiah's advice. He engineered a masterpiece (?) of political wisdom. He called the king of Assyria to his help, stripping the palace and the temple of their wealth as a bribe to the Assyrian king, and thus saved himself from two little nations that had threatened him. But he jumped out of the frying pan into the fire. His nation not only became a battleground in this war, but he had to pay a heavy tribute to the Assyrian king. Furthermore, in revealing the riches of the nation to this plundering king he awakened to the spirit of greed which later led Assyria to conquer Judah and confiscate her riches. These starry-eyed prophets and preachers, how little they know about practical politics and about the hard-matter-of-fact world! So say the politicians and diplomats and foreign offices of the nations. But history shows that the prophets, that those who know the signs of the times often know more than the politicians. It is now clear that the Allies paid a big price for Russian participation in the war against Japan as arranged at Yalta. Moral principles and the rights of other nations were sacrificed, and lo we are reaping the harvest of our mistake.

Defenses and Alliances.

In those days, nations and leaders had the notion that the security of the nation depended upon material might, and multilateral (that is a $64 word) treaties. Thick walls, large armies, many weapons, together with working agreements with other nations, guaranteed the security and safety of a nation. An effort was made to keep "a balance of power." There were secret treaties. The idea was to make one group of nations so strong that no other nation would ever attack it.

Anything in that which sounds modern? One would hardly recommend that we give up our atomic weapons of warfare in the present state of affairs, that we scrap our navies and disband our armies and destroy all our stock-piles of military supplies. And there is undoubtedly some value in the North Atlantic Pact and all the treaties that have been signed by the Western nations. But are these the sources of strength in our modern world, and are they a guarantee of security against aggressor nations? Has any nation ever been so strong that another aggressive nation was afraid to attack her when it was thought that the hour had struck? Has military preparation ever prevented wars? What does history have to say about all this? These chapters from the prophets are not so far removed from modern life, nor as impractical as they at first sight seem to be. In fact the conditions were quite similar to the situation in our world today. And the principles which these prophets proclaimed are still valid. To be sure modern armies do not use horses and chariots—they do use some cavalry, of course—but the fact that they use tanks does not change the principle of the thing. Or again the great nations of our modern world have wealth that is beyond the imagination of the nations of Isaiah's day, but this wealth does not make a nation great or what is still more to the point, secure. As a matter of fact one of the penalties of holding a material view of life is fear. We are not much superior to Ahaz so far as our conception of what makes a nation great. And what shall we say about the mistaken conception about the place of religion in the life of a nation which Ahaz had in comparison to the conception which is characteristic of many of the leaders of our nation today? What real consideration do they give to religion in the shaping of national and international policies? To be sure they would reject outright atheism. But they adopt with a qualm the practical atheism which reduces God to a dim and shadowy figure with no power or function except that of giving an atmosphere of dignity and stability to the national life and the life of the individual. Lip service is paid to ideals but in practice reliance is on force, and when force can be purchased at the price of sacrificing ideals, the sacrifice is made. We are, it seems, more troubled by indications of an economic depression than by evidences of moral and spiritual weaknesses. Inflation of money seems more terrible than deflation of ideals. As a writer has put it, "If Ahaz was wrong, then we are wrong. If we are right, then so was he." History seems to say he was wrong. We had better stop, look and listen.

OBSERVANCE OF LAYMEN'S
SUNDAY URGED.

tention to the importance of the Laity in such statements as these:

The laity constitute more than 99% of the Church.

In the customary work of the Church (preaching, evangelism, teaching and social work) the latent spiritual resources of the rank and file are urgently needed.

Lay men and women spend the greater part of their lives in their homes, their occupations, and the public life, of the community. . . .

In the laity the Church has a body of men and women in which the real daily meeting of the Church and the world on its own ground takes place.

The following are suggestions to be refined and expanded into a practical program:

1. The local churches and councils of churches should be urged to increase the vocational awareness of church members as to their responsibilities as lawyers, doctors, journalists, etc.

2. The churches should develop greater engineering skills in finding ways in which lay men and women can participate in the work of the church and community within the limits of their time and special abilities. Tested personnel techniques in other fields and practices should be studied and used.

3. The church should be a Power House in which its members receive inspiration and guidance for service and leadership in other organizations serving the needs of the community.

4. The local church, and/or the other church organizations should pay the expenses of lay men or lay women who assume church duties that require travel or other major costs such as serving on boards or committees beyond the local church. The individuals who have the desired abilities will ordinarily make a major sacrifice in taking time away from their business or home, and should not be expected in addition, to personally bear their expenses. This does not apply to expenses for merely attending general meetings where specific responsibilities are not involved.

5. Laymen must be given important and definite work to do. Their abilities as shown in their professional, business and other daily work is a guide to the size of jobs they should be expected to perform for the church.

6. Laymen must be given full recognition and credit for the church work they do. The minister is in the strategic position to see that his laymen and laywomen (not himself) are built up as responsible for the work that is done by the church.

7. The church board of men's organization should actively participate in behalf of the church in community affairs. The church needs to be an important part of the total community. Board members should be designated to regularly report on various community activities and to represent the church in various programs.

8. Build into the minds of church members a realization that the primary work of the church is not done on Sunday or at the church. The work of the church is done seven days in the week in the homes, in business, and wherever church people work. Full recognition of this view should be given in guiding lay activity and leadership and in giving credit for church work.

"ONLY A LAYMAN."

"How can only a layman—an average man—help to guide this confused world if he has no great inspirational purpose in mind—no call to start something 'world shaking'? What if he hasn't even the foggiest notion of how to come out of his personal corner to do something concrete about the burning issues before society today?

"Here are some suggested primers to action; some of the avenues to explore; doors to open. A man who has courage enough to make a start, will find a way, perhaps, to accomplish some great mission. God always finds work for those who wish to serve.

"Support your church, not only with your money, but also with your presence, your talents, your time and your enthusiasm.

"Talk up your church—its work, its program, its ministry, its fellowship.

"Invite new-comers, friends, neighbors, non-church members to attend your church and participate in its activities.

"Make your church a power in the community—always responding to unmet needs.

"Explore the possibilities for concerted action to strengthen the efforts of existing agencies at work on vital problems.

"Give leadership to the task of improving human relationships in industry and of helping build world peace.

"Work with youth in developing leadership for the years ahead. heed- ing the old Chinese classic:

If you are going to plan for one year, plant grain.

If you are going to plan for ten years, plant trees.

If you are going to plan for a hundred years, plant men.

"You may be 'only a layman,' but your particular know-how whether in the field of education, finance, organization, public relations, distribution, labor, manufacturing, administration, personnel, machinery, or whatever it may be, is sorely needed.

"Men of goodwill do not bury their talents, they put them to work so that they may give a good accounting of their stewardship. They press forward, following the example of St. Paul, 'toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God.'

"You are a powerhouse, if you get yourself into action!"—From The Message.

THE PLACE OF THE LAYMAN.

In recovering Christianity as a layman's religion we are getting back to the place where Christianity started. Neither Jesus nor any of His disciples were members of the priesthood or the clergy. They were laymen, all of them. The Master, a layman Himself, talked nothing but laymen's language—God a shepherd, tending His sheep; the husbandman pruning his vines; a farmer sowing and reaping; a merchantman seeking pearls; a householder giving trust to his stewards. In every accent of His teaching

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Thanks for the total of $499.59 this week. How badly it is needed on account of the depletion of the treasury because of the renovations of the summer. So far as I know this is the first time in many years bills have had to be left lying on the Superintendent's desk because of lack of funds with which to pay them. If you have funds in any of your church treasuries due to be sent to the Orphanage this is a call for them. If you are planning to donate to the orphanage any time soon a personal contribution now is the time. We need the funds. Groceries, seed for fall sewing, shoes, school clothes, water, lights, heat for cooking, current upkeep and repairs of buildings and farming implements, hospital care, the monthly payroll—such are some of the bills that pile up here. These items were usually met with reserve funds. Make a place in your plans for these children.

Wayne came with us yesterday. Father dead, mother blind, no home, little hope, but a lovely boy. A lovely lad, pretty eyes, good face, fine figure—but passed around here and there. Yesterday, I brought him after all tests and examinations and grades proved him to be all right. This morning he stood on my doorstep sobbing his little heart out for his poor blind mother. He came in and we heard his story of loneliness. We wiped his tears, perhaps shed a few with him, and then got two fine fellows his age and the four of us went riding, had ice cream cones, and drove around to the edge of one of the pasture fields and walked them together. We talked, brought them back and left him with his pals happy. There are seventy-four of these children here now, and they must find kindness, training, poise and home. Mrs. Truitt helped me console the lad's heart, and joins me in our hopes and prayers that every child here may find the strength of body, mind and spirit to be the kind of persons we would all hope them to be. How proud all of us here at the orphanage when our boys and girls are given spirits free of inferiority complex and courage to stand on their own two feet in the crowd along the best of them.

Thanks to six fine barbers at the Carolina Barbershop, Burlington, for trimming the hair of our boys on a Wednesday afternoon off when they could have been enjoying their half-holiday. They tell me they did greatly enjoy it and I believe they did.

cal Churches scattered throughout Latin America are effective bulwarks against the spread of materialistic and extremist ideologies." The report concludes by saying that "the presence of Evangelical Churches in Latin America is not only fully justified, but absolutely necessary."

The Argentine Government sent a plain-clothes member of the Federal Police to witness the conference deliberations.

The inaugural message was given by Dr. John A. Mackey, president of Princeton Seminary and of the International Missionary Council. Officially representing the World Council of Churches was Dr. Marc Boegner, one of its presidents.

In the report presented to the meeting by Rev. Jorgelina Lozada, a woman minister of the Disciples of Christ Church in Argentina, attention was called to "the ever greater participation of women in social, business and political activities in Latin America."

were still enthusiastic to study the knowledge of human life and seek the gospels.

There are only a small number of books and science apparatus in the library and laboratory, but the students enjoyed them. Beside seven periods of classes each day, there was a half hour morning worship every day, required for all students. This was called Morning Conference. The Bible was required for every student and sixteen hymns were learned within two months. The campus was filled with the teaching of Christianity.

Rev. R. L. Jackson and I took the responsibilities for morning worship. The ministers were speaking to the students in the morning worship, too. We helped them to read the New Testament, pray, sing hymns, and learn some meaningful games.

Miss Burr used to help the students to prepare the programs for our Christian festivals. The students presented a religious play named "No Room in the Inn" last Christmas and the people enjoyed it very much.

Dr. and Mrs. Riggs helped in the health department of Han Mei School. They examined all students and took care of their health.

Finally, we might say that Han Mei had a good start, I hope, and everybody hopes that she will be standing in the world for years to come. Han Mei High School would be saved by cooperation with God and by her friends.

GREAT HOUR AT ROSEMONT.

tion, was conducted by the pastor, assisted by the members of the Board of Deacons. The two young men were called to the front of the church. Then the deacons of the church were called to come forward and form a semi-circle around the two young candidates, and then the service began. The pastor read appropriate passages of scripture, followed by questions concerning belief and promise. Then while the candidates knelt at the chancel rail, two senior deacons, Mr. O. S. Mills and Mr. A. M. Pugh, stepped forward, one on each side, placed their hand on the head of each candidate (one following the other), and along with the pastor's hand, the laying on of hands brought the service to a close with these words from the pastor: "My Brother, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by authority vested in the Church, I ordain you to the office of deacon in this congregation, and may the Holy Spirit enable you to discharge the duties of your position. Amen."

Finally, this was a "Great Hour" for Rosemont because the service was brought to a fitting climax with the Sacrament of the Lord Supper in observance of World Communion Sunday. The church was packed with people. There were no empty pews to be seen anywhere. It was like an Easter Morning congregation. The people had come from far and near to be there in that service and to have a part in that experience of worship. It had taken the deacons completely by surprise because they had not prepared enough wine for the Communion Service, not realizing that so many people would be present. So that, while the Communion was being served in the church that morning, one deacon was busy in the kitchen filling empty Communion glasses until all had been served.

It was about 12:35 p. m. when the Congregation sang the last hymn, "Faith of Our Fathers." After the benediction and the pastor had made his way to the back of the church to bid the people "Good day," these words were on the lips of almost everyone. "It was a great service. The time passed so quickly."

OBSERVANCE OF LAYMEN'S SUNDAY URGED.

He brushes past the language of the schools to deal in plain speech with the areas where laymen and laywomen live and work.

Moreover, early Christianity was spread across the Roman Empire, not by clergymen but by laymen who translated the gospel into terms of daily life. There is something to be said for the old Quaker protest against having any specialized and paid clergy at all. My own impression is that ministers are a necessary evil—necessary, indeed, but liability too insofar as a priestly class encourages the idea that religion is our speciality and so obscures what the New Testament called the priesthood of all believers, and hides that primary function the laymen can preeminently fulfill, the translation of the gospel into terms of day-by-day human relations.

The most crucial problems of the world today lie in the realms where you laymen live. Do not misunderstand me; I am not depreciating my special vocation; I glory in it. Yet when the great mass of men and women want to know whether Christianity can really be made to work in this world, it is to you and to the realms where you live that they look for the ultimate test.

—Harry Emerson Fosdick.

IF I WERE A LAYMAN.

If I were a layman, I would keep in mind that my minister is a human being just as I am. This will tend to make a layman more charitable in his criticism of a minister's weakness. It will also eliminate the possibility of any double standard of Christian character and conduct on the part of the minister and laymen.

If I were a layman, I would be guided by the realization that God expects me to be the best possible layman, just as He expects my minister to be the best possible minister.

If I were a layman, I would support faithfully the public services of my church.

If I were a layman, I would judge my minister's work in the light of only one criterion—Kingdom building. The true standard of judgment is not: does he suit me? or does he suit my particular organization in the church or church school? does he suit my church denomination at the destructive expense of all other Christians?

If I were a layman, I would realize that the future of the Christian Church is just as dependent upon me as a layman as it is upon my minister. One is reminded of the thought expressed by the late Archbishop of Canterbury, William Temple, that the minister represents the things of God before the congregations, but the congregation represents them before the outside world.—Dr. Frank Stanger, Haldon Heights, N. J.

A CONGREGATIONAL LAYMAN WRITES.

Thirty-three years of law practice in our State has taught certain things about most folks and the "willing" of their property.

Their horizon is limited to immediate legal heirs.

They ask two questions (1) How can they give to one heir they like, (2) How can they cut out an heir they dislike.

Sometimes there comes a person of refreshing imagination, grateful for the bounty with which he has been blessed. One gave to a Shrine hospital, another gave to our Christian College, another to the aged minister's fund and still another gave substantially to his church.

Your pastor has often thought of these things but is shy about mentioning it, so as a Congregational layman I would speak.

These are some good works of our church:

(1) The home church, we love it. Here is where we worshipped, were married, baptized and from which we shall be buried.

(2) The State Conference which welds our old Home Churches into one. It cares for all the churches.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA LAYMEN.

A last-minute reminder to the Laymen of Western North Carolina Conference to make plans now, if you plan to join with a great number of our churches to observe Laymen's Sunday on October 16. This is to be a great day in our church and throughout the country.

I urge you to have charge of the service on this day. Now is the time for all good laymen to come to the aid of their church on Sunday, October 16.

S. H. PELL, Chairman,
Western N. C. Laymen.

"How Far Can You Reach?"

Food from American farmers gets a warm reception from these hungry youngsters in Rechtenbach, Germany. Seventy-five million pounds of food gifts from U. S. farmers were given last year through CROP, the Christian Rural Overseas Program.

If someone should ask you the question, "How far can you reach?" you might think the answer obvious: "Why, as long as my arm is, of course." But that's not the only answer possible.

Another answer was found by many Christians last year in the Southern Convention, through the Christian Rural Overseas Program. CROP, the coordinated church program which gathers foods and fibers from the nation's farming people and sends them to needy areas around the world, was behind a collection of foods which resulted in shipment of enormous quantities of various foods.

For all those who participated in the CROP giving last year, the length of their "reach" was increased, by thousands of miles. When the last carton of milk or bag of grain was delivered overseas, aid had been sent to eleven countries of Europe and Asia. China, Greece, Germany, India, Holland, Italy, Finland, Austria, the Philippines, Okinawa and Guam all were among the recipients.

Over a million pounds of corn, wheat and mixed goods—beans, canned foods, cotton, flour, milk, oats, peanuts, soybeans, syrup and shortening were gathered up. Most of the corn and wheat was converted into other essential foods.

Why not join with your neighbors, this year, in reaching out to those who have nowhere to turn for food if you turn away?

Old in Years--Young in Spirit

WAKE CHAPEL CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Wake Chapel Christian Church is located near Fuquay Springs, North Carolina, in the central part of the State. This ninety-three years young church, under the efficient leadership of one of the Convention's younger ministers and the support of its rapidly increasing membership, is building for the future. Rev. Fred Register has a right to be proud of the work that is being done by this group of consecrated workers. There is promise of an even greater harvest in the future. See article elsewhere in this issue.

Congratulations to Pleasant Ridge, Sophia, Seagrove and Belew Creek-Salem Chapel on the completion of beautiful parsonages. Congratulations also to the Sanford Church on the completion of its educational building and renovation of their church sanctuary.

Rev. L. M. Pressnell takes up his work at Liberty and Smithwood Churches in the Western Conference in November. Rev. M. L. Pollard has served these two churches in connection with the Pleasant Hill Church for the past two or three years but Mr. Pollard will give full time beginning in November to the Pleasant Hill Church.

Persons and churches desiring to obtain the services of Timothy Chang for speaking engagements in local churches should contact Supt. Scott of the Convention Office, Elon College, North Carolina. Timothy will be available for limited service on weekends during the fall and winter. Those desiring his services should contact Supt. Scott at once.

Rev. Clovis G. Chappell, widely known Methodist preacher and author, who has been preaching for 41 years, 32 of them in downtown churches in Washington, D. C.; Birmingham, Ala.; Memphis, Tenn.; Dallas and Houston, Tex.; Oklahoma City and other cities, retired at the Western North Carolina Conference sessions, September 21-26. He will devote more time to writing and preaching-at-large assignments. His 26th book, When the Church was Young, will be published early next year.

Rev. Virgil A. Kraft, recently director of the Wesley Foundation at the University of Minnesota, has been made managing editor of the Christian Century Pulpit and Twentieth Century Quarterly. A frequent contributor to The Christian Advocate, Dr. Kraft for several years conducted the "Emergency Rations" department. He continues to follow a busy speaking schedule. He packs in many engagements by flying his own plane when conditions permit. He is a member of the Minnesota Conference.

Mrs. Lillian B. Miles and Dr. C. Rexford Raymond were married September 28 at the Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Orville D. Wilson of Haverhill, Mass., son-in-law of the bridegroom. Dr. Raymond was pastor of the Southern Pines Church before going to Charleston, S. C. Mrs. Raymond, formerly of Buffalo, attended Oliver Halstead Conservatory, Houghton Wesleyan Methodist Seminary and Vineland Business Institute before going to Southern Pines in 1921.

CHIMES AND ORGAN AT LIBERTY CHURCH FORMALLY DEDICATED.

A set of chimes and a Hammond organ were dedicated at services held recently at the Liberty (Vance) Church with Rev. T. Fred Wright, pastor, conducting the service.

The chimes are a gift to the church by Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Newman in memory of Mr. Newman's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Newman. Following the dedication of the chimes, the organ was then dedicated.

Appropriate organ music and the playing of the chimes composed the major portion of the service. Mr. Wright also made appropriate remarks concerning the place of music in worship services.

Mrs. Bobby Kittrell, church organist, presided at the organ and Mrs. T. Fred Wright was soloist for the occasion. The church also participated in the service.

MANY CHURCHES CELEBRATE LAYMEN'S SUNDAY.

We, who are responsible for the Laymen's Fellowship of the Southern Convention, are happy over the response of our churches in their participation in Laymen's Sunday, October 16. Many of our churches furnished their own Laymen and provided their own program, which is a very fine thing. Others asked that we furnish them a speaker, and, with the exception of one request which came a little late, we were able to provide speakers for all who requested such aid.

It is encouraging to see our Laymen taking interest in church affairs. There is much we can do. Our work should be constructive and we should try, at all times, to help our pastor do a better job and, while all that is needed in any local church cannot be done in a single year, we can take the jobs one by one and over a period of years many worth while things can be accomplished.

I wish to take this occasion to express to all the ministers who cooperated with us our sincere thanks for their kindness. At the same time I want to thank all our Laymen who took the responsibility of a service, whether it was in their own church or in another. If we continue to work together, we can build a stronger and more useful church.

Sincerely,

GEORGE D. COLCLOUGH,
Chairman, Southern Conv.
Laymen's Fellowship.

REV. GUY H. VEAZEY HELPS TO ORGANIZE AND BUILD A NEW CHURCH.

In 1906 Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Allen purchased a farm and moved to it at Linville, Louisiana. There was no Christian church in that state at that time; they were naturally anxious for a church home, having been members of old McGuire's Chapel Christian Church in the Alabama Christian Conference. They have remained on this farm, and reared a large family, some of whom have gone out into other churches. All these years the Father and Mother have dreamed of a Christian Church.

In the early summer of 1949 the high school auditorium was for sale. They purchased it, had it torn down and moved onto a lot adjoining the school property, which they had reserved several years ago when they sold some land to the school.

About the first of July, this year, the Rev. G. H. Veazey, pastor of Long's Chapel Congregational Christian Church, near Burlington, North Carolina, took a few carpenter's tools and went to this community to spend

NOTICE TO N. C. & VA. CONFERENCE DELEGATES.

The members of Ingram wish to take this opportunity to say that they are looking forward to having their many friends throughout the North Carolina and Virginia Conference as their guests during the conference this year. For those of you who are unfamiliar with the location of Ingram Christian Church, it is about eighteen miles east of Danville and sixteen miles west of Halifax on the south side of U. S. Highway No. 360, at Ingram, Virginia. It is anticipated that the meals during the conference will be priced at 75c each. Dinner and supper will be served the first day, and dinner on the second. For those who will remain with us overnight, the overnight entertainment will include breakfast. Cards for estimating the number of those who will desire overnight accommodations are to be included with the church report forms, and the committee in charge of overnight entertainment will appreciate your prompt filling in of the card and sending it to Ingram Christian Church, Vernon Hill, Virginia, in order that ample provision may be made for those desiring to stay with us.

ROBT. T. WOODRUFF,
Pastor.

A LETTER FROM TIMOTHY CHANG.

September 26, 1949.

DEAR FRIENDS:

"The time is flying over." It is true. I left my home one year already. Sometimes I was alone remembering something about my parents, brothers and sisters under the silent moonlight. I really wanted to see them immediately. But it was not easy as I thought, because of the separation with the cool water Pacific

My brother Silas came to United States five months ago for studying Master and Doctor degrees of agriculture in Michigan State College. It impressed me so much that I could go up to visit Silas shortly after my summer school was over.

You can imagine that how beautiful was the scenery along both sides of the highway through North Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Ohio and Michigan—but I did not enjoy it very much at that time because of my imagination to meet Silas. How happy we were when we met each other in Michigan State College at East Lansing on September 3 morning. We lived together two weeks and we were so happy, but I could not describe it with my pen. I hate that I am not a good writer.

After two weeks, Silas and I went to visit Dr. and Mrs. G. W. Shepherd at Detroit, who were missionaries to Shaowu sixteen years ago and now the pastor of Highland Park Congregational Christian Church in Michigan. They took us to visit around Detroit—Ford Plant, Edison Museum, etc. Mrs. Shepherd cooked Chinese food for us and we talked about Shaowu and China. We really had a good time in visiting Detroit and I got a lot of knowledge from this visit in Detroit and Highland Park.

After four days, Mrs. Shepherd

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

LET YOUR LIGHT SO SHINE . . .

A brochure setting forth the plans for a new First Church in Greensboro lies on the editor's desk. The front page carries a partial sketch of the new edifice, accentuated by the skillful use of color. Page two carries the reader back to the origin of the church in 1899, and brings him swiftly up to date through significant and successive stages. Page three opens the vista of dreams and plans. Pages four and five, the center spread, indicate graphically the "Channels Through Which We Work to Make Christ Known." Page five carries a succinct financial statement and page six is a city map with the new location on Radiance Drive indicated in color.

Churches generally have been slow in utilizing modern methods of publicity. Many persist in using antiquated methods. It is refreshing to find a church which dares to put a dash of color, and whatever extra expense is involved, in order to give adequate publicity to its enterprise. It is no surprise to learn that the Greensboro Church has just completed a most successful financial campaign under the leadership of the pastor, Dr. W. E. Wiseman and Mr. Curtis Schumaker of our Board of Home Missions.

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD MEETS

A meeting with the Executive Board of the Southern Convention reminds one of the inescapable interrelatedness of our churches. We are not simply a group of independent, autonomous churches. We are voluntarily bound together for mutual benefits. Although some people and churches may feel that the Convention machinery is superfluous, a problem, a need, or a crisis sends them scuttling to the Convention agencies for counsel or assistance. We are engaged in an enterprise larger than the program of any one local church. No one part of the body of Christ can say to another, "I have no need of thee."

It should be a matter of satisfaction as well as record that the larger interests of our churches are receiving diligent attention. The members of this Board give considerable time and effort to work which transcends the local church. The Convention as well as the local church must give an account of its stewardship.

The Executive Board met at Henderson on Tuesday, October 11. Dr. John G. Truitt presided. Reports were made on the Ministerial Loan Fund, Ministerial Scholarship Fund, Committee on Superintendent's Home, Committee on the Christian Orphanage, etc., the Superintendent's report covering the period from April 1 to September 1, indicated 73 visits to churches (21 of these visits were with pulpit committees having to do with obtaining pastoral leadership in 44 churches), 21 sermons, 31 addresses; attendance at 11 Sunday school sessions, 102 group conferences, 106 individual conferences. These activities necessitated 12,546 miles of travel and a total expense of $680.60.

Mr. George D. Colclough was elected Chairman of the Committee on the Superintendent's Home, succeeding Dr. J. H. Dollar. The Board reiterated the request of Dr. C. E. Newman, Conference Historian, that histories of local churches be forwarded to the Historian for use in the Historical Room at Elon College.

An invitation for the Convention to meet at Oakland, May 2, 3, 4, 1950, was accepted. High tribute was paid to the Convention personnel for their faithfulness and efficiency.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, who has now begun her services as Educational Secretary for the Convention, was recognized. Just now she is planning and promoting attendance at the Week-End Young People's Conference at Shallow Well Church, Jonesboro, North Carolina, October 22-23. Here is her statement to pastors and adult leaders:

You can see the enthusiasm of the young people for their Conference planned for the fourth week-end in this month. We feel sure we can count on the help of the pastors and Sunday school superintendents in making arrangements for groups to attend. I have never known successful young people's work over a long period of time which did not have the interest and help of one or more adult leaders. You can see that more than anything else we want to get in touch with at least one young person from each of the churches. This is the way interest grows. Christian fellowship is contagious!

THE ELOQUENCE OF DEATH

"Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." (Psalm 116:15.)

Death has greater significance than we sometimes realize. Death comes to place a seal upon achievement. Death is the great educator. The death of the saint should move us to reflection, gratitude and dedication. The saint is a witness in death as in life. Listen to the eloquence of death.

The American Board announces the death of Miss Elizabeth S. Webb, 89-year-old missionary who served actively 44 years in Turkey and Syria.

Miss Webb, who retired on the field in 1930 continued her active interest in mission activities and especially in the Trad Christian Social Center, a community project serving Armenian and Moslem children which she founded following World War I.

Born in 1860 at Bunker Hill, Illinois, and educated at Drury College, Miss Webb first went to the Near East in 1886. She lived through many tragic days including the almost complete destruction of the City of Adana in 1909; World War I when she refused to leave 600 orphan Armenian girls until she could evacuate them to Istanbul and also World War II. In 1939 when the Sanjak region of Alexandretta was ceded to Turkey by France she worked with the Armenian refugees who poured into Beirut at that time.

Crisis and Opportunity in China

By RODERICK SCOTT, D. D.*

The crisis in China is political

The opportunity in China is religious

I

The crisis in China is political, but it is vastly more than a Communist Civil War. What we are witnessing all over the Orient is a Revolution, the revolutionary search of the peoples of the world for freedom, both economic and political. It is our American Revolution, indeed our own Western Christian revolution, for wherever Christ has gone individual men and women begin to feel good for something and to grope after their rights and the acknowledgement of their dignity. Wherever it goes people use the word "democracy," though often without understanding it. Thus a Chinese Christian might conceivably be a Communist, too, because to many Chinese, accustomed to thinking of people only in social groups, democracy means the freedom or equality of the group rather than of the individual and Communism seems to free the Oriental nations from Western imperialism and to free the peasant group from the oppression of the landlords. But this is only half-democracy, leaving personality and its rights and responsibilities out of the picture. A Western Christian who understands democracy in these terms can not be a Communist.

We who have lived long in the Orient, China, India, Africa, are profoundly conscious of this Asian Revolution as a vacuum or tension between the dying Oriental religions and cultures and the successful and efficient Western ways. The happiness that flows from Christian homes all over the world is a great source of the awakening and unsatisfied Orient.

Well, into this vacuum which was created largely by Christian missions, Communism with its well-planned political program, has rushed, in Indonesia, Indo China, and now China.

II

Historically the Chinese Communist Party appears as the "Party of the Unfinished Revolution," rather than as a Soviet-inspired movement. China has made two attempts to set up a political democracy both of which have failed; this "People's Government," which was recently set up in Peiping, is the third. Sun Yat Sen set up the Chinese Revolution in 1911 but so prematurely that a so-called Second Revolution was needed in 1927; this was when Chiang Kai Shek set up the Nationalist Party and Government. That government has now failed and its leaders are completely discredited. There are many reasons for this failure, chief of which is the fact that the eight years of World War II and the three years of Civil War have thrown Chinese culture back forty years, to the time when corruption and disillusionment were ruining the nation and when Sun Yat Sen set out to save it. Indeed the Communists claim Sun also as the "father of their country." This corruption is in the cities, in the centers of power; so far it has not touched the rural Communists. It has not touched the Christians, much. Nor has it touched President Chiang as an individual. It is as a party leader that he is discredited.

So it is true, as has been said, that the Chinese have been "pushed backward" into Communism, by their disgust with the Nationalists not drawn forward by any love for Communism. Actually very few Chinese are Communists. But the Communists have put a stop to the civil war. That makes them welcome.

III

The Communist party has established itself, but can it hold its gains? In the opinion of many observers, the answer is, No. Or, rather, they can not hold their gains without marked change in their program. Their greatest obstacle to communizing China will be the Chinese people themselves. The Chinese people can not be pushed around. Their reasonableness and their general moralness will revolt against the dogmatism and the violence of the Communists. Even now there are reports of peasant revolts and the whole campaign, despite the boastful words, shows signs of slowing down with indefinite postponement of "big change." On the other hand, any Titoism now would be premature. The present emphasis on "being friends with Russia" is a sure sign of inner disagreement between the parts of the Communist party. For the Russians to secure any real influence in China will be a tall order. Russia has been for long China's "No. 1 Enemy"; the peoples are totally unlike in temperament; and few Chinese ever saw a Russian.

IV

The crisis is political, it was said. But the opportunity is religious.

Is there hope for China, or rather, more modestly is there hope for Christianity and Christian missions in China? Here, surprisingly, the answer is, Yes. There is no hysteria in China over Communism; the Christians have overcome their fears; no one (within the writer's acquaintance) has any thought of giving up his faith, should persecution come. The earlier reaction to the gathering menace was despair, then came resignation as indicated above, but now we can detect resolution. "It would be easy to close this college before they come," said Dr. David Cheng, chairman of the Fukien Christian University Administrative Committee, "but as far as I am concerned we shall not close until we are closed; we shall keep going."

This new note of responsibility points to the service and duty of American Christians with respect to Chinese Christians; they must stand (Continued on page 15.)

*Since 1916, Dr. Scott has been serving in China under the American Board of Foreign Missions through many revolutions, some bloodless and social and some extremely warlike. When, during World War II, his University took refuge from the Japanese in the ancient interior city of Shaowu he went with it living under primitive conditions and acting as a stabilizing force for the entire university.

A highly successful professor of both philosophy and English at Fukien Christian University, as well as Acting Dean for ten years, Dr. Scott's close relationship to Chinese youth for over 30 years gives him an unusual insight into present-day problems.

Dr. Scott is the author of several text books on religion and articles for magazines. He was educated at Haverford College; Harvard University; Pacific School of Religion; Union Seminary; Columbia University; and the University of Southern California. Before going to China he was a Professor at Bowdoin, Earlham and Oberlin Colleges.

NEWS FROM ASHEVILLE.

Sunday, October 2, was a significant day in the history of our church at Asheville. As a fitting observance of World Wide Communion Sunday the congregation consecrated a beautiful new altar as a memorial to the late Theodore Merchant, which was a gift from Lt. Merchant's father, Mr. L. L. Merchant, and his two brothers, Lawrence C. and Edward Merchant. Lt. Merchant lost his life in the service of his country in World War II. In addition to the memorial altar, flower stands were given in loving memory of Lt. Merchant by his wife, Mrs. Rose Merchant and her daughter, Sandra Louise. Supt. Wm. T. Scott delivered the sermon of dedication and others participating in the service were the pastor, Chaplain Earl D. Weed, Rev. William P. Jackson, pastor emeritus of the church and Rabbi Sydney E. Unger of Congregation Beth Ha Tephila, Asheville.

The evening service was a further celebration and dedication of lovely gifts to the church, honoring Rev. William P. Jackson, pastor emeritus, memorial lights, given by Mrs. May E. Nelson in memory of her son, David E. Nelson, lost at sea while serving in the Navy in 1942; gift of a vestibule table by Miss Lucy Hopson; gift of the church carpet by the Women's Fellowship of the church; gift of the cross by the Sunday school; gift of the memorial altar vase, in memory of Mrs. Hattie B. Herring, by her children and grandchildren; memorial altar vase in memory of Mrs. Myrtle Krickhan, given by her children and grandchildren; the pulpit, lecturn and pulpit chairs, given from "The Jackson's Appreciation Fund" committee; and the scroll given in appreciation to Rev. and Mrs. Jackson, and Mrs. Jackson.

These lovely additions to the facilities of our Asheville Church add substantially to the utility and beauty of the building and sanctuary.

Tribute is paid to the laymen of the Asheville Church for the zeal with which they have worked in redecorating and making beautiful and useful their church.

It was indeed a pleasure to visit the Asheville Church and to see the fine spirit of cooperation existing in the congregation. Chaplain Weed, retired from the United States Army, is rendering efficient and consecrated service to the leadership of the Asheville Church.

WAKE CHAPEL.

The front-page picture speaks for itself in showing the Educational Building now in process of construction at the Wake Chapel Christian Church, of which Rev. Fred P. Register is pastor. The building consists of an assembly room and eleven class rooms, covering an area of approximately 4,000 square feet, covering both floors.

During the past four years, Wake Chapel has grown rapidly, with greatly increased interest on the part of some of the old members. The records show that there has been approximately a thirty per cent increase in the church membership, with 69 new members. During this time, the enrollment of the Sunday school has more than doubled, with a present enrollment of 215.

Successful Daily Vacation Bible Schools for the past three summers have doubtless accounted for some of this growth. In June of this year, there were 105 children enrolled, with an average daily attendance of 95, with 15 workers.

A recently organized Young Adult Class purchased a bus for the use of the Sunday school, and this has contributed to the increased attendance.

Evangelistic services, conducted by the pastor with the assistance of Rev. Mack Welch, were held in June. Twenty-seven new members were received into the church, ten by profession of faith and seventeen by letter.

A monthly teachers' and officers' meeting has been a sustaining factor in working out problems of the Sunday school.

For the mission year just closing, the Woman's Missionary Society has made the honor roll, with an average monthly attendance of 18. The society supports the Jacksons in Shaoyu and the program of the Convention.

The Junior Choir, sponsored by the Young People's Fellowship, has given fine programs on Christmas and Easter and is responsible for the special music at the morning worship service on the first Sunday in each month.

Two picnics for the children were held at Pullen Park in Raleigh during the summer, both of which were well attended.

At the present time, modifications are being made to the Church Auditorium preparatory to painting and laying the carpet. A heating system and a Hammond organ were installed in 1947. Some time ago, it was necessary to partition off additional Sunday school rooms in the balcony to take care of the growing classes. When these became inadequate, it was decided to construct the new addition.

In cooperation with the other churches in the community, morning worship services are now being broadcast over Station WFVG.

During these four years, Wake Chapel is especially fortunate to have had as its pastor, Rev. Fred P. Register, who has recently moved into the community, and who, with Mrs. Register, will be of even greater service to the church.

Wake Chapel is looking forward to its Centennial Celebration in 1956.

MRS. A. GLENDON JOHNSON.

ELK SPUR.

Our church has had a very successful summer. In June, Rev. James Madren and his wife came to spend three months with us, and with the help of them we had a very successful Bible school in July, with an enrollment of 55. Everyone in the community was very willing to share in the teaching and transportation of getting the children to the church. We also had our Revival in July—with seven converts. Rev. S. E. Madren did the preaching, and we were glad to have him back since he was our pastor about twenty years ago. I was just a girl and united with the church while he was here.

With our seven new converts we received two young men, whom we needed very badly because our church is mostly made up of women and young people.

Our Sunday school has really done well this summer. We have an average of 65—and that is good for these mountains, because some live so far away and have to catch ways in.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

AN ADDITIONAL $100,000 FOR THE ELON COLLEGE GYMNASIUM

The students and faculty of Elon College have been exceedingly generous in their contributions and pledges to the gymnasium fund. The students have pledged a total of thirty-five thousand dollars plus to be paid over a period of five years. The faculty has pledged a total of approximately five thousand. When you think of students in college and faculty members on college salaries in a day like this pledging these amounts, you may write it down for sure that they have a real interest in the undertaking to which they are contributing. The reason the students and faculty are contributing so generously is that they know first hand how badly a modern gymnasium is needed on their college campus. Authoritative information on any benevolent cause is the secret of generous giving. We are confident that if the general public and the constituency of the college at large knew the facts in the case, that is, the need for the equipment that the new gymnasium will provide and the exceeding economic costs of the building and equipment, their gifts would be generous and immediate.

To date the Alumni Office has in hand, cash and pledges amounting to $125,000.00. On November 1, a campaign will be launched in Alamance County alone to raise $100,000.00 for the completion of the building and furnishings for the same. We are very busy now forming an organization, dividing responsibilities, and bringing into the effort as many participants as possible. These efforts are calculated to insure success. We realize that when the campaign is over that here and elsewhere there will be a considerable amount of money in unpaid pledges. If interested parties will pledge a sufficient amount to pay the cost of construction and furnishings, the college authorities will arrange to finance the undertaking on the strength of such pledges.

Day by day, work on the gymnasium is progressing very satisfactorily. The brick layers will complete their work by the middle of next week. On Monday following, the roofers will begin. It is estimated that it will take three weeks to complete the roof. In the meantime, the floors will be put in condition for the pouring of the cement. After the roof is on, weather conditions will not hinder construction. We plan to play basketball in the new gymnasium before Christmas and the entire schedule of intercollegiate and intramural games will be played in the new gymnasium beginning in January. We are conscious of a host of friends in the church and outside of the church throughout this section of the country and are confident that when they realize the situation that they will want to have a part in the construction of this magnificent and superb equipment for our college. Any contributions, large or small, will be greatly appreciated and receipted promptly.

You should see this new building for Elon College. It really is a wonder and we know that you would be delighted with it. You are invited to come at any and all times to see it.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The first of the annual sessions of the conferences constituting the Southern Convention will meet next week. The Eastern North Carolina Conference will meet at Southern Pines, North Carolina, Tuesday and Wednesday, October 18-19. A number of the churches in the Eastern North Carolina Conference have paid their conference apportionments in full but a much larger number, however, have not completed this obligation. It is earnestly hoped that each church will take this obligation seriously and determine to discharge its responsibility completely. In view of the increased and pressing needs of the college, our churches should pay their apportionments in full as quickly as possible. Not in recent years have the needs of the college been as acute and pressing as they are today. Again, I urge our friends and churches to come to the assistance of their college at this time. It would be wonderful if all the churches would pay their apportionments in full. This would build up our resources and increase the courage of us all. It is one thing to have money with which to meet obligations promptly but quite another to be without sufficient funds to satisfy these just demands. Your assistance will be a great blessing to the college.

ELK SPUR.

In July, our pastor, Mrs. Hawks, Mrs. Ayers and myself and two young people from Rocky Ford Church went to Reidsville Church to a Sunday School Convention. Such a delightful day we had, and such a nice welcome from the church. My husband has often remarked that in no other church can you receive such a welcome as in a Christian Church. We will always remember Reidsville Church with a pleasant thought for the wonderful day of fellowship we had together.

Our church lost a regular attendant from March until July—my mother. She was very sick for a while but through God's great mercy, he has given her strength, so she is able to come back to church.

We have had two very pleasant visits from two of our friends this summer. The Hurdles, who were with us last summer, and two visits from our Dr. Scott. We appreciate the interest they show in our church here.

Now, our pastor has gone back to college, and comes back twice a month. We are planning to carry on our Sunday school work through the winter.

We invite all our friends from our other churches to visit us.

The problem of liberty and living is one which government cannot and will not solve. We cannot delegate the protection of liberty to government. The people must relate it to their daily living, or the swift course of events will sweep it aside with reckless disregard of the consequences.

Christian Missions

At Home and Abroad

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

NO. 3—"LIBERATED."

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
May 19, 1949.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Wednesday, May 18, is a day I shall long remember. In the morning, it started out with great promise. No, the liberation army did not come to Shaowu as predicted on the 17th. They stopped in Kuandze, 20 miles from here. Why, we don't know.

On Wednesday morning, Pastor Liao, Mr. Yao and several of us were in my study talking over the situation. Mr. Yao said, "I have already seen the notice published by the new Communist authorities in Kuandze. They promise to protect the lives and property of all citizens and foreigners. They want everyone to keep on with his work. They may not send soldiers to Shaowu at all—just government officials.

That was good news. Now Dorothy, Lewis and Leona could return. In Shaowu there would be none of the rioting, looting and killing many feared.

On Wednesday afternoon, Pastor Liao spoke to me right after the Bible study class: "There is a rumor on the street that the 'Big Knife Society' from Hopping is coming this afternoon. It is probably an idle rumor but you go right home and lock your compound gates." I had already heard so many rumors that I had become skeptical of them all. Nevertheless, I inquired what was the "Big Knife Society." "It is a society, made up of ordinary people which was organized to oppose conscription during the Japanese war. Later the society became involved in local politics. Everyone is afraid of them. The members operate at night, hooded and wearing bright red uniforms. They have no guns, but carry swords. The government has several times tried to stamp them out but to no avail. When they get fully aroused they will stop at nothing."

I had forgotten all about the "Big Knife Society" until just after supper. We had just finished listening to the radio news. Mr. Chang Wen Wei, the last one out of the gate, suddenly came back, breathless. "There's a large group of men who have just come—probably several hundred. They're not wearing soldiers' uniforms, and they are banging the hospital gates." He was trembling. I suggested that he spend the night with me. As they went past our front gate, he listened. "They're speaking the language of the Hopping people," he said. "I've got to go home and look after my family. You lock your gate and house doors and don't let anyone in." He passed out into the night leaving me alone in the big house.

Fortunately, I was reading a most interesting book which kept my mind fully occupied during the early part of the evening. Now and then I was conscious of yelling, the pounding of gates and the report of a gun. But when it came time to go to bed, my mind was anything but easy. Their headquarters had been established just next door to our house in an old deserted temple. I climbed to my emergency cot in the attic, barricaded the door, took off my shoes and climbed into bed.

The shouting, pounding and shooting continued until after 1:00 a. m. The name, "Big Knife Society," set my mind off on all kinds of tangents. I expected any minute to hear the knocking on our front gate. Time passed, oh, so slowly. By one o'clock things had begun to quiet down and still they had not come to our house. Were we to be unmolested. I dozed off.

Five o'clock came around before I knew it and the noise started up again. I got up and went immediately by a back way to the house of our hospital physician, Dr. Chu, to find what this was all about. "This is what is called the 'Big Knife Society,'" he told me. "Some have swords, others guns. Now they have declared themselves Communists. They came last night to 'liberate and defend' the city." I learned in addition that this cult has its religious implications. They are all Buddhists. Their stomachs and chests are covered by a cloth which has been dedicated to the idol. Wearing this colorful material, they believed that no harm can come to them. Before fighting, they drink some kind of beverage which supposedly removes all fear and makes them only want to fight and kill. I was surprised to find that the only casualties during the night were one of their own soldiers who fell down and broke his arm and a criminal in the jail whom they dispatched in short order. The shots had all been in the air to terrify the population. I also learned that these people came at the request of the ruling cliques in Shaowu which has been accused of every kind of dishonesty and mismanagement. This is their plan to keep the Communist troops from coming in and thus prevent a change in the local political situation. Many are thoroughly disgusted among the citizenry and hope their plan will fail.

Tomorrow I shall go to Ershihtu mountain to bring Leona Burr, Dorothy and Lewis back. I know they will be glad to get home. We have been cut off from the outside world (except for my radio) for some time. We are wondering what is happening to our friends in Foochow. The radio doesn't say. We are wondering if letters will be able to come again—and busses. The telegram and telegraph communications have been cut for some time. I wish there were some way we could notify our parents and friends that we are alright as I know they must be worried. At present, such notification is impossible.

As bad as last night was, it could have been worse for which we are thankful. Pastor Huang said this morning that events these days are like a play—we see each scene as it comes along and have no idea what the next scene will be like. After all this excitement, I don't know if I'll be able to go back to an ordinary routine again or not.

I have great hopes that the Communists will do something to help the condition of the common people. They have suffered so much. I hope also that America will not turn its back on Communist China. China needs, and I believe, will seek American friendship and help if it is offered. In turn, China in the future will prove a friend worth having in the Far East. Now is the time for statesmanship on the part of our American leaders. A program of anti-Communism is not enough. Here is one of the greatest undeveloped spots in the world. The previously mentioned announcement that foreigners' lives and property will be protected is an indication of a willingness on the part of the new government to go one step in friendly cooperation. Our radio broadcast urged foreigners to stay and help in the rebuilding of a new China.

A THANK OFFERING MEDITATION.

By MRS. J. D. STRADER.

THANKSGIVING.

I would like to share with you quotations taken from Dr. Charles B. Foelch's book, The Day's Worship:

"Real thanksgiving grows out of real thanks-living. The closer we are to God, the more ready and willing will we be to praise Him thankfully.

"In the garden of our hearts ought to be cultivated the little flowers of appreciation. The sweet perfume of gratitude will fall upon the giver as well as upon the recipient.

"Thanksgiving is a becoming trait. It sweetens and purifies life. Existence itself is abundant occasion for it, and the unnumbered blessings of life make it imperative. The sacred pages glow with expressions of thanksgiving.

"Heaven doubles its favor to those who show proper appreciation for mercies received.

"Help us, O Lord, to cultivate the grace of appreciation and daily move our hearts to gratitude for Thy manifold blessings. May Thy Holy Spirit direct us into avenues of helpful service, for Jesus' sake."

"THE ONE THOUSANDTH PSALM."

O God, we thank Thee for everything;
For the glory and beauty and wonder of the World,

For the glory of Springtime, the tints of the flowers and their fragrance;

For the glory of Summer flowers,

The roses and cardinals and clethra;

For the glory of the Autumn,

The scarlet and crimson and gold of the forest;

For the glory of Winter, the pure snow on the shrubs and trees,

We thank Thee that Thou hast placed us here,

To use Thy gifts for the good of all.

SYMPATHY FOR MRS. LEATHERS.

Mr. W. . Leathers passed away on October 14. The funeral was held on Sunday, October 16, at our Suffolk Church. Mr. Leathers is the husband of our Convention Woman's Board Treasurer. We extend her our sincere sympathy in his passing.

MRS. W. J. ANDES.

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE ELECTS NEW OFFICERS.

At Long's Chapel, a crowd of about 300 filled the church on Tuesday, October 4, for the Annual Conference. An excellent program was offered, including talks by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Dr. W. W. Sloan, Baxter Twiddy and Timothy Chang. The District Superintendents gave a panel discussion on local societies and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman led a skit introducing our new literature. "We Dedicate Ourselves," theme for the year, was used throughout the program. Mrs. O. H. Paris closed the program with a dedication service, installing the following officers: President—Mrs. F. C. Lester; Vice-President and Friendly Service—Mrs. W. J. Andes; Secretary—Mrs. R. V. Powell; Treasurer—Miss Susie Allen; Cradle Roll—Mrs. Jack Shoffner; Children—Mrs. Mark Andes; Spiritual Life—Mrs. Carl Wallace; Literature—Mrs. Tucker Humphries; Life Memberships and Memorials—Mrs. J. B. Newman; Family Life—Mrs. John G. Truitt; Interdenominational Cooperation—Mrs. R. L. House.

The report of the Recommendations Committee was adopted as follows:

We recommend this year:

1. We have more study and personal devotion to Bible and Mission studies.

2. We send our Conference President to the joint Conference with the E. & R. women in Cleveland, Ohio, November 16-18.

3. Each society appoint a CHRISTIAN SUN agent to promote and secure subscriptions.

DISTRICT ATTENDANCE AT CONFERENCE.

At the recent North Carolina Woman's Conference, held at Long's Chapel, 52 societies were represented by 282 registered delegates. Since the women of Long's Chapel did not all register, they figured they fed about 320 people in all. This seems to be a record attendance. It might be interesting to know how many attended from each district: Asheboro—34; Burlington—91; Greensboro—78;

Halifax—23; Henderson—21; Raleigh—22; Sanford—13.

The attendance of ministers at the Conference seemed to set a record, too, and it was fine to have them come.

There were 63 societies who reported to the treasurer this year, so that means that only 11 societies did not have a representative. Let's hope that next year we can make it nearly 100 per cent.

SHELTON MEMORIAL REPORTS.

We have had interesting and well-attended meetings, and tried to meet all requirements this year.

We are affiliated with the Council of Church Women, and our own Mrs. Lewis is "Devotional Leader" in that organization.

We have adopted a little girl at Elon Orphanage. We send her appropriate gifts and clothing at Christmas, Easter, and other times during the year. She spent her vocation in Portsmouth this year, and was entertained by different members of the society.

At our September meeting, Mrs. Walter T. H. Galliford of Portsmouth gave a splendid review of Dr. Frank Laubach's book on Prayer, a copy of which was presented to our society by one of our members. I would like to suggest that each society in the Conference purchase that same book and not only have it reviewed, but that every member in every society read it. You will find it well worth your time.

As you all know, we have lost our beloved pastor, Dr. Frank H. Lewis and are now without a leader. We hope that you are all praying that we will soon find the right man to fill our pulpit.

MRS. H. W. SHAFER,
President.

SOUTH NORFOLK WOMEN REPORT.

Our Missionary Society has four active circles—Angie Crew, Dorothy Jackson, Wilma Hanbury and Gertrude Bunch. All are having devotionals from the Bible study. Our monthly meetings are held the first Thursday in each month and we have four all-day meetings during the year, beginning at 10:30 a. m. Lunch is served at noon by one of the circles and we really have a wonderful lunch and fellowship at these quarterly meetings. At one of these meetings, we were very fortunate in having our District Superintendent, Mrs. W. B. Williams, as our guest speaker.

In addition to our regular apportionment and Thank Offering, we

WHITE LIES—BLACK LIES.

By FREDA GRAHAM BUNDY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

A woman, who with her husband and little boy had lived in my aunt's home, said to me, "Jamie told me a deliberate lie this morning, and I'm positively ill over it."

I wanted to answer, "You have taught him to lie," but, of course, I couldn't. I wanted to show her how she had taught him to lie. I wanted to say:

There was the suppertime when the phone rang and Bill, your husband, answered it. He turned to you and said, "Nell wants you to go over to meet the Simpsons." You whispered, "Tell her that I have had a bad cold." Jamie gazed in perplexity at you who had just finished a hearty meal and who evidenced no sign of a cold.

Grown folks were so funny, but, Jamie decided, they had some good ideas about getting out of disagreeable things. That is what he thought, too, the afternoon when the doorbell rang and you said, "Answer the door. I'm not dressed, so tell whoever it is that Mother is not in."

Jamie went fishing with his dad, and the four small fish that they had caught and later put into the refrigerator turned into "eight big beauties" during the evening, when friends came in. Jamie thought how easy it all is, this mild deception—something like playing hooky from school. He grinned to himself; it was fun fooling people like this.

Then there was the curious lie about the cost of your new dress. Jamie had read the bargain-price tag of $8.98. Yet, you told Alice it was a little thing that you had picked up for $19.00. Jamie decided that your clever trick might work for him with the change when you sent him to the grocers. He had the walnuts cost you 69c instead of 59c. It was great fun having that extra ten cents to spend for candy!

Jamie heard you and Bill tell those polite little lies when the Mortons dropped in for the evening. You saw them coming up the steps and cried, "Oh heavens, it's the Mortons; we'll be bored to tears." Bill added vehemently, "I wish that they'd move to Kalabogie." But you ushered them in, saying sweetly, "We're so glad to see you," and Bill supplemented with, "We were hoping that you would come over some time soon."

Those are not lies you may say—they are not malicious untruths; they hurt no one. But, these are all willful misstatements creating a false impression, which, according to the dictionary, is the definition of lies. Besides, you have forgotten that they are hurting someone—Jamie.

Your son lied about the pennies he took from your purse, but that lie to him was necessary to save him from punishment. He lied to you about wading in the water, and you punished him, because you "will not tolerate an untruthful child!"

Some of your assertions are rather inconsistent, aren't they? In one breath you say that little white lies are justifiable, then in the next you declare that deliberate lies are inexorable.

Poor little Jamie, in his limited seven-year-old mind, he keeps turning the problem over and over. How does one recognize the color of a lie, he wants to know. White lies, black lies—how can one tell the difference?

Bill once said to you, "Take the car and drive down to your meeting. You haven't a license, but they'll never know." That was the day that Jamie grasped—"They'll never know!" Now he could tell the color of a lie—recognize the difference between right and wrong. A lie is quite all right as long as "they'll never know!"

Is it right to lie at any time? The evading lies, the polite lies, the lies of defense, all those that we deem so minute—are they right at any time? How are you to teach a child to differentiate between the white lies and the black ones?

As Jamie indulges more and more in these variations of untruths, will he not grow more deceitful in other directions? Are not sordid actions born and bred in deceit? Ask yourself, are there not ways by which you can be evasive, polite, on the defensive, and yet be truthful?

Remember, about all things that children learn by imitation.

TIMOTHY CHANG WRITES.

took Silas with her daughter back to Michigan State College for the school and I left Detroit by bus to Columbus for visiting Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Jackson, who are the parents of Rev. R. L. Jackson, the missionary in Shaowu. I stayed there four days and had a meeting with Mayflower Church group at the church. I showed them colored slide pictures which were taken by Rev. Jackson from Shaowu and Foochow.

I came back to Duke on September 25 and I already got my registration for fall term this morning (26th). Our classes will begin tomorrow.

I am going to camp with young people's group of Dr. Wiseman's Church of Greensboro, this weekend (October 1-12). I am having a good time again.

How lovely trip I had these weeks and I would like to share to you in these few lines.

Your friend,
TIMOTHY CHANG.

No matter what changes are in the wind, some quick-thinking individuals profit by them. Others always lose by any variation from the status quo. It may be partly a matter of luck, but foresight and prompt decisions are the essential requirements.—Selected.

WHAT JESUS THOUGHT AND TAUGHT.

By BRYANT DRAKE, D. D.

The lordship of Jesus in the religion which bears his name can scarcely be realized unless one knows what he taught. On the other hand, most of us would like to know what Jesus had to say about specific matters of behavior and belief. The method of study suggested below has been given a rather rigid test over a period of several years, and we are confident it has possibilities for a class whose teacher has a good background and whose pupils will read most of the references.

1. His social life, and his attitude toward good times—

Matthew 6:25-34, 7:3-15, 11:16-19, 23:24f, 26:6; Mark 3:5, 10:21, 14:3-9; Luke 4:32, 5:4-7, 29, 33f, 10:38, 11:24, 14:1-33, 19:1-6; John 2:1-10, 11:1ff, 21:2-13.

2. His dealing with people who had done evil—

Matthew 5:38-48, 7:1-6, 9:10-13, 18:10-14 and 21:35, 21:15-46, 23:1-39, 25:24-30; Mark 2:16f, 10:10-14, 11:27-33, 14:44-49; Luke 7:36-48, 6:27-38, 9:52-56, 11:4, 11:37-52, 13:15, 15:11, 32, 19:1-10, 45f, 20:45-47, 22:47-53, 55-61, 23:34, 17:3f; John 8:3-11.

3. His attitude toward evil—

Matthew 5:21-42, 10:16-39, 15:11, 12:30-32, 18:6-10, 19:17-24, 21:12-17, 22:15-22, Mark 10:17-25, 12:38-40; Luke 4:20-29, 6:27-38, 10:29-37, 16:1-13, 13:32, 22:36; John 2:13-17.

4. His attitude toward religious traditions—doctrine, Sabbath—

Matthew 5:17-22, 27, 31, 33, 38, 43, 12:1-13; Mark 1:40-45, 2:18-28, 7:1-23; Luke 4:4, 8, 11-13, 18-19, 5:12-14, 33-39, 6:1-11, 13:10-16, 14:1-6, 16:14-17.

5. His dealing with unfortunate people—

Matthew 1:1-4, 6:1-4, 8:7, 10:40-42, 11:28-30, 17:14-18, 25:31-46; Mark 1:21-34, 2:1-12, 8:1-9; Luke 5:12-14, 10:30-36, 21:2-4.

6. His teaching concerning divorce and the relations of the sexes—

Matthew 5:27-33, 39-41, 7:1-6, 18:21f, 19:3-12; Mark 10:2-12; Luke 16:18; John 4:7-9, 8:3-11, 10:10.

7. His ideas on friendship and getting along with people—

Matthew 5:21-26, 7:12, 12:46-50, 18:15-35, 22:37-40, 26:6-13; Mark 1:16-20, 3:13-19, 9:35-40, 14:3-9; Luke 4:16-30, 6:12-16, 9:11-17, 52-56, 10:25-37, 14:7-11, 22:24-26; John 13:1-5, 15:13, 19:26f.

8. His teaching concerning success—

Matthew 5:19, 6:28f, 4:3-11, 21:28-46, 25:1-30, 26:6-13; Mark 10:35-45, 12:41-44; Luke 4:3-12, 7:24-28, 9:46-48, 10:38-42, 12:16-21, 16:19-31, 18:9-14, 18:29-30, 19:15-26; John 15:13; Luke 14:7-11.

9. His idea of what is most worthwhile—

Matthew 4:1-11, 6:19-34, 7:24-27, 10:34-42, 12:30-37, 22:36-40, 25:34-46; Mark 9:43-48, 10:13-16; Luke 9:57-62, 10:38-42, 12:4-34, 16:1-13, 17:20f; Luke 22:42.

10. His teaching concerning the conduct of a Christian—

Matthew 7:1-12, 13-23, 24-27, 12:43-45, 23:1-39, 25:1-12, 31-46; Luke 11:39-45, 13:22-30, 14:15-24, 16:14-15, 19:25, 18:9-14.

11. His teaching about Man—

PLEASANT HILL (ALAMANCE).

During the last week in June, Rev. and Mrs. M. A. Pollard directed a Vacation Bible School, with local people helping out with the teaching. The classes were well attended, and on Sunday morning, around 50 children were presented certificates by Mr. Pollard.

Our revival meeting began on the first Sunday in September. The morning service was given to singing and a short talk by our pastor.

For the afternoon service, special singers were present and sang for us again. Our pastor, Mr. Pollard, delivered a spiritual message on "Three Things Too Wonderful to Understand," namely, a ship at sea, a serpent on a rock and an eagle in the air. Monday evening through Saturday Rev. Mack Welsh of Hines Chapel did the preaching for us.

Services were well attended and Mr. Welsh preached scripture-filled sermons which stirred the audience.

Those attending came to know and love Mr. Welsh and on that Saturday evening he was given a nice "pounding."

Nine young people professed faith in Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and three rededications were made. Eleven members were added to the church then and one on each Sunday since the close of the meeting.

Sometime ago the church called Mr. Pollard to serve full time pastorate. So, beginning a new conference year he will resume full time duties as our pastor.

Our church services are well attended and our Sunday school is growing fast. So as we begin a new year may we look forward to a great spiritual growth in the church, and may we go forth under Mr. Pollard's leadership.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

THE PROPHETS PREACH SOCIAL RIGHTEOUSNESS.

(TEMPERANCE.)

LESSON V—OCTOBER 30, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil.—Isaiah 5:15.

LESSON: Isaiah 3; 5; 22; 28; 58:1-9a; Jeremiah 35.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Romans 13: 8-14.

A Story Song.

Isaiah was a shrewd and sensible man. He wanted men to understand his message. He wanted to get their attention. Instead of preaching to them in pious platitudes and in stilted phrases, he told them a story. Furthermore he put the story in the form of a song, and thus doubled its effectiveness. He calls it "a song of my beloved touching his vineyard." In simple language, and with bold strokes he paints a word picture, which all could see and understand. Here it is in brief.

He tells about a land-owner who wanted a grape vineyard. Accordingly he selected a very fertile plot of ground on the side of a hill which would give it protection from the cold winds which came from the North. Then he fenced it in, both to keep out the inroads of nature and of men. He carefully gathered all the stones and rocks out of the field. He selected only the choicest grape vines and set them out in the plot. He erected a tower so that men on watch could keep out both birds and men who would ravage his vineyard. And in anticipation of a good yield or harvest of grapes from such a well-located, well-cultivated, well-protected piece of ground, he dug a wine-press. Then he looked forward with keen delight to the harvest from the vineyard. Imagine his surprise and his disappointment and dismay when instead of a big harvest of big, tender, sweet grapes, he got only little, sour, unpalatable wild grapes. He thought that it may have been a trick of circumstances, so he tried again. But their results were the same. In disgust and in despair then, he tore down the protecting wall, and allowed the plot to revert to its wild state, soon to be overgrown with briars and thorns. A severe drought hastened the process and what was once a lovely vineyard soon became a loathsome waste.

The Moral for the People of That Day.

The moral was plain. But Isaiah told the moral to make doubly sure. God had chosen Israel as the nation through which He could best express His purpose. That purpose was to produce a social order based on righteousness and justice and freedom, a social order based on moral and spiritual principles and practices. Through the giving of the Law, and through the preaching of the prophets, as well as by His grace and goodness to this nation, God had tried to cultivate these social graces and to bring to fruition justice and righteousness and freedom and respect for the rights of man. But what had He found? Instead of judgment, there was oppression, instead of righteousness there was a cry of the oppressed and the dispossessed. Powerful and greedy land-owners had gobbled up all the land, squeezing out the small land-owners and leaving them in poverty. Wealthy and luxury-loving men and women were giving themselves to sensual pleasures, and drunken orgies. And great numbers of the people had become altogether secular and worldly-minded, giving no thought or time to religion and the things of the spirit. They neither considered "the work of the Lord" nor considered "the operation of His hands."

"Well, what of it?" they might say with a lifted eyebrow or the shrug of their shoulders. What of it, indeed? The answer was to be found in the "law of the harvest." Whatsoever a nation sows, that shall it also reap. The story-song, sweet as it was as a song, was a pronouncement of doom. Just as the owner of the vineyard had broken down the walls and taken away the hedge and allowed the plot to revert to wasteland, just so was Israel to be overrun and laid waste by the armies of aggressor nations. The anger of the Lord had been kindled against His people; He had stretched forth His hand against them, and was about to smite them. His righteous judgments were to be executed by the Assyrians who were coming swiftly and who would strike savagely. And all this was literally fulfilled as any student of history knows. Not many years after these words were spoken, the prophet's words found a literal and tragic fulfillment.

The Moral for the People of Our Day.

"Whatsoever things were written aforetime, were written for our instruction." These lessons from the prophets of that far-off land and that far-off day have a timeliness and a timelessness. And there is a strange parallel between the nation of Isaiah and our nation. Who can doubt but that God has strangely called and nurtured America for the fulfilment of a divine purpose among the nations. He has a right to expect the fruits of righteousness. He designed that here, under God, this nation "conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created free and equal," as Lincoln said in his immortal Gettysburg address, should produce a social order of righteousness, with liberty and justice to all. The nation was to be judged by its fruits. What is the fruitage?

Well, it would be unfair to say that America has not borne any fruitage of social righteousness. It would be untrue to say that there is no social justice in the land, and that in many, many areas the rights and liberties of men are not respected, and that the spirit of democracy is not accepted, at least in theory. American history bears abundant witness to the fact that we have not been altogether unfruitful in the things of social righteousness. But America is still on trial. God is still waiting patiently for the fruits of righteousness. The point of the story is that, as strange as it may seem to us, indeed as unthinkable as it may seem to us, the same thing can happen to us that happened to Israel and Judah, and the other nations of that day. It is hard for us to think of Washington as laid waste by an enemy nation, or of New York City as being a shambles as a result of invasion by air or otherwise, or even harder for us to think of this great nation as being laid waste and of being destroyed as a nation. But it can happen here. Our strength does not lie in money or material wealth, or in military might, as desirable and as important as these things are. The strength of a nation is its ideals, the moral fibre of its national life, its spirit of social justice and social righteousness, its dependence on moral and spiritual forces, its devotion to Chris-paid a month's hospitalization for Timothy Chang's sister in China, secured eight Life Memberships and new subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN and Church Woman. We increased our apportionment for next year, sent several bags of clothing to New Windsor, Md., gave a twelve-year-old boy an outfit of clothing and toys for Christmas, and sent clothing to the Elon Orphanage. Our Friendly Service project was an interesting item. We bought material and made kimonas, gowns, pajamas, sheets, dresser scarfs, tray covers and maid's aprons, gauze dressings, bandages and paper napkins to Ryder Memorial Hospital, Puerto Rico. At our sewing circles, each lady carried a covered dish and we really had a feast at lunch time.

We joined the local churches in South Norfolk for our World Day of Prayer and May Fellowship. The Spring Rally was well attended.

Mrs. Aubrey Todd reviewed our study book On Our Own Doorstep and Mrs. H. H. Shiftlet gave us China—Twilight or Dawn.

Our new president for next year is Mrs. C. N. Harris. She is one who never says No when called up for Christian service. She is very dependable and loved by everyone. We feel very fortunate in having her as our president, and we hope next year will be the greatest ever. Mrs. Andrew Smith, our very efficient vice-president, has done a good job in our society and all circle leaders deserve a hand, too, for their cooperation in helping make a successful year.

MRS. O. D. POYTHRESS,
President.

HOLLAND REPORTS.

We have participated in several activities other than our regular programs.

Mrs. Wilkerson Holland reviewed our foreign study book at a dinner meeting, at which the ladies of the Holy Neck Church were our guests. During Youth Week we sponsored a party for our young people and their guests, and the young people of Holland Baptist Church. Not only did the youth come, but the minister and his wife came and contributed much to the pleasure of the evening.

We had Mrs. Frank Laubach as our guest speaker at one public meeting and at a regular meeting had a former Naval officer who had been stationed in Hawaii and had taken many pictures with colored films show them to us.

All three of the Interdenominational programs were used. Our World Community Day program was held at Holland Baptist Church, World Day of Prayer at our own church, and the May Fellowship with Holy Neck. In each of these programs, we used members from all five of the churches of the community.

We remembered Timothy Chang with gifts, and also sent gifts to local people who had some special need. The shut-ins of our church were remembered with cards and appropriate booklets.

Our Friendly Service gifts went to Fort Berthold, and we sent our president to the Elon School of Missions.

The Orphanage

DEAR FOLKS:

There is so much I would like to tell you. Our fifth Sunday school and church to visit us was here last Sunday afternoon—Palm Street, Greensboro, Rev. J. L. Neese, pastor. How good it was to have them. They went through the buildings, saw the dairy and the out-buildings, the lawns, the fences and the farm. Most of all they saw our matrons, who need and deserve much more recognition than they get, and the boys and girls. This Sunday—October 16—Pleasant Ridge from away down in Randolph will be here, Pastor Clyde Fields, and his fine folks. Like all the other five churches the ywill worship with us at 3:30 in our chapel, joining in with our staff and children in songs and prayers and talks. They, too, will see the place inside and out. They will like it, and their hearts will be stirred. Perhaps they will see some of our many boys and girls who need a Sunday school class or church who will sort of sponsor them, giving them a little pin-money, a recognition of their birthdays, or their special needs for vacation, or an occasional holiday. Perhaps they will. There are about half of the boys and girls who have this room. The others feel sort of left out.

Has your Sunday school or church visited the orphanage lately?

Hank's Chapel was here and they saw the unkempt record over the much-worn room which read: "This Room Furnished by Hank's Chapel." The men and women whispered together and came calling me: Fix that room up to date, 1950, with lovely new furniture, rug, curtains, picture on the wall, and a nice bed-lamp. Hurrah, for Hanks Chapel.

When it comes to needs, among the things we need so much are a good power-mower for our large campus, song-books for our chapel, chairs and other simple furniture for many bed rooms, curtains, boy scout suits (only the minimum of hats and neckerchiefs would be nice), a sewing machine, modern washers, modern refrigeration and funds (these we seriously need and that is not crying, "Wolf, wolf"). We need friendship, and consideration, some of our unused space furnished for additional boys and girls. We are having to say no right now to several urgent pleas, and needy boys and girls. I conclude with a verse which is taken right out of actual life here on these grounds (An Unloved Orphan):

His little life is torn to shreds,
With none who really loves or cares;
A bitter world before him spreads,
Without the peace of home or prayers.

His days are full of dodging those
Who strive to help his un-strung mind;
And only fears and tears he knows—
Distrusts alike both cruel and kind.

God, steady us who dare to be Custodians of his life and fate;
And may he look to us and see
The way of love at last made straight.
(J.G.T.)

He has been here a week yesterday, and what a fine lad we hope he is becoming. He has everything if we can only keep him here.

LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS. (Continued from page 8.)

Will America be willing to continue to help China, or will she be so terrified by the name Communism that she will turn her back on the opportunity to lend a helping hand? Think that question over for awhile. The future of Christian Missions in China, the future of world history will be determined by the answer America gives now. Those of us here on the field hope and pray for the best.

Cordially,
DICK JACKSON.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

tian principles and its practice of Christian ways of life.

The Matter of Temperance in Relation to All This.

This is a temperance lesson. And there are sections of Scripture which show very clearly the part that intemperance and drinking had in the moral and spiritual debacle that overtook Israel. The problem of the use of intoxicating liquors was acute then. It is becoming more acute now. A reliable source stated that more than nine billion dollars was spent by the American people on liquor and alcoholic beverages in 1947. And the figure is higher for more recent years. The number of chronic alcoholics has grown by leaps and bounds, while the number of those who are so seriously under the rule of habit in this matter, is so large that it is a good cause for alarm. The social costs and consequences of drinking are terrifying. We are a drinking nation, and we may become a drunken nation. In either case we weaken the moral fibre of the nation and make it vulnerable to the forces of defeat and disaster.

In Memoriam

JONES.

In the death of our beloved member, Mrs. Ellen Styers Jones, on May 21, 1949, the Missionary Society of Pleasant Grove Church lost a faithful and loyal co-worker.

She was beloved by all who knew her, having that unusual capacity of an understanding heart, of loving, of being loved. As a Christian, as a mother, as a friend, as a neighbor, she exemplified that perfection which is so rare and yet, she never lost that humble human touch.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That while she is gone in body, we feel that her spirit is still with us, and we strive to exemplify her life, and especially her kindness to children and older people.

2. That we extend to the members of her family our deepest sympathy and commend them to God whose grace is sufficient for every need.

3. That a copy of the resolutions be sent to the family, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy entered on our record.

Respectfully submitted,

Mrs. F. T. McDOWELL,

Mrs. G. C. TALBERT,

Committee.

HARCUM.

WHEREAS, God has in His infinite love seen fit to call from our midst, Mrs. Ella Morgan Harcum, a member of Liberty Spring Christian Church on July 17, 1949; and,

WHEREAS, she was a woman of fine Christian character, and loved by all who knew her, a devoted mother, a loving grandmother and always untiring in her efforts to serve those she loved; therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That we are grateful for what her life has meant to us as individuals, and also for what it has meant to our church.

2. That we realize God doeth all things well and that our loss is her eternal gain.

3. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her devoted family who ministered to her so faithfully during her last years, and commend them to our Heavenly Father for comfort and peace, realizing that His grace is sufficient for our needs.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be entered on the church records.

Respectfully submitted,

R. C. BADGER,

REV. GUY H. VEAZEY HELPS.

his vacation with his sister and brother-in-law, the said Mr. and Mrs. Allen, and begin the erection of a Community Congregational Christian Church. After almost three weeks of hard work in unusually hot weather, with the assistance of a few interested persons in the community the foundation was laid for a substantial frame building, the walls and rafters were raised before he left to go back to his field of labor. Since his return to North Carolina, the roof has been put on and the windows installed. The floor and ceiling have been put inside that it might dry and be ready to use as soon as the farmers' rush of harvesting is through. They have had an unusually wet summer there which has greatly hindered the progress of the building.

During the time that the Rev. Mr. Veazey was there they held open air services each evening for a week. Crowds were small on account of threatening weather, but they think the services did some good. The Rev. Mr. Wright preached one night.

This church is located in the midst of a progressive community in a little village of three or four stores, a post office, a nice modern high school, with no other church of any denomination within less than about two miles. The prospects are very bright for a substantial Congregational Christian Church.

The Rev. Asa O. Wright, Route 2, West Monroe, about thirty miles away who has just completed a nice rural Congregational Christian Church and parsonage, will take the situation in hand, and we feel sure he will make a success. He is a very capable man and has a way of getting young people to do things.

The Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Allen have passed their "three score and tenth" mile stone, yet it seems that they will experience the reality of their dreams of more than forty years. "Faith and patience worketh all things." There is as yet no organization formed, but that will be realized in due time. Their many friends who know nothing about the Congregational Christian Church are giving of their time and money to the erection of the building.

Mrs. E. H. Green, Marion, La., is the treasurer of the project.

by them. There are three things American Christians can do. They can pray for China, they can support the work of the Chinese Church and they can seek to influence the State Department of the United States to recognize the new regime, when it is properly established.

1. They can pray for China. A new thing is taking place in human history. Communism is meeting in China a new foe, namely, a free, effective, socially-minded Christianity; no one can exaggerate the importance of that meeting; but only God can guide it to a fruitful issue. Therefore pray daily for the non-Communists and for the Communists. Christ died for them as well as for others. (To explain the above, it may be observed that in Russia, Communism does not meet a free and socially-effective form of Christianity, and that in America and Europe, Communism is only a political party not an alternative way of life as it pretends to be in Russia and China.)

2. They can support the Chinese Church. This means the sending of money and the sending of missionaries. The missionaries who are there will stay. This is no time for retreat. But there are too few of them. The Chinese leaders are asking for more missionaries, specially trained to endure the kind of life they will have to live for the next few years; for China's troubles will not be over with the coming of the new regime. Missionaries will be more than ever the visible links of that long and unique and wonderful American-and-Chinese friendship.

3. They can advocate recognition. There are three things the United States could do: they could help the dying Nationalist cause, they could withdraw entirely, they could recognize the new state. To attempt to help further the Nationalist party would be useless; Communism can not be overcome by fighting anywhere in the world. To withdraw entirely would be to return to America's ancient and I hope now discredited isolationism. But to recognize the new Regime would be the best way to keep China inside the Western circle, the best way to help the millions of non-Communist Chinese to influence and change the Communist way. For America not to establish diplomatic relations with the existing government would be a sure way really to drive her into the arms of Russia, for Russia could then prove she was China's best if not only friend! To change a person you must keep in contact.

The storm wind is blowing hard in China, it is true, but just as the twisted bamboo torches only burn in a high wind, so there are parts of China where the Christian faith is burning brightly and the West which gave the Chinese the hope of the Gospel may find their own hope reflected in the lives of the Chinese Christians.

HOW COMMUNISM SPREADS

By Charles A. Wells

The men and women who believe in communism are now busy everywhere. And there is no mystery about the way communism spreads. It spreads because the folks who believe in it work with an evangelistic fervor. They put the doctrines of Marx above other interests and loyalties. They give generously of time and energy with little remuneration. Democracy depends upon personal responsibility, justice and an enduring faith in the value and significance of the individual personality, which is the source of our liberty. But these essential elements of democracy are of a creative spiritual origin. Not inherited, they must be developed in every individual; thus our Christian democracy demands effort and cultivation also. And there we fail. Only a pitiful few work at the task of instilling and cultivating these doctrines in others. If the Communists continue to outwork us, we will find ourselves in danger—not brought on by the Russian army but ourselves.

Congregational Minister Honored

In recognition of his contributions to human understanding, Dr. Thomas Anderson, D. D., right, pastor of Central Church, 675 Piedmont Avenue, N. E., Atlanta, Georgia, accepts an autographed set of the New Childcraft, revised edition of the famed children's anthology and library of information, for his church library. He was one of nine persons similarly honored throughout the nation by the Childcraft Advisory Service in Chicago, a national guidance plan for parents and teachers of young children. Presentation was made at the Hotel Henry Grady in Atlanta by J. Morris Jones, Managing Editor of the publication. Dr. Anderson was born in San Francisco, California, the son of Scotch-Irish parents. He paid his way through college by working as a logger, carpenter, fruit picker, fisherman and lumber mill hand. No job was too humble for him, so strong was his desire to achieve the ministry. Formerly pastor of the Brewster Pilgrim Church at Detroit, Michigan, Dr. Anderson lives by the conviction that "one must understand human beings to serve the Kingdom of God well." Dr. Anderson is serving his first term as President of the Southern Regional Meeting. He has had a number of preaching engagements in the Southern Convention and contributes frequently to The Christian Sun.

News Flashes

Mr. A. H. McIver of Sanford was the guest speaker at our Burlington Church on Laymen's Sunday.

Mr. E. Oakley Wood, 623 River-view Avenue, Portsmouth, Virginia, is Chairman of the Pulpit Committee for the Shelton Church.

Congratulations to Mr. Charles A. Ballentine who has secured 52 new CHRISTIAN SUN subscriptions at Wake Chapel Church, Fuquay Springs, North Carolina.

Dr. B. W. Anderson, professor in the Department of Religion at the University of North Carolina, is serving as ad interim pastor of the Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines.

Rev. O. D. Poythress conducted revival services in his church at South Norfolk last week. More than 400 were present for Sunday school and church services Sunday. A large number of members were received.

The Western North Carolina Conference will meet in the Asheboro Church on November 9-10. A good program is being planned. Representatives from all the churches in the Conference are expected to be present. Mr. George T. Gunter is the president of the Conference.

Rev. Ben Joe Earp, who retires November 1 as pastor of High Point Church, has moved to his new address, 228 Willowbrook Street, High Point, North Carolina. The readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN wish Brother Earp much improvement in health after his long years of service as an active pastor.

Mrs. W. B. Williams, Chairman of the Place Committee for the Eastern Virginia Conference, will be glad to receive invitations from churches that would like to be host to the Conference when it meets for its annual session next year. Please write Mrs. Williams at 1253 24th Street, Newport News, Virginia.

The tenth anniversary of the Asheboro Congregational Christian Church will be observed next Sunday, October 30. The morning worship service will be broadcast over WGWR (1260 on your dial) at 11 o'clock. All who are at home at that hour are invited to "listen in." The pastor, Dr. F. C. Lester, will preach.

The First Congregational Christian Church of Gibsonville, North Carolina, on October 9 observed its twelfth anniversary. The church was organized in 1937 with 19 charter members. They now have 351 members. The Sunday school has an enrollment of 260 and the average attendance is 185. Rev. Harold Loman is the pastor of this church.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

MISSIONARY HOMES

Isn't it good to know about the Walker Missionary Homes? Isn't it good to know that our returned missionaries are assured homes? Isn't it good to know that our denomination makes provision for its representatives who have completed their mission on the foreign field?

Some of the missionaries who have spoken in our churches and conferences have come to us from Auburn-dale. There is, indeed, a "colony of heaven." There fellowship is perpetuated, faith is quickened and hope is renewed. For many people two missionary addresses—14 Beacon Street and 166 Auburn-dale Avenue—are synonymous and equally significant.

We salute the Heiningers and all those at the Walker Missionary Homes. Grace and peace to that noble company!

LAY INFLUENCE

Just as it is true that laymen here and there are influenced strongly by the personalities of ministers, it is equally true that in many cases laymen exert a quiet but effective influence on ministers. Every minister could enumerate laymen from whom he has received strength, guidance and inspiration.

Funeral services for R. L. Baker at Newport News last Sunday afternoon brought this truth vividly to the writer. As Dr. H. S. Hardcastle conducted the service and a large throng of people came to pay their homage, memory leaped back across the years and Bob Baker took his place in his regular pew. He had attended this church from its earliest history. In season and out of season, during days of trial and struggle, the Baker brothers—W. B., R. L. and J. J.—were faithful in their attendance and support. Ministers are helpless without laymen of this calibre. Given the support of such beloved laymen, a great church such as the Newport News Church can be built. Thank God for the noble life of R. L. Baker. His quiet and genteel manner touched many lives and made them radiant.

POYTHRESS OF SOUTH NORFOLK

Congratulations to the Rev. O. D. Poythress as he moves into the enlarging opportunities and responsibilities of his thirty-fifth year at South Norfolk. Mr. Poythress, affectionately known as an "Old Timer" or "Red" among some of his admiring colleagues, has not spent his time maintaining the "status quo" in South Norfolk. He has been a builder. A magnificent church building and a membership of 750 are a monument to his untiring efforts. Many people, not only in South Norfolk but throughout the Convention, have come into the Kingdom as a result of his evangelistic preaching. His lilting tenor voice, an effective instrument for interpreting the Love of God, has touched hearts that sermons could never reach. His ministry through weddings and funerals has transcended all denominational barriers.

Yes, congratulations on work well done, Brother Poythress. You have set an example for other ministers. Too many young ministers today want to find churches already strong, vigorous and adequate. You came up the hard way, but your efforts have not been in vain. God's richest blessings on you, your family and church.

EASTERN CAROLINA CONFERENCE MEETS

The One Hundred Twenty-Fourth Annual Session of the Eastern North Carolina Conference met Tuesday and Wednesday of last week at the Church of Wide Fellowship in Southern Pines. The Conference had not met previously in this church. Many of the delegates had never visited Southern Pines before, but the fine hospitality enjoyed there should induce many to return. The spacious sanctuary afforded an excellent setting for the Conference sessions, the devotional periods conducted by the Rev. Frederick Eutsler and the Conference sermons by Drs. L. E. Smith and John G. Truitt. The Elon Singers led the Conference in a great experience of worship on Tuesday evening.

The Conference officials are to be commended for their wisdom in bringing Dr. Dumont Clark to explain The Lord's Acre Plan. He described this plan which utilizes head, heart and heel power in bringing financial and spiritual resources into the church. Since the majority of the churches in this Conference are rural—and it is doubtful if there is a single church which does not have access to a farm—it would seem appropriate that this plan should be made a matter of major emphasis. For instance, the Lord's Acre Plan would give a mighty boost to the recently organized Christian Missionary Association. Those who desire information should write to Dr. Dumont Clark, Director of the Religious Department of Farm Federation, Asheville, North Carolina.

Other interesting and helpful presentations included the North Carolina Council of Churches by Miss Frances Query; The Christian Sun, by Dr. W. E. Wisseman; The State of Our Ministry, by Supt. W. T. Scott; Our College at Elon, by Dr. William Mosely Brown; and Our Christian World Mission, by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill. Rev. R. T. Grissom succeeds Rev. C. Carl Dollar as president. Rev. Bernard V. Munger is the new vice-president. Rev. E. M. Carter was re-elected secretary and Mr. W. J. Ballentine remains the faithful Conference treasurer.

The writer attended the Conference with mixed emotions. This is the Conference in which he was licensed and ordained, but from which he has been absent for eighteen years (doing missionary work in Eastern Virginia). There was Mr. H. W. Wall, with Mr. Stith Spraggins (now a patient at M. C. Va. Hospital in Richmond) attended the Conference in session at Fuller's Chapel in 1928 and extended (Continued on page 14)

THE TASK OF THE PROTESTANT PREACHER.

First Sermon

By REV. ALBERT J. PENNER, D. D.*

As Minister of Broadway Tabernacle Church, September 11, 1949.

We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake.—II Cor. 4:5.

For my text on this day, my first Sunday in this pulpit, I have taken a word from Paul in the hope that it may be a kind of charter for my ministry among you, and this is the word: "We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and ourselves as your servant for Jesus' sake."

The first thing for any Christian minister to remember is this: "We preach not ourselves."

What Paul meant by this is, I think clear. As a matter of fact, he refers to this idea frequently. Paul says in effect: In my preaching I am not giving you my philosophy of life. These are not my particular views about religion. I'm not trying to sweep you off your feet with my eloquence. I don't want anyone to go home and say, How great a preacher Paul is—how wise, how eloquent, how learned! So, for example, he writes to the church in Corinth: "When I came to you, I did not come proclaiming to you the testimony of God in lofty words of wisdom. . . . I was with you in weakness and in much fear and trembling; and my speech and my message were not in plausible words of wisdom." (I Cor. 2:1f.)

It is almost strange to hear Paul speaking in this self-depreciating manner. He does it because he has a clear sense of his high calling. He is not here to talk about himself. He is here to bring a message from God. And it is the wonder of this that Paul can't get over. This is how it seems to Paul: (Eph. 3) God has had a purpose for the world from the very beginning. But men have not known what the divine purpose it. It has been a mystery through the ages. From time to time prophets have caught fleeting and partial glimpses of its meaning. But now at this moment, in his lifetime, this mystery has been fully revealed. And he, Paul, has been initiated into this mystery, and his wonderful task is to declare its meaning. That mystery is the redemptive love and power of God made known in Jesus of Nazareth. It is this mystery, now revealed in Christ, that the Christian preacher is to declare.

Because this is still the preacher's central task, he must still say with

REV. ALBERT J. PENNER, D. D.

Paul, "We preach not ourselves." The preacher is not in the pulpit to display his wisdom or eloquence, or erudition or originality. He is in the pulpit to talk about the purpose of God in Christ.

And you who come to church are not to come out of mere curiosity—hoping Sunday after Sunday to hear some new thing. I can assure you that in that case you will soon be unspeakably bored. You come to hear some old thing, which you have heard about all your lives, and which has been the burden and joy of Christian preaching for more than 1900 years. It can be stated very simply indeed: We are to tell and to hear the "old, old story, of Jesus and His love."

Now, when I say that the preacher is not to preach himself I do not mean that the truth he brings is not to be his own. Before he can preach to others he must be convinced of the truth of what he preaches himself. At this point lies one of the very special dangers of the ministry: the danger of speaking fervidly about things that have not become true for him.

Yet, there is a sense in which the preacher has always to deal with things which are beyond his knowledge and experience. For he must speak of God. But he is human, and what man can speak of God. What he preaches is a story, an old story. He cannot be original in the sense that what he brings is something unheard of. To quote Dr. P. T. Forsyth: "He must be original in the sense that his truth is his own, but not in the sense that it has been no one else's. . . . He must be original in the sense of appropriating for his own personality, or his own age, what is the standing possession of the church, and its perennial trust from Christ. He makes discovery in the Gospel, not of the Gospel. . . . The preacher is not there to astonish people with the unheard of; he is there to revive in them what they have long heard." "We preach not ourselves."

II

What is it that we are to preach? We are to preach "Christ Jesus as Lord." That is the heart of the message. It is not always a popular message. How feverishly multitudes of people today seek freedom—freedom in many guises and under many names. And how often it leads only to fresh forms of servitude.

Christianity says: "The first duty of every soul is to find not its freedom, but its Master"—and that Master is Christ. We want a better world—how we long for it! We want an end to endless human bitterness and strife. We pray "Thy Kingdom Come!" But it is futile to preach and pray and work for the kingdom without a king. This is our Christian proclamation: "Jesus Christ is Lord." You want the Kingdom? Then en-throne Him.

This is the challenge which the Christian Church hurls at the world. We confess this faith in one of our favorite hymns:

*All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all.*

See how universal this claim is; see how absolute it is; see how uncompromising it is! Jesus Christ is Lord of all. That is not a figure of speech. It is to be taken literally and in all seriousness.

Greek and Roman religions were very charitable. They knew gods many and lords many. They were fa-

*The new minister of Broadway Tabernacle is Chairman of the Missions Council of Congregational Christian Churches. His former parish was in Holyoke, Massachusetts. Visitors in New York may hear Dr. Penner on Sunday mornings at The Tabernacle which is located at Broadway and 56th Street. Dr. Penner succeeded Allan Knight Chalmers.

RICH EXPERIENCES AT GREENSBORO FIRST CHURCH.

The Greensboro First Church has had some rich experiences during the past few weeks.

On September 19, Mr. Curtis R. Shumacher of the Home Mission Boards came to assist, instruct and prepare our membership for a fund-raising campaign toward our church-building program. His week with us is a never-to-be-forgotten experience in the life of our church. We expected Mr. Shumacher to conduct a money-raising campaign and that he did, but over and above all the instruction that he gave toward raising funds—even above the success of campaign itself, stands the spiritual uplift, the renewed consecrations that came to our fellowship under his guidance. As some one expressed it, "This has been the most meaningful revival our church has ever had." All ages, young and old alike were touched and impressed by his sincere approach as the age-old problem of raising money was turned into a rich religious experience.

The week started on Monday evening when Mr. Shumacher met with the Official Board and other leaders of the church. The next four evenings he spent with the fifty to sixty men who were to do the actual canvass. Each afternoon the women of the church met to hear Mr. Shumacher explain their part in the campaign. On Sunday during the church school hour, our superintendent arranged for him to appear before every department of the Sunday school.

The final service was on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock when Mr. Shumacher gave the challenging message and the sixty men who were to go out as canvassers were commissioned by the pastor, Dr. W. E. Wisseman, in a most impressive service. Following a one o'clock dinner at the church, the canvassers left in pairs to raise in cash and pledges the $54,000.00 needed in order to launch the building program. That night at the eight o'clock service, the sanctuary was filled with interested, expectant people when Mr. Wallace Truitt, chairman of the Board of Trustees and of the Canvass Committee, announced that we had gone over the top by one thousand dollars. The figures now stand at $57,200.00.

While we have for a long time had reasons to be grateful for the harmony within the Greensboro Church, it seems to me that this experience has strengthened the bond between pastor and people and the members one to another like nothing else has ever done.

As a fitting climax to a wonderful week Dr. Rockwell Harmon Potter of Hartford, Connecticut, who came to be with us for a series of services, brought his first message that Sunday night—a glorious challenging message on "Rebuilding the Temple." Each night for a week this great, yet humble man of God, inspired us with his wisdom, his simplicity, his devotion and concern for things of the Spirit. He left us a richer and a better people.

The following Sunday, on World Communion Day, a beautiful communion set was presented the church in memory of the late Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Clymer by members of their family. Mr. and Mrs. Clymer were charter members of the Greensboro Church and spent their lives in its service. The presentation was made by Mrs. J. R. Foster, Sr., also a charter member of the church and acceptance was by Mr. Wallace Truitt. The Clymer grandchildren presented to the pastor an individual communion service that he may use for administering the Lord's supper to invalids and shut-ins.

Important events seem to follow close on to each other in the life of this church for the second Sunday in October marked Dr. Wisseman's fourteenth anniversary as pastor of the First Church. In grateful recognition of these years of service together, a silver pitcher, bearing the inscription—1935–1949, filled with American Beauty roses, had been placed on the altar. At the close of the day they went as a gift to the Wisseman family.

I would not close without mentioning the activities of our very fine group of young people. They, too, have been busy during these October days. On Saturday evening, October 3, about 25 or 30 of these young folk met in the church cottage yard for an out-door supper and their fall rally with Mrs. Wisseman as counselor. Timothy Chang was present and showed pictures of our Shaowu Mission. Baxter Twiddy was also present and gave an interesting account of his experience last summer in a German work camp.

We feel that these events and wonderful experiences have grown out of a united, cooperative fellowship, led by a pastor who believes and lives up to the thought that "it is the spirit which animates the workshop that matters."

REMARKS AT THE FUNERAL OF MR. W. V. LEATHERS.*

By DR. I. W. JOHNSON.

William Vaught Leather was born in March, 1880. He was a native of Kentucky. On Saturday, September 24, he was stricken by paralysis while attending to his work as a representative of the Old Dominion Life Insurance Company. He died three weeks later, at 2:45 a. m., Saturday, October 16, at the age of 69 years and seven months.

He came to Holland, Virginia in 1905. While living there he transferred his membership to the Holland Christian Church. He married Miss Mamie Holland who is well known as an active church worker in the Eastern Virginia Conference. Later he and his wife moved to Suffolk where they have resided until his death. He is survived by his wife; two nieces, Mrs. Carlton Cutchins of Franklin, Virginia and Miss Ruby Leathers of Lawrenceburg, Kentucky; five nephews, William Leathers, Jr., of Lawrenceburg, Hal and Roland Murphy of Bloomfield, Kentucky, and Harry and Eugene Searcy of Louisville, Kentucky.

Mr. Leathers transferred his church membership to the Suffolk Christian Church after moving to Suffolk, and was a faithful and consistent member until his death. A few years ago he was elected and ordained as a deacon of that church and discharged the duties of that high office with satisfaction to the constituency of said church. He took an active interest in all the work of the church.

These matters are mentioned to indicate his interest in his work, his family and his church. He was diligent in business, devoted to his home and family and faithful to his church.

He was a man of devotion.—Every member of his family and his circle of friends recognized this trait in his character. He found great joy in ministering to others. He was loyal to his church. With patience and consecration he stood ready at all times to render service wherever it was possible for him to do so.

He was a Christian gentleman.—With humility and sincerity he loved his church, although his voice was seldom heard in public meetings. But he was a faithful champion of right

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

HIGH SCHOOL DAY AT ELON COLLEGE.

Elon College is seeking to acquaint seniors in high school with its facilities, curriculum, student body, faculty and entire campus. Friday, November 4, has been designated "High School Day." The high school seniors of all schools in Alamance County and portions of other counties have been invited to attend. This invitation is also extended to the juniors and seniors in high schools throughout the Southern Convention who are members of the Congregational Christian Church.

The administration is endeavoring to secure information from the pastors of our churches in the Convention. A letter has gone to all pastors requesting the names and addresses of our high school juniors and seniors who belong to their congregations. To this date, we have received replies from only two of our pastors, one living in Virginia and the other in North Carolina.

Upon arrival, the visiting seniors will be greeted by officers of the student body and faculty. They will be directed to the rotunda of Alamance Building where they will register. Registration is to begin at 2:00. After registration, Student Government Officials will take them for a tour of the campus. They will visit the various departments of the college where demonstrations will inform them as to the materials, subject matter, and methods of procedure. At 4 o'clock, visitors, students, faculty and all will assemble in Whitley Auditorium for a program of music by the Elon Singers and addresses by members of the faculty and administration. Following this program, visitors and the student body will be served a Barbecue dinner on the campus. After the dinner, there will be a pep rally preparatory to Elon College's Homecoming game with High Point College to be played in the new Burlington Stadium, Burlington, North Carolina. Following the rally, visitors, students, and all will go to the stadium for the game. All seniors will be guests of the college for the game.

There is a great deal of interest in this proposed High School Day on and off the campus. To date one hundred twenty-four (124) seniors have acknowledged the invitation and expressed their intentions of being present. This information is given through THE CHRISTIAN SUN in the hope that a number of our high school seniors living outside of Alamance County will accept this as a personal invitation and send a card expressing their intentions to attend. This information should be received at the college not later than November 1.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The Southern Convention of Congregational Christian Churches expressed its interest in Elon College and a desire to have the churches give their support to the college by apportioning $15,000.00 to the several conferences constituting the Convention and requested the conferences in turn to apportion the same to the local churches constituting the conferences. In view of the fact that the Convention requests the college to award free scholarships to all ministerial students, full time Christian workers, and ministers' children (which amounts to approximately $3,600 annually), to contribute $900 to the support of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, provide offices (one large and two small ones), and furnish heat, lights and janitor service (which totals another $900 if rented from anyone else), thus, making a total of $5,400 that the college is requested to contribute out of its proposed $15,000. It would seem that the churches would certainly want to raise the entire apportionment. To date the college has received through the Convention Office a total of only $7,702.75 which is slightly more than 50 per cent of the amount apportioned. Two conferences, the Valley of Virginia and Eastern North Carolina, have already met in annual session leaving only three more. In all fairness, the college is making an earnest appeal to the churches of these two conferences if there be any that have not paid their apportionments in full to please do so as quickly as possible. This is vital and essential to the conduct of the college. The three conferences yet to meet, Eastern Virginia, North Carolina and Virginia, and Western North Carolina, are appealed to to raise their apportionments in full that the college may not be hindered or handicapped in its program of instruction and guidance. Elon College is a church institution. It has no desire to be other than our church's college. If it were not, it should be closed. Since it is, it should be supported. We are the only ones to give that support.

and high morals, and approved deep piety and spiritual worship.

He was humble.—Having known him intimately since his coming to Virginia, this quality of character seemed to be predominant in his manner and spirit on all occasions. He was willing to follow where others led the way in righteousness and public service. He was sincere in his devotion and service. When all has been said in appraisal of human life—the greatest asset is Christian living. Men honor great deeds. God honors great living. The man who can say "for me to live is Christ" has found the high point in human experience. This means more than a sentimental attitude towards Christ and His Church, for it includes the doing of work in the name of Christ. To such Jesus has given a precious promise—"and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end." If Jesus goes with us, it means happy living and walking through the valley and shadow of death one can say, "Thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." How glorious to say, "Not my will but thine be done." "My Jesus as thou wilt" is the expression of an obedient child of God. This was the faith of W. V. Leathers.

Christian Missions

At Home and Abroad

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

NO. 4—LIBERATION.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
May 23, 1949.

DEAR FRIENDS:

I have just re-read my letter of May 19, and I am flabbergasted at my naivete. To believe that it was all over so quickly and easily now seems just wishful thinking. On May 21, I went to Ershituh to bring the family back. I had walked about 15 miles on the way home when I met a carpenter who had been making some chairs for our meetings. He had come especially to look for me. "The Communist troops have moved into your house," he told me. "More than 10,000 have come to Shaowu and have moved into every available space."

I was astonished. I had heard that Communist troops were extremely courteous and did not move into people's houses. I thought of our things spread out just as we had left them. I covered the last five miles very quickly. The others came along more slowly.

It came as quite a shock to me to see, standing by the bridge on the edge of town, a fierce looking soldier with a red band around his arm. He looked me over but made no attempt to stop me as I walked into the city. A guard stopped me at the gate, "Who are you?" he asked. I live here, I replied and brushed past him.

The house was a mess. Some of our Chinese friends had been there all morning trying to get the soldiers out but to no avail. Our unused beds were all moved into the dining and living rooms which had become a barracks. I went up to the officer in charge, a colonel, whose headquarters my house had become.

"I've heard over your Peking radio broadcasting station that the Communist troops are well disciplined and courteous. I've also heard that you have asked foreigners not to leave but to stay and help China. You have broadcast that you would protect foreigners and their property. Yet, here you have moved into our house and taken over without asking. Even the poorly disciplined Nationalist soldiers were too polite for that."

The Colonel was a comparatively young man, perhaps 30, who looked like a real soldier. He looked tough but not coarse. I could see that my words had made him really mad. Afterwards Mr. Chang told me, "You should never have said that."

"Why haven't you gone back to America like the other foreigners," he asked me. I repeated again that the radio had urged us to stay. We had come to help the people of China—which was supposedly their aim, too, therefore, there was no cause for us to go.

"We only want these two rooms," he said, "you can have all the rest of the house. We won't bother a thing of yours, you can be assured of that. We don't like to live in the homes of ordinary people and we have orders to go to foreigners' homes since most of them have gone anyway. We will only be here a few days. We will try not to bother you, but we're staying."

There was nothing else to do. We still had one bedroom and a guest room which became our dining and living rooms. They didn't want the kitchen either, they said.

That evening I was standing on the front porch when our Colonel and his assistant came out. We had a long talk. "Why do you Americans help the Kuomintang?" he asked me. "They're only looking out for themselves and care nothing for the common people." I noticed that he nor the other officers wore any special insignia and their clothing was all the same. "We are all equal," he told me later. "We have no titles or distinctions."

I told him that America's aim was to help the people of China—an aim which was broader than party lines.

"You know," he told me, "we have captured everything you gave them. All the guns and equipment in our outfit are from America. We have 200 trucks and jeeps across the river."

"You ought to thank America for helping you so much," I told him. Then for the first time there appeared a pleasant and friendly smile. He even laughed out aloud. I could see I was going to like this young officer.

"What is your aim in coming to China," he asked me. I told him something about our God, about Jesus and the missionary commission.

"May I believe in your God?" he asked. I answered without hesitation.

That evening I listened to the American news and then turned on the Peking Communist station for them. I then tuned in the Voice of America. They were much interested in the news of Shanghai. Before I left that night, Citizen Wang (the Colonel) said to me, "We don't want to interfere with your work. We will not harm you and if there is anything we can do for you, just let me know." I thanked him and as I went off to sleep, I felt no apprehension as I could see he was a man of his word.

The next day was Sunday. As I was leaving for church, I stopped in to see the officer in charge. "You asked me last night if you might believe in God. I am on my way to church now and would be glad to have you accompany me." He thanked me very politely for the invitation and seemed pleased when I gave him a copy of the New Testament. "I'd like to talk to you about Christianity some time," he said. "Just now I cannot go."

The faces of the soldiers on the street, I could readily see, revealed that they were anti-American. They didn't say anything, but there were no friendly words of greeting which we have learned to expect from our Chinese friends. After church I hurried home as rapidly as possible to escape the hostile stares of the soldiers. However, for those men in our house, those whom I have had a chance to know, even in this short time, there has developed an admiration and a real liking, and I have reason to believe that it is mutual. "As a matter of fact," Citizen Wang told me, "I knew some Americans up north in my native Hubei and they were all right. I used to have long talks with them."

This morning, he came to my study to ask, "Are we bothering you in any way. If so, tell us." I told him that their living in our living and dining room was a bit inconvenient, but that we didn't mind. "We will move out today," he assured me, "if you will permit us to move into the empty school building in front of your house." I readily agreed.

Yesterday another division moved into Shaowu. Apparently both are on their way westward. Now practically every home is filled with soldiers. Most of the reports are that they are polite and well disciplined—quite different from previous armies.

This morning, a young man came

WOMEN'S SOCIETIES REPORT.

JOHNSON'S GROVE.

At the beginning of the year, a committee met with Mr. and Mrs. Kimball and planned our Year Book, which was very attractive. This has helped us much in our work this year.

Since our pastor and his wife took such interest in our society and were so helpful to us, we decided to name it "The Mary Kimball Circle."

In December, we had a Christmas party, filled three boxes for the Welfare Department, a sunshine basket for a shut-in member, and remembered our pastor.

In May, Mrs. W. T. Harrell met with the Circle at the church to review our home mission study book. She is an able and interesting speaker.

In July, we enjoyed a picnic supper with our families as guests. We were also glad to welcome our new pastor, the Rev. W. A. Grissom, and family.

In August, Mrs. T. Hayes Holland of the Franklin Church, was our guest. She gave us a very interesting account of The Woman's Convention and School of Missions at Elon.

Our circle joins with you in prayers for our missionaries and our work for this New Year.

WAKE CHAPEL.

We have had a year of Christian fellowship under the leadership of Mrs. Garland Ransdell.

Mrs. B. B. Johnson has planned programs for each monthly meeting that were a great inspiration. Mrs. R. M. Dickens has conducted very comprehensive devotions from the Book of Galatians during the year with our pastor, Rev. Fred P. Register, reviewing The Gospel Unlimited at the September meeting.

In February, the Society was most fortunate to have Miss Pattie Lee Coghill review China—Twilight or Dawn. In May, several members of our group gave splendid reports on On Our Own Doorstep. We had a covered dish supper in February and a picnic supper in May.

The members of the Society were privileged to hear Mrs. Frank Laubach at one meeting and Timothy Chang at another. We joined the other churches in the community for the World Day of Prayer.

In addition to the usual remembrances for shut-ins and baskets for needy families, our Society clothes Betty Jean Proctor at the Orphanage.

The Society assisted the young people of the church in serving a supper and, in addition, served the local Lion's Club twice—the proceeds of which were to be applied on our carpet fund.

One Memorial Membership was purchased for Mrs. Carey Powell, Sr.

BELEW CREEK.

We observed the World Day of Prayer with Winston-Salem churches. We held a Thank Offering service, sent clothing to the Orphanage at Easter, observed May Fellowship, celebrated family week by giving special programs and a community supper. We sent a box to Miss Angie Crew, sent flowers to the sick, gifts to the shut-ins, and collected clothing for the under-privileged. We also raised $200 to help furnish our new parsonage.

We have enjoyed good programs throughout the year. We have 25 members and hope to have more next year.

HENDERSON.

Our Missionary Society, under the able leadership of our president, Mrs. T. A. Park, has just completed one of the most successful years in its history.

Our Society is divided into three circles. Each circle meets once a month, using the Bible study and mission study in each. General meetings are held every three months.

During November our women had charge of the night services one Sunday night, presenting our Thank Offering Service, and receiving a nice offering of $58.00.

At Christmas, different circles sent Christmas baskets and gifts to various friends and members of our church, and also to Timothy Chang.

One of our most enjoyable meetings was the General meeting in March, when we had Miss Pattie Lee Coghill give our study book, China—Twilight or Dawn, and we had a covered dish supper.

We had three women to attend the School of Missions at Elon College.

One of our circles sent a large box of clothing to the Indian Mission and a lovely box of clothing was sent to the Orphanage for Easter from all circles. We also took an offering, which was sent for Friendly Service to Puerto Rico.

We were fortunate in having with us during the year, Mrs. Frank Laubach and Mr. & Mrs. Chandler, who gave us inspiring talks on the work they are doing. We also saw "A Letter from China," which showed our mission work in China and our own missionaries.

We have a very active cradle roll. At the end of the year, a party was given for them and an offering taken.

Our Society places in the Sunday school a bank which we call the Birthday Bank and all are asked to put a penny for each year of age. This money goes to the Jacksons.

MT. ZION.

As we start the new year's work with high hopes of making our society a superior one, we women of Mt. Zion wish to give the following report of the closing year.

In addition to our regular meetings with carefully planned programs, using the packet material and suggested Bible and Mission studies, we observed World-Wide Communion Sunday, held our Thank Offering Service, and World Community Day Service. We sent eighteen pack-a-towel bundles. We had Thanksgiving Day services and received a nice offering for our orphanage at Elon.

In December, a Christmas Story, "The Clock," was presented. Our president, Mrs. J. L. Gray, also presented a beautiful candle light service at the church. There was a scene in the background with the Virgin Mary and four angels. The service was led by Rev. H. B. Watkins, who then was our pastor. Carols were played by our organist, using our new electric organ which we are proud to have. We gave each family with children the "Christmas Story Book" and a family service for Christmas. We sent Christmas cheer to the sick and shut-ins in our community and Timothy Chang received a gift from us. In January, we sent the New Year Family Service to each family. In February

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

We have had such a happy experience that I want to share it with you. Monday (Oct. 17) the ministers and their wives of the Eastern Virginia Conference gave a farewell party to my husband and me. Last May we had participated in a farewell for Dr. and Mrs. Truitt and now we are leaving for North Carolina.

We met at Bethlehem Church and the ministers were very kind in their words. The ladies of the church served an excellent dinner. It looked good and tasted good.

Mrs. I. W. Johnson, "Miss Bertie," whom I have known and loved through the years, made a very pleasing speech and presented me with an orchid. Dr. Hardecastle presented my husband with a book.

You are wondering why I should be writing this for the Children's Page.

And this is the reason: their thoughtfulness, affection and kindness are a part of the fellowship of our church. As a group and as individuals we had worked for the same goals and had the same desires. There is a spirit, a kinship of belonging in the family of God's workers that is close-binding and sustaining. We thanked them from the bottom of our hearts.

Eastern North Carolina Conference met at Southern Pines last week. Mr. House and I attended the sessions. My farewell gift made a bride-like ornament for my going away.

Continue to grow in the church, with the people and you, too, may know the joy of being pleasantly welcomed and so graciously being bid godspeed. One doesn't have to be in a minister's family for that. Our churches are friendly—if you should move you will receive a welcome in our church in your new home town. But if you forget to tell anyone you are there no one will know it. Make your own welcome by letting them know of your arrival.

Our College, Orphanage and SUN are at work for us in North Carolina and Virginia. Our ministers interchange and yet never change. We are a part of a great fellowship!

TALK THINGS OVER.

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"One thing that greatly perplexed me, as a child, was that there was so much it appeared I was supposed to know, of which I was entirely ignorant," a friend of mine recently told some of us who were discussing early childhood. Several agreed that this had been true during their childhood.

I remember wishing my parents would tell me—oh, so many things," another friend, who is trying to take the place of both father and mother to an energetic, inquisitive nine-year-old, remarked.

"I had a mother, wise in many ways, but always hesitant to speak on the subject of sex or religion." This gentle indictment came from the mother of an eighteen-year-old son.

"Evidently you have profited by her mistakes," I responded, thinking of her manly boy, who had such a wholesome attitude about these subjects. "How did you manage it?"

"My husband and I have talked freely with Ted—always, of course, in a manner suitable to his stage of development," the brown-eyed mother told us, thoughtfully knitting. "He has never hesitated to bring his problems to our attention. We do not solve them for him; we three discuss them together, and then he makes his own decisions."

Then a very young mother spoke up. "A friend of mine," she said, "told me that when her son was going away to school she asked him to add a postscript to every letter, saying, 'I am all right spiritually, mentally, and physically.' She said she felt that this gave him an ideal—an obligation to meet—and she added that she had never received a letter from him without that postscript. I should like to hear what others think of this mother's request."

"Unwise," said one.

"I should think," said another, "that the postscript might mean very little after he had written it for many months."

"In case he took it seriously I think it would make him unbearably conceited," said a third.

"If 'all right' referred to satisfactory growth, and was so understood by both mother and son, the words might be justifiably reassuring to the parent," said a thoughtful woman. "However, I never would recommend such a practice. Who is able to say whether or not his progress along all lines is satisfactory?"

"Let us go back to 'talking things over' with children in their early, formative years," Eileen, who first had spoken, said to us. "You don't suddenly start talking confidentially and intimately to your children about the more serious subjects. Because of my parents' reticence, we never did become really confidential. It would be quite difficult, even now, to begin talking on certain subjects with them."

We should talk matters over naturally and guide our children, all through their childhood, in the knowledge of subjects of interest to them and about which they ought to know—religion, sex, political science, anything and everything of importance—in a way that they can comprehend. Ignorance is not protection nor the path to a full life, but knowledge and understand are.

Sympathy is a thing to be encouraged apart from humane considerations, because it supplies us with the materials for wisdom.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Youth at Work in the Church

WESTERN N. C. YOUNG PEOPLE TO MEET.

Western North Carolina young people are to meet at the Liberty Christian Church, Liberty, North Carolina, on Sunday, October 30, at 3:00 p. m., according to an announcement by Mrs. Charlesanna Robbins Park, acting president.

An attendance trophy will be awarded to the church having the most representatives.

The Albemarle Young People will present a play.

Those coming are asked to bring a picnic supper, and the Liberty Church will furnish the drink. All churches in the Western North Carolina Conference are asked to send representatives.

CHRISTIAN YOUTH CONFERENCE.

A Christian Youth Conference will be held on Friday and Saturday of this week and on Sunday morning, in Richmond, under the direction of Isaac K. Beckes of Chicago, who is the Director of Young People's Work of the United Christian Youth Movement. The conference theme will be, "United! Committed! In Christ!"

The Friday evening session will be held at Grace and Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, the session featuring a discussion with Virginia leaders of youth of "Contemporary Problems in Youth Work."

On Saturday morning at 9:00, at Holy Trinity Church, delegates will register. The opening Service of Worship at 10:30 will be followed by an address on "Youth and the Ecumenical Movement" by Mr. Beckes. In the afternoon, George D. Kelsey speaks on "The Ecumenical Spirit and Christian Relations." This will be followed by group discussions.

Saturday evening at 6:15, a banquet will be held at the Central Y. W. C. A. At 7:30, there will be special music followed by an address, "Young People in the World Council of Churches," by John Wood, and one by George D. Kelsey, "When Christ Has His Way." The session will be concluded with a fellowship program.

On Sunday morning at 9:00, John Wood will speak on "The United Christian Youth Movement"; and at 11:00 there will be a sermon, "Toward a Church Triumphant," by Mr. Beckes.

Religion and education are the chief factors in protecting the home. The home is sacred—it is a gift from God of a loving partnership between parents and children.—T. F. Epes.

into my study. "My whole family is Christian up in Honan. My parents lead the worship services," he told me of his much-loved pastor, of his God-fearing parents and of his church. His Honan accent was different and I only got about half of what he said, but I could see he was glad to have someone to talk to. A communist soldier—yet just a homesick kid away from home.

My experience thus far leads me to the same conclusion as that of Friday's letter. These new arrivals are people just like us. They have their virtues and their vices—which are common to all mankind. They respond to kindness and good will and give it in return. There are fewer of us Americans in China now. Therefore we have a greater responsibility than ever to teach and to live according to the teaching of our Christ.

Cordially,

CHURCH WOMEN AT WORK.

ruary, we had a Valentine Party for the youth of the church.

We observed the World Day of Prayer with our neighbor, Ebenezer Methodist Church. We ordered Guide Posts to use with other literature.

A Missionary Rally was held at the church, presenting a program, "Women of the Younger Churches," followed by a luncheon. We decorated our classrooms with drapes, made a scarf for the pulpit stand, and kneeling cushion for the chancel rail. We had May Fellowship service, social for families and presented gifts on Mother's Day.

We gave a Life Membership to one of our oldest members, Mr. J. R. Dixon, Sr., and also on Father's Day we presented Father's Day gifts with music and readings.

Rev. Stanley Carne reviewed the study book, China—Twilight or Dawn in such a manner that we all enjoyed it.

In addition our regular work, all through the year, we remember the sick and shut-ins with cards, flowers and visits. When there's sadness brought by deaths we carry prepared dishes, and serve the meal on the day of the funeral to the stricken family.

GOD COMFORTS HIS PEOPLE.

LESSON VI—NOVEMBER 6, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God; I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness.
—Isaiah 41:10.

LESSON: Isaiah 40 and 41; 42:5-9; 54; 61; 63:7-9; Luke 4:14-21.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 46:1-11.

The Times.

The times have changed since our last lesson from Isaiah. The situation is different. Israel has been carried away into captivity. The nation has been swallowed up by Babylon. It has lost its identity. It has also lost hope and courage. Its fortunes were at a low ebb. And perhaps worst of all, it had lost its sense of mission. The times were out of joint and something was needed to set them right.

The Man.

Scholars are pretty well agreed that the man who speaks in Chapters 40-66 of the prophecy of Isaiah is not the same man who has been speaking in chapters 1-39. So much time has elapsed, there is such a difference in ideas and literary style, the historical background is so different, that it is generally agreed that these latter chapters are the work of a prophet, a very great prophet, who lived and preached at a time towards the end of the Exile, when the rapid rise of the power of Cyrus presaged the fall of Babylon. Just who this unnamed prophet is, is not known. And it hardly needs to be added that it makes no difference whether he is known or not. It has nothing to do with the question of the inspiration of these writings. Nothing in the Old Testament is more clearly inspired or inspiring than these writings are. Indeed their value is all the more enhanced because scholars have been able to help us to see them against their background and thus to help us to understand them better. Through them as through other prophetic writings, God of old time spoke unto the fathers, and still speaks through them to us. For this unnamed and unknown prophet from shrewd observation and with prophetic insight spoke in words that have both a timely and temporary application to the situation at hand, and a timeless application to all kindred situations.

The Message.

As has been stated above, the times had changed. The messages of the first Isaiah (if we may use that term for our purpose here) were messages of warning and of judgment and of pronouncement of guilt and declaration of punishment. There was nothing else for the Righteous Judge of all the earth to do with his reprobate and sinful nation.

But now the situation was different. Judgment had been executed and disaster had fallen upon the nation. The great and glorious Temple had been destroyed, Jerusalem had been captured, the nation had been carried into captivity. Here it was a little group of people, comparatively speaking, "displaced persons" in a great pagan nation, dispossessed, dispersed and dispirited, despairing. But this great prophet could read the handwriting on the wall. He knew that dissension and decay within the great nation of Babylon, and the rising power of Persia under Cyrus, would bring defeat and disaster to proud Babylon, and would bring in a new era in history, and especially in the history of his beloved nation. For with daring prophetic genius he saw that Cyrus, pagan leader that he was, was to be an instrument of God, and that God was about to revisit his people, and to restore them to their ancient homeland. It was daring thinking, made possible only by a living faith in the living God. Opportunity was knocking at their doors, but they were not ready for it. The prophet saw that it was his business to help them to get ready for their great hour. They must be given new strength, new courage, new enthusiasm; they must be challenged to heroic action; they must be quickened with a new faith. They must be helped to see that even his severe chastisement of his chosen people was designed to be reformatory, and to prepare them for their great mission. Furthermore they must be made to know that his unfailing faithfulness to his ancient promises was now to be a sure ground for dauntless hope and joy. His was the task, the great task of bringing about in Israel a great revival, the replacement of a dead tradition by a living faith.

The general pattern which he followed is to be found in one of his great messages as recorded in Isaiah 40. Its keynote is comfort. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people," saith the Lord. "Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem." But here as elsewhere, the word comfort means to "make strong," "to strengthen." True comfort makes strong, and leaves one better prepared to do what must be done and to bear what must be borne.

Hard after the words of comfort, comes a word of challenge. Israel is to make ready a way for the Lord, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God. In other words the prophet's message was a call to action as well as a proclamation of hope.

But, alas, how could poor, weak, disheartened Israel prepare the way of the Lord! They were as grass that groweth up and withereth, as a flower that fadeth. They were in their own strength, but they were not to do this in their own strength. Their God was a God of power. He would come "with a strong hand," and his arm would be their strength. But blessed be his name; he was also a God of love and grace. He would "feed his flock like a shepherd; he would gather the lambs in his arms, and carry them in his bosom, and he would gently lead those that are with young." Infinite power was wedded to tender and infinite love and grace and goodness.

The prophet tries to shift their focus of attention from their own weakness to the might and power of God. In glowing language he describes the majesty and the might of their God, and his sovereignty over all nations. And in somewhat ironic language he deals with the problem that harassed the people of his nation. Here they were without a Temple or any visible symbol of their God. And all around them were the elaborate and costly images and idols and temples of the gods of the people, whose captives they were. There was the subtle temptation to turn to idolatry. They wanted a "god with a face" as it were. Again the prophet directs attention to the Holy One of Israel, the God who had set His glory in the heavens as well as who had laid the foundations of the earth. Furthermore, God ruled and overruled in his universe—he brought princes to nothing, and made the judges of the earth as vanity. Indeed beside him there were no other gods. He was God, and God alone.

TASK OF PREACHER.

miliar with the idea of seeing many different religions living side by side on the principle of "live and let live." But Christians came with the challenging counter-claim; though others may believe in "gods many and lords many, yet for us there is one God, the Father . . . and one Lord, Jesus Christ." They took this claim seriously; they made this claim resolutely. And instantly they became the enemy.

It is all happening again today. Wherever the Christian Church resolutely proclaims, "Jesus Christ is Lord" a sharp conflict ensues with those who would set up another ultimate authority and loyalty. Every modern totalitarianism correctly sees Christ as the enemy. They do not see that the enemy is indeed the Savior. The conflict in Nazi Germany was inevitable for this reason, for there the State set itself up as the ultimate and only authority. And today we see the sharpening of the same conflict in every country behind the Iron Curtain. Communism is a totalitarian regime, and sooner or later it demands complete control over the thoughts and actions of every individual and every institution.

This spiritual conflict for the final loyalties of men cannot be evaded. It is there in the very nature of our Gospel. Precisely because the world is as it is, the need is all the greater to declare boldly where real help may be found. Somebody has said that the Gospel has been discredited by the war. On the contrary, the war and its long aftermath have been proving that the Gospel is right. To a warring world we are to keep saying: that is not the way, seek the way of Jesus. In a time of prejudice, brother against brother, we are to keep saying: that is not the way, seek the spirit of Jesus. In a world of moral relativity where people are all mixed up and run into all kinds of blind alleys, we are to keep saying: that is not the way, seek the truth as we have it in Jesus. He is the Way, the Truth and the Life. . . . Follow Him!

New decades may lead into new situations, and new situations may enjoin new duties—but this duty will remain—to seek to bring our world under the sway of Christ. Here is sufficient compulsion to send us forth in His name into our own neighborhood and to the ends of the earth.

What it means to make Christ Lord, in the personal realm, has been finely expressed in a parable which I found in the writings of the Danish theologian, Kierkegaard. In order to be a fully up-to-date preacher you must be able to quote Kierkegaard: This is the parable: "Once upon a time there was a rich man who bought, for an exorbitant price, a team of faultless and excellent horses. He wanted them for the pleasure of driving them himself. A year or two went by. If anyone who had known these horses in earlier days now saw them driven away by their owner, he would not be able to recognize them. Instead of being full of fire, they were dull and drowsy. They could bear nothing. They could endure nothing. The rich man could hardly drive them four miles without having to stop on the way, and sometimes they came to a standstill just when he was driving his best. Moreover, they had acquired all sorts of quirks and bad habits. Although, of course, they got food in abundance, yet they grew thinner.

"Then, in desperation, the rich man called in the king's coachman. He drove these horses for one month. At the end of the period there was no team of horses in the whole land which carried their heads so proudly, whose eyes were so fiery, whose pace was so beautiful. No other team of horses had the endurance of these. Why the difference? The difference lay here: the owner, who was no coachman and merely played the coachman, drove the horses according to the horses' conception of how they should be driven. The royal coachman drove them according to the coachman's conception of driving."

This, says Kierkegaard, is a picture of human life. We live such a poor life, our energies scattered, ineffective, purposeless, without endurance, half-hearted, defeated morally at sea, mentally confused, because the driver is lacking. We live according to our own ideas of living. We need a coachman. We need the royal coachman, which is Christ.

This is the heart of our proclamation to society and to the individual. It is this word that you have called me to speak to you, and for you to the world. Give the reins of your life into the hands of the royal coachman, Christ.

III

We preach not ourselves, but Christ Jesus as Lord, and ourselves your servant for Jesus' sake.

Myself as your servant! How can I serve you as I ought? I know the innumerable personal aspects of the Christian ministry which bring a minister into close touch with his people in every kind of human situation, and which give such joy to his calling. In all these ways as counsellor and friend, I am eager to serve.

However, I am thinking specifically of that aspect of the ministry that relates to preaching and the conduct of public worship. There is a sense in which you have called me to be your voice—to speak for you. That doesn't mean that I am first of all to listen to what you want me to say, and then faithfully to repeat that. I am not here to try to give expression to the average opinion of this congregation. You want me, first of all, to be a faithful servant of the Word. Indeed, I cannot serve you as I ought unless I am a faithful servant of the Word. I know that this church has been noted for the freedom of utterance which it has always accorded its ministers. But it is a privilege which must not be abused. The freedom which is mine is freedom within the Gospel, whose messenger I am. It is this freedom you accord me in opening this pulpit to me.

There is something strangely wonderful about that which brings a minister and a congregation together. We do not know one another well. I have never so much as attended a service in this church. Yet we know each other well enough to be conscious of a broad basis of agreement. As I stand here this morning I am conscious of the fact that around me is a church that is in fundamental agreement with me. Not that we see eye to eye on every point. We wouldn't be Congregationalists if we did. We pride ourselves on the fact that our fellowship is not dependent upon identity of theological opinion or of denominational name. But it is dependent upon a common loyalty to Jesus.

We are concerned about the same things. We believe in God and his kingdom. We want to see that Kingdom come. We believe in preaching the Gospel to all mankind. We believe in the world-wide mission of the church. We begin with the broad basis of a common concern and a common faith and to this concern and faith you want me to bear testimony on your behalf as effectively and as persuasively as possible. Someone has defined preaching as "the church confessing its faith." Certainly it is one way—though it is only one—in which your voice, the voice of this church, can be heard.

I am to speak for you. But I am also to speak to you. For a church is not a perfect entity, made up of perfect people; it is made up of men and

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Some of our Burlington ladies are sewing for our children, others are giving attention to some closets for the little girls in the Main Building, another one came by yesterday and said: "Having read your last letter I could not rest until I came by and gave you this check." (Can you wait until next week's report to see who it was and how much?) The Pleasant Ridge Church came—75 strong—to visit us last Sunday. Mrs. Truitt and I were in Suffolk for a dear friend's funeral, but Ann went and met them and helped play hostess.

The sound of tractors, early and late, accompany the sowing of fall grain. In a few weeks our brown fields will be green and beautiful.

I preached the 60th anniversary sermon for the large E. & R. Church in Burlington recently; spoke for our children at the Eastern North Carolina Conference in session at Southern Pines; preached to the Conference at the evening session and had the thrill of having the Elon Choir furnish several beautiful selections of music. Sunday I shall have the pleasure of preaching for our Burlington Church and my good friend, the Rev. W. Mil-lard Stevens.

A program is being prepared which our boys and girls will present to the Burlington Church Sunday School, the Burlington Rotary Club, and who knows, maybe at your church, too, if they get invited. It would be real thoughtful in some church or organization if they sent us a hundred dollars—more or less—for costumes. We would like to use them and store them for future use. If you could see how talented and cooperative these children are, and how much this "something out of the routine" means to them you would like it. By the way, the "unloved orphan" is happy now and is responding well.

For several years I have been typing out a prayer at the conclusion of my private morning devotions. First paragraph of this morning's prayer is as follows:

Or Lord Jesus, how good it is to be in Thy Work! To be called to serve Thee, and to be given the privilege of serving in such a fruitful place! Blessed be Thy name, and glory and honor and praise be unto Thee for Thy mighty redemption and love.

The prayer goes on for my fellow ministers, their churches, and their personal joy in serving the Lord; and it seeks God's blessings upon our entire great brotherhood.

The Thanksgiving Offering is before us. Let us make it humbly grateful of God's goodness to us. Let us remember there are few places where it has a better chance to bless little children and build for the future. Help, you yourself help, lay Christ's hands on the heads of these children. There is a blessing in it for you.

an invitation to this ministerial novice to preach at Antioch Church. Who could ever forget the experience of that first call? It was good to see Mr. Wall again. And not only memory, but hope was made vibrant in the realization that this church and Conference will be the setting for my future ministry. Faith's prayer and testimony remains: "So long Thy power hath blest me, sure it still will lead me on."

TASK OF PREACHER.

women and children, every one of whom (including the minister and the deacons) stands in constant need of God's grace. Churches are not made up of saints. In them are prodigal sons and daughters; souls Jesus called "lost." Some are more lost than others in that they do not yet know they are lost. Others are on various stages of the pilgrimage from the City of Destruction to the City of God. But none has arrived except those who are in the church triumphant.

We all fall short of the glory of God. None of us is perfect in Christian understanding. None of us is perfect in Christian living. We all need to have the Gospel preached to us. We all need to be converted. If anyone here thinks he does not need to be converted, he needs to be converted from his pride. We all need to be made to realize our inner need. So the minister must speak to the church, though in every word he speaks also to himself.

There is another reason why a minister speaks to a congregation. He is not only the spokesman of a single church. He is also the spokesman of the whole church. I am both the minister of this congregation and also of the church of Christ, and as such I stand before you as a representative and reminder of that larger fellowship to which we belong. A Christian minister is himself (or should be) a refutation of all ecclesiastical parochialism. He is a spokesman of the whole church to the single church, of the church universal to the church local.

For all this you have called me to be your minister. You want me to speak to you, and you want me to speak for you, in the hope and faith that by a faithful bearing witness to the truth as we have it in the Gospel, we ourselves may advance toward Christian maturity, and God's purposes may be advanced in the world.

In Memoriam

ARLINE.

We, the members of Liberty Spring Christian Church were saddened August 19, 1949, by the passing of our beloved member, Mrs. Nettie Ashley Arline.

We desire to express love and respect for one who served so faithfully and will be greatly missed by her many friends and neighbors and most of all her family where she served as a devoted mother.

Now, therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we shall miss her in the sweet fellowship of our work together. We shall always cherish the memory of her friendship.

2. That we hold in lasting remembrance her love, loyalty, and her service to her Master, and her patience and quiet endurance of her illness.

3. To the members of her family is extended our sincere sympathy, and the hope that our appreciation of her may, in some measure, lighten the burden of their bereavement.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, a copy be sent to her family, and a copy be made a part of the records of the church.

Mrs. R. E. RAWLES,
Mrs. WESLEY HARRELL.

HEDGEBETH.

Deacon Ruel E. Hedgebeth departed this life on August 16, 1949. During his last years he suffered great physical disability. This illness made it impossible for him to take his usual active part in the affairs of life, which he so loved to do.

He was a devoted husband and father, a good citizen, and a faithful member of the Holland Christian Church. In 1920 he was elected to the Board of Deacons and gave loyal service till the time of his illness. In his passing, the home, the community and the church have sustained a great loss.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we humbly accept the Heavenly Father's will.

2. That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the family in their loss.

3. That we honor Deacon Hedgebeth's memory by a greater devotion to the things and the tasks he so devotedly served.

THE BOARD OF DEACONS.

LEWIS.

WHEREAS, God in His infinite wisdom called the Rev. Frank H. Lewis from his earthly home and ministry while in attendance at a Bible Conference at Massanetta Springs, Virginia, on Sunday, August 28; and,

WHEREAS, Dr. Lewis had over fifty years of faithful service in the ministry and Kingdom of God on earth in different parts of our country; and,

WHEREAS, For the past nine years God in His divine plan has favored the Shelton Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, with the privilege of the leadership and guidance of one with such knowledge and revelation of the scriptures and deep spiritual insight as Dr. Lewis; and,

WHEREAS, We, the members of the Shelton Church, wish to express our sincere appreciation and thanks for his ministry, devotion, and services so willingly rendered not only to the church, but also to the community and the Eastern Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches; therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of God, knowing that it was His divine will that he was taken from us.

2. That we keep in remembrance his life, his work and years of service to humanity and God.

JAMES E. ANDREWS,
WILLIAM F. LAWRENCE,
BULA MOORE.

RAYLE.

Mrs. Minnie Rayle passed to her eternal reward March 19, 1949. She had been a member of Hines Chapel Congregational Christian Church for many years. She was a woman of Christian character and we shall always cherish her memory.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we feel "she is not gone, she is away" and that we hope to meet her again in our Father's home.

2. That to her husband and children, those to whom she was nearest and dearest, we extend our heartfelt sympathy and commend them to the God of Love and Mercy. May this sad dispensation be to them a connecting link between earth and heaven, where they may be reunited and join an unbroken circle around God's throne.

3. That we are grateful for what her life has meant to her friends and neighbors.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy entered on our church record and a copy sent to The Christian Sun.

MONROE MARTIN.
Mrs. ROLAND ISLEY,
Mrs. J. W. ISLEY,

WATKINS.

On June 21, 1949, God in His infinite love and great wisdom saw fit to call from his earthly labors and bodily suffering Mr. Thomas Franklin Watkins. He was a member of Hines Chapel Congregational Christian Church at the time of his death and had been for several years. He was a quiet, unassuming, humble man, yet firm in his devotion to Christian principles and practices.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we realize God doeth all things well, and we bow in humble submission to His will.

2. That we rejoice in the triumph of his release from the burden of pain, to enter into life more abundant, to be forever with the Lord.

3. That we express our sympathy to his loved ones and we commend them to our Heavenly Father's love and comfort.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be placed on our church records, a copy be sent to the family and one be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

HANBURY.

In loving memory of my devoted husband, Cary Edward Hanbury, who passed away September 17, 1945:

To his Heavenly Home above
To that Mansion fair,
In that beautiful land where we'll never grow old.
Jesus is with you there.

LAYMEN AT WORK

Laymen's Sunday was observed in our Lynchburg (Va.) Church with the following men taking part: O. D. Tolley, Jr., C. L. Grossman, W. T. Dunn, Sr., and Miss Betty Daniel.

Mr. H. W. Lee, member of the First Christian Church in Portsmouth and chairman of the Eastern Virginia Laymen's Fellowship, was the speaker on Laymen's Sunday at the Rosemont Church, Norfolk.

Laymen's Sunday was observed at Newport News last Sunday with messages given by Mr. L. J. Brown on "A Layman Looks at the Minister," by Mr. J. M. Bidwell on "A Layman Looks at the Church," and by Mr. H. D. Stalnaker on "A Layman Looks at Missions."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

And then he sums it all up in those words to which Christians have turned again and again for comfort and courage as recorded in Isaiah 40: 28-31. It puts in sharp contrast men without God and men with God. Even youths and young men, without him shall faint and become weary and fall. But they that wait upon him shall renew their strength. They shall not only be able to meet courageously and successfully the crises and emergencies of life—they shall mount up with wings like eagles, and to run and not become weary, but more important, they shall be able to walk and not faint—to meet the routine and commonplace courageously, successfully!

You are gone but not forgotten,
Never will your memory fade;
Loving thoughts ever linger
'Round where you were laid.
Safe in the arms of Jesus,
My loved one is dwelling there,
With our Heavenly Father,
Loving God above so fair.

Sleep on, dear husband,
He took you home to rest;
I was devoted to you so,
But our Father knew best.
How I have missed you,
Since you went away;
The memory of your sweet smile
Is fresh alway.

I'm going to meet you one day
In Heaven so fair;
How happy we will be
In that Mansion there.
There the broken circle of life
Will forever be complete;
Eternal life with love, joy and peace
Will be replete.

IDA T. HANBURY.

New Superintendent of Missionary Homes

And it shall come to pass that at eventide there shall be light

The story of how 51 years ago a young New England widow, who had left her husband buried on the banks of the Tigris River in Turkey, founded what are now the Walker Missionary Homes, Inc., Auburndale, Massachusetts, is recalled by the assumption this month of the superintendency of Walker Missionary Homes by Rev. and Mrs. Alfred Dixon Heininger, China missionaries of the American Board.

MR. HEININGER

Born in Waltham, Massachusetts, in 1826, Mrs. Augustus Walker, Mount Holyoke College graduate, sailed in 1852 as a bride to Turkey. Thirteen years later her husband died of cholera and Mrs. Walker with her four children, the youngest only six weeks old, started a 500-mile trek on mule back to a port on the Black Sea.

In America she thought much about missionary children sent home for study and separated from their parents. She tried supplementing her widow's pension by taking in boarders, one of them the daughter of a South Sea Island missionary. Her desire to help these children culminated in what are now the Walker Missionary Homes with six fine modern buildings on three and one-half acres of land.

The Walker Missionary Homes have cared for three generations of Congregational Christian missionaries and their children. Not only do they house the boys and girls here without their parents, but missionaries on furlough from the four corners of the globe and veterans of the cross overseas who have retired from active service.

Mr. Heininger, the new superintendent, was born in Cleveland, Ohio, and educated at Adrian College and Oberlin Theological Seminary. He served 10 years in China before family illness caused his return to the U. S. A. in 1927. He then held pastorates in this country until 1945 when he answered an emergency call of the American Board to go back to North China for three years of religious, educational, relief and reconstruction work. He finished this in 1948.

Rev. and Mrs. Heininger succeed Mr. and Mrs. Arthur G. Robinson, also ex-China missionaries of the American Board.

Christian Minister Awarded Citation at Minneapolis

At the 22nd Annual Meeting of the Congregational Christian Mid-West Regional Churches and the 140th Annual Meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, meeting in Minneapolis, October 18-20, Dr. Warren H. Denison of Dayton, Ohio, one of the most beloved of the elder Christian statesmen in the Congregational Christian Churches, was honored with the Citation which appears on page two of this issue.

MR. DENISON

Dr. Denison was born in Hunters Land, New York, in 1870, and educated at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio. Elon College gave him an honorary D. D. in 1908. He was ordained to the Christian ministry in 1896. For twenty years he was a pastor in Ohio, Indiana and Virginia. In 1918 he became Superintendent of the Forward Movement of the Christian Churches in which he worked until 1924. Simultaneously, he was Secretary of Stewardship and Finance. In 1926 Dr. Denison was elected General Secretary of the Christian Churches.

In 1939, Dr. Denison retired from an executive post in the denomination and began the special type of stewardship training in which he has been so successful. He is a charter member of the United Stewardship Council and the Executive Secretary of the Fellowship of Tithers.

With a distinguished career as a pastor and church official, Dr. Denison, although in his 80th year, still carries the gospel of Christian stewardship into the churches in such a unique and powerful way that he is unable to accept all of the requests for his leadership and must decline one out of three. Denison Stewardship Schools, as they are called, have been held in 41 states since 1939. He has been concentrating on church finance, Every-Member Canvasses, church administration and general Christian Stewardship since 1939.

"Basic Christian Stewardship grows out of gratitude to God for his great gifts to us. True Stewardship puts God at the center of our lives and things on the fringe," says Dr. Denison. "Giving should be an act of worship, not primarily a matter of paying bills. It should develop the character of the giver while it produces budgets and lift the department of finance in a church out of an unwholesome atmosphere."

News Flashes

Dr. Russell Henry Stafford has been re-elected President of the American Board of Foreign Missions.

Congratulations to Dr. L. E. Smith, who began his eighteenth year as President of Elon College on November 1.

The National Convocation of the Church in Town and Country will be held in Lincoln, Nebraska, November 8-10.

Plymouth Church, Minneapolis, opened a new $400,000 unit during the Mid-West Regional Meeting. The new structure includes a chapel with a series of magnificent glass windows depicting the seasons of the Christian year and designed by Henry Lee Willett of Philadelphia.

The Westmoreland Church of Washington, D. C., which was formerly Mt. Pleasant Church, was featured recently on the front page of the Washington Star Pictorial magazine. Rev. Philip Gordon Scott, pastor, is chairman of the executive committee of the General Council.

Rev. Alvin O. Jacobs, Congregational Christian minister of Newton, Illinois, a member of the Southern Wabash Conference, recently sent eight subscriptions to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Mr. Jacobs is a former Christian minister and though he has passed the three score and ten years he maintains an active interest in the work of his church. He reported on the 130th Annual Session of the Southern Wabash Conference held at Glenwood Church, near Noble, Illinois. He reported that four young ministers were received into the Conference, all from one church, the Berlin Congregational Christian Church. He reported that the Conference voted to cooperate with the United Evangelistic Advance and set a goal of 300 confessions to Christ for the new year. We are always happy to hear from Brother Jacobs and wish to express to him our gratitude for his promotion of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

On November 11 at Elon College there will be held a joint meeting between the Executive Council of the Southern Synod of the Evangelical and Reformed Church and a special committee appointed by Dr. John G. Truitt representing the Southern Convention as follows: President Truitt, President Smith, Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, Chairman of the Board of Christian Education; Dr. F. C. Lester, Chairman of the Mission Board; Mrs. O. H. Paris, President, Woman's Convention; Conference Presidents George T. CITATION HONORING DR. WARREN H. DENISON.

(SEE PAGE ONE.)

"Now after more than a half century of service to the cause of Christ we wish today to express our deep appreciation for your outstanding services. We honor you today as: Beloved pastor, shepherding both small rural parishes and great city churches for two decades of distinguished ministry.

"We honor you today as: Church statesman guiding the destinies of your denomination as Secretary of the General Convention of Christian Churches from 1927 to 1931, and as Assistant Secretary of the General Council of the Congregational Christian Churches from 1931 to 1939. You, as much as any other one person, are responsible for the bringing together of the Christian and the Congregational Churches in the deeply significant merger of these two fellowships in 1931.

"We honor you today as: Apostle of Stewardship, who in years of semi-retirement has set an example to all as a full-time laborer in the Kingdom of God. We remember with pride that you are one of three remaining charter members of the United Stewardship Council. We salute you for your outstanding service as Executive Secretary of The Fellowship of Tithers among Congregational Christian Church folk. We witness to the renewed spiritual vitality which your ministries have brought to hundreds of churches which have gone forward in financial strength and spiritual health under your leadership. We freely acknowledge that you are the chief source of the significant renewal of stewardship interest throughout our Congregational Christian Fellowship.

"As a token of the esteem in which you are held the churches of the Mid-West Region of the Congregational Christian Fellowship present to you this day this scroll of citation."

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

WHO WILL EDIT THE SUN?

Since the announcement that the editor will be leaving Richmond this week he has encountered a rather steady stream of questions. These questions have come from near and far; they have been oral and written: "Who will edit The Sun?" "Are you giving it up?" "Will you edit from Southern Pines?" Some have expressed their wishes or made suggestions.

The primary responsibility of this editor is that of a pastor; nevertheless he is glad to comply with the request of the Board of Publications and continue to edit throughout the biennium for which he was elected. If the editorial work must be done at a distance from the office of publication, it will be no more difficult from Southern Pines than from elsewhere. There is direct and prompt mail delivery by rail between Richmond and Southern Pines. Manifestly it would be awkward and perhaps difficult for some new person to assume this responsibility in the midst of the biennium.

A word of caution is in order. The new policy will require more intelligent cooperation between contributors, editor and publisher. Bottle-necks will occur unless all important items, other than regularly scheduled contributions, are cleared through the editorial office. Material sent to the editor can be handled expeditiously. A carbon copy should be sent to the editor when material is sent to the office of publication. Imagine the frustration which results when the editor has planned the general content of an issue from front to back page and the Monday morning mail at the office of publication brings a request for the front or back page, or a major article with the accompanying note: "Dear Mr. Kernodle, please get this in this week." Someone's plan must be disrupted. Front or back page, or major space inside will be cheerfully reserved for those who request it in advance.

We solicit your prayers and cooperation.

EASTERN VIRGINIA: HAIL AND FAREWELL.

One of the writer's early memories is that of poring over copies of the Christian Annual, reading about ministers and churches throughout the Convention. Eastern Virginia seemed to be a distant paradise. It was obvious that God had made all Virginians just a little lower than the angels, and crowned them with glory and honor. Slight disillusionments have been experienced in more recent years, and minor adjustments were necessary to bring the original impression more nearly in line with facts.

The present estimate, with rose-tinted glasses removed, is that Eastern Virginia has great strength, but has never experienced its full potential. It has enjoyed, for the most part, exceptional lay and ministerial leadership. The churches are located in a highly privileged area. To whom much is given, much will be required.

Eighteen years of ministry in this great Conference has been a grand and unforgettable experience. Countless friends have been made. If God has used this ministry for the strengthening of churches and the building of His Kingdom, the realization elicits gratitude and brings peace.

Carry on Eastern Virginia! Let it be your high mission, not simply to hold the fort but blaze new trails. Lift your sights. Lengthen your ropes and strengthen your stakes. Provide settings for great ministries. Develop the stewardship of this fertile area to higher levels. Develop churchmen adequate for the new age. Utilize to the full the abundant economic and educational resources, and see to it that the strong bear the burdens of the weak. God bless Eastern Virginia.

RENDEZVOUS IN RICHMOND.

Richmond has been a great experience for the writer. Nearly a decade has been spent there in the Christian ministry. Fellowship in a large association of Protestant ministers has been rewarding. There has been the joy of receiving approximately one hundred members into our Richmond Church. One has a feeling of pride in getting safely through metropolitan traffic for this period. One automobile has been driven over 100,000 miles on Kingdom errands.

We shall miss Richmond. There has been lots of pleasure, planning, dreaming, studying, living—and some heartache—at 3206 Grove Avenue. Then there are the members and friends who convene from week to week at 3000 Grove Avenue, with whom we have experienced joy and sorrow, success and failure, pride and disappointment. The deep satisfaction of witnessing the fine spiritual growth in the lives of many individuals is a joy forever.

Richmond is so vast and diversified. Can we forget St. Luke's Hospital, where our children were brought safely into this amazing sphere of God's universe, or the Confederate grounds where they played and watched the squirrels, or the Museum of Fine Arts where we viewed many of the world's masterpieces, or The Mosque where we heard celebrated artists?

The Sun has been edited (now someone may question this, so let us say that a bit of copy has been prepared at rather frequent intervals since July, 1940) literally at all hours of the day and night. Editorial work does take time, somebody's time. Some of it has been deducted from church time, some from family time, some from sleep time.

What is the outlook for our Church in Richmond? To be sure, the outlook for any church depends upon the life of the city or community in which it is located. Therefore the question: What is the outlook for Richmond? There is a population of approximately 300,000 in the metropolitan area with an average increase of 6,000 a year since 1940. Since 1940, about 18,000 new dwellings have been started or completed. Since the war alone, 2,000,000 square feet have been added in new industrial and commercial buildings in Richmond. Since 1940 wholesale business has increased 197%, volume of trade 200%, individual income 160% and construction 289%. In 1948 nearly $6 billion in checks were cashed in Richmond banks: three times the pre-war amount. Balanced economy with employment widely diversified and strong consumer goods industries result in unusual economic stability and resistance to fluctuations in the na-

Although it is easy for the lone church of a denomination to be isolated and submerged in such a metropolis, our church has made steady and substantial gains. It paid $867.55 this year on Conference apportionments and the total raised during the year was $10,616.85. Here members from former Congregational and Christian churches work side by side. The faith of those who invested here has been justified. The future is bright with promise. The assured coming of Dr. Helfenstein will open a new and greater chapter in the life of the church.

Forward Through the Ages

Extracts from an Address by DR. DAVID McKEITH, JR., on the Occasion of His Installation as Executive Vice-President of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, October 19, at Minneapolis

"We have been told repeatedly during these past years that we have reached the end of an era. We recognize the truth of this statement. Great changes have taken place in many areas of life. Certainly it can be said that we have reached the end of an era in which we have referred to as 'foreign missions.' We can speak of 'older churches and younger churches,' of 'unchurched areas' and 'unreached people,' but we no longer refer to 'heathen countries,' 'mission lands' or 'pagan peoples.'"

"The day of foreign missions in the sense of one wealthy, so-called Christian nation sending missionaries to other less fortunate lands to convert the heathen is passed. Not that all people have been converted and the Kingdom of God is at hand, but that we recognize the changes which have taken place in the world—changes in psychology, in economic life, in educational development, and in government.

"We can say that we have reached the end of an era, or, with a forward look we can recognize that we are all witnesses of the dawn of a new day. Let us not pass by the old too quickly, however, in our eagerness to move forward. We could not hope to build a more Christian world were we not sure of the Foundations which have been laid.

"For almost a century and a half pioneer Christian souls, compelled by an inner spirit, have gone to other lands preaching the gospel, healing the sick and enlightening the minds of youth. Many of them have been martyrs to their faith; all of them have been good servants of God.

"Read the record of the work the world around and you will find that the foundations have been exceptionally well laid by these folks. Our

MR. McKEITH.

American Board representatives have wielded tremendous power for good in all lands where they have gone. They have lifted the standards of people and set them on their way toward freedom of body, mind and soul. When, years from now, in proper perspective the history of these past one hundred and forty years is written, it will be acknowledged that the greatest single influence which caused the transition through which we are passing today, the end of one era and the beginning of another, was not scientific discoveries alone, not even economic advice, but it was the Christian missionaries. It has been the Christian missionaries who have opened the minds and hearts of people, yea, and opened countries, and we pray God they opened them to good and not to ill.

"You will find in many of our mission areas, institutions not affiliated with any mission board, independent institutions which get their support directly from people in this country, as well as from the nations, but in most instances they were founded by our Christian missionaries. In spite of many difficulties through the years, the American Board missionaries have pioneered in medical work, in social service, in education, in evangelism and in every land today where there are American Board missionaries, you will find a solid foundation for future work and doors open unto us."

Characterizing the American Board as the Foreign Department of the Congregation Christian Churches, Dr. McKeith reminded his audience that the Board closed its fiscal year on August 31 with a deficit of $110,000. It faces the problem of absorbing that deficit by either cutting its new budget or finding ways of getting new revenue for the international work in which there is a twin problem of inflation and the rising costs of living.

One solution suggested was the grouping of all American Board schools into one organization called the Association of International Schools and then setting it free to raise its own funds. Dr. McKeith pointed out that there would be great danger that many of these schools would drift away from close contact with Christian missions. "Personally I do not believe that this is an adequate solution for we must keep the close tie between education and the church in other lands," he said, adding, "To lose our schools would be tragedy."

Another solution suggested was dropping completely all service to one field, or withdrawing entirely, for example, from the Philippine Islands or from South India, or West Africa, or the Near East.

"Certainly a further decrease in all missions on an equal basis is impossible. Any such cuts across the board in all missions would have crippling effect upon all our work, and yet we know that any such drastic action as dropping one field would have serious repercussions here at home as well as abroad. You cannot say that you are just going to drop Massachusetts, or California, or Minnesota out of the financial picture of our Congregational life. Also, you cannot drop any one of these fields—and yet some such action may be necessary in spite of the fact that it would be drastic."

Will Communism Revitalize Christianity

By REV. RALPH R. SHRADER.

"Communism as a world movement thrives where people are cold, hungry, frustrated, oppressed and crushed by a sense of injustice and hopelessness. It is challenging the world with ideas which are basically atheistic, materialistic, totalitarian, and militaristic. At the same time it promises economic security, racial equality, freedom from religious control, and national independence," said Rev. Ralph R. Shrader of Boston, Massachusetts, speaking Tuesday, October 18, on "Will Communism Revitalize Christianity?" before the joint sessions of the 140th Annual Meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions and the 22nd Annual Meeting of the Midwest Regional Congregational Christian Churches convening at Plymouth Church, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

"Communism also flourishes among people who are seeking racial equality, national independence, freedom from authoritative religion and a difficult economic order. It promises much to suffering millions who look to it as a way out of their distress.

"Communism is basically a faith—a faith which demands the loyalty, devotion and sacrifice which belongs to God alone. But it is more than a faith. It is a set of ideas, an organization, a movement supported by the political machinery and the military power of one of the most powerful nations in the world.

"Because of the loyalty and sacrificial service of many of its followers, and because of its appeal to hundreds of millions of oppressed, poverty-stricken people—many of them colored and citizens of countries which have been discriminated against and often exploited by white, western nations for decades, or even centuries—Communism may revitalize Christianity and cause its practice to coincide more nearly with its teachings.

"Except in those countries where it is suppressed by military force—probably only temporarily—it is most active and makes its greatest appeal where the Renaissance, the Reformation, and the Industrial Revolution have not yet broken the bonds of medievalism as they have in Northern Europe, Great Britain, and the United States.

"From the minister in the smallest rural church to the scholars in the largest ecumenical conferences, Christians are already re-thinking and restating their basic beliefs in God, Jesus, the Bible, and the nature and proper actions of the churches.

"In addition, Christians are being stimulated to move beyond relief of suffering to a more basic examination of the social message of their religion in order to give constructive leadership in the world-wide struggle for social justice in the areas of race, economics and international relations. From social justice—most difficult to attain—Christians would proceed to human brotherhood. It might well be stated that only as the feeling of brotherhood is promoted will justice be sought and practiced.

"It is my conviction that the best way to undermine the world-wide movement toward Communism is to have a sounder faith and a better course of action than the Communists have. The early Christians outlived, and when necessary outdid the pagans of their day. Christians of today, at their best, have the qualities and capacities of the early Christians.

"The Reformation in religion, the Renaissance in the search for truth, and the Industrial Revolution must above all be furthered in those countries where people are still living under feudal or semi-feudal conditions. In addition, new and more effective efforts must be made to secure racial equality which is in keeping with our democratic principles, and to give leadership to the nations which are seeking their national independence as this nation sought its freedom in 1776.

"The responsibility for these and other changes rests squarely on the shoulders of religious groups which believe in and practice the freedom gained in the Western world during the last four hundred years. Neither military power—with atomic and biological methods of destruction—nor totalitarian religion has the ability to meet the ideas of Communism and the promises which it makes to people who are now seeking, however, mistaken the methods, many of the rights and privileges which our forefathers won at a great price in previous generations.

"The united program of advance as proposed by the Foreign Missions Conference and cooperated in by our Congregational Christian Churches, provides a concrete method whereby people who believe in the ideals of democracy, freedom and international good will can actively promote these goals. Schools and the search for truth will promote the Renaissance; democratic religion dedicated to the search for religious truth and experience without authoritarian control will promote the Reformation; and a wise program of relief combined with a positive approach to economic production and social legislation will further the Industrial Revolution on the highest basis.

"Having encouraged the people of the world to believe that they truly are human beings, and having given them a vision of what they might become, this is no time for Protestant Christians to turn the clock back to medieval days, or to turn away from their responsibility to lead the nations forward in keeping with the democratic principles which we believe in, and which at our best we practice. Surely this is a time to give leadership, to go forward, to help change the world which has produced two World Wars in one generation, which piles atomic bombs on atomic bombs, which takes your sons and sends them to drop these bombs on defenseless mothers and children in other lands. God send us prophets! Christ return through Thy ministers and the laymen and women who profess Thy name."

As is true with most other institutions, it takes more money for the normal operations of the college than ever before in its history. The needs for the college and the type of instruction that it gives were never greater. Our efforts and contributions in its behalf must be increasingly greater if our college is to be properly supported. We are still very far behind in receipts for the current conference year. I know that our churches will bear these facts in mind as they approach the close of their church year.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

DR. SMITH'S BIRTHDAY.

On Monday evening, October 24, at ten o'clock, the Elon College choir paid a surprise visit at the home of Dr. and Mrs. L. E. Smith, this being the eve of Dr. Smith's birthday. The choir quietly assembled in the reception rooms and with the singing of "Behold a Host," by Grieg, made its presence known to Dr. Smith, who had already gone upstairs to his room.

The "guest-in-his-own-home," obviously taken by surprise, soon put in

DUKE'S NEW PRESIDENT.

Dr. Arthur Hollis Edens was inaugurated on Saturday, October 22, as the third president of Duke University. Dr. Edens comes to his new duties with a back ground of training and administrative experience that fits in admirably for this important position. He came to Duke University directly from the General Education Board in New York. By personality, at least, he connects two great institutions vitally interested in the his appearance and gave the group a cordial welcome. He was then invited into his own dining room, where refreshments had been prepared.

Warren Johnson, president of the choir, assisted Dr. Smith in cutting the three-tiered birthday cake which the choir ordered for him. Miss Ann Truitt and Mrs. Dorothy Jones Parker poured coffee and Misses Elizabeth Hoffman, Martha Veazey and Barbara Bailey assisted Mrs. Smith and Miss Hazel Walker in serving ice cream and cake.

Group singing was led by a male quartet composed of Jimmy Rhodes, David Chandler, Nash Parker, and Graham Womack. Charles Lynam and Jane Upchurch were the soloists.

Also present in addition to the choir were Mrs. Sadie Liles, dean of women, and Miss Virginia Groomes, John Westmoreland and Fletcher Moore of the music faculty.

problems of education in this country. The General Education Board was formed for the purpose of advancing education in the graduate and post-graduate fields. It has dedicated its vast resources to this worthy undertaking. Many of our larger institutions have been encouraged by timely grants in specific as well as in general fields.

Trinity College became Duke University when the late James B. Duke dedicated the larger part of his fortune to the cause of Christian Education through Trinity College. Duke University, though a comparatively young institution, as such, has quickly become one of the strongest institutions of higher learning in the South and among the stronger institutions in the nation. It is privately endowed and privately supported, consequently, is free to form its curriculum and ALAMANCE COUNTY AND ELON COLLEGE.

Let me be one to request the prayers of the people who make up the personnel of the Southern Convention for a campaign which is now being conducted in Alamance County for Elon. No one knows I am writing this request but I have taken it upon myself, being inspired by the good work which is going on here to raise the $100,000.00 with which to complete the needed $225,000.00 required for the completion of the new gymnasium. Dr. Smith, Jimmy Darden and Dr. Brown are right out in the forefront of this most interesting and most worthy campaign. Scores of others besides the student body are putting real effort into the canvass being made. The gymnasium is bigger—much bigger—than you can feature it in your mind. It is a work of inspired cooperation and leadership. It will cost much less than would ordinarily be allowed for a building of such gigantic proportions and construction. It is a building for today and tomorrow fully commensurate with present and future needs. We shall all be plenty proud of it. Pray now that the funds will be raised, that the bond between Alamance and Elon may be blessed in keeping with the worthiness of the College and the blessing of the County, and that our whole Convention may bow our heads in gratitude for this good success.

JOHN G. TRUITT, Pres.,
The Southern Convention.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

It is the plan of the Convention to have information concerning the college given to the church congregations and Sunday schools at least four times a year. If the pastors of our churches and superintendents of our Sunday schools would keep our churches informed concerning the college as to its equipment, curriculum, faculty, students, and needs, they would have no serious difficulty in raising the college's apportionments. The lack of information has defeated the church's program more often than we would like to think. The ones in charge are looked to for information and guidance. The average Sunday school will follow the instructions of its superintendent and teachers. The average church is always happy to cooperate with the pastor in his plans for the work of the church locally and its program for the institutions and causes of the denomination. The needs of the college are always before us.

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

NO. 5— AFTER LIBERATION.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
May 26, 1949.

DEAR FRIENDS:

You will see by the above date that we have been "liberated" almost a week. I shall describe to you the situation as it affects us in as factual a way as possible. Whether or not this letter will be permitted to go through I do not know. But, here are the facts.

The day after writing you last, Col. (Citizen) Wang moved from our house as he had promised. He said when they moved in they expected to only stay a few days, but now that they were staying longer, he did not want to bother us further.

That afternoon the other officers and I had a good old fashioned "bull session." I asked them what their aims and methods of reforms were. "How will you effect your reforms," I asked them. "How will they affect the farmer, the small business man, the rich man, the professional worker?"

For two full hours I listened and asked questions. I learned a great deal. Let me tell you first, I admire their fervor and their idealism. They are the most idealistic group of people I have met in China. Whether or not they will carry through, I do not know, but they do not lack a program. They want their society, like their army, to be democratic and on the basis of complete equality. Their officers and men all get the same pay (about 50 cents U. S. per month) plus maintenance.

"Our principal aim," they said, "is to raise the living standards of our people. We want everyone to have enough to eat, wear and a good house to live in. To do that, everyone—male and female, old and young—must work. There are too many idle people in our country. We aim to raise the educational standards. We want to industrialize China—build roads, motor roads and factories. We will encourage small business men and small manufacturers even to the extent of giving them financial help. We will not appropriate their property. But, we shall expect them to seek the good of all China, not simply their own personal good. We want to build dams and electric power plants. We wish to encourage cooperatives and to improve agricultural production. We aim to have every farmer work his own personal good. We want to build landlordism and tenantry."

"The present rulers," they continued, "while once interested in the welfare of the people, now have become only concerned in enriching themselves at public expense. They have robbed the Chinese people and invested their ill-gotten gains abroad, mostly in America."

After describing to me the kind of a country they wanted, I told them, "Your aims are similar to what already has been achieved in my own country. But I have one question to ask you: Formerly the Kuomintang had high ideals and aims. They sought to help the people. Now they have degenerated. What makes you think you also, after you have come into power, will not follow their pattern and turn from helping the people to helping yourselves?"

"Oh, we couldn't do that," they told me, "not the Communists."

"We have ideals and a goal. For that reason we can outfight the Nationalists. They have no heart for fighting."

I readily admitted that these seem to be the facts of the case.

"Many of your ideals," I told them, "are also the ideals of our church. We also believe in education. Therefore, many years ago, our early missionaries established the first school in North Fukien. We still carry on our hospital. It is the only one in North Fukien which can be called well equipped and staffed by a trained physician. For years agricultural work has been carried on and we can show you the results today in dairy cattle, fruit farming and seed selection."

"We very much approve of work of that kind," they told me.

Supper time came too soon. There were many more questions I wanted to ask and there were many more they wanted to ask me about our work and about our native land. I could sense the former feeling of resentment against us Americans who had sent the Nationalists arms to fight them breaking down and a feeling of understanding and good will beginning to take its place. The soldiers outside our compound continue to give us belligerent looks, but those we have come to know are friendly.

Yesterday an incident occurred which may be a portent of the future. Dr. Ed Riggs started to leave town on his bicycle with some medicines for his home in Ershihtu. He was stopped on the edge of town and ordered back. When he went to see the new municipal authorities, he was told that they were too busy to see him. It was his first wedding anniversary and he was mighty unhappy, but there was nothing that could be done.

Today I went to see our new friend, Citizen Wang, for help. I explained the situation to him. In a few minutes, after a brief phone message, permission was obtained. Ed is now on his way home and to his newly opened rural medical center.

I predict that for a short period of time, we Americans living in China will be objects of criticism. We shall probably be restricted from travel and freedom of movement. But, I also have the feeling which is reaffirmed by our experience of the past few days, that when the new authorities discover what our aims are; and when they see that we are sincere in our efforts to help their people, there will develop not only a more tolerant attitude toward us personally, but perhaps a real spirit of cooperation. If the Chinese Communists can realize their ideals, they will greatly improve the material welfare of the Chinese people.

We, in the church, fully approve of these aims. Then we go one step further. We seek the spiritual welfare of the people. For we believe that the flame of idealism can be kept aglow within us only when the breath of the spirit of God blows upon it. Unless our souls are nourished by the Divine, disappointment and failure eventually will cause despair and cynicism and selfishness to replace the spirit of service and self-sacrifice.

It is fortunate that Communists and Christians have many aims in common. I even dare hope that we may mutually influence each other for the greater benefit of the Chinese people.

Cordially,
DICK JACKSON.

NOTE: We have recently received two additional letters from Dick Jackson. They were well and were "carrying on" when the letters were written. The last one was dated August 27.—Mg. Ed,

A list of Friendly Service Gifts to send this year will appear in next week's issue, along with addresses and names to send the gifts to.

EASTERN VIRGINIA WOMEN MEET AT NORFOLK.

The fall meeting of the women of Eastern Virginia was held at the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Virginia. There were 327 present in addition to the visitors. Oft times the women speak of visiting speakers saying, "Good, but we have those among us who are also capable of speaking." This time we had our own speakers. It was fitting that Baxter Twiddy should return to his home church to report on his European travels. It was good to have Timothy Chang, our adopted son, speak so forcibly on Christian Education in China and then tell of his beloved Han Mei School for which the Thank Offering has been designated. We rejoiced in having Pattie Lee Coghill share her literature knowledge with us, in addition to our own number who participated.

In an atmosphere of beauty and reverence, the services moved along. The sessions ended on time, the ladies of the Temple were gracious and served a delicious luncheon. The reports were mimeographed for the first time and the majority of the superintendents gave an inspirational talk instead of reading their reports. Mrs. Roy Brinkley conducted, with a spirit of love and devotion, a lovely memorial service.

The president was probably illegally in the chair as she had been elected to the Board of the North Carolina Women two days previous. At any rate, the proceedings of the day shall be recorded.

Officers elected are as follows:

President—Mrs. William T. Harrell, Suffolk, Va., R.F.D. 1.

First Vice-President and Chairman of Friendly Service—Mrs. R. T. Bradford, Suffolk, Va., R.F.D. 2.

Second Vice-President—Mrs. Ray Gorden, 218 Grace St., Suffolk, Va.
Secretary—Mrs. L. W. Stagg, 400 W. 34th St., Norfolk, Va.

Treasurer—Mrs. W. B. Williams, 1253 24th St., Newport News, Va.

Superintendents were elected as follows:

Spiritual Life—Mrs. J. H. Duling, 1218 20th St., Newport News, Va.

Life Membership & Memorials—Mrs. Roy Brinkley, Suffolk, Va., R.F.D. 2.

Literature—Mrs. W. V. Leathers, 512 Washington St., Suffolk, Va.

THE HOUSE FAMILY

The House Family is moving. For nearly ten years we have lived at 3206 Grove Avenue, the big, ten-room parsonage of the Richmond Church. First there were two of us and after four years there were three and now we are five. Jonathan is standing by me, Joyanna is in her dady's lap and Andrea Lee is on the other side. We had our pictures made for the people of our church and some friends and acquaintances asked us please to put it in THE SUN, so here we are. This picture was made by John Holland of Newport News, Va., and his mother is Andrea Lee's godmother.

For several weeks we have been packing and discarding, receiving and giving away articles. The days I spent in the attic were full of fun and misery. The roof is so slashing that one has to stand upright between the beams and occasionally I forgot—then the misery! The fun came from discovering long lost objects, reading old letters and finding some childhood toys. A day in the attic is always interesting.

We hate to leave our friends and neighbors in Richmond, but we are looking forward to new ones in Southern Pines. I am Virginia-born and bred and now I'll try being a North Carolinian. We are moving into the parsonage of the Church of Wide Fellowship. It isn't as big as our home here but we have lots more room outside. More trees, too! We leave our plum and elm for pines, magnolias and a lovely holly tree that should be just right for our Christmas.

When you read this we shall probably be unpacking our dishes and placing our furniture. What a pleasure to be a minister's family and be able to live in many places and have friends in many places. Parsonage life is fun, too. Before us at Southern Pines were the Humphries with their bright-eyed daughter, Susie. When Dr. and Mrs. Helfenstein come to the Richmond they will bring their almost grown daughter, Janice. Best wishes to them as they live in our house.

If you have an article, story, letter or poem for this page, please address it to Southern Pines, North Carolina.

DADS ARE IMPORTANT, TOO!

By HELEN GREGG GREEN.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

In most homes until recently, the chief responsibility for the physical, mental and spiritual development of the children has rested upon the mother, while providing food, clothing, and shelter has been Dad's problem. But attitudes regarding parenthood have changed. Present-day parents realize that a child's character growth is more vigorous under the direction of what someone has called the "Unified Firm of Dad and Mother, Incorporated." Both parents' lives, too, are enriched when together they share their sons' and daughters' lives from the beginning.

Fathers, who in the past usually paid little attention to their youngsters—after babyhood—until they were companionable age, missed a lot of worthwhile fun. They discovered too late that they could not suddenly develop a happy, satisfying comradeship with adolescent sons and daughters. Frequently they lost out completely, and Dad was to the children like a stranger—to the tragic loss of both children and father.

Today's understanding father realizes that there should be occasionally an opportunity, free from the restraining presence of the rest of the family, when son or daughter may discuss with him things close to childish hearts. Together they find such occasions and these prove to be to them, the means for building rewarding father-child relationships.

One young father in our neighborhood takes frequent hikes with his son. While these seem casual, they were actually planned when brown-eyed Jerry was small, and have been faithfully continued. "As we walk, 'Skipper' asks questions and we discuss the week's personal happenings as what is going on in the world," he said. "Gradually we acquire new capacities for friendship, understanding and learning."

Through the channels of conversation, young thinkers may be taught the true values in life. Fathers, as well as mothers, ought to learn to be good listeners. A child needs to build his experiences into a meaningful whole. To do this Dad should play a leading part, since it is important to have a masculine as well as a feminine pattern to follow. He can do much to stimulate new interests, for usually he has outside contacts wider than Mother's. And Mother's tendency toward over-protectiveness is balanced by Dad's inclination to direct children toward activities involving some risk.

A wise father avoids being the know-it-all type of parent. He encourages all progress, both mental and physical, especially the right of his children to think for themselves. At all times must your child feel Dad will understand him when he is in

ANN TRUITT, Editor; HELEN JACKSON, C. B. TWIDDY, Associates.

WHY YOUNG PEOPLE DRINK.

By PATSY ANN NORWOOD.

Seventeen-Year-Old Scottsburg (Va.) High School Student.

There's an Oriental proverb that goes: "The longest journey begins with a single step." Often a boy or girl wrecks his whole future by one single step toward destruction. That is what I want to discuss with you. What is alcohol doing to youth? What is the solution to the problem? Where does the road to alcoholism begin?

The first step is often taken at some social occasion where alcoholic drink is taken for granted. Youth is there and drink is there. The first drink is taken under that friendly social pressure. Custom provides the liquor, while comradeship seems to require its acceptance. A habit begins; the first step on the journey is taken.

Bishop W. W. Peele has said: "This evil has gone so far in its cunning efforts to capture the American mind that in many groups the right to not drink is being practically denied as socially improper or discourteous."

This is one of the reasons why more young people are drinking today than ever before. In fact, 70 per cent of the alcoholics in the United States began drinking in their teens.

Another reason for youth's drinking lies in the propaganda efforts of the brewers to sell young people. In fact, the head of the Brewers' Industries said last year: "Every graduating class in America must be sold and kept sold." Advertising, with its glamorous portraits of "Men of Distinction," often influences young people to drink. These ads are written in such a scheming, subtle way as to get false ideas over to the reader. For example, the liquor dealers don't say, "This whisky will make you a man of distinction." They do, however, paint a picture of a distinguished looking man along with the "Man of Distinction" slogan. Thus, when the youth sees the ad, he concludes that the whisky and distinction go together just as the advertiser wishes him to.

In this campaign to win new drinkers and to keep the old ones drinking, the ads will continue to tell their false stories of social grace, distinction, and even wholesome living. The youth who has been misled by these liquor ads may discover too late this truth found in the Bible: "Treasures of wickedness profit nothing, but righteousness delivereth from death."

A third reason why young people drink is the desire for a "thrill," to appear "smart" and sophisticated. Ignorance, thoughtlessness and sometimes a dare have led to the first drink. Many an alcoholic has begun the long journey downward into a drinking career in this manner. A point often forgotten by parents is the susceptibility of young minds to anything promising adventure or enjoyment.—The Union Signal.

OVERSEAS WORKER PROJECT.

For the facing of this hours we need the cooperation and support of every young person in our Southern Convention. Through our efforts and the utilization of our resources we can provide a rich experience for someone.

This coming summer we shall try to send some young person to a Work Camp abroad. For this we shall need to raise $600.00. Can we do it? Of course we can! The only way we can achieve this goal is for every single person to contribute his or her time and money. We can never reach our goal by the work of only a few persons, but every single youth in our Southern Convention must voluntarily enlist his or her services.

Not only will this be a thrilling and enriching experience for whomever we send, but each one of us can profit directly. Think what a wonderful feeling of pride we may have in knowing that we have had a part in this great venture!

It is always difficult to strive toward a goal that we, ourselves, do not understand. But this, our goal, is something very concrete, and is one that is definitely achievable. There is no doubt in my mind whatever that we shall reach this goal; because I firmly believe that every one of the youth of our Southern Convention can be depended upon.

So let's get to work and try to break a record in raising the money. The individual Pilgrim Fellowship groups can have rallies and sponsor programs, contribute freely; and before long we shall have gone over the top!

If you have any good suggestions pass them on to your fellow P. F.'ers. Let's put as much vim and vigor in this Project as we can muster!

As time goes on let me know how you are doing, and how much progress you are making. I shall be waiting, and I am sure—not for long!

conduct its courses of education without political interference or hindrance from any source. Such institutions are badly needed in the present juncture of our national life and world affairs.

The inaugural ceremonies took place on an ideal day in ideal settings. The exercises were conducted in the Quadrangle with the beautiful chapel in the rear and Mr. Duke's statue in the front. Many thousands of people gathered for this important ceremony. Governor Kerr Scott spoke representing the State of North Carolina. There were also speakers representing the Board of Trustees, the alumni, faculty and students. Dr. Eden dealt with the problems confronting education today, not only in our country but in our world. In the course of his remarks, he warned his audience of the purpose and danger of present-day communism. He declared, "I have no hesitancy in saying as far as I am concerned a member of the Communist Party does not belong in the company of teachers who believe in moral and spiritual values and are devoted to the search of truth. The record is clear. I think that the Communist Party is the agency of a foreign power, which stands for a way of life which enslaves the minds and bodies of men. It requires its members to abandon ethical principles and substitutes for them blind obedience to the authority of the party. This party has never even suggested that there will be the slightest pretense at allowing academic freedom in any country in which it comes to power. . . . It has no respect of integrity of mind. It sets up a dictatorship which kills men's will and freedom of action. It has become a religion for those who have no religion." He bade the people watch with caution the increasing trend toward federal support of higher education and research. He declared that we should guard our heritage of freedom of education as zealously as we guard freedom of religion.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

THE SUFFERING SERVANT.

LESSON VII—NOVEMBER 13, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Surely he hath borne griefs and carried our sorrows.—Isaiah 53:4.

LESSON: Isaiah 42:1-4; 50:4-9; 52:13-53:12; Jeremiah 38:1-13.

DEVOTIONAL READING: I Peter 2:19-25.

The Suffering Servant in Prophecy.

The Scriptures for today's lesson refer to "the servant of the Lord" and are among the most exalted Scriptures in the Old Testament, and among some of the greatest in the Bible. They are predictions, and descriptions of this "servant of the Lord" and his mission. What was the conception of this servant of the Lord in the mind of the prophet? Ah, that's the question, the big question.

In answer to that question many interpretations have been given. For instance there are those who say that Israel as a whole, the whole nation, was the servant of the Lord, and of course that is true if the general idea of a servant as one who is to carry out the will, to do the work, to represent the interests of another, is meant. Surely this was the mission of Israel as a nation, they were chosen for just that purpose.

There are others who say that it was not the whole of Israel, but only a part of the nation, the best part of the nation, that was in the mind of the prophet. There were many in the nation who had no conception of the high mission and destiny of Israel, and who were not instruments in fulfilling the divine purpose. But there was a minority, the core of the nation, men of moral and spiritual insight, who had seen the vision and who were true to the heavenly vision.

Again there were those who say that it was Israel in Exile which was in the mind of the prophet, or according to some, the exiles who remained loyal to Jehovah while in Exile, the remnant as it were, who were to fulfil the divine mission, and who were the servant of Jehovah.

Due to the fact that these prophecies as recorded in today's lesson become more and more personal, there are those who insist that it was not the nation or even a part of the nation, but an individual, which the prophet was describing. It was some prophet, some one who should come, indeed the promised Messiah, about whom Isaiah was speaking.

In preparation for these Notes the writer read many, many pages from the splendid commentary by George Adam Smith. In a clear and stirring way, Dr. Smith shows how the passages in question seem to unfold according to the process stated above. First, the whole nation in its national capacity; then the servant as something less than the actual nation—the better portion of Israel; then a personification of this true Israel, a personification and not yet a person. In chapter 50 it is more difficult to distinguish the servant from an actual person. And the sublime passages of Isaiah 52:13-53:12 portray the servant plainly as an individual.

The Suffering Servant's Experiences.

In the language of his day the prophet dramatically presents the experiences of this servant of Jehovah. He speaks first of his vicarious suffering. At first, as is usually the case with folks, they looked askance at this suffering, thinking it contemptible, and seeking a moral reason for it, they account it as penal, something due the servant for his own sins. Then they realized that the suffering was vicarious, that it was for them that he was suffering, and this fact gave it a redemptive power, it became a means for their healing and peace.

Next the prophet tells of the sorrow and the death of this suffering servant of Jehovah. Unlike other men who suffered, this servant was silent, and did not like other men break forth into one of two voices—a confession of sin and guilt, or a cry of doubt.

And finally the prophet shows the triumph and the glory of the servant of Jehovah (Verses 10-12). It was the will of God that he should suffer. But he would see the travail of his soul and be satisfied. When the great purpose of his suffering and death is realized, the servant will be content. And he will be exalted. He will take his place among the great and the strong and the victorious. And this exaltation is both the result and the reward of his unmerited sufferings. This passage does not give a philosophy of vicarious suffering, as Dr. Hough says, but is the deepest expression in literature of the need of such suffering.

The Prophecy of the Suffering Servant Fulfilled.

None but the most prejudiced has denied that this prophecy was fulfilled in one Person, Jesus Christ of Nazareth. This does not mean that the great Isaiah Fifty-Third Chapter is to be misread to make it fit every detail of the life and work of Jesus Christ. But the disciples and the apostles felt sure that their Lord was the Messiah, and that his Messiahship found its highest fulfilment in his sufferings which were vicarious and redemptive. A careful reading of the preaching of Peter and of the other apostles, and a reading of Paul's letters show how deeply the idea of Christ suffering for the sins of the world, and how through these sufferings mankind was redeemed and given healing and peace.

As the writer of these Notes started to read the Scripture for today he thought instinctively of that gripping story as recorded in Acts 8 of Philip and the Ethiopian. It will be recalled that as Philip drew near to the Ethiopian's chariot the man was reading from the book or the roll of Isaiah. And the passage which he was reading was this self-same passage, Isaiah 53. "The place of the Scripture which he read was this, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth; in his humiliation his judgment was taken away; and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth." It was strange reading to this Gentile, perhaps a proselyte to the Jewish faith, and he asked Philip "Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?" "And Philip opened his mouth and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus." That is more than an isolated case. That is a statement of the central theme of apostolic preaching, Christ dying for our sins, and being raised again from the dead.

Sunday school teachers will do well to emphasize the place of vicarious suffering in life, suffering voluntarily borne or taken upon oneself, suffering for the sake of others, suffering that has redemptive power. Like the scarlet thread that runs through all the rope used by the British Navy, vicarious suffering runs through all of God's redemptive plans and purpose. Only as we become partakers of His suffering can we become partakers of His glory.

THANK OFFERING SERVICE FOR WOMEN'S SOCIETIES.

SUNDAY, NOVEMBER 6.

(Worship Center: A table covered with a white cloth, open Bible in center, Cross on one side, candles on the other.)

PRELUDE (Women enter quietly).

LEADER (Speaking from the rear of the room): "Almighty God, from whom cometh every good and perfect gift, and who pourest out upon all who desire it the spirit of grace and supplication, deliver us, when we draw nigh unto Thee, from coldness of heart and wanderings of mind; that with steadfast thoughts and kindled affections we may worship Thee in spirit and in truth; through Jesus Christ our Lord (an instrumental Amen)."

LEADER: Matthew 25:31-46 (still from rear of room).

SOLO: "Lord, Speak To Me That I May Speak."

(Leader goes down central aisle and before the altar turns and faces the company.)

LEADER: "I went one day at harvest time to the temple of God. It was right and proper that I, an American woman, blessed by providence, surrounded by all that is fair and good, should give thanks unto God. But as I knelt and prayed, it seemed there came disquieting answers, and I feared when I was through that God had not heard me at all. For thus I knelt and thus I prayed, and thus my own soul gave answer. (She kneels and prays): O God, my gracious Father, in this season of the harvest when the fruit of the field has been gathered in, I thank Thee for food and shelter."

VOICE: "Yes, but on the steppes of the Andes, in the villages of India, amid the tortured homes of China, in the ruins of Berlin and Warsaw millions of thy brothers and sisters and little children lie down hungry without shelter this very night. Darest thou give thanks for thy food and shelter?"

LEADER: "O God our Father in Heaven, I thank Thee for my home, for I am surrounded by the love of my family. My children's laughter and my husband's praise are my daily bread."

VOICE: "How many women wish they, too, might make that same prayer whose homes are only a torturing memory and who look forward to not the slightest hope that they may ever know this sacred joy and right."

LEADER: "I thank Thee, God, for health of body and mind."

VOICE: "Health of body and mind? What health have they who have gone through year on year of starvation diet, their bodies wracked by unhindered epidemic, crazed by fear and hate and loneliness. Dare you thank God for health?"

LEADER: "I thank Thee, God, for beauty."

VOICE: "Their places of worship are in ruins, parks are stripped bare, and homes are dirty and marred and unkempt."

LEADER: "For faith in Thee, in myself and in humanity."

VOICE: "Often they have no faith at all. Their tragic life leaves only room for doubt and fear and hate."

LEADER (Rises wearily and turns around): "I could not pray. I rose and left the place of prayer. And sore of heart, ashamed and sorry, I put my hands to works of mercy and healing. It wasn't much that I could do, but that I did. I could not send my abundance and my home abroad, But I could send a food package and contribute clothing and money for relief and reconstruction and I could send medicine to the sick. I could help our pastors abroad bring to others a little of the security I find in my home and church. I could write letters. And through the outreach of the church in Our Christian World Mission, I could revive a little, a man's lost faith."

"Later then transformed in spirit, having made the woes of the world my own, and having heard the overtones of fulfilled desires, I returned to the house of God, and before His great white altar, I knelt before Him again and prayed. (Kneels and prays at the altar): O God, the Father of our Lord who gave up home and friends and beauty, and tested his faith to share the woes of men in their unfinished world, I thank Thee that the doors are still open and that I may dedicate myself to the great unfinished work of Christ."

VOICE: "Yea, now thou prayest well, and now may God the Father, God the Son, God the Holy Spirit bless you and keep you and make his face to shine upon you, now and evermore. Amen."

LEADER (Rising and facing the company): "May the benediction be yours, too, as you bring before the altar of God your gifts of love, and the desire to share your bounty and your life in the great unfinished work." (Lays her Thank Offering gift on the altar and takes her seat in the audience.)

THANK OFFERING MEDITATION (By a woman other than the leader).

(Close thoughts with the following poem by Grace Noll Crowell):

Because I have been given much,
I, too, must give:
Because of thy great bounty, Lord,
Each day I live.
I shall divide my gifts from Thee
With every brother that I see
Who has the need of help from me.

Because love has been lavished so upon me, Lord
A wealth, I know, was not meant;
For me to hoard,
I shall give love to those in need,
Shall show that love by word and deed
Thus shall my thanks be thanks indeed.

"Will you join with me in placing your gift on the altar." (Let all those in the audience who desire to do so place their Thank Offering on the altar.)

PRAYER OF DEDICATION (By pastor, leader, or other designated person): "Dear Lord, we humbly bring our gifts as expression of our thanks to Thee for all our many blessings. Too often we leave our thanks unexpressed, and for this lack, we ask Thy forgiveness. We implore Thy blessings upon the boys and girls, men and women whose lives will be touched by the deeds which will be done through the Han Mei School. Grant fortitude, patience, and understanding to those who are the teachers and leaders in the school. We thank Thee for the Shaowu Mission and for those who are giving so much of themselves in its work. We pray Thy blessings on those who minister in so many ways there, whether in teaching, preaching, healing or other means of witnessing. May our gifts supply both spiritual and material aid to them. We ask these things for Christ's sake and His dear name. Amen."

HYMN: "We Thank Thee Lord, Our Paths of Service Lead."

BENEDICTION (People leave quietly while the organist plays soft music).

NOTE: The Thank Offering Meditation was sent out to all local presidents along with a copy of this service, and was not repeated here because of its length.

It is preferable to hold the Thank Offering Service on Sunday evening, November 6, but it may be held on another date and at another time if it is more suitable to the group involved.

The Orphanage

DEAR ORPHANS' FRIENDS:

In a very much-valued letter from Supt. Joseph B. Johnston, for 27 years at the head of the Presbyterian Orphans' Home, Barium Springs, N. C., he says: "I hope to see much of you and your work as the years go by. There are some things in which your orphanage excels all others, and I believe it is due to the splendid character and leadership of Charlie Johnston. I am glad we have the same name, and I wish we had been kin." Writing in another place he said of our boys and girls after telling of visits to many orphanages: "They led all other institutions in their courtesy, politeness, and what we classify as good manners."

This is a comparaively small and very homelike orphanage. Every child is an individual, loved, honored, respected person. They are taught the best manners, with cleanliness of body, mind and spirit, and they respond to their teaching and their care. We want our own Congregational Christian Church orphans, since that is the kind of orphanage we are. True there are some others, but that, too, is the spirit of our broad and liberal church. There are circumstances that would make us unworthy recipients of funds of charity if we turned down some helpless child. Every child who needs such a home as we have here is plenty lucky to get here.

Every man who contributes to the maintenance of this home does a very real act of charity. God will bless his kindness.

The Loyal Men's Class of the Burlington Church has just installed a big deep-freeze unit worth more than $500.00. Come on, many other classes, and send us funds with which to purchase other much-needed things—things as much needed as shoes, dresses, suits, sweaters, etc. And by the way, there are not many people who realize that a fairly respectable insurance on the homes, buildings, workers, children, etc., on this place would run to more than $3,000.00 annually. Also it is not usually well known that to bring these hillsides back into productivity after having been used up and washed away takes real expenditure. This dairy herd has to have more than the proverbial "hen-nest grass," and it takes just as much space and time to raise a "nubbin," as real corn. There is not much we can put down on the credit side of the ledger when we are building up this farm, but we are making good on it, and I am taking no credit for that, as I found that sort of soil conservation and improvement going on when I came here. It is being advanced now and is in full swing. It will bring good results in the near future.

Be sure to receive in your church and Sunday School a Thanksgiving offering. Use the articles being written in THE CHRISTIAN SUN as material for your speeches for the Orphanage. Invite the superintendent to come to your Sunday School or church and tell you about the work you are doing here. I am proud of it—of these children and every staff member. I am proud of every gift and every offering. And I am proud of these children, and I want them to know it—everyone.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

THROUGH THE AGES.

In spite of the financial situation, Dr. McKeith stated that he believed the people and the ministers of the Congregational Christian Churches of America were desirous of continuing and greatly strengthening their international service through the work of the American Board.

"This is no time for retrenchment or retreat. The Christian church must take its place of leadership in all lands. Doors are open today which may be closed tomorrow. Your missionaries are still great pioneers. Many of them are truly great statesmen and are recognized as such in various countries. . . ."

Then Dr. McKeith touched on a few of the great opportunities mentioning that in Japan "the spread of the Christian gospel moves at an accelerated rate. To be sure, materialistic philosophies are also gathering many followers for a man must have something to hold to. When the old fails him, or seems outmoded, he must seek some other loyalty. For many Japanese today, Christianity is that new loyalty."

When Dr. McKeith talked recently with Dean Ray Oshimo of the School of Theology at Doshisha University, Kyoto, Japan—a man whose little girl had died of starvation during the war—he found no note of bitterness. Dean Oshimo pleaded for missionaries to undergird the work of the church and to assist Japanese pastors. When Dr. McKeith asked him what he thought was the greatest opportunity before us in Japan, Dean Oshimo replied immediately: "To reach the youth. Their minds are open. They look to America. They are ready for Christianity and for our education. Do not let the Christians of America fail us."

Dr. McKeith told of needs in the Philippine Islands for the support of schools and scholarships to train Filipino Christian youth who have few resources. "Here is the future leadership of the Philippine Islands. . . . If we fail them Protestant Christianity will forfeit its great opportunity. Here the young people recognize that Protestant Christianity is democratic as well as spiritually powerful."

Of China, Dr. McKeith said our missionaries continue their service to the people of that land. "Regardless of governments, human needs are the same. People's minds are still hungry and open to new truths. People's hearts are ready for the message of Jesus Christ. . . ."

"You and the other Christians of America must maintain our faith in the Chinese people and help them in these days of change to hold fast the things of the spirit and to be on the offensive in the propagation of the Christian gospel. . . ."

Dr. Roderick Scott recently returned from China, speaks of the "social tension or social vacuum" which the revolution in China has caused.

"Our Christian missionaries, co-workers with Dr. Scott have witnessed this change in the life of the people of China. They recognize that Christianity must be ready to fill the spiritual vacuum that is being created. We must move forward in China," said Dr. McKeith.

Of India, Dr. McKeith referred to the pioneering in churchmanship as illustrated by the United Church of South India and the place of leadership which many Indian Christian Nationals hold in their own country.

"Like the people of other countries the Indians are willing and eager to do all that they can, but the resources of the Christian group are limited. At a time when they are assuming more and more responsibility in their own church and in their own nation, we cannot take our support from them lest the cause of Christ lose what has already been gained."

Visiting Africa and the Near East last spring, Dr. McKeith brought a very special message from those areas saying:

"In Lebanon, Syria, Turkey and Greece we met with leaders in all walks of life. Their tributes to our missionaries were amazing. . . . We met and talked with doctors, lawyers, newspaper editors and government officials and we were amazed to find that so many of them were reading and studying the New Testament. . . . In one country where a branch of the Christian Church is strong, we found church leaders using our religious educational material and adapting it to the use of their own church school work.

"Angola, Africa, is a most fascinating country and the people eager for Christianity and for our Christian education. . . . In every village the leaders asked for ministers from America to assist in the development of the church and teachers to help in the schools. They also want to help in training their leaders. . . . These people have potentialities of great leadership—potentialities of a great Christian nation in a comparatively few years if the Christian people of America would only realize and respond to this opportunity.

"In Southern Rhodesia the same situation prevails. Our school at Mt. Silinda could be the future university for the Africans of Rhodesia and it would be a Christian University. Today their best education is about Junior High School, but they want and should have higher grade work. The Government is willing that we should raise the standard of our school until it becomes the leading institution of that country for the African. Out of such a school could come the Christian men and women to lead their people forward."

In Johannesburg, South Africa, are Dr. and Mrs. Ray E. Phillips, American Board missionaries, who wield a powerful influence in the social work of that great city and surrounding area.

"Without Ray Phillips and his wife Johannesburg undoubtedly would have had racial difficulties far greater than those it has had and many difficulties will be prevented because these two great Christian souls are in that city. They are known and respected by Africans and Europeans."

After pointing out how desperately few missionaries there are to cover great areas of need Dr. McKeith concluded:

"The world around today doors are open which may be closed tomorrow. Opportunities for the spread of the gospel of Christ are greater than ever before. . . . Our fathers in the faith were pioneers in the mission enterprise. . . . Most of our missionaries on the field are carrying twice the work they should be asked to carry. A more devoted group of Christians you cannot find. . . . God help us, if, as a Christian nation we provide economic recovery or military assistance and forget that 'man cannot live by bread alone.'" trouble, for then he needs a friend more than at any other time.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

If Daughter and Son know they are approved and appreciated by the most important persons in their world, it will give them confidence and ability to build other genuine relationships. If they are unnoticed by a dad who is "too busy," they feel a loss of security—a hurt and wonderment that may leave a scar throughout their lives. On the other hand, a rewarding relationship between father and children is a stepping stone from childhood's dependence into happy and independent adulthood.

WHAT IS MISSIONS?

By DR. ROCKWELL HARMON POTTER

Dean Emeritus of Hartford Seminary Foundation Former President of American Board of Foreign Missions

A Christian church that does not reproduce itself and carry through missionary service is an unhealthy and abnormal church destined to wither and die.

Every normal, healthy, living organism must by the law of its nature reproduce itself. This is true in the vegetable, human and social world. The church is a social organism and very much alive. It is subject to the laws of social organism. It must reproduce itself. The five absolute functions of the church are: worship, evangelism, education in religion, community service and missions. Missions is the reproductive function of the church.

MR. POTTER

We seek to win men to the worship of the one true God. Missions is worship, plus. We tell the story of the Gospel and herald the good news of the rule of God in the lives of men, but missions is evangelism, plus. We teach the truth by precept and persuasion, but missions is education in religion, plus. We seek to serve the needs of men in providing food for the hungry; shelter for the homeless; clothing for the naked; healing for the sick; help for the weak and manifold ministries to the social needs of men. Missions is community service, plus.

Now what is the plus? The plus is the reproductive purpose and function. By these four functions we reproduce the church in places where it is not, and, so reproduced, the church renders all these services and thus the lot of geometrical progression operates in the spread and development of Christianity throughout the world.

The natural method of reproduction is by the seed. The missionary is the seed of the church. By preaching and teaching; praying and giving, the church produces the missionary, conditions him for the field to which he is sent and then by patience, diligence and devotion he reproduces a church like the one that sent him. That reproduced church does in its place what the sending church does in its place—and often does these things much better.

Now what good is an apple tree that does not bear apples? It is no good. What good is a church that does not produce missionaries? It is no good. It is unhealthy, abnormal, perverted, diseased. It withers and dies. This is God's way.

So He purposes to bring mankind into the blessed fellowship of His Kingdom, into love and joy and peace, into the commonwealth of the world, into the brotherhood of man, into the glory and the joy of the will of God made real, into the communion of all souls with the source of their being, which is the destiny of the race, the only possible fulfilment of its history and an answer to the longing of its heart. So this is missions!

Mother Was Gone

By JOHN G. TRUITT

*My mother was gone and so was my Dad,
And I was such a luckless lad;
No day was good, no hour was bright,
I wept myself to sleep at night,
For all I had was a mother's prayer
That God would keep me in His care.*

*When shy and scared they brought me here
They held me close and dried my tear;
They gave me love, and they gave me food,
And gentle friends both kind and good;
And a big warm room and pretty toys,
And jolly times with girls and boys.*

*And though still I miss my Mom and Dad
I have the most I have ever had;
And God has answered my mother's prayer
With many friends who love and care—
So I rejoice the whole day through
And pray God's blessings in turn on you!*

News Flashes

Rev. W. J. Andes of Winston-Salem is preaching a series of sermons during November on "Money Power."

An editorial in the November issue of Advance generously characterizes THE SUN as "Our best loved contemporary." Thank you, Editor Scotford, that is precisely our sentiment concerning Advance.

Rev. W. Millard Stevens of Burlington, North Carolina, has been called to the pastorate of The Christian Temple in Norfolk, Virginia. He succeeds Rev. Peter Young.

After a constructive and fruitful ministry at Holland, Virginia, Dr. Will B. O'Neill has tendered his resignation in order to accept a call to our church in Sanford, North Carolina. He will succeed Rev. C. Carl Dollar.

Rev. Percy H. Ricketts, assistant to the pastor, Rev. M. T. Sorrell, in our Danville Church, has resigned in order to accept pastoral work at New Lebanon and Kellam Grove Churches in North Carolina and the Christian Community Church, located on Highway No. 58, five miles east of Danville. Mr. Ricketts has been assistant pastor of the Danville Church for 23 years.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY AT ASHEBORO CHURCH.

We are feeling good after a good day on our Tenth Anniversary at the church on October 30. We had 154 in Sunday school and 145 at church, although it was a rainy day. Ten people joined the church—five young couples, all members of Mr. Lester's Young Adult Class. Dr. John G. Truitt was here to bring greetings from the Southern Convention. The sanctuary of our church was painted last week—the first time any decorating had been done on it. Our Junior Choir sang for the first time, and our other choir attempted an anthem for the first time. The day was also Mr. Lester's mother's 90th birthday, and 63 ate dinner at our house—picnic dinner which they brought! The next day my only sister and her husband arrived from South Dakota, for a visit of a week with us and my parents. So we keep busy!

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE.

By JOS. B. JOHNSTON, Supt.,
Presbyterian Orphans' Home.

Twenty-seven years ago I visited most of the orphanages in North Carolina trying to learn something in preparation for my job as the newly elected superintendent of The Presbyterian Orphans' Home at Barium Springs. The Christian Orphanage at Elon College was one of these that I visited. The superintendent was a middle-aged man named Charles D. Johnston, level-headed, devoted man.

His institution was not the largest in the state, and yet I found the children in that institution, through the genius of its superintendent, had ev-everything that the larger institutions had. They had so many things in addition that I came away thinking that maybe this was the ideal setup. Many times during the years I have visited this orphanage and every time I made such a visit I was struck with the splendid appearance and conduct of the children in that institution. They led all other institutions in their courtesy, politeness, and what we classify as good manners. I never heard Charlie Johnston reprimand a child for a failure in courtesy: he never had an opportunity I could observe.

I think this one thing stamps him as being a most unusual person. The children met you and looked you in the eye and said the proper thing without looking over their shoulders to see if they were being watched or overheard.

Charles D. Johnston will long be remembered as the man who led his institution along the high road of character development and the making of good citizens. It was an honor and a privilege to know him.

LONG'S CHAPEL.

We had for our speaker at the 11:00 hour, Sunday, October 26, Mr. Dan Rader, a very enthusiastic worker of the Graham Methodist Church, who brought us a very inspiring message that was highly appreciated. It was strictly a laymen's service. W. J. Fonville, one of our local laymen, presided with dignity and great credit to our church.

The North Carolina Woman's Missionary Conference was held at our church October 4, which brought us much inspiration, and we feel that our church will become much more active in the work of the Kingdom because of this great meeting. Many complimentary remarks were made by the visitors for the entertainment they received.

REPORTER.

EDITORIAL IN THE BURLINGTON DAILY TIMES.

Citizens of Alamance County should—and will—respond as generously as possible to the $100,000 Elon College campaign launched today (November 2) to complete the gymnasium now under construction.

It will be fitting in this connection, as one contemplates his gift or his pledge, to remember that it is also the 19th College administrative birthday of Dr. Leon Edgar Smith, Sr., as president of the institution.

When Dr. Smith accepted the responsibility involved in taking over the management of the college, Elon needed a strong, determined leadership. Dr. Smith's record is proof that it received it in his devotion and his constant and untiring efforts to move progressively forward.

Elon College has been a valuable asset to this community since its founding. The future will enhance the value of the college through its modern facilities.

Elon College offers youth the opportunity to prepare for careers and leadership, on the high standard of instruction within reasonably modest expense for student maintenance.

This call is worthy and reaction to it ought to suggest a contribution to the fine asset the college is in the community, to the field of education, and as a measure of appreciation for Dr. Smith's work through the years.

FLASH!

Important News Concerning the Jacksons and Riggses.

JACKSONS AND RIGGSSES ARRIVED FOOCHOW OCTOBER THIRTIETH. LEONA BURR STILL SHAOWU. ALL WELL.

The above news was received by the American Board in a radiogram from John Fairfield, Treasurer of Foochow and Shaowu Missions, on October 31.

Dr. Earle Ballou writing to us from the American Board says, "This presumably confirms the earlier word that the government was to furnish escort (within October) but does not state why Miss Burr remained behind. It may well be that a single person without little folks, present or prospective, to be cared for, can be of great service in strengthening our Chinese comrades under the difficult conditions now prevailing, and can exercise a restraining influence on some who would otherwise be inclined to occupy immediately property to which they have no right."

Letters received last week from both Dr. Riggs and Mr. Jackson, make clear how hectic life has recently been in Shaowu, with the attack on the city of the "Big Knives," the torrential rains in the mountains, and the constantly changing and uncoordinated authority asserted by different officials. The situation was rapidly approaching a state which would make withdrawal very desirable, much as it is to be regretted. In due time we shall receive more details; we can now be glad that the families are safe and well in Foochow and that it was considered possible and wise for Miss Burr to stay behind.

The members of our churches in the Southern Convention will thank God that our beloved missionaries are safe. May we all join in prayer for their continued safety and for the safety of that courageous little woman, Leona Burr, who along with her Christ and our Chinese Christian comrades in Shaowu is endeavoring to hold the work in these days of uncertainty.

The years of labor in Shaowu by our devoted missionaries will bear fruit now and as soon as news is obtained we will see that the courageous Christian people of Shaowu are holding and carrying forward the Christian message of hope and peace. Timothy Chang's family is there and a long list of other Christian families and individuals. Pray for them.

The leaders in the Han Mei School and Hospital are carrying on and they merit our gifts, our support and our prayers.

Let us withhold judgment concerning the future until we know more than we do now concerning the conditions in China. The Christian people in China are bearing a terrible load. Now, more than ever before, they need the financial and spiritual support of Christians in America.

Remember them in your prayers and make your gifts large for Han Mei and for the success of our missionaries in China. They need us.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.
Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

TOYS AND TROPHIES FOR TRUITT.

We are pleased to devote generous space in this issue to our Orphanage, its program and needs. An unusually fine precedent has been set for character building at the Orphanage. Sound business dealings have been maintained. Now the present assets, both tangible and intangible, give one much to work with and for.

Dr. Truitt brings valuable experience, as well as many gifts and graces to his office of Superintendent. A great ministry at Suffolk has given him a place of eminence in our fellowship. Now his generous gifts of mind and spirit are given unreservedly to the Orphanage.

Giving to the Orphanage should experience a new impetus and reach new levels of generosity this Thanksgiving. Superintendent Truitt will lead our institution into larger and finer spheres of influence. The destiny of the Orphanage family is being shaped with skill and devotion. Let us give generously of our prayers and of our money that through our Orphanage miracles of grace may abound, God's will may be done and his kingdom come on earth.

EN ROUTE.

Moving is a strenuous experience, both physically and emotionally speaking. Packing the accumulated physical effects of the average family of five is no small achievement. And stifled good-byes can by no means eliminate the pain of separation.

Our Richmond people were thoughtful and generous. A fine testimonial service was held and an article for publication was prepared (which the editor promptly lost in the scramble of moving). The generous gifts and sentiments of the occasion are now a part of life's most treasured possessions.

Memory went on a field day en route from Richmond to Southern Pines. Passing through Petersburg one experienced the promptings of a decade to take the Waverly-Suffolk Highway and renew a host of acquaintances in the churches of Eastern Virginia. Crossing the Roanoke River brought memories of early pastors at Antioch and Bethlehem on Opposite sides of the river, of the interesting but now outmoded means of crossing the river by poling a ferry. Wise, North Carolina, was our home one night during a conference at Mt. Auburn Church. Norlina and Henderson have been the happy hunting grounds for various Convention Board meetings during recent years. Driving south from Henderson, we passed near Pattie Lee Coghill's home and spoke of Jonathan Fuller and Fuller's Chapel. We stopped at Franklinton Center to leave some materials for the incoming Director, William R. Brogden. A night at home—the first and real home—was spent within easy reach of the churches of childhood, Pope's Chapel and Mt. Carmel. Early in the morning we passed through Youngsville between our church on one side of the road and the home of the pastor, the Rev. E. M. Carter on the other. Wake Forest marked the writer's early trips to Beulah Church where he served as pastor while a student at Duke University. At Raleigh we crossed the trail of earlier trips while serving as pastor of Amelia Church in Johnson County. Apex and Sanford are associated with that first revival, conducted by Lee House at Lee Chapel in Lee County.

Southern Pines was radiant with hospitality. A group of women had anticipated the coming of the new pastor by supplying the pantry with groceries and by serving a hot turkey dinner for the pause that refreshes during the rigors of unpacking. A letter from a brother minister came with this accurate diagnosis or prophecy: "In many ways it is hard to pull up roots after living in a community and serving a church so many years. But you will find the fresh challenge of a new parish source of joy that will ease the pangs of leaving Richmond."

Tribute should be paid to a host of people who serve mankind by engaging in the moving business. Modern equipment and highways enable them to move people expeditiously. Packing, crating and storing is done by experienced men. Many of the vans on the highways about which we sometimes complain are moving people swiftly from one duty and destination to another. We are greatly indebted to them. There is a far cry from Abraham's slow and ancient trek across the desert to our modern shift from Dan to Beersheba, which enables a minister to conclude his ministry at one point on a given Sunday; then move, set up housekeeping and begin his ministry at a new location the following Sunday. Time marches on!

"CAROLINA, CAROLINA . . ."

Dr. Luther Grice was teaching the Men's Bible Class in Holy Neck Church. The lesson was concerned with the great servants of God, many of whom had come from very humble backgrounds. Dr. Grice was paying tribute to the men who had come up from the rural areas and churches. "Now where do the majority of our preachers come from," was Dr. Grice's rhetorical question. Quick as a flash came the unexpected reply from Jack Copeland: "From North Carolina!"

The roll call of our ministers will indicate that North Carolina has provided a generous quota of men who serve throughout the Convention and beyond. As might be expected, many of these men have gone elsewhere to preach. Some have returned. There is some satisfaction in being among that number. North Carolina is a great state, and the church should not lag behind other progressive institutions of the state. Pray for North Carolina, her churches and pastors. There is a great work to be done in the Old North State. Carolina, Carolina, Heaven's blessings attend her; while our hearts swell with gladness, whenever we name her."

That Thanksgiving Offering

Every church and Sunday school is urged to make an early and liberal Thanksgiving offering. This is the Orphanage Period in our church calendar. Send us an offering of which every member of your church can be justly proud. Help us reach the very much needed goal of $50,000.00. Individuals contributing to the Christian Orphanage can count it in making up their income tax. Make good use of this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and then read THE SUN regularly. We are trying to acquaint you with our work and our children. They are yours. They have been sent here by your pastors and people, and they deserve the best home we are able to give them. There are so many badly needed repairs to keep our buildings in first class condition. Our small orphanage should be made to compare favorably with the great children's homes of other denominations. Let us do our part. JOHN G. TRUITT, Superintendent.

WE'LL APPRECIATE YOUR OFFERING

AGES, BIRTHDAYS AND SPONSORS.

When I came to the Orphanage in August, I heard many requests for vacation from our children here. Most of them had had some vacation, but several had had none. Every now and then some little defender would say to me, "Tommy has no class." Well, now, it looked to me like Tommy had plenty of class. I did not know what was meant by their use of the word class, but upon inquiry I learned that many churches and Sunday school classes had chosen a boy or girl as one whom they would sponsor. The class would see to it that that particular girl or boy had some vacation, article of clothing, a birthday card or present, a Christmas gift, an occasional letter—and how they do like to get mail—and now and then a little spending money. They like to buy their own stamps as they write home or to some company who will send a trinket for some box top or coupon—to them its fun—and they like to pay for an occasional ticket to the movies, or buy an ice cream cone. They—the larger ones—earn some money, and all "earn" some at times, but a few extra coins are good for them. So many have classes that help them, that show an outside interest in their lives, and it does something for them. I am attaching hereto a complete list of our children with their date of birth, and whether or not they have class. Pick one. Write to him, and if you send a dollar or less, send it directly to him (P. O. Box 157, Elon College, North Carolina); if you send more than that small amount send it to me to be held for his or her use only. In this way you can greatly gladden a little life. Thank you.

Christian Missions

At Home and Abroad

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
July 6, 1949.

DEAR FRIENDS:

A month and a half has passed since we were "liberated." It has been a month of uncertainty and difficulty. Only three letters have been delivered to us in three months' time—one from Dorothy's family, one from the Shirley Copelands in Waverly and one from the R. L. Houses. You can guess how overjoyed we were to receive them and we have read them over and over. All newspapers and magazines have stopped, too.

We recently held a meeting of the Synod Executive Committee. Originally it was planned for the middle of April but the situation at that time made it impossible. I wonder if you got any of my letters telling about our liberation. The Kienning-Taining District and the Tsianglo-Yangkou District have largely not been liberated but we held the meeting anyway. The greatest threat to travel is the increased number of bandits in the country who prey on travelers—taking even their clothing. Pastor Liao and Mr. Chiu of Kienning were the only two outsiders present.

Before holding the meeting, we informed the local Communist government. We were told that they would send a representative. He was present at the first meeting and made a short talk saying that we had freedom of worship, freedom to hold meetings and freedom of religious belief as long as we obey the Communist regulations. He further added that even though America shamelessly helped the reactionary Kuomintang that American lives and property would be protected as long as we refrain from spying, siding and abetting reactionary elements and organizing subversive groups. After his short talk, the government representative left and we went on with our business without interruption.

One of the most important plans we made is for a nine-week Preaching Mission to the country villages. The team will consist of from seven to ten members including an agricultural worker, a public health worker (Dr. Riggs) and several religious workers. We will take the slide projector and generator so we can make use of visual aids. We expect to be about three weeks in each district.

When I went to Foochow in April, I brought back some money most of which is now used up. Foochow has not been liberated and no bank has been established in Shaowu so we have no way to get money through. When our present money is used up, we may have a difficult time.

We are all well and continuing with our work as much as possible. Needless to say the people are still quite upset and much afraid of the new police state methods. I can't say much about the local conditions but I will say that Revelations is the favorite book and no small number of people think the end of the world is just around the corner. Our occupation authorities were until recently in the same profession as those who first met the man going down from Jerusalem to Jericho (Luke 10:30).

Our plans at present are to keep on with our work as long as possible. Under present circumstances I see no reason to call it quits. On the other hand, if we find that later restrictions make it impossible to do constructive work, we will return home. To add to people's difficulties this year the spring rains were heavier and lasted longer than usual. We had the highest water in 20 years. Miles of telephone and telegraph wires have been washed away. There is neither the money nor the workers available to fix them. The roads north and south have been washed out too, so we are cut off from the rest of the world.

I have a feeling that if our American government gives more aid to the Nationalists and if, as a result, the Nationalist armies make some recovery, our days in Shaowu are numbered. All the woes of China are blamed on America, the former president and the Kuomintang. While winning, the newly arrived troops can afford to be charitable to us, but if they begin to meet adverse conditions, we may have a difficult time.

Thus far we are glad we have stayed on. While we haven't been able to accomplish much during these uncertain days, our being here has helped to lend encouragement to our fellow workers. Church attendance fell off heavily at first, but it is beginning to get back now and I have seen some people at church who haven't attended for years. Our school continued after a three-week stoppage when the troops came. The hospital never missed a day, seeing patients.

All of us send our greetings to Southern Convention friends. We miss THE CHRISTIAN SUN and personal letters from you. We hope the time is not far off when normal communications can be restored. Please pray for us and for our Chinese friends. They are being tried as by fire. Last Sunday, in a sermon preached to the young people's groups, I used the book of Daniel as the basis for my talk. I couldn't help but notice many similarities between their situation and ours.

The war has been a terrific strain on the Chinese economy. Prolongation of the conflict will only bring added hardship. It is the hope of all that the fighting will soon cease and a rebuilding program will begin. Twelve long years of war has almost reduced the entire nation to poverty. During the past few months the American State Department has taken the position that it should not interfere in the conflict. I believe this to be correct. If America continues to help the Kuomintang, it will only serve to prolong the misery of these suffering people. I believe that the Chinese people will eventually adjust Communism to fit their needs. I further hope that my country continues to proffer a friendly hand to this new government whether it is accepted or not. America has many friends here who won't forget. Eventually the way of helpfulness and kindness will win out. That is our faith and that is why we are staying.

While writing the above, the new magistrate came to see me. When I first met him, he was quite brusque and unfriendly. We took him to see the hospital and explained a little about our work. This time he was very polite and friendly. Is it too much to expect that if America shows a friendly and cooperative spirit toward the new "People's Government" of China, that they will eventually become friendly to us? Not if the teachings of Jesus have any relevance to the present world, and we believe they have. Therefore, I hope the American people will leave no stone unturned to manifest a friendly attitude toward the new regime; and further, will offer to help in the colossal task of rebuilding China.

We, on the field, will do what we

REFUGE.

BY W. Waldemar W. Argow.

Yesterday at nightfall, while darkness was tarnishing the sky, and the raw north wind whetted its edge on every living thing, a little bird hungry and cold sought refuge from the fierce clutches of the storm behind an open shutter. How frail this little creature seems when pursued by winter's jaws. Why came this little mite to this scanty shelter? Ah, a slight opening had been left in a window through which there came a bit of warmth, assuring the wee creature that a friend was nearby.

How like this little bird we are! How often when chilled by grief, pursued by misfortune and hungry for friendship we seek even the scantiest shelter, and there is none. But oh, what fills our hearts when we discover a kindly soul, a tender heart who has left his window open where we can feel the glow of his understanding, his sympathy, his inspiration and his love. Ah, forget not to leave the window of your heart open, even a tiny bit; for somewhere a fellow pilgrim will perish, save for the warmth of your soul.—From "Beyond."

MAILING INSTRUCTIONS FOR JAPAN.

Packages may be sent by parcel post to addresses in Japan if located on the four principal islands—Honshu, Kyushu, Shikoku or Hokkaido.

Packages are limited to eleven pounds in weight and the rate is 14c per pound, or fraction thereof. The greatest length can be 42 inches. The following customs forms are necessary and will be supplied free by any United States Post Office:

1 Customs tag No. 2966.

1 International Parcel Post Sticker No. 2922.

Mark clearly GIFT PACKAGE. This may prevent excess costs in handling. There is no regular duty charge for packages to Japan at present.

It is now possible to send books and printed matter. This should be clearly marked PRINTED MATTER and sent under its own classification.

Although the usual high duty charges are not imposed, the missionaries may have some expenses in obtaining your package. A small sum approximating 25 per cent of the valuation declared by the donor may be sent to the treasurer of the American Board, Rev. Harold B. Belcher, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts, with the request that it be credited to the account of the missionary to whom the box is sent.

Packages receive rough treatment in transit, therefore, special care should be taken in packing and wrapping. The weight includes wrapping and string.

Address for letters only—To Miss Angie Crew should be addressed: Miss Angie Crew, Foreign Missions Conference of North America, APO 317, c/o Postmaster, San Francisco, California.

MRS. W. B. WILLIAMS,
Chairman, Friendly Service,
The Southern Convention.

SUGGESTIONS FOR FRIENDLY SERVICE.

At the recent meeting of the North Carolina Woman's Board, the following additional suggestions were made for Friendly Service:

Dress Patterns—The women need these desperately and are very happy to have them—most any size—they can make alterations.

Magazines for Missionaries—The North Carolina Chairman of Friendly Service is writing for information on Club Rates to missionaries. If such is possible, notice will be put in THE SUN.

Books would be welcomed and appreciated. Clear this with Friendly Service Chairman so there will not be duplications. She may make suggestions in some cases about what to send.

Send a report to the Friendly Service Superintendent as soon as you have sent your gifts. This will help to avoid duplications.

MRS. W. J. ANDES,
Chairman, Friendly Service,
North Carolina.

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Tomorrow is Armistice Day. That is the day on which the first World War ended. I can not remember it, but recall my parents and teachers telling of the joy and elation they felt and how the people swarmed into the streets to celebrate. I do remember the end of the second World War. In anticipation of the end of sugar rationing we very rashly made fudge and for weeks we ate cereal without sugar.

We continue to celebrate this day although it did not mark the end of war. It has always seemed to me that it was easier to be peaceful than to be war-like. I still think so. It is the duty of the Church to work for peace and to train its children and young people to be peaceful. We call a person a pacifist if he refuses to fight.

Instead of celebrating, let us pray that we may have the wisdom of Christ in helping bring about true peace. . . .

Many thanks to the Alec Pages of Richmond for their collection of Australian and New Zealand stamps which they gave me. And thanks to Mr. C. B. Riddle of Washington for sending American Commemorative stamps and several magazines on stamps. To my amazement I discovered some of my stamps are quite valuable and I am rich (in stamps!). Mr. Riddle has written an article on the history of the American postal system and described how the Mexicans were the first to have one in the New World.

Mr. and Mrs. Page have traveled widely and his family live in Australia. A few of the stamps were foreign but mostly from his native country.

And thanks for the cards received about this hobby. Happy hunting and collecting.

PETER'S GREAT ADVENTURE.

By HARRIETT C. ANDERSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Peter was all atingle as he dressed. This was it, the day of days—the beginning of the great adventure to which he had been looking forward. Teeth had to be scrubbed extra hard, shoelaces tied “just so,” for, when it is the day upon which you become a “schoolboy” and are all ready to set forth as a knight upon a great adventure, which will last sixteen years or more, you have to look the part.

Curly-headed small Peter, with big blue eyes that still held the questioning look of a baby, was shedding his baby ways painlessly and naturally.

Peter had chores to do, too; Pinky and Winky had to be fed. Mommy went along out to the pen, just for company, but it was Peter who carried the dish of rabbit pellets and a carrot apiece for each pink-eyed bunny. The bunnies were a lesson in responsibility for Peter; though, of course, Peter didn't realize this.

Clothes picked up, breakfast over, Bible verse repeated aloud to Mommy, and Peter was all set to venture forth as a real “schoolboy.” That is, almost ready; there was still Skippy to be considered—Skippy, who trotted faithfully at Peter's side everywhere he went. Today Skippy would have to be a good “big dog” and stay at home and take care of Mommy.

“Look, Skippy, old pal, this is going to be an a'venture for you, too. You won't be just a ‘little dog’ any more; you're going to be a ‘big dog’ now and stay right here and guard Mommy and keep her company.”

Peter stood for final inspection: new white blouse, tucked in just the right way, blue tie straight—and yes, the clean handkerchief in one small pocket of Peter's jacket. Peter's chubby arms went about Mommy's neck in a fierce hug, then came a big loud “smack” kiss and, with a wave of his hand to Mommy and Skippy, Peter started down Elm Street almost at a trot.

Ah! this was it. This was the beginning of a long, long road of adventure. The school playground was crowded with laughing, shouting children and, going in at the main door, were mothers with other small Peters and Susans, on this, their first day of school.

Peter went into the school, turned down the hall, and walked eagerly into the Kindergarten. Miss Dean, the teacher, who had been talking with a mother, turned, and Peter walked up to her, put out his hand and said, “Good morning, Miss Dean, I'm so glad I can be in your class now.”

The mothers looked at Peter in astonishment. Where was his mother? And wherever did he get the idea of being glad to come to school?

Peter had known just where to go and what to do, because that had been a part of the preparation for the great adventure. His mother had helped him to prepare himself.

Peter and Mommy had visited the school, at the right time—after he was ready for it—after the proper “build-up” at home had been accomplished. Peter had been introduced to Miss Dean as a small individual meeting a grown-up individual who wanted to be friends with him, just as he wanted to be friends with her.

As Peter now stood in the Kindergarten room and looked about him, he couldn't understand why two little girls were crying, or why one small boy, who looked a great deal like Peter, was openly sobbing and holding on to his mother's skirt. But these small folks in tears had long ago, without their consent, become members of an organization, world-wide, whose slogan is: “You wait until you go to school, young man; the teacher won't spare the rod.”

Peter's parents, through loving companionship and example, had directed the young mind of their child toward accepting life as a great adventure. They had explained that as one encountered each small hurt or problem, unafraid, he became bigger and stronger. This made childish problems that arose a challenge to be met and mastered.

Peter is encased in an armor so strong, so protective, that now, as a “schoolboy,” and in later years as a “man,” the world will not be able to hurt him.

Since Peter's birth, his parents have been building this armor around him—the armor of love, of understanding, of confidence. Peter understands love, he has always experienced love, he expects it, and in return gives it to all. So now, Peter sets forth on this beginning of his sixteen years of education, clad in the confidence which his wise parents have helped him to develop.

Yes—his is the day—the big red-letter day when Peter begins school and Mommy and Daddy will now refer to him as “our schoolboy.”

DICK JACKSON.

A LITERARY GENIUS WHO GAVE HIS BIRTHDAY AWAY.

"Son of the Bedpost" was author of "Child's Garden of Verses," "Treasure Island" and "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

By C. B. RIDDLE.

Every year revives the literary dilemma of whether to have a Robert Louis Stevenson celebration on November 13. That used to be his birthday, but he gave it away. Finding little Anna Ide lamenting that her birthday collided with Christmas, resulting in a half-quota of gifts, he gallantly gave her his birthday.

The day serves, however, for memorials on the part of R. L. S. Societies, friends who remember the tall thin author, and readers who gathered their first posey from his Child's Garden of Verses, dug their first doubloons on Treasure Island, and suffered youthful chills and nightmares over Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

Geographers, too, may light a belated candle on the Stevenson birthday cake, for whatever places his pen has touched lose their true outlines in a rosy distortion of romance. Stevenson made London, in spite of its sunshine and gardens, a twilight city forever, sinister with dim lamplight and chocolate-colored fog.

Every blue island denting the horizon is hopefully scanned by Stevenson addicts for the naked spire of Spy-Glass Hill soaring above timberline, or some other resemblance to Treasure Island. There is always a question as to whether all the gold pieces were gathered from the sandy floor of Ben Gunn's cave. The question lingers, although the island has never been identified in any atlas. The scenery was taken, Stevenson admitted, from California.

For the weak-lunged, strong-hearted Scotsman consulted geography as his best doctor, and read his prescriptions from maps. They lured him halfway around the world to taste different climates for his health. But for geographic background, he consulted mainly his memory and the bed. Much of his writing was done in the posture of his delicate childhood.

In his geography of the "pleasant land of counterpane," Scotland occupies most territory, with all roads leading to the great gloomy city of Edinburg. Next to Sir Walter Scott, it was Stevenson who studded his native country most generously with literary landmarks. A humble old inn of the village of South Queensberry, near Edinburg, is still pointed out as the scene of Captain Hoseason's plotting with a treacherous uncle to shanghai David Balfour, of Kidnapped, and to sell him into slavery in the Carolinas. Likewise renowned is the end of Balfour's trail at a high open spot on a by-way into Edinburg, still called: "Rest and Be Thankful."

Scotland cherishes the memory of Stevenson. His birthplace at 8 Howard Place in Edinburg is a museum with relics. Less visited is 17 Heriot Row, where little Louis probably first "looked abroad on foreign lands" by climbing the garden cherry tree, or from "a ship upon the stairs all built of the back-bedroom chairs."

Swanston Cottage, outside Edinburg, the Stevenson summer home, is distinguished by a collection of souvenirs and a description in "St. Ives." Another cottage, Kinnaird near Pitlochry, where the ailing author spent two summer months, is marked by a tablet.

The Pied Piper of health lured the invalid writer, who often called himself son of the bedpost, farther and farther from his native Scotland. He spent three years in England, and it was there he conceived the Dr. Jekyll story. Later he lived in France, where he wrote a series of stories under the name of Captain North.

The American wanderings of the velvet-coated writer have two chapters, both with happy endings. His first trip took him by emigrant boat and emigrant train to California, where he almost died on a goat ranch in the Santa Lucia mountains, earned $2.00 a week as reporter in Monterey, married in San Francisco, and honeymooned in an abandoned camp at the Silverado mine. A memorial in San Francisco commemorates Stevenson's poverty-stricken days there, almost starving on 25-cent dinners.

The second Stevenson expedition to America was a march of triumph, with the now famous author dictating terms to publishers, while wintering at Saranac Lake, New York, or visiting Manasquan, New Jersey. From San Francisco the writer who had launched many a ship in print finally realized his own boyhood dream, and sailed in the yacht Casco through the Golden Gate into the Pacific. This sunset trail led at last to Samoa, of which he had often written.

As Tusitala, the teller of tales, he won a place in Samoan esteem as exalted as his hilltop mansion 600 feet above the town of Apia, on the island of Upolu. The chiefs whom he championed in their island feuds built in gratitude the Road of the Loving Heart, which winds up the steep mountain slope three miles through the jungle to his house. This home was the last port of call in Stevenson's treasure hunt for health. Farther up the mountain, he found a final peaceful substitute, in the simple concrete tomb on the summit as he prescribed in his own "Requiem."

A TRIBUTE TO REV. M. L. WEEKLEY, D. D.

Rev. M. L. Weekley, D. D., for many years pastor to a number of the Valley Virginia Churches, died August 10, 1949, at the age of 83 years. On October 20, 1908, Rev Weekley was married to Miss Edna McCormie, a woman of culture and refinement and an accomplished musician. Mrs. Weekley passed away in January of 1932.

Rev. Weekley is survived by three sons, Howard of Harrisonburg, Va. Earl of Panama and Virgil of Linville, Va., with whom he made his home.

Active in church work until about a year before his death, Rev. Weekley attended church till the last although he was no longer able to take an active part in the service.

His early years were spent in West Va., the state in which he was born. Later he was associated with Marion College and was a teacher of higher Mathematics. He was a member of a family of ten children, two of whom were ministers. In gospel in the United Brethren Church; he later transferred his membership to the Congregational Church in Vermillion, Ohio where he was pastor. In 1931 he was received into the Valley Central Conference, at which time Rev. R. L. Williamson was serving as president and Rev. A. W. Andes as Secretary.

The Valley Churches which Rev Weekley served at some time during his ministry are Antioch, Beulah, Linville, New Hope, Bethlehem, Mt. Olivet (G) & Mt. Olivet (R). After retiring from active duty he was an untiring worker in the Linville Church, acting as supply pastor when this church had no pastor.

He will be greatly missed as a friend, preacher and counsellor by young and old alike and the evidence of his good work will live on. A man of Christian character and wonderful mental ability; he never gave up

THE GREAT INVITATION.

LESSON VIII—NOVEMBER 20, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near.—Isaiah 55:6.

LESSON: Isaiah 55; 56:6-8.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Romans 10:1-13.

Satisfaction for the Hunger of The Heart.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye buy wine and milk without price." From all the things of the world, or indeed with all the vain things of the world, even good things, yet necessary things, we turn unsatisfied to God. Man cannot live by bread alone. Possessions, power, prominence, popularity, all these and other things bring a certain amount of satisfaction to men, but they do not and they cannot bring ultimate or abiding satisfaction. Woe unto the man to whom they do bring ultimate satisfaction—his soul is dead within him, he is dead in the highest sense of the word and he knows it not. Hear then God's gracious invitation, to come unto him and to partake of that water which springing up within him satisfies his thirst and becomes a well of water which springs up unto eternal life itself. And it is without money and without price. It is to be had for the asking. It is the free gift of God. And it is for all, every one that thirsts is cordially and urgently invited to come and drink.

Money for That Which Is Not Bread.

"Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? And your labor for that which satisfies not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness." A few minutes ago I stood in a grocery store eating my sandwich and drinking a bottle of milk, when a man came in to do his shopping. He ordered a variety of groceries, wholesome, health-giving food. And then he bought a whole carton of cigarettes. And because I had been preparing to write these Notes before I went to lunch, I thought of these words of the prophet; "Wherefore do ye spend your money for that which is not bread? I thought also of the figures I saw a couple of weeks ago as to the amount of money that the American people spent in 1947 on alcoholic drinks and beverages—nine billion dollars. These are of course only two items—huge items to be sure—among many, many things for which we spend our money for that which is not bread at all, which makes no contribution to the health or well-being of those who use these things. Many, many so-called practical, hard-headed businessmen who pride themselves on the sound judgment with which they make investments in income producing things, spend huge sums of money for that which is not bread. And all of us are more or less guilty of this foolishness and folly. Think of how much money is spent on luxuries and on indulgences which would really be bread for those who desperately need it. The prophet's question, perhaps an ironical question, is very much in point, in our modern world.

First Rate Loyalties to Second Rate Causes.

"And your labor for that which satisfies not." People not only spend their money (and of course that is in a real sense their lives), but they spend their labor and their lives in that which satisfies not. The writer of these Notes is both amused and troubled at the tremendous amount of time and energy which is spent by people on second rate causes. People spend and are spent on things that are trivial, or worse still, unprofitable and harmful. What a difference it would make in the progress of the Kingdom if some of this energy could be harnessed to the work of the church and the cause of Christ.

Stop — Look — Listen.

"Incline your ear, come unto me; hear and your soul shall live." We need to stop, look and listen. Life's intake must be considered as well as life's outflow. We need to take time to be holy. We need to let go and let God have a chance. We need to learn how to be still and know that God is God. We need to appropriate the resources of the spirit which He alone can give, and which alone can give life to the soul. Prayer and meditation and worship, private and public, are not the luxuries of a normal spiritual life: they are absolute necessities.

Change Your Ways.

"Let the wicked forsake his way . . . let him seek the Lord while he may be found, let him call upon him while he is yet near." Many people think that one cannot be good and have a good time. But there can never be ultimate happiness until the heart is right within. Jesus came preaching the Kingdom of God or heaven, the good news of the gospel, but he summoned men to repentance as a prerequisite to entrance into the kingdom. "Repent and believe the gospel," The wicked must forsake his way. We must change our way of living. We must cease to do evil and learn to do good.

Change Your Thinking.

"Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts." A man must change not only his ways of living but his ways of thinking. Indeed a man who was moved by the Holy Spirit of God long ago said that "as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." And when Paul wrote to his friends he urged them not to be transformed by the renewing of their minds. Crooked thinking makes for crooked living. Wrong thinking makes for wrong living. We need to change our minds which is the root of repentance.

An Exceeding Great and Precious Promise.

If the wicked forsake his way and if the unrighteous man forsakes his evil thoughts, and if they return unto the Lord, he will have mercy and he will abundantly pardon. If we confess our sins he is faithful and righteous to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. That is the gospel, that is the good news, that is the message that sinful men need to hear and to act upon. Grievous are the burdens which many bear today because they have not sought God's gracious forgiveness in Christ. But this forgiveness is no cheap and easy and costless thing. It demands thoroughgoing repentance, surrender to God, a willingness to make restitution. But it is worth more than it costs. For only thus can the soul find peace and rest and cleansing.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

THE ELON COLLEGE CAMPAIGN.

The campaign to raise $100,000.00 in Alamance County for the completion of our new gymnasium was launched in an impressive way Wednesday morning, November 2. Jimmy Darden, Alumni Secretary, assisted by Dr. William Moseley Brown, had organized the student body and faculty in advance. An organizational meeting was held Tuesday night at 7:00 in the main auditorium. There were about 400 students present and the majority of the faculty. The student body was organized in teams of two each and each faculty member had a number of teams under his direction. The purpose was to carry the appeal of Elon College to every home in Alamance County. It was to be a house to house canvass. The students and faculty were transported to Burlington to Main Street in front of Radio Station WBBB. The program started with selected students of the football squad who kicked the ball from Glen Raven into Burlington. Thad Eure, Secretary of State, representing Governor Scott, received the ball on behalf of the Governor. E. Z. Jones, General Chairman for the drive and Director of the Radio Station, was master of ceremonies. Thad Eure spoke, commending the college to the county for this undertaking. Mrs. R. W. Barnwell spoke, representing the City of Burlington and contending that Burlington and Elon College represented two football teams striving for the same goal. Mr. R. W. Crow spoke, representing the City of Graham; Jimmy Darden, Alumni Secretary, representing the alumni; and Art Fowler, representing the student body. Dr. L. E. Smith spoke, representing the college and urging the co-operation of all to make the campaign a success. It was a most inspirational and enthusiastic occasion. There were approximately 185 teams of students that fanned out from this central point to all sections of Burlington, Graham and surrounding communities. Complete results have not been tabulated but it seems now that this house to house canvass representing small contributions will total $4,000 or maybe more. The merchants, physicians, lawyers and industrialists of the county have been organized separately and the campaign is progressing quite well.

To date a total of $125,000 has been pledged by the alumni, faculty and student body. When the Alamance County campaign is complete, the campaign will be extended to other sections where our churches are located. As soon as the gymnasium is completed, conditions at the college require that we move on quickly to the next undertaking, either a dormitory or a dining room. The church and the general public expect the college to press forward until the expansion program is realized.

HIGH SCHOOL DAY.

Today, Friday, is another historical day on the campus of Elon College. It is Home Coming Day and also High School Day. More than one thousand high school seniors have accepted the college's invitation to be its guests on this occasion and attend the Elon College-High Point football game to be played in the new Memorial Stadium in Burlington. These high school seniors will begin arriving at one o'clock. They will make a tour of the campus and assemble in the auditorium at four o'clock for a program of music by the Elon College Singers. At 4:45 there will be served a barbeque dinner. Following the dinner will be a bonfire and pep rally in preparation for the game at eight o'clock. This is a red letter day in the history of Elon College. We are happy to have these young men and women on our campus and want to be of every possible service to them. Mr. Earl Danieleley of the Chemistry Department has done a good job in arranging for this occasion and will be in charge of the afternoon and evening program.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

We have a splendid report today—thanks to many of our churches and Sunday Schools. It is always good to receive contributions that amount to a sizeable sum but certainly the amount reported herein could not have come to the college at a more opportune time. We are approaching the end of the quarter when funds are badly needed. When you add the contributions received during the week to the previous total, we are still more than five thousand dollars from our goal. I know that your church will want to comply with the Convention's apportionment plan and that it is certainly anxious for your cooperation. If you could realize how badly the college needs the funds and what your church's contribution would mean to your college and the cause of Christian Education. I am sure that you would respond generously.

NOTICE.

Miss Nellie Davis, a member of our Holy Neck Church and a member of the Senior Class at Elon College, will complete her academic work at Elon at Thanksgiving time. Miss Davis has majored in Religious Education and is available for service in a local church as director of Religious Education should there be opportunities for such service.

New York City's police department recently checked the religious affiliations represented in the homes out of which come the city's juvenile delinquents. In more than 80 per cent of these homes neither parent had any such affiliation at all. Many of them said that they were Protestant, Catholic or Jewish—but in name only. There was no real participation in church activities, either by the child or by parents. One of the greatest deterrents to juvenile delinquency is active participation in Sunday school or other religious activities.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Thank you for every gift and boost you give these little boys and girls. Six Burlington barbers gave thirty of them free haircuts this Wednesday afternoon. Two Burlington Church ladies made twenty-seven pairs of pajamas out of material which they secure from our storage rooms, and they carried enough material with them to make as many more. Their goal is two pair of new pajamas for every child here—which will be 148 pairs, and there is plenty of material for them. We need other ladies from other churches to come in and do some sewing—sheets, shirts, curtains, dresses, suits could be made. There is a great deal of material, and we have friends who will furnish more if needed.

It was just a nervously written letter, and on very plain paper, torn from a scratch tablet, and with pencil, but it contained a ten dollar bill, tenderly folded and tucked in. It was hard-earned money, but it was from someone who knew the bite of poverty and need. She knew first-hand about our work here and the little ones here. It was well-nigh a widow's mite. God saw her great heart. "Blessed are the poor" for sometimes they make heaven on earth for those who are poorer still. Some people talk about heaven, others make it. Just now a little lady of 15 years sat across the desk from me making a request I could not grant. She was disappointed. I told her to let's look at the other side of the picture and when I had patiently, and I think understandingly, explained the "whys" and "wherefores" she said: "After all, Dr. Truitt, I am lucky." Well, bless her heart, she was—doubly so—for along with her blessings she had the good spirit to see it. The person reading this letter could sit down right now and make himself happy by sending us a check "according as God has prospered him" and make it possible for us to do a much better job here.

We need right now $3,000.00 to catch up current bills. I took less than a third of my last month's salary because I could not feel comfortable until I could pay the others. When I can pay them I'll take mine, but I am with these children one hundred per cent, and I cannot but cast my lot with them "for better or for worse." We had hoped that we could hold off our creditors until Thanksgiving funds began to come in—perhaps they will start soon.

What these children need they have. Their happy voices, their laughter and their work, their diligence in school, their spirit of courtesy and cooperation, their love for all their staff members, and their great appreciation are evidence sufficient to show that they have the essentials. For that I thank God daily and go about my work with a song in my soul.

MATRONS, MATRONS, HELP US GROW.

By John G. Truitt.

Matrons, matrons, help us grow
So the boys and girls I know,
Where I live and dream and plan
Will proudly say when I'm a man,
I knew him as an orphan boy
Who brought his matrons hope and joy.

Matrons, matrons, help me be Good, and sweet, and bright, and free,
As I sing, and dance, and whirl;
Help me grow a charming girl—
So when I'm grown, and big, and fine,
You'll love me then as now at nine;

Matrons, matrons, help us fill
The hopes of all upon this hill;
Help us show to all who share,
That we are worth their love and care,
That we shall love the home they give
And bless it with the lives we live!

A LETTER TO THE ORPHANAGE SUPERINTENDENT.

Winston-Salem, N. C.,
October 28, 1949.

Rev. John G. Truitt, D. D.,
Supt., The Christian Orphanage,
Elon College, North Carolina.
MY DEAR DR. TRUITT:

In response to your invitation I am writing to express a word of appreciation of our deceased friend, Charles D. Johnston, superintendent for a long while of The Christian Orphanage. Brother Johnston was one of those fellows who let deeds speak for his genuineness. He was never inclined to get on the front line of any exhibition or on the band wagon of any procedure. He was one of those fellows who seemed to provide the locomotive power for onward advances. In our North Carolina circles of child caring institutional workers, Brother Johnston was held in high esteem. We were looking forward to his becoming the head of our organization for the present year, he being groomed for the presidency of the North Carolina Conference of Orphanage Workers.

It was a pleasure to have you with us here at The Children's Home in our recent annual meeting of the North Carolina Conference of Orphanage Workers. It appeared that you had gotten hold of your challenges in a very constructive way, even though your time limit of experience had been short. It was a source of satisfaction to our group to note that a man of your apparent caliber had been selected to head up the interests of the parentless children sponsored by your denomination. We shall hope to have the benefit of exchanging communications from time to time.

A LETTER TO THE ORPHANAGE SUPERINTENDENT.

our church organizations is, and may well continue to be, that of providing the best possible substitute homes for children whose former homes have been broken up. Children who have been deprived of so many privileges are entitled to the best substitute home that up-and-going, God-serving people can provide. It has been a matter of much satisfaction to me to note that in the two decades that I have been directly connected with our child caring institution the support for our North Carolina child caring institutions has been more bountifully provided. There was a time when in our annual meetings we talked about the difficulty of raising money for our projects. In later years we spend more time discussing the ways of directing children. We have, in a large measure, stopped talking about problem children and turned our discussion to the problems of children. A much better day has dawned for the guidance and direction of children in our child caring institutions.

I am sure that under the continued good leadership of your institution your good people will provide for its needs in a satisfactory way. Such would be in keeping with their own desire, I am sure, and in keeping with the needs of children entrusted to their care. Not only self-respect but a high regard for the church's parentless children would direct that ample provision may be made for their security, guidance and Christlike up-bringing.

Assuring you of our personal satisfaction in knowing you and of our high regard for your leadership, I am

Cordially yours,

Rev. R. A. Whitten, Rev. S. E. Madren and Rev. E. J. Rohant were in charge of the very impressive funeral service. The lovely hymn "It is Well with My Soul" was used. The floral tributes were many and beautiful. Many sorrowing friends were gathered to pay their last tribute to one who had "fought the good fight." His body was laid to rest by the side of his wife in Woodbine Cemetery in Harrisonburg.

SHARING

By MAUDE V. PRESTON

THERE isn't much that I can do, but I can share my bread with you, and I can share my joy with you, and sometimes share a sorrow, too . . . as on our way we go.

There isn't much that I can do, but I can sit an hour with you, and I can share a joke with you, and sometimes share reverses, too . . . as on our way we go.

There isn't much that I can do, but I can share my flowers with you, and I can share my books with you, and sometimes share your burdens, too . . . as on our way we go.

There isn't much that I can do, but I can share my songs with you, and I can share my mirth with you, and sometimes come and laugh with you . . . as on our way we go.

There isn't much that I can do, but I can share my hopes with you, and I can share my fears with you, and sometimes shed some tears with you . . . as on our way we go.

There isn't much that I can do, but I can share my friends with you and I can share my life with you, and oftentimes share a prayer with you . . . as on our way we go.

Does Your Church Have an Organ?

Many churches are built minus an organ. It happens frequently that all available funds are expended and exhausted in the minimum needs for building and it becomes necessary for the church to worship with the use of a piano for some time. The church then faces the temptation of drifting along indefinitely without the benefit of an organ. Many who desire such a churchly instrument despair of ever getting one, thinking that the price is prohibitive for a church of moderate means. This is by no means true.

A great variety of organs, both pipe and electronic, are available today. An organ fund, instituted by some enterprising individual or organization, soon grows to sufficient proportions to enable the church to realize its long cherished dream of having an organ in its sanctuary. Does your church have an organ? If not, get some information on organs. Discover what other churches of similar size and strength have done. Start a fund now. Perhaps a member or friend would like to give an instrument as a memorial.

The picture above was made when a new organ was dedicated recently in our church at Albemarle, North Carolina. Mrs. J. C. Wainwright of Charlotte is seated at the console of the Wurplitzer electric organ. Principles in the service were R. L. Holbrook, E. L. Gehring, Mrs. J. H. Hill, George T. Gunter and the Rev. W. Walter Hall, pastor.

Miss Pattie Lee Coghill will be guest speaker at the monthly meeting of the Young Adults of the Winston-Salem Church on November 19. Plans will be made for the possible Young Adult Conference to be held on a Convention wide basis in March, 1950. S. R. Peebles is chairman of the Winston-Salem group.

Rev. Jesse Dollar resigned his pastorate with the Elon College Community Church Sunday November 6. During this fine pastorate the Elon College Community Church and Dr. Dollar have accomplished many things. One particular accomplishment is the building of the Parish Hall, adjacent to the parsonage.

Rev. Allen Hurdle, pastor of Belew Creek and Salem Chapel Churches, has revitalized the youth fellowship meeting at these churches and he has started "night services" at each church twice a month. Reports are that these are well attended. He and his family are enjoying the new parsonage constructed this summer.

The Happy Home Church, Route 2 Ruffin, N. C., recently raised at one service $3,000 with which to complete the payment of the indebtedness on the parsonage. The Church and Mr. Bowers, the pastor, are to be congratulated upon such a fine work as they have been doing during the last several years.

Speaking to the Piedmont Ministerial Association at Elon College Monday were: Rev. Thurman Bowers, president, who outlined the program of United Evangelism Advance and the suggested program of Evangelism for the N. C. & Va. Conference; Rev.

Mark W. Andes of Virgilina who outlined the Thanksgiving to Christmas Daily Bible Reading as suggested by the American Bible Society; Dr. W. T. Scott of Elon College who spoke on Evangelism as it will be set forth at the Greensboro meeting November 28 and 29; Dr. Raymond Dudley, who spoke on the work of our American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions.

O'KELLY CEMETERY BECOMES PROPERTY OF CONVENTION.

The trustees of "The O'Kelly Memorial Foundation," having been empowered to take such legal action as was necessary to have the Southern Christian Convention become the custodian of the cemetery where the body of Rev. James O'Kelly is buried and to secure a right-of-way to the same, in a meeting in Durham, North Carolina, on November 28, 1948, appointed committees to carry out the instructions of the Convention concerning the purchase of the O'Kelly Cemetery in Chatham County, N. C., where Rev. James O'Kelly was buried in 1826.

Mr. H. S. Basnight gave it as his opinion that the heirs of the late Dr. and Mrs. N. D. York, in giving a deed of sale of the O'Kelly farm in 1905, reserved one half an acre, including the rock enclosure of the burial place of Mr. O'Kelly and some twenty members of the O'Kelly family. Mr. Basnight had an attorney search the records at the clerk's office in Pittsboro, North Carolina, and the attorney confirmed the opinion of Mr. Basnight.

A survey was made to determine the exact bounds of the half-acre plot. Attorney J. H. Zollicoffer of Henderson, North Carolina, who had on several occasions given advice and consulted legal authority in the interest of the purchase, drew up the deed and had it sent to the different ones who had a legal right to sign the deed. On October 18, 1949, the deed was signed and each signature witnessed by a notary, the one-half-acre O'Kelly cemetery lot becoming the property of The Southern Christian Convention.

Attorney Zollicoffer besides his legal advice, writing of the deed and securing the signatures necessary, would not accept a penny of remuneration, not even for postage. He became interested from the first presentation of the objective and seemed to find pleasure in rendering his services.

ANNUAL CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference of Congregational Christian Churches met this week with the Ingram Church, near Halifax, Virginia. This Conference is comprised of 47 churches, mostly in North Carolina and a few of them just across the line in Virginia. Rev. Kenneth Register, minister of the Union Ridge Church, Burlington, N. C., is the president of the Conference and W. J. Andes, minister of the Winston-Salem and Pfafftown Churches, is the conference secretary. Rev. Robert Woodruff is the pastor of the host church.

Outstanding on the program were three addresses on the general theme of "Christ and the Clash of Faiths" by Dr. H. Shelton Smith, Professor of American Religious Thought at Duke Divinity School.

The Elon College Choir under the direction of John Westmoreland rendered a concert of sacred music on Tuesday night at 7:30 o'clock. This is a group of 70 well-trained voices.

Dr. Raymond Dudley, a mission secretary of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, spoke in behalf of the Mission work of the Congregational Christian Churches around the earth.

Among other leaders on the program was Supt. W. T. Scott, who spoke on "The State of our Ministry," and the "Need and opportunity for New Churches." Miss Pattie Lee Coghill, Education Director for these churches, directed the program of "Our Christian World Mission" as it relates to the local churches.

Rev. Allen Hurdle, minister of the Salem Chapel and Belew Creek Congregational Christian Churches, led the closing devotional service.

There were approximately 300 ministerial and lay delegates present.

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THEY SAID IT

Governor Kerr Scott of North Carolina was invited out to a church-sponsored Harvest Festival in Lenoir County last week. Among other things he was reported to have said that the greatest weakness in North Carolina was in its rural churches. He added, "Painting every ten years and cleaning up the graveyard every Homecoming Day is not enough." The first statement is debatable, but not the second. There are some fine, efficient and progressive rural churches in North Carolina, but there should be more. The economic basis of living in rural North Carolina warrants a vastly improved churches and church program. New facilities, new churches, new additions to present structures, renovations, multiplied services—these and a host of possibilities leap to our attention in any consideration of the rural church.

Dr. Clarence Poe has been editor of The Progressive Farmer for 50 years. The circulation of his publication has grown from 5,000 to 1,100,000 under his guidance. On the observance of his important anniversary he made this statement: "The Southeast, and especially North Carolina, is making faster progress than the Nation as a whole and the development of dairying has been especially remarkable." He said that more important than anything else he had done as an editor was his constant campaign for "two-armed" farming—productive of livestock as well as crops. He emphasized that crops bring income only six months of the year while livestock income rolls in for twelve months. While crediting the Southeast with more rapid strides now than any other section of the country, Dr. Poe said its greatest problem still is to develop a balanced system of farming. "What I'm trying to do now," said he, "is to bring up our livestock, dairy and poultry production. The Southeast is making very rapid progress now and if it can continue for five more years we'll be in great shape," he concluded.

We have the home base for great churches. Here we have the personnel and resources for vigorous churches. Never have we had so many allies in our warfare against evil—the evils of ignorance and poverty—and comrades in our march toward progress. This is a great age for the Church. God pity the Church if it marks time during this age of prosperity and progress.

WESTERN CONFERENCE

Record attendance, fine fellowship, excellent reports and an abundance of delicious food were marks of the seventy-ninth session of the Western Carolina Conference which met last week at Asheboro.

The Rev. Raymond Dudley, American Board secretary for India, was present and spoke of the searchlight which the teachings of Jesus are throwing upon Hinduism today. He indicated the ways in which the people of India see Christ working today—through educational, evangelistic and medical missions, through the work of missionaries among the outcasts. In the great work of missions, Mr. Dudley declared, we discover anew the adequacy of Christ. On hearing Mr. Dudley, one has a sense of joy and pride in the work of the American Board which now supports 400 workers in 14 countries.

The Asheboro Church gave a superb demonstration of hospitality. As an expression of gratitude for assistance they had received in their building program, they provided bountiful meals and made no charge. In the completion of their building program and the paying of all indebtedness, Dr. F. C. Lester and members of the church have established an enviable record. The new structure is an admirable example of beauty, utility and economy in modern church building. Any congregation of modest size and means which contemplates building should visit our Asheboro Church. Dr. G. O. Lankford spoke appropriately when he expressed the wish that thousands of people throughout the Convention could see this new church.

Another indication of substantial progress is found in the report of the Committee on Home Missions. The following achievements during the past year were commended:

Pleasant Ridge Church for the completion of its parsonage, placing their pastor in the community, making it possible for him to serve a group of churches.

Union Grove for renovating its interior and beautifying the grounds.

Seagrove for the steps it has taken in building a parsonage, looking forward to a full-time pastorate.

Sophia-Flint Hill (R) Churches for their parsonage which has been completed.

Brown's Chapel for their new Sunday school rooms.

Pleasant Hill Church, with its parsonage completed last year, now has a full-time pastorate.

Smithwood for their new heating plant, also for setting aside a building fund for a parsonage, having in mind a full-time pastorate.

Pleasant Cross Church for renovating the church and improving the grounds.

Hank's Chapel, which is making plans for a full-time pastorate.

Bennett Church for renovating its interior, making it more attractive.

Ether Church has made improvement by renovating, also is grouping with Seagrove and Shady Grove Churches.

The editor had not had the privilege of attending this Conference for a number of years. It was a happy privilege to renew many old acquaintances and meet for the first time a number of Sun subscribers. Many of the churches of this Conference are located in prosperous, growing communities. We are expecting great things of this Conference.

WHERE WE MEET GOD.

A Sermon

By LUTHER B. GRICE, D.D., Pastor,
Holy Neck Church, Holland, Va.

"And Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God."—Exodus 19:17.

Most of us would find it difficult to tell just when we first became aware of the presence of God in our lives. Many of us first were conscious of Him at our mother's knees in the great childhood prayer, "Now I lay me down to sleep . . ." Somehow our tender hearts melted in the amazing presence of God for then we met Him in a way we have never forgotten. Even though we are now adults the experience which came to us in this first prayer abides with us through the years.

Many points in life have given us a quickened sense of God. As a matter of fact, life itself is filled with the presence of God just as much as the earth is filled with life-giving air. We unconsciously breathe the air. There are times when people are very much conscious of breathing. Years ago one of my best friends was stricken with a critical heart condition; it was not many hours after this before the doctors had him under an oxygen tent. Breathing became a far different thing than what it is normally.

Many people do not become conscious of God in their world until some desperate moral problem overtakes them and they feel the absolute necessity of meeting with Him so that life may find deep and dependable spiritual resources.

It is one of the great poets of the English tongue, Robert Browning, who says: "Speak to him thou for he hears. Spirit with spirit can meet—closer is he than breathing, nearer than hands and feet."

It was one of the great Saints of the Christian faith who said, "We were made for thee and our hearts are restless until they rest in thee."

Many People Meet God in the Experience of Great Friendship.

How real and vital some friendships make God to us. Alfred Tenny-son and Arthur Hallam had one of the finest experiences of friendship. So great was this friendship that after Hallam died, Tennyson, a great man of letters, wrote one of the immortal poems in the English tongue—"In Memoriam." Tennyson could not think of his friendship with Arthur Hallam as something so temporary that death could put an end to it.

I sat one day in a select group of religious leaders in the great City of Chicago around a table in which all of us experienced the meaning of great friendship. Kagawa, one of the greatest Christians alive, spoke to us. There were other Japanese present but most of the group were Americans. I never can forget one of the statements of Kagawa to the group. He said: "I hope that the United States and Japan never go to war with one another, but if they do I want you to remember that we are brothers and friends and that I will continue to love you." In that hour those of us present in the heart of Chicago were keenly aware of the presence of God among us in this great expression of friendship. Did not the disciples of Jesus meet God in a most unusual way in the great friendship which they had with Him. He said, "You are my friends." Again, "I have not called you servants but friends."

The highest experiences open to human beings come to them when they know the meaning of friendship. Great friendship not only binds human beings together with unbreakable ties but also binds them to God.

In Moments of Great Vision We Meet God.

Isaiah had a transforming vision in the temple as he viewed the dead body of King Uzziah. He voices his experience of this vision in these memorable words: "In the year that King Uzziah died I saw the Lord high and lifted up." This initial meeting with God directed the course of his life for all the years to come. He found in this a call to a life of dedication to great ends as a prophet of God.

The great Apostle Paul said: "I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision." He went from this experience to become one of the great personalities in reshaping and remaking the world.

In the Old Testament we read: "Where there is no vision the people perish." They perish because they do not meet God and find new hope in Him. Great visions come to people in a variety of experiences. They come to them as they listen to great words about life, the world and God. They come to them in great hours of need. They come to them when they feel that they must rise to meet some great occasion. Many young men and women have had such experiences in educational institutions of higher learning. Colleges and universities provide youth with many such experiences.

In Moments of Temptation We Meet God.

Did not God come near Jesus in His fight with evil? An angel appeared to strengthen Him.

Bunyon, in his Pilgrim's Progress, has his leading character tempted in many ways. In all these ways he meets with a deeper sense and experience of God.

A New Testament promise says: "He will not suffer you to be tempted above that you are able to bear." The saints were those who "out of weakness were made strong."

"When he has tried me I shall come forth as gold." In this statement Job is saying that in the almost unbearable temptations of life he meets with God in a new and more rewarding way.

Jesus Christ himself went immediately from his temptation in the wilderness to begin his world shaking and world shaping ministry. God had met with him in so great a way that He had to begin his work immediately.

We meet God most hopefully, vitally and demanding in moments of supreme dedication. Isaiah saw God in his great dedication when he said: "Here am I send me." Luther found a new sense of the spiritual world when he said—these words in keeping

DR. I. W. JOHNSON AND OAKLAND.By DR. N. G. NEWMAN.*

Dr. I. W. Johnson came to Oakland Christian Church in June, 1898. He retired from this pastorate October 31, 1949. A happy and successful pastorate of fifty-one years has seldom occurred in the history of churches, and merits our highest appreciation and sincerest gratitude. Many and great have been the blessings bestowed upon us by a kindly Providence when he sent Dr. Johnson to direct us in the path of life and minister to our spiritual needs.

During these eventful years we have seen our church membership grow from 126 to 436. We have seen our Sunday school grow from a poorly organized and poorly taught institution of about 60 members to a well organized and efficiently taught school of 326 members. Then we had no women's organization. Today the Woman's Auxiliary is a strong factor in the life of the church. It is a live, benevolent, and missionary organization, and has made a large contribution to the spiritual life of the church.

We have seen our church plant develop from a single auditorium for all activities costing a total of $4,600, to the present imposing structure with two auditoriums, seven commodious classrooms, kitchen, heating plant and other modern conveniences, costing a total of $39,600. The year Dr. Johnson began his ministry at Oakland the church reported raised for all purposes $276. The last year of his ministry it reported raised for all purposes $17,000.

We have seen Oakland grow, under Dr. Johnson's ministry, from a self-centered church, consuming its resources chiefly in its own existence, to a benevolent and missionary church, supporting every enterprise of the Southern Convention, the interdenominational work of the state, responding to local needs, and sharing in the foreign mission work of the denomination in thirteen countries girdling the globe. Beyond all this, there has been a corresponding development in the moral and spiritual life of the church. For many years a spirit of peace and harmony has prevailed. Our recent great improvement program was carried out in a spirit of brotherly cooperation. Such things cannot just happen. They are the fruition of seed sown in good ground and faithfully nourished through the long years.

*This tribute to Dr. I. W. Johnson was prepared at the request of the members of Oakland Christian Church. With the acceptance of this paper went a recommendation that it be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Certain definite qualities of heart and mind in Dr. Johnson have made these achievements possible. His ministry has been characterized by humility of spirit, persistency of effort, clear and concise interpretation and application of the truths of the gospel, wise counsel to those who needed it, consolation to the sorrowing, and by conduct irreproachable commanded the highest respect and admiration.

In all of this great ministry, Mrs. Johnson has been a faithful and devoted co-worker. She has borne her full share of responsibility and rendered faithful and efficient service. For this we record our highest appreciation and sincerest gratitude.

Our hearts are sad, but we humbly bow to the inevitable. Our love and prayers shall follow to the end. May these latter days bring that calm and peaceful rest so richly deserved. May they be blessed with happy memories and sweet fellowship, and more—we covet for him, and his good wife, those ineffable joys that come to those who, losing their grasp on the things of time and sense, lay hold on the eternal realities.

TRIBUTE TO DR. I. W. JOHNSON.*

During the fifty-one full and fruitful years that Dr. Isaac Walter Johnson has served us as pastor, counselor, comforter and advisor he has exerted a great influence upon the character of Oakland Church and its members. He has endeared himself to young and old alike through a life of goodness and irreproachable moral character.

He is loved and respected by this particular group among whom he is fellowshiping tonight, because more than twenty-two years ago he conceived the idea that a class for the young married couples at Oakland could prove to be a valuable addition to the Sunday school and church. He saw that there was a great need for such an organization at that particular time, and as a result of his vision this active and progressive class came into being in October, 1927. In appreciation of his interest we sought the honor of becoming his namesake.

*This tribute was presented by Mrs. J. Rollie Gayle, teacher of the "I. W. Johnson Bible Class" of Oakland Sunday School, at a dinner meeting of the class, given in honor of Dr. Johnson's birthday, in October. At which time also Mrs. Gayle, on behalf of the class, presented a gift to Dr. and Mrs. Johnson. (The class instructed that this paper be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.)

We shall always be grateful to him for this honor and privilege. May we ever seek to emulate his high Christian qualities in every program of our class and our church. God forbid any of us to bring reproach upon his good name.

We will use the letters in his name as symbols of some of his outstanding qualities:

I. W. Johnson

I—Integrity—We all recognize that quality in his life as most outstanding. Honesty and fairness to and with all with whom he works and associates. He is upright and pure in moral character and lives always above reproach.

W—Workman—A skilled workman in his profession as minister of the gospel. He has studied to show himself approved unto God a workman that needs not to be ashamed, and for us, his congregation, he has rightly divided the word of Truth. He has proved himself a skilled workman not only in the pulpit, but in many other walks of life. He was a skilled workman in the field of planning and giving when he saw to completion two expansive building programs in our church during his ministry—in 1925 and in 1948-49. He grew for and with the church, and has set in motion forces for good that the future may reap.

J—Judgment—Good, sound, sane. Another outstanding characteristic. He allows time for thought and consideration before making decisions that involve important issues.

O—Observant—He possesses the faculty of recognizing and noting attitudes and qualities in human character. A quality that aids him in finding why a clock goes or fails to go. It aids him in locating the best fishing grounds, and what climatic conditions are favorable for a good catch.

H—Humility—That beautiful quality that is so much admired by so many. We recognize humility as being one of the most valuable qualities of a good leader.

N—Neighbor—Not only to those who live next door or on the same street, but neighbor in the Christian World Mission.

S—Sincerity—We believe that at all times the sentiments of his heart are consistent with the language of his mouth.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

WHICH COLLEGE?

Young people are going to college today in greater numbers. Twenty-five years ago it was the exceptional student that went to college. Today, it seems to be the rule, of course there are many exceptions, that the average high school graduate is either planning to go to college or hoping that some way will open up for him to go. More young people from the Congregational Christian Churches in the Southern Convention are going to college than ever before.

Elon College is the Convention's institution of higher learning. It belongs to our church. It exists for the church and should be patronized by the homes of our church. It is estimated that at least five hundred young people from the homes of our churches in the Southern Convention will be in college next year. Judging from the past fifteen years, there will be approximately 150 of our own young people enrolled in our own college. In many instances these young people know but little or nothing about Elon College. They are less informed about the college, its standing, its equipment, its offerings in the field of Christian higher education. They know more about other colleges than they know about our own. No one has taken the time or patience to inform them. If they knew about our own college they would doubtless be more inclined to enroll.

There are three sources from which they may secure information—their homes, their pastors, and their college. The college endeavors to furnish information to the pastors of the Convention and through them to the homes of our people. The college would be very happy to contact the high school graduates of our church directly but this cannot be done without the names and addresses of high school seniors. The college has made an effort to secure the names and addresses of the young people of the homes of our people who are seniors in high school. A personal letter has been addressed to every pastor in our Convention requesting this information stating that the college is anxious to contact these young people and inform them concerning our college. This letter was addressed on October 11. To date, we have received only six replies. This is an appeal to our pastors through our church paper to please forward information concerning our young people who are seniors in high school. This information will be a great contribution to the college and to the denomination. I know that our pastors are busy but it won't take long to secure this information and forward it. Brother pastor, may we have your cooperation in this important undertaking?

ELON HIGH SCHOOL DAY ATTRACTS MANY GUESTS.

[This article appeared in Maroon and Gold, the college paper, the week following High School Day.]

More than 1,000 high school guests thronged the Elon College campus last Friday afternoon, the occasion being the biggest "High School Day" program in the college history. The visitors, including seniors and their faculty sponsors, came from forty-three North Carolina and Virginia high schools.

The youth visitors began arriving before noon, and all through the afternoon they were registering in the rotunda of Alamance, from which point members of the Elon College student body guided them on tours of the campus, which showed them a varied picture of student life.

All departments of the college had arranged special exhibits, all of which were highly attractive to the high school visitors. The tour carried them through the library and out over a campus, which was rendered unusually colorful by the "Home-Coming Day" decorations, which adorned the dormitories and other buildings.

The visitors viewed interesting points on the West Campus and then moved past the beautiful new gymnasium, progressing then into the Science Building, where physics, chemistry, biology and journalism exhibits were on display. The visitors showed great interest in all of the displays.

A visit to the Student Union gave the guests a chance to buy refreshments at the Book Store and view recreational facilities. After seeing the home of the Elon Players in Mooney, they returned to Alamance Hall, where they passed to the upper floors and saw excellent exhibits by the Departments of Home Economics, Art, Mechanical Drawing, English and French.

At 4 o'clock the entire group assembled in Whitley Auditorium where President L. E. Smith welcomed them to the campus. The program in Whitley included entertaining musical numbers by the Elon Singers.

In the late afternoon the college was host to the high school groups and the Elon College students and faculty at a barbecue supper on the South Lawn. That night the high school students were guests of the college at the Home-Coming football game between the Elon Christians and the Purple Panthers of High Point with coronation ceremonies for the "Home-Coming Queen" and a tumbling show as extra entertainment.

The forty-three high schools and the number of seniors registered from each included Alamance 20, Alexander Wilson 26, Bells 16, Belhaven 32, Bragtown 13, Broadway 23, Cameron 14, Carthage 32, Cobb Memorial 20, Dabney 6, Deep River 16, Elon High 26, Fieldale (Va.) 7, Gibsonville 41, Goldston 14, Graham 39, Grays Chapel 17, Greensboro 1, Granby High (Norfolk, Va.) 5, Haw River 15, Jonesboro 23, Loew's Grove 20, Mayodan 17, McLeansville 20, Mebane 16, Pleasant Grove 15, Prospect Hill 8, Ramseur 25, Rankin 46, Robbins 5, Ruffin 17, Rural Hall 32, Siler City 34, Silk Hope 13, Stoneville 36, Summerfield 31, Sunbury 30, Sylvan 13, Virgilina (Va.) 12, Welcome 30, Wentworth 27, and Yanceyville 21.

The entire program was arranged and staged under the direction of Prof. J. Earl Danieleley, of the Elon Chemistry Department, who expressed his appreciation for the excellent cooperation on the part of other faculty members and the students.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

On Tuesday of this week the North Carolina and Virginia Conference will meet in annual session with Ingram Church, Ingram, Virginia. This will be the last annual meeting of the several conferences constituting the Southern Convention for this conference year. To date the college has received on apportionments from the several churches of these conferences through the Convention Office a total

Christian Missions

At Home and Abroad

THE JACKSONS FIND COMMUNISTS RUN TRUE TO FORM.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
August 27, 1949.

DEAR FRIENDS:

The Chinese ancients explained the seasons in the following manner: All creation is composed of five elements. Each element, in cyclical rotation, gains supremacy for a portion of the year only to lose it again to a stronger element. In the summer the god of fire is supreme; in the fall, the god of metal overcomes the god of fire and a new season begins. Winter comes when water overcomes metal. In the spring water is overcome by wood and so on.

Already there are many evidences around us that the god of metal is gaining supremacy. The days are gradually shorter and the heat is less intense. The fall of 1949 will decide many important questions for us and for the citizens of our city. The future of our churches and schools is in the balance. A new group of officials has just arrived to replace those who have been in power the past three months.

We are not certain if we will be able to continue. The government now being changed is being moved, it is said, because it has alienated the people. The climax came this past week in a rebellion by a group of peasant farmers from the Hoping district who are organized into a Society called the "Big Knife Society." The Big Knifers came to town last Friday and gave us all a scare. They carry guns and spears. When the shooting began we all locked ourselves in. After a morning of fighting Red troop reinforcements arrived from Kienyang and the Big Knifers retreated.

Three months under a Communist run government has been a disillusioning experience. When the Red troops first arrived, many wholeheartedly welcomed them as a change from the hopelessly corrupt Kuomintang government. When the troops arrived, they put up signs promising among other things no excessive taxation, no billeting of troops in people's homes, governmental reforms, protection of foreign lives and property etc. To date, these have all been empty promises. Officials apparently are assigned as reward for party loyalty and military service. The lack of good leadership is everywhere apparent. Those chosen not only are uneducated but know little about civil administration and even lack an appreciation of the rules of common courtesy.

Thus far we personally have received the protection of the new government, but whenever they have wanted our things (truck, gasoline, firewood, etc.) they have not hesitated to send soldiers to "borrow" them. Our buildings (with the exception of the hospital and our home) have all been occupied. If we leave Shaowu now, it is probable that everything—school, hospital and residence—will be taken over at once by the new government. This means the work in Shaowu will be closed until no one knows when.

Sometimes we get very discouraged and think that we cannot continue another day. For the past three months we have not been able to leave even if we wanted to. Now Foochow has been taken so we can get at least that far. The road down at present is infested with bandits, so it is not an easy trip. Again, sometimes something makes us realize just how much our being here means to the work and to our people so we resolve to stay always hoping for a turn in the tide.

We are now anxiously waiting to see what will be the policy of the newly installed local government. They are Northerners and are supposed to be better trained for work of this kind. Our new rulers face almost unsurmountable economic and social problems. We can see nothing but bitter suffering for the people in the years to come.

During these days I have come to understand the true meaning of the words "police state," intimidation and tyranny. I have thought often of the words of the poet Laodzu (about 600 B. C.) who wrote:

What is more fluid, more yielding than water?

Yet back it comes again, wearing down the tough strength

Which cannot move to withstand it.

*So it is that the strong yield to the weak,
The haughty to the humble.
This we know
But never learn.*

Cordially,

his faith—"I can do no other, God help me." Martin Niemoeller stood up and spoke his soul to Adolf Hitler. He said to this would-be dictator, "God is my Fuehrer."

Muriel Lester belonged to a wealthy English family. She was unwilling to live a life of ease and selfish pleasure. She went down into the east end of London and established a great community house in order to help multitudes of unfortunate people find the better ways of living. God became very real to her and has remained so throughout the years of her unusual service. You see something of how God came into her life in a moment of great dedication in the story of her life which she wrote—It Occurred to Me.

Mary Bethune is one of the significant personalities in American life today. She became such a personality through dedicating her life to the education of Negro youth. She established a college where such youth can find deeper experiences in higher education.

Dr. George Washington Carver had a living sense of the presence of God in his life always. He found this as he dedicated his life to the work of a great scientist.

Kirtley Mather is Professor of Geology in Harvard University. He has found a satisfying experience of God as he dedicated his life to the teaching of science. You can see this in his volume, Science in Search of God.

Much of the greatest poetry ever written has been set to great music. In fact, meeting God in great music has literally set life itself to music. Who could listen to the singing of a great musical artist without being lifted into the living presence of God?

We meet God in the hard experiences of life. When all seems lost he comes to us with a newer and deeper meaning.

Somehow God finds a new way into our lives as we experience sorrow and frustration. Abraham Lincoln lay dead in the City of Washington. New York City witnessed the grief of a great multitude of people. Some of REPORTS FROM SOCIETIES.

The following news items have been on hand quite a while, since I received so many at one time. They were held up because I could send only a few in at the time:

UNION (N. C.).

At the September meeting, all Circles met together.

We used the brochure Report from China from the packet for a program on China.

Before the program we had a Chinese supper. The tables were arranged to resemble a letter in Chinese. Place cards had "Congregational Christian" written in Chinese on them. The decorations on tables consisted of articles from China—shoes, flowers (artificial), china, blue willow china, china vases, and other things. Each table was decorated differently.

Three Life Memberships were presented during the meeting.

The meeting closed with installation of officers followed by a preview of plans for the new year.

TURNER'S CHAPEL.

Turner's Chapel has a small enrollment, but nevertheless, we have carried on with our work. So far as Achievement Goals are concerned, we are an Honor Roll Society. It is very nice to achieve these goals, but we are happier to know that we have had a part in trying to make God's word known to those who know it not.

We hope to do more and better work in 1949-50, and are ever mindful of Jesus' command when he said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." Perhaps we cannot go in person, but we can help those who can go by our prayers and our gifts.

In thinking about our new year's work which has just begun, we must realize that:

We are not here to dream or to drift,

We have hard work to do and loads to lift—

Shun not the battle, face it

'Tis God's gift—Be strong!

MRS. JOHN A. REDDING,

Secretary.

MT. BETHEL.

For the past year the women have been active, with regular meetings. We have attempted to meet requirements in addition to doing some things necessary to our local church building.

On October 1, we sponsored a birthday party at the church, and on October 22, we served a Brunswick stew to the public in order to raise funds to improve the church building and grounds. Both projects were successful and both Rev. and Mrs. C. Fred Allred, our pastor and wife, have been very helpful indeed in our work during the year.

DORTHY JACKSON'S FATHER.

It may be of interest to our Convention women that Mr. Louis Potter, father of Dorothy Potter Jackson, is now in Winston-Salem. Mr. Potter is Minister of Music in Centenary Methodist Church, and is now engaged, in addition to his regular duties, in directing the city-wide chorus in rehearsing Handel's "Messiah." Mr. and Mrs. Potter, and their son, are also now living in Winston-Salem. A recent letter from Dorothy and Dick stated that they were looking forward to the opening of Han Mei School—one of the most important parts of their work. They know the school could not open without funds, and it is heartening to know that the Convention women are now raising funds for that purpose in our annual Thank Offering Services.

NOTES FROM NORTH CAROLINA BOARD MEETING.

A set of worship services based on the Gospel of John is being prepared for use in local societies. Mrs. Carl Wallace, the Superintendent of Spiritual Life, will make these available to all groups in the Convention. They will be mailed out to all societies in North Carolina.

—o—

In the Achievement Goals, it is stated that the society should "increase its giving over that of the previous year." This was interpreted as meaning an increase in the apportionment giving only.

—o—

Instead of having several different rallies in the spring, we will have one North Carolina Rally on Family Life and Dr. Paul Reynolds, head of the Adult Department and Family Life of our national Board of Christian Education, will be the guest speaker.

DURHAM HAS FRIENDLY SERVICE PROJECT FOR CHILDREN.

Mrs. Carl Key is helping in planning the mission study and project for children in the primary and junior departments in Durham. The books, Sandy and Mr. Jalopy and Blueberry Acre, for primary and junior groups, respectively, are being used in stories for the worship programs each Sunday. A White Gift Service is being planned for two weeks before Christmas for the entire Sunday school. At this time gifts for the Migrant Center in Florida will be brought by all departments. The program will be presented by the primary and junior children using their study of the migrant work as the theme. This seems a good way to interest children in mission work and what this group is doing might serve to inspire other churches to plan mission studies and projects for their children.

STEWARDSHIP AND SPIRITUAL RENEWAL.

"The way a man spends his money is the surest clue to the kind of person he is. Money matters are religious matters and when the church asks for money it is asking the people to confess their faith by their actions," said Rev. Thomas K. Thompson, of New York, Secretary of Christian Stewardship of the Congregational Christian Missions Council, speaking Tuesday, October 18, in Minneapolis, Minnesota, before the joint 140th Annual Meeting of the American Board of

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

Indian Summer has lingered and the bees have been busy during the warm days before the snow comes and they must go into their cities until the spring returns. Many of us know bees only by their buzz or sting—and their sting is to be remembered!

The other day I watched some swarming into a hive in the side of a very old house. They were coming and droning in the warm sunshine. As I sat watching them, I thought of a book written some time ago by a man whose name is Frank S. Stuart. He wrote a make-believe book about bees called City of the Bees, but all the things he described do actually happen to bees.

It is not a book for boys or girls, but if parents or teachers read it, they could pass on to you the parts you could understand. He tells about the guards who stand at the door to keep away strange bees or other insects. He tells about the nurses who keep warm and feed the bee babies. He describes the bee itself with its many eyes, strange body and very important stinger. Some of the bee family must stand at the entrance of the hive and fan the air with their wings to "air-condition" their home, others must go for the nectar and still others must guard their queen.

Mr. Stuart describes a mouse who stole into the comb and was killed by many stings. Because even so tiny an animal as a mouse was too big for the bees to move, they built a covering around it of a waxy substance to preserve the body and keep it from spoiling their home.

How wonderful are the ways of God's creatures. How great is God's goodness in teaching all of his creatures understanding and cunning. Human's seem dumb in comparison with some of the animal and insect world. Each has a part in making God's universe.

The beekeeper is not afraid of being stung, and bees befriended by man seem to "remember" it. What secret understanding do God's creatures have for another? I do not know.

Remember the Psalm that says: "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, the world, and they that dwell therein."

STUTTERING ISN'T FUNNY.

By IRMA DOVEY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"We have a new boy at school, Mom. You ought to hear him talk."

"Oh? What's his name?"

"Sam. The boys call him 'Stuttering Sam.' He talks like this: 'C-c-c-catch the b-b-b-b-ball.'"

"Are you being good friends with him, Billy?" Mother asked.

"Yes, of course; only he's so funny. You ask him a question during a ball game, and by the time he gets around to answering, it's your turn to bat, or something."

"Billy, I wonder if you know how serious this is. You have been laughing at the way Sam talks, but instead, you must help—waiting to hear what he wants to say is very important."

Billy looked at his mother in wonder. This had started out to be only a joke for Mother, about Sam. Billy was rather proud of the way he could imitate Sam's stuttering.

"How do you know we ought to wait for him to talk, Mother?" he asked. "Maybe he'll speed up if we don't—well, baby him."

"Experts who have watched such boys have found that waiting to learn what they want to say helps them. Can Sam play ball?"

"Yes; he's pretty good."

"Why not tell him so? It makes you feel encouraged to know people think you do things well."

"Oh—all right."

"I went to school with a boy who stuttered. His name was Harry."

"Was he—pretty bad?"

"Yes. We used to call him 'Ha-Ha-Ha-Harry.' We laughed at him, and some of the children mocked him. I didn't, because I was such a bashful little girl; but I often think how much kinder we might have been. We knew it might hurt Harry's feelings, but we didn't know it might keep him from talking better."

"Will Sam always stutter?"

"I don't think so. I hope not. Those who have made a special study of the difficulty know so much more about stuttering than they used to. Some specialist may already be working with Sam's parents to find out what causes his speech trouble. It is quite possible that he will go away to another school where they can help him more."

"Cousin Sandra used to say 'tat' for 'cat.' But she can say it all right now," commented Billy.

"Yes, but that was baby talk. Aunt Sue just kept repeating words correctly for her and helping her to hear them correctly pronounced until she talked plainly. You used to say 'wun' for 'run,' yourself."

"Did I?" Billy's tone showed disbelief.

"You certainly did—all the time. We thought it was cute at first and let you go on saying it when we should have corrected you."

"I'm glad I was cured without having to go to a special school, or any thing like that."

"So am I, Son. Yours wasn't a serious difficulty. Many little boys and girls—boys especially—have trouble in learning to talk properly. But almost all can learn if they have help."

"I don't know how I could help Sam."

"Being kind to him is one way, I'm certain of that, and waiting for him to finish what he is saying is another. Take time to listen."

"I'll try, Mom."

campaigns, we want to make a special gift for this Christian work from our own cooperative club efforts," Mrs. Myers explained. "The need is still great, and every carload possible must go from Virginia."

The Clubs are now having bake sales, food auctions at club and county achievement day programs, and other affairs to raise the cash donation. These gifts are to be collected by county club chairmen and turned over to district chairmen by November 15. The commodity for the carload will be selected according to the total State funds, but the goal is at least $2,000, she said.

"We are especially pleased that our gift will be used for the State dedication, and have scheduled our mid-winter meeting of the Federation executive committee and board members for November 21-22, so that these club women may be in Richmond and participate in the dedication," she continued.

The Federation gift grew out of a suggestion made to Halifax County clubs by the editor of the Halifax Gazette, Lynn Shelton, of South Boston, Mrs. Myers said.

EXCERPTS FROM AN APPEAL FROM THE YOUTH OF EUROPE.*

"Give us freedom from fear of war—that is enough!" This appeal addressed to America by a Finish volunteer worker helping with the reconstruction of Lapland summarizes the greatest longing of the young people of all Europe.

I have worked with these young people in Poland, Germany, Finland, Italy, France and Belgium, during 23 months of the past three years, rebuilding schools, hospitals, and homes. Always the fear of another war has hung over their heads, war threatened, they feel, as much by the United States as by Russia. I have interpreted to them again and again that American people do not want war, that the American people do not threaten war, and only too readily they agree, remembering too well how little the people in their own countries wanted the last war, how completely their own government got out from under the control of the people.

Again and again I asked European work camp groups what they would want me to advocate back in America. Usually they would hesitate at first to speak their mind, but when I suggested that the problem seemed to be to convince Europe that we really intended peace they readily agreed. Asked if they would be convinced if we reduced our military appropriations from fifteen billion to five billion and increased our Marshall Plan aid from five billion to fifteen billion they looked at me with such a wistful longing that I felt ashamed of raising their hopes when I knew it was too much to hope for.

Consider, for example (the young people of Great Britain particularly would ask us), the 1,500,000,000 colored people throughout the world, for whose loyalty we are competing with the Communists. Our military might has absolutely no attraction for them, especially when our race relations here at home brand us as hypocrites. On the other hand, we can win the loyal cooperation of these hundreds of millions of colored people throughout the world. Britain in India is proving it. We can win, but only by practicing at home the equality of opportunity for all people, which we profess, and by actually providing the economic, educational, and humanitarian assistance to the depressed people of Africa, Asia, and Indonesia, which our tremendous productive capacity makes possible. This is the only road to peace. Can we see how much, how desperately much, the tortured people of the world want us to choose this road and renounce the road to war?

Most young people in Europe understand economics better than we do. They know that free-enterprise economics are threatened by periodic depressions when the people cannot buy the total production of the nation. They know that depressions can be avoided in two ways. They can be avoided, or at least postponed, by ever-increasing military expenditures, but everyone in Europe knows that Hitler proved this way to be the way of death. They also know that these depressions can be avoided by the cooperation of industry and agriculture with the government in social welfare programs that fully utilize the productive capacity of the nations.

Finally, young people in Europe would urge us to put our faith in world government, in full support of the United Nations. Whether they are from eastern or western Europe young people would say the same—the North Atlantic Pact is a rejection of the United Nations; it is an admission we consider the United Nations to have failed, that we consider cooperation with Russia in the United Nations to be hopeless.

It is an assertion that we choose to rely on the ways of force rather than on the ways of peace. They would say that this decision has not been forced upon us. They would say that the United Nations has not failed; the way of war has failed, but the way world government has not yet seriously been tried. How can it be otherwise when the United States has not spent as much as one-fifteenth of what we are spending on war preparations this year on the peacemaking institutions of the world government? What could happen if we invested one-fifth or one-third, or conceivably one-half, of our military budget in the peacemaking functions of the United Nations, of UNESCO, and the rest? The people do not expect us to do so; they are only too cynical and discouraged. They are only too likely to become increasingly bitter. But somehow, I still have faith. I have faith in the American people, in our good intentions, in our ability to see the right, and in our courage to do it, without fear.

I have faith in the responsiveness of people and of governments to such right behavior. I have seen such responsiveness on both sides of the iron curtain to the tiny demonstration of good will that the American people have made possible for the Quakers to carry out in a dozen countries of Europe. It is my hope that we will multiply these authentic demonstrations of good will. But it is my hope, above all, that we listen before it is too late to the appeal of the Finnish work camper in Lapland, and so win the peace of the world: "Give us freedom from fear of war. That is enough."

WORDS OF THANKS.

The family of Lacy Pressnell wish to thank the Seagrove, Spoons Chapel, and Pleasant Grove, Churches for their many nice gifts received from them as they leave this field and go to the Liberty, Smithwood, field.

The farewell dinner and gifts from the Seagrove Church—we will never forget.

The farewell service and the wonderful pounding the church at Pleasant Grove gave us in something we will always think of as a great day in our lives.

The Spoons Chapel Church was so nice to us, we can not use words to express our gratitude, so we will just say, thank you all, and God bless you.

Sunday School Lesson

JEREMIAH, A SPOKESMAN OF GOD.

LESSON IX—NOVEMBER 27, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Woe unto him that buildeth his house in unrighteousness, and his chambers by injustice; that useth his neighbor's service without wages, and giveth him not his hire.—Jeremiah 22:13.

LESSON: Jeremiah 1; 14:7-22; 20; 22:1-23; 32:6-10; 37, 38, 39.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Philippians 1:12-20.

A Sense of Mission.

This man Jeremiah had a deep conviction that he had been called, and a sense of mission. As he looked back on the experience, he felt that he had been called even before his birth, and that he had been commissioned to speak for God. The word of the Lord had come to him, of that he was sure. But like every honest man, he had felt a sense of unworthiness or of unpreparedness. He felt that he could not speak for the Lord, for he was even as a child. Like so many people he tried to "beg off" from the task to which he had been called.

But God empowers those whom He calls. He gives strength for the work. "Say not that I am a child," said God, "for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee, thou shalt speak. Be not afraid of their faces, for I am with thee to deliver thee." Furthermore the Lord put forth his hand and touched the mouth of the prophet, and thus symbolically put words in his mouth. He did more. He told the prophet, that seemingly weak as he was, he was to be set over nations and kingdoms, to throw down and to destroy, and to pull down, to build and to plant. In short he was to pronounce judgment in the name of the Lord upon those in places of leadership and power. God had a difficult task for this man, and He undergirded his life for this task.

How satisfying it is to have a sense of mission. What stability and peace and power it gives to life to know that one has a task to do. What inspiration it gives to have direction in life, to feel that life has a meaning, direction, purpose. As a matter of fact religion at its best gives a sense of mission and direction and power. And this is true not only of ministers and missionaries, but of many humble men and women who live at peace with themselves and who have poise and power in life because they have found meaning and direction in life through religion.

Out of the Depths.

Jeremiah, like Elijah, was a man of like passions as we are. He had his times of discouragement and temptation to doubt. He "got himself in Dutch" with one of the high dignitaries, who promptly humiliated him by putting him in the stocks overnight. Released in the morning he sternly denounces his persecutor. But then he begins to think about his lot in life, and in plaintive tones and in pathetic words he cries out against his lot. But there is no escape or recourse. If he kept silent the word of the Lord was as a burning fire shut up in his bones. Woe was he if he did not proclaim the word of the Lord. Many of God's servants have shared the prophets' experience. There is always the temptation to become weary in well doing. There comes sometimes the sense of injustice. There comes a recognition of the hard lot of the man who faithfully speaks the truth, cost what it may. The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak, and the man cannot escape the prophet even as the prophet cannot escape the man.

Moral Courage.

Jeremiah had to rebuke those in high places. He had to stand before the king and pronounce judgment upon the nation, and call the king to repentance. He had to announce the doom that hung like a dark shadow over his beloved nation. He was accused of being a traitor to his country because he thus boldly brought charges against her for her sins. He publicly denounced the king for his irresponsibility, and for the betrayal of his high office. It took courage to do this, courage of the highest type, moral and spiritual courage. But this man, timid by nature, sensitive in spirit, was bold to speak the word of God. Like many of his forebears and his successors, he did not fear the face of men, because he had seen the face of God.

We need more men like him today. We need more ministers who will rebuke sin in high places. But we also need more people in the common walks of life who will manifest the spirit of moral courage in their everyday contacts. The smutty story, the flippant remark, the open profanity or blasphemy should be rebuked tactfully but firmly by those of us who name the name of Christ. The fact is that all too many of us do not have moral backbone.

Faith in Dark Days.

One section of today's lesson illustrates in a dramatic way the faith of this man in dark days. A piece of land, the property of his cousin, so it seems, was for sale. Its value was very doubtful for the fall of Jerusalem and the complete conquest of the whole country was evidently close at hand. But the prophet bought the piece of land, thus bearing witness to his faith in the future of Judah, a time when there would again be a settled state of society in which houses and lands would again be freely bought and sold. It was an act of faith, breath-taking when seen against the background of the dark days in which it took place.

Faith for dark days, how desperately we need that. For sooner or later life tumbles in on us. Every man, with but few if any exceptions, has a date with trouble, and she always keeps it. Only faith can give the victory. But it is not belief in something so much as it is personal trust in somebody that fortifies life from within, and gives the victory that overcomes the world. Faith, living faith, either insures against defeat, or brings victory out of defeat.

A Bearer of Bad News.

Hated by the princes of the court, who had the prophet put down a deep cistern in which fortunately there was no water, and rescued by the kindly act of a slave, Jeremiah at last stood before the king. "Is there any word from Jehovah," asked the king. "There is," replied the prophet. "Thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon." No shilly-shallying, no dodging the issue, no sugar-coating the truth. Like many another spokesman of the Lord, this man had to announce the judgment of God on sin, personal and national. The proclamation of the goodness sometimes involves the proclamation of bad news of judgment.

them in that moment felt that the United States as a nation was done. James A. Garfield, who was later to be President of the United States, arose and made a brief talk to a great throng of people. As they listened he said: "God lives and the Government in Washington will go on." This new hope of the presence of God in the life of the nation gave new courage and inspiration to all those frustrated people.

It was Job who said, "Though he slay me yet will I trust him." In his experiences of great anxiety and sorrow he found that life was undergirded by great spiritual realities. "I had heard of thee by the hearing of the ear but now mine eye seeth thee."

In the Book of Psalms this question is asked, "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" This seems to many that life can arrive at a point from which there is no way out. Some person of faith and great hope has answered this question about what the righteous can do when the foundations are destroyed. This is the answer: They can keep right on being righteous. This is true because they meet God in hope, in spite of everything.

In the twenty-third Psalm, which has been called "the Nightingale of the Psalms," occur these words of great promise: "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil for thou art with me."

The New Testament has this statement uttered by people who in an experience of deep sorrow said: "We sorrow not as though we had no hope."

In the most desperate hours of his life John Bunyon wrote Pilgrim's Progress. Today a great multitude of men and women whom no one can number, can, if they decide to do so, meet God the Father of us all in a world-wide experience of personal grief and loss. There never has been a day when people have felt more frustrated than now. People are not having an easy time in this world today in any particular. The coming of tomorrow will not make it much different. Think of it as we may, all of us are living in a dreadful time. So far as we are able to see we will continue living in such a time for many years to come. In such an experience only God can make the things that matter most real to us. In such a time we feel like joining with Paul in saying: "If God be for us who can be against us."

St. Augustine said, "One loving heart sets another on fire." This is one way of saying that we touch God in great, good and Christlike personalities. In other words we see Him in the best men and women we know. Attractive personalities help us to meet God. We meet him in those who are filled with his spirit. It is said of some of the men in the New Testament: "They took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." God-like men and women make God real.

Dan Poling a prominent Baptist minister of Philadelphia, lost a promising son in World War II. He tells about this son in a rather unusual story called Your Daddy Did Not Die. This was written in the form of letters to the child of his dead son.

My friend, Dr. Ernest M. Ligon, of Union College in New York State, writes a brief introduction to this book. He knew Clark Poling in the City where he teaches and where Mr. Poling was a minister. He says that "he met God" in a most rewarding way in the personality and spirit of Clark Poling.

Christians feel that they meet God most vitally in Jesus Christ—"He that hath seen me hath seen the father." Jesus alone has brought God closer to us in saving redemption and satisfying ways. Somehow when we think of God we think of Jesus. He is so completely identified with God in our thoughts, experiences and living that we always think of Him when we think of God. "The father and I are one."

What Happens in Our Lives When We Meet God?

We are made acutely aware of our need of moral and spiritual cleansing and forgiveness. We are given a new status as the "children of God." We cry "Abba Father." We are given a new start in life. We are quickened in our innermost being to greater living. A new lift comes into life. Fresh hope for all the days before us is given.

We know as we have never known what it means to hope in God.

We have a new experience in what the New Testament calls "life to the full." "I am come that they might have life and that they might have life to the full." We are able to see the world in a new light. We see ourselves in a larger way than ever before. We see the significance of people as we never have before. We are given a new interest in our responsibilities and privileges of working together with God and all good men in the making of the best possible world. We are given the power to see whatever may come through to a victorious conclusion. We are given a new power of endurance—"love endures all things."

The Supreme Opportunity of the Church in the World Today Is to Help People Meet With God.

The oldest name for a church building was "The Meeting House." This meant that people met one another as the children of God in a great and growing experience of common friendship. They thought of themselves as brothers and sisters together in Christ. The Meeting House also meant supremely that they met with the great God of the earth, the sky, the larger universe and of the human heart. In the House of God men pray, they repent, they dedicate themselves to God; they worship God; they have friendship with one another as His children and with Him as their father.

The Church of Christ seeks to have a world order in which war will be no more. It seeks to bring all people to a saving knowledge of Christ the world around. In all that the Church seeks to do for men it means to bring them into the living presence of God. If we are conscious of God's presence in our lives and in our world, life will have its richest and most rewarding meaning; but if we do not have this, life will lose its zest and its meaning.

Foreign Missions and the 22nd Annual Meeting of Mid-West Regional Congregational Christian Churches.

The Every-Member Canvass held annually by thousands of churches in many denominations may be a "time of great spiritual renewal," said Mr. Thompson, if properly prepared and executed. The secret of a successful canvass is a large group of canvassers carefully prepared, who go out to tell the story of the church and its work in every home in the parish. The Missions Council of Congregational Christian Churches has prepared a complete set of "tools" to help their canvassers do this in a nation-wide campaign called Planned Education for the Every-Member Canvass.

A year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN will make a wonderful Christmas gift for a sick or shut-in friend.

The Orphanage

DEAR CO-WORKER:

Forty orphanage children made good with their pageant presented to the packed house at the Western North Carolina Conference on this past Wednesday night. And, by the way, I wish to tell you that that was one of the best Conference sessions I have attended in many a day. Everything was planned well, the layman president, Mr. George T. Gunter, did an excellent job, and the Lesters and their church set a record hard to surpass in hospitality. The children will present the same program to the Burlington Sunday School tomorrow (November 13), and again to the Burlington Rotary Club on November 21. Mrs. Truitt and three house matrons—Miss Hattie Brakefield, Mrs. Oie Black and Mrs. Nancy Whitt—have done a good job in training these children for the program. First Sunday in December it will be presented at the 11:00 o'clock service in the Pleasant Hill (Alamance County) Church. It is a biblical pageant expressing the songs of thanks all the way from Moses to Mary, the mother of Jesus, and takes 25 minutes to perform it. Many churches should see it, and the children in it.

Thanks to Editor House and Managing Editor and Publisher John T. Kernodle for last week's SUN. Thanks for the extra copies, and thanks to Mr. Kernodle for 25,000 Thanksgiving envelopes which he donates as his Thank Offering for the boys and girls. We hope these envelopes come back home bringing gifts humbly and gratefully given. Millions of dollars are spent on most gorgeously beautiful horse-racing tracks, millions on the races themselves, millions of dollars for fun and recreation—and no complaint by anybody—but why not lay down a few thousand for these dear little children? That is my question. How about investing in the happiness and welfare of these homeless, unfortunate boys and girls? How about remembering them in your spending. Let the Christ tell you that "in as much as you did it unto the least of one of these ye did it unto me?"

Some really good gifts are showing up in this week's report. The big-hearted donors are being thanked with sincerest appreciation. A list of donors of good, clean clothing is attached and the donors thanked. If the clothing is like you would be glad for your little girl or boy to wear to the college chapel to church, or to greet their friends on the lawns or fields here, send it along. Otherwise send us the money and let us purchase exactly what they need. All are commended for the clothing sent thus far.

The land is dry enough to sow grain again. You should have seen me on one of the tractors this morning! I was a little frightened when I felt the power and pull of it, but it was much better than old "Carey" the family mule of forty years ago. I didn't stay on the tractor long enough to do more than create a little fun for the fellows who really knew how to handle it. This whole business is fun, every inch and yard, and child of it. Come to see us and see for yourselves that it is one of the really constructive corners in the vineyard of the Lord. In the shoes of some of these boys and girls stand some of God's good chances for tomorrow. If you get a thrill out of helping them, do it now.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

MUSINGS OF A SOCIAL ACTION COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN.

By BERNARD V. MUNGER,
Chapel Hill, N. C.

Has the spirit of Isaiah been given a fair deal in your thinking about these Sunday school lessons we've been studying recently? He hasn't if his denunciations of social wrongs hasn't been made specific, and local! Oh, there's little doubt concerning how specific that recent "temperance" lesson was made. But, how specific were his exhortations and denunciations made if they dealt with other areas of life in our communities? Did we make it clear, for instance, that Isaiah, an out and out pacifist, was talking about such things as our own misplaced trust in the Atlantic Pact and our atom bomb pile? Did we point up how Isaiah's plea that we "execute justice between a man and his neighbor," might be pertinent to the discrepancy between many school buildings for Negro children in comparison to neighboring schools for white children? Did we make it clear that Isaiah was the kind who would not have let it go unmentioned in his day were a great trust trying to cover up its lawlessness by propaganda about "good food sold cheap?" Surely that lesson in which Isaiah talked about "monopolies" should have caused a bit of investigation concerning the current suit against the A. and P. The spirit of Isaiah would have at least led us to insist that the "facts" should have an airing. For instance, his spirit would move us to question whether the full-page advertisements of the A. and P. tell the whole truth. They do not tell that the A. and P. was convicted and fined because it "willfully and unlawfully formed and carried out a wrongful and unlawful combination and conspiracy to unduly, unreasonably, and directly restrain interstate trade and commerce in food and food products. . . ." Further, there is no mention in the adds that the conviction was upheld when the case was appealed. Nor is the reader given any assurance whatever that the A. and P. did "cease and desist" from the practices of which they were convicted!

In like manner, I think the spirit of Isaiah's denunciations of oppression and community unconcern would have led us to consider some facts about the Hart Mills Strike at Tarboro. The prophets were never ones to evade an issue because it was close at home. They would have had a word to say in denunciation of an absentee ownership which considers the welfare of a whole North Carolina community to be relatively unimportant. I doubt if Isaiah would object to a Sunday school teacher or student condemning an absentee ownership so fanatically opposed to labor's self-organization that back in the late 1920's it liquidated a whole mill, rather than practice collective bargaining. Isaiah's sympathies with the common man were such that he would have grieved that one old man, thousands of miles away from the scene of the suffering, could, by his stubbornness, cause men, women and children throughout a whole community to suffer or else give up their rights and their dignity! (I should add, lest it seem that I think Isaiah was exclusively "pro-Labor," that I think Isaiah would no doubt have applied some of his sharpest denunciations to that bushy-browed Mine-Worker's boss who is acting just like the old man from the Middle west whose word is holding up a settlement in Tarboro.)

However, we think about these matters, I don't believe that we can think that Isaiah would have approved of any discussion of "social righteousness" unless that discussion had at least tried to come to grips with such matters as these! For that reason the Social Action Committee Report given at the meeting of the Eastern North Carolina Conference urged all members of our churches to give particular consideration and study to the Sunday school lessons which deal with the prophets. Since giving that report, and mailing it out to the churches, I've been wondering if the spirit of Isaiah has been getting a chance to lead us to specific matters which have a right to get discussed in Sunday school classes, because they are woven right into the very fabric of our daily living.

TRIBUTE TO DR. I. W. JOHNSON.

O—Only—Only pastor many of us have ever known. He has performed for many of us and our families the official ceremonies of the church. He has led us in worship, in song, in Bible study, and in Christian living. He has shared with us our joys and our sorrows. We have enjoyed together many rich hours of fellowship.

N—Noble—Webster defines noble as being great in deeds and acts. Paul in contrasting the members of two churches he had established said, that the people at Berea were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they searched the Scriptures daily to find if those things were so. We have reason to believe that Dr. Johnson is noble in the Bible sense of the word. We believe he searches the Scriptures daily, because for fifty-one years and four months he has given us the benefit of the knowledge gained thereby.

Since fishing is Dr. Johnson's favorite recreation we would like to dedicate to him the following poem by Edgar Guest:

Out Fishin'.

A fellow isn't thinking mean—out fishin'.
His thoughts are mostly good and clean—out fishin'.

He does not knock his fellowmen, or harbor any grudges then.

A fellow's at his finest when—out fishin'.

A fellow's glad to be a friend—out fishin'.
A helpin' hand he'll always lend—out fishin'.
The brotherhood of rod and line an' sky and stream is always fine,
Men come real close to God's design—out fishin'.

A fellow isn't plotting schemes—out fishin'.
He, only busy with his dreams—out fishin'.
His livery is a coat of tan; his creed—to do the best he can;
A fellow's always mostly man—out fishin'.

of $10,724.63, which means that so far as the college is concerned it is more than four thousand dollars short of its total apportionment. I trust that the Sunday schools and churches are aware of the fact that the college year runs concurrently with the calendar year and that these churches have the opportunity of completing their conference apportionments for the college on or before January 1, 1950. Should these churches be fully aware of the needs of Elon College and the opportunities they have to give encouragement to the college in its heroic efforts to maintain a commendable and effective program of education, I am sure that they would put forth every possible effort to raise their apportionments in full.

Prayer for Use in Connection with CROP

And behold, a certain lawyer stood up and made trial of him, saying, Teacher, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

And he said unto him, what is written in the law? how readest thou?

And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself.

And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right; this do, and thou shalt live.

—LUKE 10:25-28.

Our Father:

We come to Thee today in humble thankfulness for the rich harvest of life-giving products from the fruitful earth. For the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof.

We thank Thee for our daily bread from the fullness of the earth.

And, on this Sabbath, we thank Thee for the opportunity to turn our eyes and our hearts across our bountiful fields, across our meadows, our gardens and our homes to our neighbors over all the earth. For Thou hast made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth.

We know that many of our neighbors over the earth are in want; for their daily bread, for clothing, for shelter, and yes, for Christian love. We pray that our efforts to share life's material goods with them, through Christian giving in Thy name, will follow the gleam to fulfilment of Thy Kingdom.

Give us the strength to keep our weak brothers, our neighbors, from perishing.

Give us the wisdom to be merciful to them, as our Father is merciful.

Give us the faith of our fathers, the faith to hold high the cross of Christian brotherhood through our help to our brothers across the vast plains, the towering mountains and the deep seas. Thus can we love Thee with all our heart, and with all our soul, and with all our strength, and with all our mind.

This we pray, so that we shall inherit eternal life in service to Thee. Amen.

The Thanksgiving Guest

By Charles A. Wells

One of the most ironic things about our American civilization today is revealed when we sit down in the midst of our bounty and consider the Pilgrim fathers who gave us the Thanksgiving festival. They were surrounded by constant physical dangers; they knew little comfort from the elements; their ranks were swept by famine and illness. Yet they gave America an early inheritance of calm, steady nerves, serenity and courage that endured as our national characteristic until modern days. But now in the midst of an abundance greater by far than that of any other nation, blessed by a hemispheric security also unique in the experience of men, we seem to be about the most hurried, harassed of all people. Foreigners come here from shattered Europe and are shocked by the enormous sense of anxiety we reveal. We apparently have everything but faith. But when faith is missing, everything else must take a discount. And that was what the Pilgrim fathers had—faith—faith in God, themselves. We must ask the Pilgrim fathers to sit at our tables this Thanksgiving season that we may acquire some of their deep abiding faith, seasoned by danger, but cultivated by prayer and quiet meditation.

News Flashes

The Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Meeting will meet in Central Church, Atlanta, on Wednesday, November 30. Dr. Thomas Anderson is the president.

Greetings have been received from Mrs. William Harrell and Mrs. W. B. Williams who attended the sessions of the women of the E. & R. Church and the C. & C. Church last week.

Sunday morning services of the Rosemont Church are being broadcast during November over station WRVC-FM, Norfolk, Virginia. The sermons are given by the pastor, Rev. H. G. Councill, Jr.

The Southeastern Area Preparatory Conference of the National United Evangelistic Advance will be held in Greensboro, November 28 and 29. Conference leaders announced include Dr. Wofford C. Timmons, Dr. Arthur S. Wheelock, minister of the Church in the Highlands, White Plains, New York; Rev. Albert E. Couch, Executive Director of the Cleveland (Ohio) Union; and Rev. Paul W. Rishell, minister of South Church, Brooklyn, New York.

Holy Neck church has two new and well equipped Sunday school rooms. The rooms were dedicated some time ago. A number of people gave liberally toward these rooms. Garland Gray of Waverly, Virginia, gave a fine lot of lumber. Rochelle Eason of our church gave a fine gift of lumber. Camp Manufacturing Company of Franklin gave a gift of money. Loren P. Waldo of Holland Church drew the plans for the building. Many members of the church gave generously of time and labor. Walter C. Rawls of St. Louis, Missouri, gave a gift as a memorial to his father. The actual money cost of the building was $5,486.56. Had it not been for the gifts of money, lumber and labor the cost would have been much more than this.

CRESCENDO OF RESIGNATIONS.

Two resignations were announced almost simultaneously by ministers who will succeed Dr. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk, Virginia. Dr. Jesse H. Dollar, pastor of the Elon Community Church, has accepted a call to the Liberty Spring Church and will begin his ministry there in February. Dr. Dollar has this to say concerning his call to Liberty Spring: "There are almost unlimited possibilities there, and I believe within the next ten years or so we can develop one of the outstanding rural churches in the country. That will be my aim.

DR. DOLLAR.

I am not going there to 'retire,' but to try something I have felt for a long time somebody should be doing in our rural churches."

Next in the crescendo of resignations within the Convention is that of Dr. H. S. Harcastle of Newport News who will become pastor of Berea (Nansemond) and Oakland Churches, February 15. Dr. Harcastle succeeded Dr. Dollar at Newport News.

It is gratifying to know that these two men are not being lost to the Convention in this general ministerial shakeup. Both have rendered valuable services wherever they have been, and THE SUN bids them Godspeed in their new parishes.

LANGDALE, ALABAMA.

Rev. Melvin Dollar is just beginning his fourth year as pastor of the Langdale Church, Langdale, Alabama. During the three years he has served as pastor, 254 members have been received into the church. Physically, the church has been completely remodeled, with a Religious Education Department being added to the original plant.

Mr. Howard Morris has been secured as minister of music. He received his training at Berry and Peabody Colleges, and has had ten years experience in teaching music in high schools and directing church choirs. He is now preparing a Christmas Cantata of 33 voices, to be presented Sunday night, December 18. It is anticipated that through his leadership the church has much to look forward to in the field of music.

A LETTER TO DR. O'NEILL.

Newport News, Va.,
November 5, 1949.

Dr. W. B. O'Neill
Holland, Va.

DEAR DR. O'NEILL:

As you know, the Eastern Virginia Conference commissioned me to write you, on behalf of the Conference, a word of appreciation of your services to the Conference and the larger fellowship of which the Conference is a part. I am glad to carry out this commission. I hope that an informal letter will be just as acceptable to you as a formal resolution.

The Conference is well aware of the contribution which you have made to it during your pastorate within its bounds. You have not only developed the local church, which is one of the most effective ways of strengthening the Conference itself, but you have given your time and your thought and your energy to the work of the Conference, and to the Convention of which the Conference is an integral part, and thus you have made a great contribution to the Conference and to the Church of Christ.

You have studied to become acquainted with the polity and the policies of the Conference, you have served it in many ways, and you have shown a fine spirit of loyalty to it. Your integrity of character, your wisdom, your sound judgment, and your fine spirit have enriched the Conference and strengthened its hands to do the work of the Master better. As an

DR. HELFENSTEIN COMES TO RICHMOND.

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, has accepted the call to the First Congregational Christian Church, Richmond, and will begin his duties there as minister on the first Sunday in December. Well known as a minister in the Eastern Virginia Conference and the Southern Convention to older members of our constituency, we believe that a sketch of his services will prove of interest to our younger group.

Who's Who in the Ministry reveals that Dr. Helfenstein is a native of Iowa, having been born in Fairfield and spending his youth in Marshall county. His father, Rev. David M. Helfenstein, became the pastor of the First Christian Church of Des Moines just about the time that he was ready to enter college, and he entered school there receiving his B. A. degree from Des Moines College in 1910. He graduated from Yale Divinity School, receiving his B. D. degree in 1913. He also received his Master's degree from Yale University Graduate School.

The following year he did graduate work in the University of Edinburgh, Scotland—afterwards traveling extensively on the continent as a member of a group of students from Edinburgh, Glasgow, Oxford and Cambridge Universities, doing religious and sociological research. In 1917 he received the honorary doctorate degree from Defiance College, Ohio, in recognition of his extended research study and his "uniquely valuable pastoral service."

In the summers of 1928 and 1935 Dr. Helfenstein was one of the fourteen American pastors from various denominations constituting a Goodwill Fellowship Team sent by The American Council on Interchange of Preachers and Speakers between the Churches of Great Britain and America as guest speakers in churches and service clubs and to youth groups in England, Scotland and Holland. In 1930 he was an official delegate to the World Council of Congregational Churches held in Bournemouth, England, and in the summer of 1932 he was a member of The American University Seminar to Palestine, at which time a party of twenty-eight ministers and university professors spent the summer in Palestine and in the Mediterranean countries associated with the Missionary Journeys of St. Paul. The summer session of The School of Archaeology and Oriental Research in Jerusalem also was attended by the group.

Dr. Helfenstein was pastor at Urbana, Illinois, from 1914 to 1920, the last year of which pastorate he was also chaplain of the University of Illinois located in Urbana-Champaign. From 1920 to 1938 he was pastor at Dover, Delaware, which church was for a great part of that time a member of the Eastern Virginia Conference. During his pastorate in Dover, he received more than seven hundred people into the membership of the church. During the earlier part of his pastorate there one of the most modern church buildings and departmental religious education plants in the entire country was erected and paid for in full—the building and equipment costing more than a quarter of a million dollars at that time.

In the summer of 1938 Dr. Helfenstein received an invitation from the Mason City, Iowa, Church to become its pastor. During his pastorate in Mason City two extensive remodel-

OPEN THE BOOK AND READ.

For a few years before World War I, one of the most popular songs was entitled "Everybody's Doing It." The song had little merit but its title has a meaning 'way beyond its own day. For who does not know the value of getting many people to do the same things at the same time? Specifically, the fact that millions of people across the world are reading identical Bible passages from Thanksgiving to Christmas causes other people to join the procession. The impetus of concerted reading is a powerful lever to encourage people to start. Encouragement of Worldwide Bible Reading helps every individual and every activity in a congregation or society. Promotion of Bible reading in a local church interferes with none of the usual ongoing activities. It undergirds them and invests them with new spirit and with divine life. It is the most valuable supplement possible to any other emphasis of the church, regular or special. But we want the seed of Bible reading to be sown so as to bear many fold, not to sprout up quickly from Thanksgiving to Christmas and then wither away by the time 1950 has come. After a good start let us be sure that Bible reading is not suffocated by daily chores or the cares and pleasures of the world.

May every believer in Bible reading take to heart seriously the truth that wider use of the Bible starts with himself. One who does read the Bible daily, does by his very regularity demonstrate his conviction that the Scriptures are a healthy, vital and strategic element in his personal life.

The ultimate translation of our Bible (now available in 1,108 tongues) is its translation into our personal lives. The Bible must be opened reverently, yes—but also regularly and expectantly. There is no substitute for conscientious Bible reading. Open the BOOK and read!

PRONOUNCEMENT ON CHINA.

"A tremendous obligation rests upon Christians in America to withhold hasty judgment on China, to seek to understand what is going on, and to continue in every way possible their help to the people of China under whatever form of government they strive to work out their national salvation. The American Board is at work in China for the welfare of the Chinese people," says the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in a statement issued from International Headquarters in Boston, Massachusetts.

"Regardless of the way we in America feel about, the fact becomes increasingly evident that the people of China are either accepting, or expecting soon to accept, a leadership directed by men who are Communists. The 'People's Government' is controlled by such leaders, but it includes a host of others, not party members, who are willing to go along with them. A growing despondency which characterized life under the old regime is now displaced by a fairly pervasive spirit of hopefulness. . . . Hence it is a condition, not a theory, which confronts us.

"The bulk of our work in China is continuing. The great majority of our American Board missionaries are still on the field courageously and patiently at work. Missionaries on furlough are planning to return and some of them have already received from the 'People's Government' the necessary permission to do so.

"There is reason to believe that new recruits, young, able, consecrated and adaptable to the new and undoubtedly more difficult conditions of life and work than have obtained in the past, can be found and will be permitted to go to China in answer to the urgent and repeated calls from the Chinese Church for reinforcement. . . ."

From information received through direct channels American Board leaders feel that "there is great hope that Protestant Christianity can continue its service to China under the new conditions."

THE WHY AND WHEREFORE OF CHURCH UNION.

Through their disunity Protestant Churches are "conveying a distorted and false idea of the whole meaning of Christianity itself," says Dr. Truman B. Douglass of New York City, Executive Vice-President of The Board of Home Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches in an article appearing in the December issue of the Woman's Home Companion.

On December 14 at Greenwich, Connecticut, the leaders of a dozen Protestant denominations, representing approximately half the Protestants in the United States, will meet for a conference on church unity, says Dr. Douglass, adding: "It will not be just another talk-fest on the virtues of cooperation. The participants are pledged to devise ways to bring about an immediate and effective merger of Protestant forces in the United States. So long as different denominations exist, each will try to justify its existence by showing how it is distinguished from all the others. This leads to a lack of emphasis on the central concerns of religion. It means that the churches, claiming to know the secret of reconciling men to one another, often appear instead to divide the members of a community. They seem to spend more time in trying to prove one another wrong than in showing that Christ was right," comments Dr. Douglass, whose article is entitled, "Let's Unite Our Churches—Now."

Described as an article that will "make you cheer—or make your blood boil," Dr. Douglass' thoughtful presentation will be of deep interest to Protestant Christians of all denominations. Discussion is being stimulated by an award from the magazine of a $500 United States Saving Bond for the best letter written in on "Why I am for Protestant Church Unification" and "Why I am Against Church Unification."

Discussing the question of differences of opinion over doctrine and creed, Dr. Douglass says:

"Any plan of union which requires persons to surrender or compromise their deepest convictions must be rejected. . . . No one seriously interested in church unity has any idea of imposing on all the denominations some form of church life which has uniformity of practice and belief. We hold that a united church can be just as hospitable to differences and varieties as are the existing denominations. What is really needed is a basic shift in loyalty." The primary loyalty of church goes ought to be to the whole church and its whole mission not just to some little part of it.

Most Protestant leaders, says Dr. Douglass are convinced that "the unity now possible will leave room for wide diversity of belief, but will unite Christians around their central convictions and purposes so they can work together at their common task."

In concluding his comprehensive article Dr. Douglass suggests three ways in which any one interested in church union can help achieve it. First, "Ask your own minister whether your denomination will have a representative at the December conference or at any future conference which grows out of it. If not, ask why not?" Second, "If you believe in unity keep talking it and pressing for it." Third, "Practice Christian unity in your own community. . . ."

"Today there is a holy impatience in the hearts of most Christian people everywhere for a truly united church. It needs to be given expression. We need enough public opinion to overcome the inertias that are found in any established system, whether religious, political, or educational," Dr. Douglass emphatically concludes.

The Minister's Inner Life

By CARL W. HISER.*

Although man is quite tangible, he is even more a spirit. In a moment of time he can project himself in imagination to the yesteryears. By his ability to reason he is vastly superior to beasts which excell him in various other ways.

This should be especially true in the case of the minister who is to implement the lives of his people with unseen realities, and bring to bear a sense and conviction of the eternal amid the changing scenes of time. However, the minister is a man before he is a minister, and there is that in every man which requires that "Except one be born anew, he cannot see the kingdom of God." It would be a travesty on his high calling to suppose that any lesser thing can be substituted for this sine qua non of every Christian life. How can any man lead another to know and love a Saviour whom he does not know and does not warmly love? Church membership, ordination, even credentials of his training should imply this, but Doctor Shoemaker's Twice Born Ministers calls embarrassing attention to the truth that this does not always follow. Then let a minister be sure that he himself has found Jesus Christ in the forgiveness of his own sins and in the salvation of his own soul. Unless this is certain, no evasion can resolve it; he must face it as frankly as his lowliest convert, cost what it will.

The minister will have in his physical constitution the propensities with which nature has endowed him. If he was practical minded before his regeneration he will be practical minded still. Likewise, if visionary and idealistic. Just so, because a minister happens to be practical minded, and of non-mystical temperament, it does not follow that Christ's promises of blessed fellowship, and answered prayer, and spiritual power are not for him. He who was called the Carpenter, who went about doing good, yet who spent protracted seasons of fasting and prayer was himself the perfect example of the serving Intercessor.

Regardless, then, of a minister's natural bent, a personal devotional study of God's Word is an essential of the first order, not alone for sermonizing but for the feeding of his own soul. This will give substance to prayer and encourage expectation in the light of God's promises. He will be greatly enriched by understanding correct principles of exegesis, yet let him never suppose that this can exhaust the meanings in the God-breathed revelation for him who studies in reverent reliance on the Holy Spirit, so that from its treasures things new and old will come, making it a revelation as intimately personal as if it had been written for him alone.

Even inspiring biographies of good men and women, and devotional helps, can become a crutch if these are used as substitutes for God's Word. A good test would be to ask if these, whether ancient or modern, draw us to love Christ more, and to feast on his Word, or merely to revel in the clever phrasing of some unusual writer.

This article, great abridged to the space available, must limit its prayer reference to the inestimably rich ministry of intercession. In no phase of prayer are more lives brought into the provision and bounty of the heavenly Father. Here a man prays, and half across the earth someone is kept by God's ministering angels free from harm. It is not enough casually to pray for this or that. Most of our intercessions would be but haphazard and desultory unless we should have a list of names and objects written down. This provides a means of checking that we may offer praise to God when answers come.

Yours may be the hallowed privilege of sharing something of what the prophets have called "The burden of Jehovah," perhaps in connection with some serious illness or unusual trial of ours or others by which God would sever gold from dross as gold is tried by fire. In unusual crises some have found triumph and illumination in secret fasting and prayer since blessing is vitiated or destroyed if these should be paraded. Ours is the responsibility for complete obedience to all God's holy will.

A spirit of disobedience to God is disastrous to growth in godliness. As surely as grosser sins arrest spiritual growth, so do such things as impatience, irreverence, worry, bitterness, evil speaking, an unfenced temper, ceaseless and ridiculous levity, not to be confused with the wholesome pleasantries which do good like a medicine to a merry heart.

To doubt a trusted friend is a sad indictment; but when our unbelief is leveled against God, the spiritual consequences are most lamentable. Wrong beliefs honestly held are not always attended with the evil consequences of wilful refusal to believe, yet, if a baby should believe that

RURAL LIFE CONFERENCE COMPLETED.

The multiple problems confronting Protestantism in American rural life can be solved only through the cooperative efforts of all major Protestant denominations working as a single force unhampered by denominational limitations and restrictions.

This in essence sums up the many recommendations reached by various commissions at the sixth annual Convocation on the Church in Town and Country sponsored last week in Lincoln, Nebraska, by the Home Missions Council of North America, the Federal Council of Churches, and the International Council of Religious Education.

Commission reports presented to the Convocation for referral to the denominations for study and action dealt with practically every phase of rural church life, including special problems encountered in isolated areas, "fringe" areas on the outskirts of large industrial centers, cut-over timberlands of northern states, the cotton-growing areas, and the rural industrial community.

In each instance, these reports repeatedly called for cooperative Protestant effort and planning as a means of bringing about a more creative and dynamic rural ministry.

For example, the report on a religious ministry to isolated areas, pointed out that the high cost "in men and means cannot be met with any degree of satisfaction in any area by one church body alone, but must be done on a cooperative basis, using the total resources of all the major church bodies."

Similarly the commission charged to develop a program for mining and industrial areas, observed that "the present procedure of several denominations attempting to minister in a camp, all using the company-owned church building, makes for confusion and ill will."

The same report went on to say that "when denominational cooperation becomes a reality, a statesman-like approach to management, labor and other community groups will result in a united movement powerful enough to provide enough to provide both moral and physical success."

The commission dealing with the "fringe" area stressed that interdenominational cooperative planning was a necessity to effect a realistic program of church action in this rapidly growing area of rural life.

Some of the problems growing out of the "rural non-farm" population in these areas were highlighted in a major address by the Rev. Edwin L. Becker, national director for the Town and Country Church of the Disciples of Christ.

He told delegates that this segment of our population was the "most rapidly growing group in America, and numbers between nine and ten million persons who neither farm nor live in town, but are rural residents with jobs in urban centers."

Any effective ministry to these residents, Mr. Becker stressed, had to be based on a knowledge of their varied religious and social backgrounds.

As an example, he cited one rural township bordering a city in which residents were found to have more than 100 different church backgrounds.

Other factors which tend to make a religious ministry to these people difficult, Mr. Becker said, are lack of community organization, division of interest between home and work, and time-consuming household enterprises such as gardening and repairs.

Warning that church membership was being out-stripped by population growth, he urged a "well-planned and aggressive program of evangelism" in behalf of the rural non-farm population.

Above all, he told delegates, the Church "must seek to establish agencies and institution that can express the common life of the people, which can only be accomplished as the Church relates itself to the schools, the farm organizations, the labor unions, the parents' clubs and other agencies."

One of the major recommendations made by the eleven commissions was the need for the development of group and settlement house type of ministries, especially for cotton growing areas of the South, the mountain regions, and the cut-over timberlands.

Speaking of mining areas, one of the reports observed that "in view of the limited and antiquated church program we believe that a life-centered and all-inclusive program should be offered through the settlement house type of ministry. Infrequent worship services and a Sunday School, while extremely important, lose much of their value unless supplemented by a program that touches every phase of a person's life."

As envisioned by Dr. I. George Nace, newly appointed co-executive secretary of the Home Missions Council, the future of Protestantism lies not only in interdenominational cooperation, but with a well-rounded group ministry.

He warned that "unless methods and means" could be found for the country church to influence educational and social activities in the community in "a larger and more aggressive service," secular institutions would take over and become entrenched.

Charging that "selfish individuals" in some denominations "often stand in the way of re-churching," he added: "The danger now as always is to conceive of our organizations, institutions and systems as ends in themselves. They seem to become more important than the things they were organized to achieve. This is a peril that is especially characteristic of the church. Systems become entrenched, if not petrified. The re-churching of rural America will require the reconstruction and revamping of our denominational system."

The most optimistic note on the present status of the rural ministry was sounded by the Rev. Dr. Elliott Fisher, associate secretary of the home missions division of the Methodist Church.

Dr. Fisher told clergymen to get over their "inferiority complex" as rural ministers and realize that they are the "best trained and equipped clergymen in the history of the nation."

"Working with all the forces of the community and facing all of the economic and social problems of rural life, the rural minister is building—slowly, but surely—the Kingdom of God in the countryside," Dr. Fisher said.

He praised rural clergymen for offering the kind of leadership "we have long been praying for."

"I have seen them," he concluded, "take water, soil and men—spiritualize these forces—and, from them, develop Christian communities. This is evangelism with a purpose: cooperating communities with the Cross at the center."

GERMAN CONGREGATIONALISM IN THE UNITED STATES.

Dr. George Eisenbach of the theology faculty at Yankton College has recently had published his second book, Pietism and the Russian-Germans in the United States, gives a more extensive picture of the origins and history of the German Congregationalists than his earlier book, The History of the German Congregational Churches. In his new book, Dr. Eisenbach gives the full story of the hardship-filled but heroic double mi-

THE NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

It is a source of regret to me that because of conflicting engagements I was not privileged to attend either the Western North Carolina or the Eastern Virginia Conference. This was the first time in thirty years that I had missed a regular session of the Eastern Virginia Conference. The Eastern North Carolina Conference was held at Southern Pines and it was a very good session, however, the conference was at disadvantage in meeting quite a distance from practically all of the churches.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference met last week with our church at Ingram, Virginia. Rev. Robert T. Woodruff is the pastor. The conference was well attended and the members of Ingram Church entertained beautifully and comfortably. The people of Ingram Church are always interested in the convenience and comfort of their guests. The program was packed full of interesting topics from start to finish. I have seldom seen a conference get so much done in so short a time. There were a number of interesting and helpful addresses. The conference was highlighted by a series of addresses delivered by Dr. H. Shelton Smith, Professor of American Theology at Duke University. Dr. Smith had as his theme for the three addresses, "Christ and the Clash of Faiths." His subjects were: "The Word Incarnate," "Truth and Grace" and "Darkness and Light." It was not my privilege to hear the first address but it was my great privilege to hear the last two addresses. To say that they were magnificent fails to express the real facts in the case. These addresses to me were magnificent demonstrations of clear thinking against a background of sane theology. Coming at the close of each session, and usually they were long sessions and everybody was a bit weary, yet, Dr. Smith held the attention of his audience absolutely and completely by simple declarations of truths logically arranged and attractively presented. The conference was extremely fortunate in having the privilege of this series of addresses. Every minister and ministerial student should have the privilege of either reading or hearing these addresses.

Rev. Kenneth Register presided over all sessions of conference. Dr. Stanley C. Harrell of Durham was elected president for the ensuing year.

THE GYMNASIUM.

Work on the gymnasium continues satisfactorily. Finishing touches will necessarily take considerable time. Present indications are, however, that it will be possible to play our spring schedule of basketball games in the gymnasium. Weather permitting, the roof should be on by the middle of this week and the pouring of cement completed shortly thereafter. Orders have been placed for all materials necessary for the finishing of the floors. Bids are being received for seats and other furnishings. The one big obstacle in the way is cash with which to settle our bills. The alumni of the college are undertaking this project and are doing an excellent job. It is evident, however, that the combined interest of the church, friends, and alumni will be required to complete the payment for the erection of this much-needed and adequate building on our campus.

The Board of Trustees of the college in special session yesterday, Thursday, November 17, voted full cooperation with the Alumni Association to make sure that this building will be completed and furnished at the earliest possible date. I know that there are hundreds and thousands in the Southern Convention, members of the church and non-members of the church, who are interested in this project and who want to see it completed as early as possible. Also, I know that there are hundreds and thousands who would, and will, contribute to the support of this undertaking. Your contribution, large or small, will be greatly appreciated. You may forward your contribution to Elon College or to the Alumni Office, or, to anyone you may know personally who is interested in this undertaking. Your help is solicited and will be greatly appreciated.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The North Carolina and Virginia Conference was held last week at Ingram Church. A number of the churches of this conference paid their apportionments in full. As a result, we have a good report this week, one of the best that we have had—$1,511.26—making a total of $12,235.89 for the year, to date. This leaves the college short $2,764.11 in receipts on apportionment giving for the year. In view of the increased costs of operation and the acute financial needs of the college, I am sure that all Sundays schools and churches not having paid their apportionments in full for the college will want to make a special effort to see that their churches raise their apportionments and send the same to the Convention Office for the college as quickly as possible. It would be well also if we would remind ourselves that the college is now operating on the calendar year so far as the Sunday schools and churches are concerned and that we have until January 1 to make up any deficit that may be sustained as of this date. It is encouraging to feel that the church as a whole is manifesting a new interest in the problems of the college.

The wife of a man who had left the church and joined a fraternal order was asked why he was no longer a church member. She replied: "Well, Sir, they never gave my husband anything to do at the church, but as soon as he joined the lodge they put a helmet on his head and a sword in his hand and made him keeper of the royal and ancient arch, and he is there every night."—H. EXCERPTS FROM A LETTER FROM RICHARD L. JACKSON.

The following letter was written from Shaowu by Richard L. Jackson on August 19, showing something of the terrible struggle and dangers through which our missionaries in Shaowu have been passing during August, September and October. (W. T. S.) Mr. Jackson writes:

"At this very moment the Big Knife Society from the Hoping district is attacking Shaowu. There is a steady stream of rifle shots to be heard. The Communist troops are said to number 200 and the Knifists are supposed to number from 2-3,000. They're attacking from the South. I just went to the gate to take a peek. A group of soldiers were rushing by headed for South Gate. They put their packs in our yard for safe-keeping when I opened the gate. Every one in ten of the Knifists carries a bugle and when they attack they all blow at once—scaring the opposing soldiers half to death. I just then heard the bugles. Before going into a fight, the Knifists drink some kind of liquid which makes them very fierce and daring (Dr. Chu says it is mercury). They wear a red triangle over their stomach with a yang-yin symbol on it.

"Last night I had a session with the Communist troops for about two hours. They have a truck across the river (which they appropriated from a local citizen) on which many of them want to escape. This attack has been rumored for weeks. The truck lacks a tire and they came to "borrow" mine from the truck. I refused so they took it at the point of a gun. They also wanted some gas but I told them I would absolutely not get it for them. About twenty soldiers came. One of them took out a pistol, pointed it at me and said for me to give them the tire "or else."

"(Boy, those shots are close now—sound like next door! It sounds like the shots come from in front of my office—less than 20 feet away. Thank goodness, there is a good thick wall between us and the street. My heart really skipped a beat (literally). The bullets whistle as they go overhead.)

"We have kept our work going this summer in spite of everything. Originally today was the next to last session of two-week lay training conference for young people held here at North Gate. We had from 30 to 40 young people every day. Mr. Fan Liang Shan (Pastor Liao's son-in-law) has been the leader and has done a really good job of it. He will come to Han Mei this fall as dean of the school. He attended several Christian conferences while at FCU and used them as a pattern for the present leadership conference. The Bu Dau Dwei is now in the Ershrd district carrying on evangelistic and public health work. I was with them when they were near Shaowu, but I hesitated to go so far away. Ed is with them now—they are working out of his house. They report large, quite receptive crowds wherever they go.

"(The fighting has passed over to another portion of the city now. We can still hear gunfire, but it is not as close.)

"I went on my bicycle last week to Kuangdze to perform a wedding. Things are a bit better there now than here. The officer in charge is a former Han Mei student. They have forced the Catholic priests to move out of their almost palatial living quarters and turn them over to their troops.

"(The shots have started up again—quite near. They sound like artillery shells (mortar). I didn't think there were any artillery pieces around. Maybe they're blowing up a bridge. The fighting has passed over to another portion of the city now. We can still hear the gunfire, but it is not as close.)

"I just stepped across the way to ask about the situation. They said that we are surrounded by the Big Knifers. What an experience!

"The fight is over. The Big Knifers have been driven back. Three truckloads of Communist troops arrived from Kienyang. The truck will bring some more tomorrow "on our tire." There are two soldiers in my office now mimeographing the news that Foochow has been liberated. They have never used a mimeograph machine before and are quite a nuisance. One of them is in our y. p. group. He is a Shaowu lad. A number of boys and some girls went into their organization to work for the summer—simply because there wasn't enough at home to feed them. They get practically no salary—just their board. These mimeographers have made me miss my afternoon nap. I need it today after a restless night. They said the Big Knifers never really got into the heart of the city—only as far as East and South Gates.

"I'll bring this letter to a close now and get it off to the post office."

Cordially,

DICK JACKSON.

ELECTED TO JAPAN INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY FOUNDATION.

Harold W. Hackett, of Boston, an American Congregationalist who spent 20 years in Japan and who has traveled the world over as a missionary and business man, has been elected a vice-president of Japan International Christian University for which a $10,000,000 fund-raising campaign is under way in the United States and Canada. In January, Mr. Hackett will give up his work as associate treasurer of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions of the Congregational Christian Churches, and go to Japan where he will take up his work on the 350-acre campus of International Christian University in Mitaka, 17 miles from Tokyo. He will be responsible for the business administration and general financial affairs of ICU and for the details of the building of the plant, which now consists of but two buildings. The Japanese paid for the campus from the proceeds of their own fund-raising campaign which brought in 154,000,000 yen, or about $420,000.

In his 20 years in Japan Mr. Hackett not only was a missionary, but also served as language instructor in the foreign section of the Imperial Police Department of Hyogo Prefecture—similar to a state in this country. He is regarded as one of the best informed authorities on Japan in this country, for as a layman in that country he made contacts with business men of all nations in his time abroad.

In World War I, Mr. Hackett was in the United States Army, and in World War II rose to be a Lieutenant Commander in the United States Navy. Since leaving the service he has made a 46,000-mile flying trip through the South Seas in the interest of the American Board, visiting the Marshall and Caroline Islands,

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

NEWS ITEMS FROM VARIOUS SOCIETIES.

Our First Church, Portsmouth, has a new Woman's Fellowship. They combined their Ladies' Aid and Missionary Society to form the new organization, and all women of the church are now members. They followed the Manual in working out their new organization. They have four circles which meet during the first week in each month, and a business meeting once a month for the whole organization. They have a big program meeting once each month also. At the present time, this is taking the form of family suppers to which all members of the church are invited. Around the tables they have their Bible Study, which is being conducted by the minister, Rev. W. S. Carne. They then go upstairs to the church auditorium for their missionary program. Mrs. R. I. Edwards is the president, and it sounds like a fine idea.

The Women's Society at South Norfolk had a wonderful day recently. In the morning they had their World Community Day Program and dedicated their "Pieces for Peace" to be sent overseas. This was followed by a turkey dinner which was enjoyed by all and in the afternoon a beautiful Thank Offering Service was conducted. They received a large offering which will go to the Han Mei School in China.

A new Woman's Society has been organized at our Hebron Church, near Virgilina. Programs have been planned for a six months' period. Officers have been elected and Wednesday night after the fourth Sunday in each month selected as the regular meeting date. Rev. and Mrs. Mark Andes and Miss Pattie Lee Coghill met with the women as they made these plans. The meeting was held in the home of Mrs. Ida Arrington.

The Tryon Woman's Society entertained the women of our Asheville Church at an evening meeting recently. About twenty women came and they report a splendid program on Japan, which closed with the showing of a new picture on Japan, "Kyoto Story."

About 53 women met at the Burlington Church for the regular monthly Auxiliary meeting on Monday, November 7, at which time a beautiful Thank Offering service was presented. A gift of $186.70 was given by the women to help Han Mei School in Shaowu, China. This money will go to help repair the buildings, buy books for the library, equipment for the laboratory, lamps, beds, tables and equipment.

During the business session the new idea of having a Literature Table was presented. This sounds very interesting, and the women are looking forward to the development of this idea.

The Fellowship Luncheon was, as always, a high spot in the meeting. Everyone enjoyed the delightful luncheon served by Circle No. 2, under the leadership of Mrs. Harold Kernolde.

The children of the Winston-Salem Church brought packaged foods to the church school on Sunday, November 20, to be sent to Japan as a Thanksgiving-Christmas gift. The package will be addressed to Dr. Hatanaka, who visited the church last year and whom the children remember so well and so pleasantly. In addition to the foods, they plan to send some pictures and Thanksgiving favors.

Several women from the Convention attended the joint session of our women and women from the Evangelical and Reformed Church held in Cleveland, November 16-18. This is one of the steps toward going into the merger of our two churches, and presented a great opportunity for fellowship to those attended. Those who went from the Convention Woman's Board were: Mrs. O. H. Paris, Mrs. John G. Truitt, Miss Verdie Showalter, Mrs. W. B. Williams, Mrs. F. C. Lester and Mrs. Wm. T. Harrell.

God dislikes melancholy and depressed spirits because they show a lack of faith.—Early Riney.

RANDLEMAN REPORTS.

Mesdames B. H. Lowdermilk and Ruth Swaim were joint hostesses to the Heart Sisters of the Randleman Christian Church on Friday night, November 4, at the home of Mrs. Lowdermilk. Mrs. Maude Holland, society president, presided over the meeting and business session. Mrs. Ruth Swaim was in the charge of the devotionals.

Mrs. Lowdermilk presented a very interesting Thanksgiving program. Those participating were Mesdames Maude Holland, Fawnie Brown, Callie Sawyer and Miss Frances Swaim. Concluding the program a Thanksgiving offering was taken to be sent to the Orphanage at Elon, and Shirley Jean Lowdermilk gave a solo.

During the business session reports were received from the various committees and plans were made to send Christmas baskets to the aged. The society also elected new officers for the coming year as follows: Faye Williams, president; Ruby Davis, secretary; Thaney Lamb, treasurer; Ovelene Parker, program committee; Mrs. B. H. Lowdermilk and Mrs. Henry Stevenson, visiting committee.

After the business a social followed with Callie Sawyer, Mary Burgess and Lessie Parker receiving prizes. A shower was given Mrs. Ruth Swaim and she received many nice gifts.

At the conclusion the hostess served delicious refreshments to the society and two new members, Mrs. Ruby Davis and Frances Swaim.

Mrs. Maude Holland will be hostess to the society for the Christmas party.

MRS. WADE ROBBINS,
Secretary.

A PRAYER FOR MY PASTOR.

Our Father, let me be a pillar of strength to help hold him up and not a thorn in his flesh to sap his strength, nor a burden on his back to pull him down. Let me support him without striving to possess him. Let me lift his hands without placing shackles around him. Let me give him my help that he may devote more time in working for the salvation of others and less time in gratifying my vanity. Let me work for him as the pastor of all the members and not compel him to spend precious time in bragging on me. Let me be unselfish in what I do for him and not selfish in demanding that he do more for me. Let me strive to serve him and the church much and be happy as he serves me less and the church and others more.

FOR THE CHILDREN

THANKSGIVING PLANS.

Audrey was up early because she was going to make a trip. She managed her socks very well, only getting one heel in the front. She tried twice before she had her shoes on the right way. She hated to eat but managed to drink her milk and nibble a little corner of toast.

Mother tied her shoe strings and helped her with her tams and mittens. Daddy went to the garage for the automobile and they were off. They drove through the heavy city traffic and out to the country. Audrey sat alone in the back and looked at the trees. The pines were green, the cedars were green. The holly berries were orange but should be red for Christmas. The oak trees were red as their leaves turn scarlet. The gum trees were deeper red and the maples were yellow and orange.

Mother told her the names of the towns through which they passed. She looked for cows and horses. Once she saw a hawk flying low in a field. All at once her ears began to pop! She clapped her hands to them and Daddy said, "Yes, we have come to the first mountain."

Up, up they drove to the very top where Audrey could see in all directions. The houses below looked like doll houses and the river looked like a shiny string left beside the houses. They drove down, down to the valley, up a road and to a farm house.

Mrs. Mills came out to greet them. She left the kitchen door open and Audrey could smell something very good. She stuck her head in the door. Mrs. Mills saw her and said, "Are you hungry?"

Mother answered, "I expect she is for she was too excited to eat her breakfast." Mrs. Mills chuckled and handed Audrey a bowl to lick. She had been making pumpkin pies.

Soon Mr. Mills came to the house and they all walked to a hillside where they saw the turkeys. They looked like dots to Audrey, but as she walked toward them, she could see their bright feathers and hear them gobble. There were thousands of them. Daddy pointed to one and Mr. Mills caught it. While he went to kill it, Audrey stayed watching the others as they ate and moved about on the hill.

"Audrey," called Mr. Mills, "come and see me pick the turkey." She walked to the shed house where he was working. She had to look to see what was happening. It was an electric picker that worked almost like a vacuum cleaner. It sucked the feathers away. It made the little girl laugh to see such a sight!

They were invited to dinner and afterward tucked Audrey in the back seat for a nap as they started toward the city. When she waked it was beginning to be late afternoon. The sinking sun made the bright-hued leaves glow. Audrey remembered her Sunday school teacher telling about the Thanksgiving days when Jesus was a boy. She thought about the turkey and the pumpkin in the back of their car. She thought how good they would taste! She giggled over the feather picker that swoozed-swished away the feathers.

"Mummy," she asked, "sing 'The Shining Sickle' song for me one more time." And then they sang it together ending with "Another glad Thanksgiving time is here."

TEACHING CHILDREN TO BE ON TIME.

By M. LOUISE C. HASTINGS.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"Yes, I'll do it pretty soon." "In a minute, Mother." These were familiar expressions to the Heath family. Polly was often called "Little Wait-a-Minute." "Perhaps some day we'll be able to call you 'Miss Always-on-Time,'" Mother would say. But just a suggestion will not change a child overnight. There must be some cause for reversal in order to change a behavior pattern.

The circus was in town, and on the spur of the moment Daddy decided he would take the family. He phoned home, "I shall be there in half an hour to take you and the children to the circus. Be ready, won't you?"

Mother called to Myron and Polly to change their clothes and hurried to finish necessary work before changing her own dress. Half an hour passed, and Myron and Mother were ready and standing on the porch as Daddy drove up to the house.

"Where is Polly?" asked Daddy.

"Maybe she forgot to get ready," laughed Myron.

"She couldn't!" exclaimed Mother. "I'll run upstairs and see where she is."

Polly was sitting dreaming at the window.

"Aren't you going to the circus with us?" asked Mother.

"Yes," answered Polly. "I'll be down in a minute or two."

"Daddy is here and read to start now. I'm sorry, Polly, but you'll have to stay at home with Rose Lee," said Mother, and she went back downstairs.

Polly didn't like this at all. She had plenty of excuses to offer, but they did no good; she was left behind. A number of similar experiences made the child at last wake up to the fact that she was losing out constantly because she ignored requirements concerning time. Her parents found it hard to punish her in this way repeatedly, but they were sure it was the only corrective that would bring the desired result.

It is not easy for devoted parents to go off on a pleasure trip leaving a child at home; it spoils their enjoyment. But such a manifestation of strength of purpose is necessary if the child is to overcome the fault of never being on time. Doing things for children, arguing and coaxing them along, or storming at them in different ways seldom bring about beneficial results. It is the hard experience that usually counts.

If you have read George Washington's diaries, you will have noticed that one of his outstanding qualities was punctuality. This habit of always being on time, and expecting others to do the same, was the result of childhood training. Mary Washington, his mother, was a strict disciplinarian, and her insistence on punctuality was one of her notable characteristics.

Eleanor, another procrastinator, is ten years old. "Today," her mother said, "you must take everything out of your bureau drawers and put the things back in an orderly fashion." The little girl began this work about nine o'clock, and when we called at the house in the afternoon she had not yet done much about it. Eleanor needs a jolt of some kind, for there is no need for this delaying. She had started her task, but had left off to do something else. Of course, such work should not be done hastily in order to go out.

Her mother might have said, "Finish your work in an hour," at the same time secretly planning something pleasant to take place if Eleanor (Continued on page 11.)

Youth at Work in the Church

DEAR FELLOW-WORKERS:

How are you coming in our Overseas Worker Project? I am sure that you are all making great progress and pretty soon we shall have broken all records. I would like very much to hear from you and know what you are doing. Perhaps if you write to me and tell me what methods you are using to raise money, your letters can be published so that your fellow-workers can get some ideas for raising the money. After all, this is something in which we must all cooperate by working together.

I think that by now enough money has been raised so that it can be sent in to our treasurer. Be sure to state from what church group and conference the money is coming so that you can be given full credit for your efforts. As time goes by, we shall let you know how much progress we are making. Send your contributions to:

John G. Truitt, Jr.
Box 157
Elon College, N. C.

I shall be waiting to hear from you, and I know I shall have an excellent response from every church group in our Southern Convention.

Let's all get behind this and prove that we are energetic workers in this great cause!

Sincerely,

MY EXPERIENCE IN AN INTERNATIONAL WORK CAMP.

Work camping, with its purpose of peace building, service and personal development, is a recent venture. After the First World War, work camps were organized by persons of vision. Despite the fact that the movement is over a quarter of a century old, most of the world is unfamiliar with it. One will now find in Europe many national and several international work camp movements. Only recently a Work Camp Division has been set up within the framework of UNESCO, and it will act as a coordinating body for the expanding work camp program.

I volunteered through the American Friends Service Committee to go to Germany and participate in an international work camp. Previous experience with work camping was in the summer of 1947. At that time I was a part of a small group of young people who devoted a summer to building a community center and playground in an area of low economic level. It was then that I saw Christian love toward one's fellow-man vividly demonstrated, and I decided to extend the scope of this experience to an international work project.

After a long process of listing facts in questionnaires, taking necessary shots, raising money, etc., I was ready to go to Europe to be a part of a movement designed for peace.

A group of QIV'ers (Quaker International Voluntary Service) left by plane on June 22 and landed in Paris just few hours later. Instead of going immediately to our destinations, it was necessary for us to remain near Paris for nearly two weeks. During this time we were "conditioned" in a short term work camp at the site of the French Student Christian Center in Bievres. Here we rebuilt a road leading to the main building and at the same time we became accustomed to hard work, sore muscles and French food.

Two of us left on July 3, and were in Hildesheim, Germany (British Zone), the next night. The first afternoon we were introduced to the campers—Nina, Hans, Ossie, Heinz, Berget and others who at that time represented six countries. (Nine were represented in the course of the summer.)

We learned that they had been working under difficulties for almost two years, and that at times the outlook was discouraging. When we saw the project we wondered if it were possible for a work camp to complete such an ambitious job—constructing out of stone a three-story youth center.

Work for us began with clearing away rubble and digging ditches for an electric cable. All around us were ruins of buildings—stark evidences of the folly of war. Work was hard and steady for all. Some of the more skilled campers were working as plasterers, plumbers, carpenters and brick layers. Shoveling in rubble seemed almost like an endless task, and for me it clearly signified the difficulties of rebuilding in Germany.

Girls and fellows worked together with common purposes—peace building, service and personal development. The degree of idealism varied with the individual. Actually this was an experiment in international living in which personal problems and differences had to be overcome. Barriers of language and frictions due to misunderstandings sometimes made life difficult, however this represented, in a small way, what we can expect in attempts to establish peaceful relations on an international level.

We can multiply a project like Hildesheim many times for at least thirty-five work camps were in progress last summer in Europe. Each was building not only a physical structure but also the spiritual structure of peace. The world sorely needs the work camp spirit as it struggles to find peace.

nor finished on time. If, however, the work should not be completed within the hour, the child would merely be told of the pleasure which she had lost as a consequence of her dilatory behavior.

Malcolm, fifteen, is told he may go out in the evening, but he must be home by ten-thirty. He strolls in at midnight. He is punished for a week—not allowed to go out in the evening at all. The next time he is permitted out, the same thing happens. He seems to have no sense of punctuality! What is the answer?

It would take far too much space to reply to that properly, but the question suggests another—what has been the matter with the time schedule of Malcolm's parents? They are a decade in arrears. It is in the early years that punctuality should be taught. Now—at fifteen—a good wrist watch and friendly cooperation might be tried, and the parents should be sure that Malcolm's friends are made welcome in his home. These measures will at least be more effective than punishment.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

JEREMIAH DENOUNCES FALSE PROPHETS.

LESSON X—DECEMBER 4, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully.—Jeremiah 23:28.

LESSON: Jeremiah 8:8-13; 23; 26-28.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matthew 7:15-23.

The Authority of the Prophet.

The prophets of Israel were a unique group. They had no visible authority back of them, as did those who spoke on the authority of the Law. Here was the Law, given directly by God, recognized as His Word, and carrying His authority. It was a written body of Scripture, carefully codified by the scribes, and taught with the authority vested in them as recognized teachers of the Law. But here was the prophet, a free lance, as it were, with no carefully documented credentials, but simply with a sense of mission laid on him by God in the secret of his soul. He did not stand in a carefully selected and carefully guarded line of men who had the sanction of the system, like the priests, or for that matter even like the scribes. He felt the call of God, sometimes for some specific crisis, sometimes for a whole life's work. And in the name of God he went forth to speak in behalf of God. As was pointed out in these Notes at the beginning of this series of lessons on the prophets, a prophet was not simply or necessarily a man who predicted or foretold, but rather a man who "spoke for" or "in behalf of" God. He was God's mouthpiece, God's spokesman. And strangely enough he often had to take issue with the priests and scribes, because they dealt with the letter of things while he dealt with the spirit. They were shut up, as it were in a hard and fast system, while he had the freedom of the spirit. He recognized his authority as coming from Jehovah as did they. As a rule his messages began with a "Thus saith the Lord." Or the prophet would preface his message with the words, "The word of the Lord came to me." These were his credentials.

The Burden of the Prophets.

One common element in the work of the prophet was the sense of burden or the sense of compulsion about his message. They were men who passionately loved their country and their fellow-countrymen, and yet they had to pronounce doom upon their fellow-countrymen again and again. And devoted as they were to the worship of Jehovah, they had to denounce current religious forms and practices. Jeremiah for instance was a man of tender sentiments and retiring disposition, and yet he had the burden of the Lord on his heart and he dare not keep silent. The prophets were never men of light hearts. The dreadful nature of the message they had to declare filled their hearts with terror and constituted for them a temptation to shirk their difficult task. They got no joy out of these messages of certain doom. The only redeeming feature of their work was the element of hope which God again and again made known to them as to the ultimate triumph of His cause and the fulfillment of His purpose.

False Prophets.

The lesson for today deals primarily with the conflict between the false prophets and Jeremiah. He boldly charges them, as Jehovah's spokesman, with prophesying lies in the name of Jehovah, with setting forth as the word of Jehovah what he bluntly states are the lying dreams of their hearts. Such prophesyings do cause the people to err, and are of no profit to the people.

Now the interesting fact is that Jeremiah does not charge these false prophets with conscious insincerity. They do not deliberately deceive the people with what they know are falsehoods. But they were guilty of failing to look beneath the surface of things to the inner workings of divine laws and processes. They mistakenly believed that the safety and the security of the nation depended upon material wealth and political freedom. They all too often told the people what they wanted to hear instead of what they ought to know. They failed to understand and to say that Israel's destiny was not a political empire, but religious leadership, and that her great need was for a strengthening of the forces that would make her fit for this great achievement and for her divine destiny. They had never stood face to face with God and they could not discern his voice above the clamor of the world. They had a false optimism. They were continually crying peace when there could be no peace. They expected a miracle without regard for or respect to moral conditions. They were so at home in the world that they could not see the crying need of the world, or its desperate moral condition.

The Prophet and Our Modern World.

There are many false prophets in our modern world. There are those today who are crying from the housetops that our safety and security depend absolutely upon a preponderance in the possession of the atomic bomb, upon huge armies and navies and air forces, upon the mobilization of industrial might, upon treaties and compacts and alliances, upon diplomacy, either secret or open. They are not insincere, nor gay deceivers. But they do not have the final word in the matter. And history has shown conclusively that these things never have given peace or assured safety or security.

There are vast evils in our own land today that call for the prophetic message. Here is a nation torn again and again by the warfare between capital and labor, which sets a money value on practically everything, which can live with almost seeming indifference in a world that is desperately hungry and ill-clothed and sick, a nation that spends an astronomical sum upon liquor, far beyond what it spends on education and religion, a nation in which racial discriminations cry to high heaven, a nation the divorce rate of which is a scandal to high heaven and a menace to the integrity of the family, a nation in which moral standards are often flagrantly compromised, and in which spiritual things have to take a secondary place. We need prophets who will speak not the dreams of their own hearts, but the word of the Lord for such a time as this.

(Based on lesson copyrighted by International Council of Religious Education.)

"One should think," said a friend to the celebrated Dr. Samuel Johnson, "that sickness and the view of death would make men more religious." "Sir," replied Johnson, "they do not know how to go to work about it. A man who has never had religion before no more grows religious when he is sick than a man who has never learned figures can count when he has need of calculation."

OUR MINISTERS FROM 1872-1922.

By DR. N. G. NEWMAN.

Presented to the Eastern Virginia Conference at Portsmouth, Va. November 2, 1949.

In 1872 there were nine ministers in this Conference—Wm. B. Wellons, Mills B. Barrett, Robert H. Holland, John N. Manning, Cornelius A. Apple, Stephen S. Barrett, Thomas W. Joyner and Richard H. Costen. They were serving twenty-one churches and receiving a total salary of $2,710.00 (average of $301.33 1/3). The Conference had a membership of 2,618, raised $5,007.00 for all purposes, and the church property was valued at $26,860.00. At the close of the half century, in 1922, there were twenty-eight ministers serving forty-six churches and receiving a total salary of $40,896.75 (average of $1,460.57). The membership was 9,628, raised for all purposes $179,339.00, and the value of the church property was $782,850.00.

During this half-century eighty-two ministers were received into the Conference by licensure and ordination, and by transfer from other bodies. A few served churches for a while without becoming members of the Conference. Of these eighty-two, forty-eight came from other areas, thirteen of whom were from other denominations. Thirty-two were furnished by this Conference. Of the forty-eight coming from other areas, twenty-two were from North Carolina, one from Georgia, two from Alabama, one from England, and twenty from different areas north of the Mason-Dixon Line. Of those from other areas, nineteen remained about two years, fifteen from three to four years, eight, about five years, three for ten years, one for twenty years, two till death or forced retirement, one is going strong after more than thirty years. Those remaining ten years and more entered seriously into the work of the Conference and became a vital part of its life. Of the thirty-two native to our Conference, eight went to other denominations, nine were failures, fifteen were mediocre, and ten were outstanding.

During this period, 1872 to 1922, forty-five were received into the Biblical Class as candidates for the ministry. Twenty dropped out of college, or never entered. Two died while in school, three went through college but never entered the ministry, and the other twenty entered and remained in the ministry. Three of the latter are in active service now, and three retired after forty-five to fifty-one years of service. Of the total forty-five, twenty became college or university graduates, and six pursued seminary courses—one at Princeton, two at Harvard, one at Yale, and two at the University of Chicago.

The above statistics do not present a rosy picture. I have given them neither for encouragement nor discouragement, but merely as history. The failures but illustrate the weakness of human nature and the errors of human judgment. But it has ever been thus. There is nothing for this Conference to do but heed the Master's remedy for failure and "launch out a little further into the deep"—"sow beside all waters for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, this or that."

THE MINISTER'S INNER LIFE.

strychnine is candy all its innocency does not abrogate nature's pitiless laws. So Paul never quite forgave himself for the consequences to the church his vituperative unbelief occasioned to many whom he hounded to prison and to death.

The Sunday School Times tells of C. K. Lee, a Christian, who once spoke in an ultra liberal church in the states. At the close of the service a young college student propounded the question: "Why should we export Christianity to China when you have Confucianism?"

"There are three reasons," was the rejoinder. "First of all, Confucius was a teacher and Christ is a Saviour. In the second place, Confucius is dead and Christ is alive; China needs a living Saviour. In the third place, Confucius is some day going to stand before Christ to be judged by him. China needs to know Christ as Saviour before she meets him as Judge."

We of the ministry have no access to God that is not also available to the lowliest laymen—among whom we are Christ's servants. We do have opportunities and time to cultivate the divine companionship not available to many laymen, or if we do not, we are busier than we ought to be.

Everybody is reasonable for walking by the clearest possible spiritual light. Therefore we who should traffic above many others in the things of the Spirit cannot by the most specious arguments imaginable, evade the clear responsibility of walking in the light as Christ is in the light, and so by precept and example bear our faithful testimony in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation among whom we are seen "as lights in the world."

He who has saved us, if he has, is able also "to save to the uttermost them that draw near unto God through him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."

"O the depths of the riches both of wisdom and the knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past tracing out!"

JAPAN CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY FOUNDATION.

remembered by many American soldiers and sailors.

Mr. Hackett is the second vice-president chosen—there will be five working with President Hachiro Yuasa, the American-educated president of ICU.

Admiral Halsey Will Assist.

Admiral William F. Halsey, Ret., former commander of the Third Fleet in the Pacific, has accepted the position of a Regional Chairman in the $10,000,000 campaign on behalf of the International Christian University. In accepting, Admiral Halsey wrote:

"I believe all Americans look with pride on the strides that Democracy has made in Japan under the very able and efficient direction of General of the Army MacArthur. The Japanese, of course, need more widely distributed education in the philosophy of a democratic state and a democratic government. The proposed university, with its Graduate School of Education, is an ideal set-up for accomplishing this result. It is very apparent that the Japanese associate Democracy with Christianity. It is therefore fitting that a non-sectarian Christian college should be established to spread this philosophy."

As Regional Chairman for the six states stretching along the Atlantic coast from Maryland to Florida, Admiral Halsey will aid in enlisting area chairmen of prestige and ability for the areas to be covered. He will call them together in a conference at which he will explain their functions and outline their tasks. Ten other regional organizations are being set up across the country and in Canada. The intensive campaign will begin at Easter and continue until June, 1950.

Whether you be habitually happy and cheerful, or low-spirited and fearful, depends entirely on the quality of the mental food upon which you diet.—Earl Riney.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Thank you for the Thanksgiving gifts you are making and will make in these weeks for your work here at your Orphanage. Every Sunday school and church in the Convention is urged to "pass the hat" for these little children, and the good work being done here. There are men and women who want to help with this work. Take an offering and give them a chance so to do.

It was a pleasure to visit the North Carolina and Virginia Conference in session last week at Ingram. Kenneth Register made an excellent president, and all the officers did their work well. The program was excellent and the hospitality was of the best. I cannot refrain from mentioning the most beautiful flowers presented by the Luther Carltons in memory of loved ones. They were greatly appreciated by everyone. It was a real joy to me to visit the people of that section again for Ingram and Pleasant Grove were most gracious to me in my early ministry. God bless those good people everyone.

Yesterday (Nov. 18), Mr. Vitus R. Holt and I called on several businessmen in Burlington. It was a thrilling experience! Mr. Holt was most cordially received and his presence gave me also cordial reception. Checks in the amount of $1,335.00 were handed us with such remarks as: "We know what is being done by your institution for needy children and we are glad to help—I tell my people here in our business that an institution that runs its affairs on as strictly a business basis as the Christian Orphanage, can have our full support." He increased his check by 50 per cent and asked us to come again. In not one place did we feel anything less than really warm reception, and everyone we saw made a donation. In one office a young lady operating a typewriter at top speed paused and wrote a personal check for $25.00 and remarked, "My husband was reared at the Orphanage, and we wish to make a small donation as our Thanksgiving gift." You cannot but get a thrill in seeing how much truly great spirit there is in generous-hearted people. Although Mr. Holt moved rapidly in spite of the fact that he has to walk with a cane we have much territory yet left, and which we will take up Monday. We took time to "visit" with the donors and enjoyed every moment of it.

Our boys and girls made us proud of them in the presentation of their pageant at the Western North Carolina Conference and at the Burlington Church. We are counting on them doing just as well before the Burlington Rotary Club on Monday night. They will be at some of the neighboring churches between now and Christmas. The program is appropriate for this season. If you want us, call us, and if we can come we shall be delighted to do so. God bless you and thank you for everything.

ling projects have been launched and completed and paid for in full, at a cost of more than $75,000, giving the church what inter-denominational leaders declare to be one of the best church plants in Northern Iowa. Five hundred ten new members have been received into the membership of the Mason City church during Dr. Helfenstein's eleven-year pastorate; the budget for current expenses has been more than doubled, and the benevolence budget has been increased more than three times.

Dr. and Mrs. Helfenstein have had four children—three daughters and one son. The son, who also planned to enter the ministry, was killed in battle in Germany in the second World War at the age of 18. Their two oldest daughters, Dorothy and Charlotte are married; their youngest daughter, Janice, finished Junior College last June.

In Memoriam

SMITH.

Miss Maragret Ann Smith, for 15 years (1916-1931) an American Board Missionary in China and Turkey, died September 29th in Essondale near Vancouver, British Columbia, at the age of 58. Maragret Ann Smith was born in Scotland and educated in Vancouver and McGill University in Montreal. She sailed for China under the Women's Board of Missions in 1916, serving in Peiping and Tungsien. For a two-year period she was temporarily transferred to the Girls' School in Merzifoon, Turkey. Ill health caused her withdrawal from China in 1931.

DOROTHY P. CUSHING.

POOL.

Mrs. Eva Jones Pool, daughter of Lemuel and Emma Tuck Jones was born November 28, 1891 and departed this life in Norfolk, Virginia, June 6, 1949. She married Mr. Carl Pool on January 2, 1920. Mrs. Pool is survived by her husband and four children. The children are James, Ruth, Rubie and Nan-nie May. There is one daughter, Maxine, deceased. There are two grandchildren and one brother, Emmos Jones of California. The funeral was held at her church, Union, Virgilina, Va. June 8, 1949, conducted by M. W. Andes, assisted by C. E. Newman. A large crowd of loved ones and friends were present. The floral tributes were beautiful and numerous. Burial was in the town cemetery.

A faithful companion and devoted mother has passed to her reward after a life of useful service.

C. E. NEWMAN.

ONE OF GOD'S GENTLEMEN.

When Robert L. Baker was born over eighty-one years ago, the word "gentleman" became flesh and dwelt among men. Those who knew him best, and those who knew longest, saw in his character and in his conduct, the word gentleman spelled out in living letters and in living flesh. He was of God's true gentlemen.

Mr. Baker was born in Nansemond County eighty-one years ago last August. At the age of twenty-three, he came to Newport News, where he entered the employ of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company and where he spent all his active career. By virtue of his integrity of character, his dependability, his native ability, his eagerness to learn, and his application to duty, he won the commendation and recognition of his employers, and he was promoted from one position to another, until he finally became Chief Engineer of the large Company plant, a position which he held for many years. It was thus that he became known by both his employers and by his fellow-workmen as "Chief," a term both of honor and of affection. For even as he had earned the recognition of his employers by his ability and by his application, even so did he win the esteem and affection of his fellow-workers, and of those who worked under him as "Chief," by his courtesy, sense of fairness, his democratic spirit, and by his genuine Christian character. After forty-eight years of active service he was retired by the Shipyard with fitting ceremonies in honor of his unusually long, and consistently excellent service. Unlike many retired men, he knew how to spend his time in ways that were pleasurable to himself and profitable to others. He had a well-equipped workshop in the basement of his home and as a master craftsman he was always making something either for his home folks or for others. One of his special hobbies was the making of pipes from imported Briarwood, and at one time he had a collection of more than 150 pipes of all sizes and shapes. He also loved flowers and took delight in raising them and in sharing them with others.

A year after coming to Newport News, Mr. Baker married Miss Sarah A. Spivey of Suffolk. They lived together in faithfulness and fidelity for fifty-seven years. They established a Christian home in which Christ was honored, and in which the church was given a large place. They had one son by their marriage, Wilbur H. Baker, well known to the members of the Eastern Virginia Conference and of the Southern Convention through his offices and activities in the larger fellowship. Wilbur married Blanche Newman, daughter of our beloved Dr. N. G. Newman, and through the years the families have lived together, in a happy, wholesome, devoted relationship. It was a Christian family and a bulwark of the church. Mr. Baker himself was an active and faithful member of the church, and in addition to other offices which he had held in the church, was a Trustee at the time of his death.

The man's physical stature was symbolic of his character. He was well built, sturdy, tall, and strong. Even to the end he was straight and upright in posture. It was a symbol of his uprightness and integrity of character. He was quiet, modest, kind, clean, faithful, friendly, unselfish, strong but gentle. He loved his home, his family, his friends, his work, his church, his Lord. He was a good man in the best sense of that word. He was one of God's true gentlemen.

official of the Conference you have discharged the duties of your office in an efficient way and in a fine spirit. The Conference takes this means of thanking you for what you have been and what you have done.

We regret the fact that you are leaving the Conference. But our loss is the gain of the Eastern North Carolina Conference. We feel sure that you will be the same faithful and fruitful servant there that you have been in the Eastern Virginia Conference. All good wishes and God's blessings.

I am sure that the Conference would have me bring greetings to Mrs. O'Neill, and to thank her for her contribution to the Kingdom through her services in the Conference.

Sincerely yours,

H. S. HARDCASTLE,

GERMAN CONGREGATIONALISM IN THE U. S.

gration and settlement periods of this remarkable people. His account begins back in 1764 with the emigration of thousands of German pietists to the barren Volga Russian country in search of religious freedom and land opportunities. After a century of struggle but successful settlement, the task of finding religious freedom was again forced upon the children and grandchildren of the first emigrants, and wave after wave of emigration carried thousands of the Russian-German pietists to the New World, principally to the United States. Today, three thousand Americans are descendants of this larger movement.

This story will make you proud of our German Congregational people and more appreciative of their ways and tradition. Because of their stubborn insistence upon religious freedom and their cherishing of rigorous moral standards, and their long-tested passion for independence and democratic expression in religion and in community, these people have been true exponents of the Congregational Faith and Way.

Fifty per cent of sick persons need prayer more than pills, aspiration more than aspirin, meditation more than medication.

Ten Commandments for Effective Worship

By REV. ROY C. HELFENSTEIN, D. D.

- I. Thou shalt take thy seat prayerfully—before the prelude begins.
- II. Thou shalt wait in the narthex, if thou arrivest after the service has begun, until the usher signals to thee to permit him to show thee to a seat.
- III. Thou shalt follow the usher to the seat he wishes to give thee; to do otherwise is a discourtesy.
- IV. Thou shalt be reverent from the time thou takest thy seat on through to the close of the service. Visiting with the person beside thee during the worship is an offense to God and to the congregation.
- V. Thou shalt join heartily in the singing of the hymns and in the responsive reading; or if thou canst not sing, worshipfully read in silence the words that are being sung.
- VI. Thou shalt reverently bow thy head during each prayer, giving earnest thought to what the prayer includes—thus making the prayer thy personal petition to God.
- VII. Thou shalt seek help from every part of the service; if thy purpose in attending church is merely to criticize what is said and done, then both thee and the service are cursed by thy presence. People go to church to receive help from the Lord and not to find fault.
- VIII. Thou shalt be in a spirit of prayer throughout the service—praying for thy own needs, for those responsible for conducting the service, and for all gathered with thee in the worship of the Lord thy God.
- IX. Thou shalt be alert for phrases, sentences and ideas voiced in the anthems, solos, hymns, prayers and sermon that will aid thee in thy religious thinking.
- X. Thou shalt praise the Lord thy God with thy personal prayer of thanksgiving, with thy worshipful presence in His sanctuary, and with thy offerings that express sacrifices.

"THE BOOK TO LIVE BY."

By REV. JAMES V. CLAYPOOL, D. D.
Secretary for Promotion of Use,
American Bible Society.

"The Book to Live By" will be the theme of the sermons in thousands of churches on Universal Bible Sunday, December 11. Universal Bible Sunday, for decades, has been the occasion for pastors to encourage wider and more understanding use of the Bible. The Bible is such a familiar book, and so easily obtained in our own country, one is apt to forget that in other parts of the world there are people hungering for the Book which feeds their spirit, enriches their lives.

"One afternoon I visited an old couple in my pastorate," wrote Pastor Werner Stamm to the American Bible Society, from Kierspe, British Zone, Germany, "who during a bombing raid lost everything. The husband is blind. They live as evacuees in a hut. I made this special visit because it was the man's birthday and I wanted to read to him from the Bible. 'Neighbors gave us this torn Bible in order that we might find comfort in it,' they told me. Then I could answer: 'I will bring to you a beautiful new Bible, a gift of the American Christian people.' You should have seen the joy on their faces. Yes, all the Nazi propaganda could not destroy the belief in God of the old people."

"The Book to Live By!" When one's faith is founded on the Scriptures, nothing shakes one's belief.

A pastor in the northern part of Brazil who was visiting a new community for the first time, asked if there were any there who were "people of the Bible." He was at once directed to a certain home. There he found a group of believers and heard the story of the Bible which had been discarded by its owner.

But one day the owner died, and when his books were divided among his sons, one of them saved the Bible from the rubbish heap and read its message. Soon he was reading to his family, and soon the power was being felt in their lives. When the pastor told them that he was a minister of that Gospel, tears came to the eyes of the group as they told him he was an answer to prayer; and with them as a nucleus, the first evangelical church in that region was organized.

The Book—powerful not only in the individual life, but so filled with dynamite that a community can be charged from the force of its teachings.

But to help, to inspire, the Book must be read. Those who are statistically minded will be interested in Dr. Francis Stifler's comment: "During 1943 when the United States was deep in the war, Dr. George Gallup took a poll of Bible readers. He found that while there were 64 percent of the people who read the Bible to some extent during the year, only one in ten read it daily. Although this showed an increase over a similar poll taken the year before, the figures were alarmingly low."

Alarmingly low for a country that had been founded on the Bible. "The Bible is the rock on which our Republic rest," Andrew Jackson said. What was becoming of this sure foundation? Was America, in her complacency, creating a tense pattern of life that did not take into account the giving of time to the serious reading of the Scriptures?

The Bible is "The Book to Live By." "To it mankind must return if we are to heal the distemper of our lives and to resolve the disorder of the world," writes Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell, pastor of Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City.

PROTESTANT SESSIONS SLATED.

Clerical and lay leaders of Protestant Churches in ten Southern states will meet in Atlanta, Georgia, December 6-8 to strengthen their cooperative effort in many areas of church life.

Dr. Forrest C. Weir, executive secretary of the Southeastern Inter-Council Office of four interdenominational bodies, said that between 500 and 600 officially appointed delegates will attend the second Southeastern Inter-Church Convocation in a "dramatic witness to the essential oneness of Protestantism."

Dr. Weir said that reservations already received assure the participation in the convocation of delegates from churches in Virginia, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana and Tennessee.

This "grass roots" church meeting will hear from many national interdenominational leaders who will attend also the bi-monthly meeting of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

An all-day meeting of the policy-making body of 27 Protestant and Eastern Orthodox denominations, usually held in New York, will precede the initial session of the Convocation on the evening of Tuesday, December 6.

MISS LEONA BURR WITHDRAWS FROM SHAOWU.

Under date of November 18 we received the following from Dr. Earl H. Ballou of the American Board:

"The first of the week a radiogram came announcing the arrival in Foochow of Miss Leona Burr. This completes the withdrawal of the missionaries who have been at Shaowu. But we still do not have details explaining what finally precipitated the withdrawal. We now know that Dr. Riggs had come to feel that his wife's approaching confinement made it desirable that she should be in Foochow in the Union Hospital rather than up country. The necessity for both of the Riggses to come down to the coast, thus removing all foreign medical missionaries, would make it very hard for the Jackson family to feel it was advisable to stay behind. Dr. Matthews has written of the numerous openings in the Foochow area into which these Shaowu people could fit just as soon as they arrive."

The latest word which we have heard indicates that Han Mei School opened in September and it is our hope that interference from the Communists has not necessitated closing the school temporarily. Timothy Chang believes that the hospital in Shaowu under the directorship of Dr. H. L. Chu and a corps of Chinese nurses is more needed and appreciated now than ever. Among the Chinese pastors and leaders who are still in Shaowu and carrying on the work are Rev. T. S. Lo, Rev. Samuel Huang, Rev. Y. T. Liao, Rev. Shen Pao Chiu, and family of Timothy Chang, and others.

Let us not cease in our prayers for the work in Shaowu and in China as a whole. Our Christian pastors, the Jacksons, Riggses, and Miss Burr must be suffering great anguish at the necessity of having their work in the name of Christ interrupted. We earnestly hope that the condition in China will soon be stabilized and that our representatives may be able to return to Shaowu. However, if they are not able to return to Shaowu immediately, there will be great need for their services in other parts of a troubled China. Now more than ever before our prayers and gifts are needed that there may be abundant service rendered there. It is our purpose to keep the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN informed of developments as we receive information.

The Christian Sun

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.
A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

CHRISTIAN MATERIALISTS.

This editorial is being written on Thanksgiving Day. It is indeed a far cry from the hardships and deprivations of 1621 to the ease and extravagance of 1949. There are evidences that this festival has become simply a "Turkey Day" rather than a Thanksgiving Day. Excessive, indulgent and selfish materialism should be decried, but we can thank God for an efficient and dedicated materialism.

On Thanksgiving Day we meditate gratefully on our agricultural and technological advances and recognize in this materialistic heritage the gifts of an infinitely providential Father. The vast destruction of two wars within a generation shout to us not only concerning the swift advances in the methods of warfare but also concerning the potentialities of Kingdom building through modern technological development. The insight of the prophet must be kept before us. Swords must be turned into plowshares; spears into pruning hooks. The skills which were used for purposes of destruction must now be used redemptively.

The Church should promote a healthy materialism. The modern miracle of electricity may be made the bondservant of religion in a number of ways. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof." Yes, "the fullness thereof," mind you! Rather than decry the multitude of modern gadgets, why not endeavor to bring more of them under subservience to the Lord? There is a danger that we penalize the Church by delimiting the realm of the spiritual. We impoverish the Church by our failure to make the material an ally of the spiritual.

Here, then, is the modern task of stewardship: not only to raise dollars and develop the spiritual life, but to find more efficient ways of putting dollars to work. The abundant life which Jesus came to bring cannot be divorced from the material world, for it presupposes the sanctification of the natural world.

THE CADMAN TRAVESTY.

The Cadman Memorial Church in Brooklyn, New York, has gone to the Courts in an effort to restrain the General Council from consummating the merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. After generous efforts by representatives of the C. C. and the E. & R. Churches to safeguard the rights and allay the fears of the high priests of Congregationalism, a group of opponents have plunged proceedings into legal action. The plea is being heard before Mr. Justice Steinbrink. Mr. Kenneth W. Greenwalt is the attorney for the Cadman Church. Mr. Loren Wood is the attorney for the General Council. The trial began November 14 and adjourned November 21, to be resumed on November 30. Chief witnesses produced by the plaintiff included the Rev. Raymond B. Waser and Judge David E. Brown who were brought from Pasadena, California. A long trial is expected.

If there are those who have the disposition to legally contest this merger, even after an overwhelming majority of our people have voted favorably, who would deny them this privilege? If there are those who are more zealous for the preservation of their highly vaunted freedom than they are the realization of Kingdom ends and ideals, due allowance must be made for them in a spiritual democracy. If there are those whose motion and commotion in the backfield penalize the advance of church union, it will be recognized as humanity running true to form.

But if a group of people are intent on perpetuating action of this kind, let them use their own name and stand on their own merit. The name Cadman carries great weight in American Christian thought, and any activity of this kind should be dissociated from the influence of this great personality whose eloquent voice has been silenced by death. Samuel Parkes Cadman, mighty champion of peace, cooperation and union, now helpless and voiceless in death, is made a protagonist of a reactionary group. There in Brooklyn where his voice rang throughout the Christian world in support of fraternity and unity, he is unwittingly made a defender of the status quo.

How dare anyone trifle with the name of this renowned preacher? Can his testimony and influence be reversed? Cadman, apostle of ecumenicity, belongs to Christendom, and cannot be made subservient to any ecclesiastical minority. The enemies of Christ put a purple robe on him, but he did not deserve it, nor could they keep it on him. The Cadman Church is a misnomer. Change the name or drop the suit!

WOULD YOU A BUILDER BE?

New churches are being built, and many of them built in new and growing communities where they are desperately needed. Stories of faith, adventure and heroism are coming from these new organizations.

Here is a story of a new church organized in a warehouse. "A warehouse, rough, unpainted and rather bare can be a lovely place when doors are thrown open to His presence, when voices are raised in song and hearts in prayer," says Dale Ratliff concerning the new church at Plantation Homes, located just west of Fort Lauderdale, Florida. He adds this: "It is good to work among people who are serious in their intent, vigorous in their conviction and wide in their desires. It is good to work in a new community, where every man is a builder in his own right; with young men and women who know how to build a community, and are hard at it." Indeed! How many of us would have the humility and faith to begin services in an unpainted warehouse? It is thus that the Kingdom grows.

OUR SPIRITUAL UNIVERSE.

A Sermon

For the First Sunday in Advent

By REV. W. R. CATTON, Decatur, Illinois.

The Christian year begins with the Advent season, which is the period including the four Sundays preceding Christmas. The first Sunday in Advent is the one nearest November 30. During Advent the Old Testament prophets and John the Baptist are much in the minds of Christians because they stressed the necessity for repentance and the coming of the awaited Messiah. Advent is a season of preparation for the coming of Christ into the world, and should be used as a time of penitence and special prayer that we may be worthy of him who is God's greatest gift. The coming of Christ into the world is an event, is an experience, of such profound significance that we must devote a whole period of time, not just a single day, to thinking about its meaning and preparing ourselves to enter in to this meaning. We are summoned to penitence, to prayer, to a humble seeking of God, to a reverent contemplation of God's infinite wisdom and love in His sublime gift to the world of men and women.

The greatest single text in the Bible, it has been often said, is John 3:16. This is our text today. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." You will notice those are almost all short words, simple words. You will notice, too, that they are all very important words. And the very first is the most important of them all. "God" is the first word in the text. And God is the most important fact, the most significant reality there is. In this text "God" comes before "the world." And in reality God comes before the world. That is really our message today. And it is a message of profound and fundamental importance.

I suppose by "the world" the gospel writer meant all the people of the world, all the people living on this planet. Perhaps he would include the "starry heavens," the whole universe, or as much of it as men were in the habit of thinking about in his day. Primarily he meant people, the human race. Presumably he would include you and me. We are a part of this world that God so loved. We are among those to whom God sent His Son. And we are part of "the world" that "God" comes before. God comes before all people. God is as real as people. Go down town tomorrow, to shop, to work. You will meet people, jostle with people, buy and sell with people, work with people. People, yourself and others, are very real; yourself the most real of all. God, I say, is as real as people. God is more real than people. God is, and was before people. In Him, it is, that we live and move and have our very being. In the beginning was God. All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made. In Him is life. God is the first and basic reality.

Do you realize that? Do you understand that God is more than an idea, of the philosophers? Is more than a name for a philosophical principle. Is more than a "great first cause" of metaphysics. God is more than the projection of our own hopes and dreams and fears. God is! God is the first reality. God is more real than anything else. God even comes before "the world."

And the second great reality of expedience is the love of God. "God so loved," our text reminds us. "God so loved" that certain great things happened. Human history, human experience, human hopes, human ideals, are all consequent upon the love of God. This a spiritual universe. Men have called it a material universe. Lately, physical science having disclosed what it has, we are not so sure what a "material" universe is. What we used to call "solid matter" has now become a business of "points of force," of atoms, electrons, attractions and repulsions, forces, energies. This is what "matter" turns out to be when we understand it more fully. We are no longer quite sure what a "material" universe is. Let's get back to reality. Let's get back to the old Christian idea. This is a spiritual universe! God is the great reality. The love of God is the great energy. It is God loving the world that has made us. That is the message of the Advent season.

And now, the supreme consequence of this great reality, the coming of God's Son into the world, that the world through him might be saved.

God is not only the great, true, reality, God is a very active reality. God's love is a very active force. This force it is which has created our so-called "material" universe. This force it is that has created men and women, and has made the destiny of men and women to be the central hope and purpose about which all else turns. And this destiny of men and women is now seen to be a splendid destiny. For God, loving the world of men and women as He does, sent His own Son into the world that men and women might be redeemed, might be freed of the base and the mean that would hold them down and be lifted into the likeness of God Himself, who made them and who loved them. And it is God who does this. That is our message as we prepare for Christmas.

Men and women need salvation, that we know. Our own sins, our own selfishness, our own mistakes and foolishness, can get us in an awful way. The world of men and women is in desperate straits today. If we are not careful we may destroy ourselves. And many men and women do destroy themselves, by their follies and their sins. O yes, we need salvation, that we well know.

And here is salvation! Here is God! The God of whom we are the well-beloved children. God is moved to intervene. God sees our plight. But God sees also our splendid possibilities. God understands always, what we have so often, so sadly forgotten, that we are His children; that we are created in His image. And if God is for us, who can be against us? It is God, who gave His own Son, who now bids us hope.

Yes, God sent His Son. This is not merely a dream. This is not just a figure of speech. This is a great historical reality. God is involved in our world. I will not say that God is a part of the world; I will rather say that the world is a part of God. God is the first and the greatest reality. And you and I, our lives, have meaning because we find our meaning in Him and in His mighty purposes for us. God is with us.

The greatest title given to the man, Jesus of Nazareth, is not his name, Jesus, great as that is, for it means a "Saviour" from our sins; nor is it the "Christ," magnificent as that is, for it means the "anointed one," the one who is our king, receiving our allegiance. The greatest title is "Emmanuel," for that means "God with us." God is with us. We are not alone, lost in a universe expanding to infinity, a universe finally exploding

Concerning Church Longevity

Churches are not only born, but they also die. The mortality rate is something that church statisticians rarely shout about from the rooftops, but churches also have a strange habit of proving their autopsies premature and their death record false, says Dr. Ross W. Sanderson of New York, Director of Field Research for the Congregational Christian Board of Home Missions.

Over 50 per cent of the Congregational Christian Churches in America are safely in the zone of "unquestionably successful," says Dr. Sanderson, or at least stable enough to give no concern to their State Superintendents. The remainder, however, are considered by Dr. Sanderson's Committee as "marginal," or churches that for one reason or another are weak and needing specialized help.

"Marginality takes different forms. It is one thing on the prairie, another in the New England hills, still another in the intermountain plateaus of the great west," continues Dr. Sanderson. "Sometimes church mortality is due to sheer over-churching. Most of America was over-churching to begin with and as rural populations have actually shrunk and standards of churchmanship as of education, have risen, the over-churching has become more and more of a sin."

Some churches may properly be called sub-marginal, Dr. Sanderson points out. These are so weak that they are likely to be a missionary responsibility. Not all of these should be kept alive. Some of them, in spite of what looks like fatally pernicious anemia refuse to die. Sometimes churches have more life in them than an outside observer could imagine.

"Sometimes circumstances change. Irrigation may give the parched church a new chance; incoming thousands of people may give a dying rural congregation the opportunity to become a flourishing suburban parish. About one in six Congregational Christian Churches are sub-marginal, says Dr. Sanderson. Churches that are too small are more than an average risk, Dr. Sanderson points out. Little churches that gain at first but never reach 150 or 200 members are likely to lose out. Their decline may be a reflection of community changes over which they have little or no control, or they may have been planted in a place with "inadequate depth of earth—the topsoil may literally have been blown away."

However "size alone is not a guaranty of survival," declares Dr. Sanderson, citing examples of large churches in urban situations that are finding it increasingly difficult to survive. "Many mighty churches of yesterday in more than one city are now only memories." In areas where there is what Dr. Sanderson calls "a protecting culture" as in Massachusetts, the smallest churches of half a century ago have grown at the highest rate and those with 500 or more members 50 years ago, at the lowest rate.

Some churches are neither successes nor failures but rather on the borderline of failure. They are not dependent but neither are they independently strong. About a fifth of the Congregational Churches, said Dr. Sanderson fall into this category. They might be termed "sick" but they respond to careful treatment.

The chief center of attention of Dr. Sanderson's department are those churches called "churches of promise," namely, enterprises definitely on the margin of success though not yet successful. "Located in communities where they are capable of sustained growth but needing help to move them up to the level of greater strength, these are the relatively high potentials among churches that have not yet attained. Their future is hypothetical but a push from outside may help them make the grade. One church in nine in the Congregational fellowship is deemed to be of this sort, by Dr. Sanderson's Committee.

"The function of our committee, as I understand it," says Dr. Sanderson, "is not to solve emergency situations by the use of special funds but to explore methods by which regular administrative channels may become more effective in reducing and preventing marginality among our churches. A large part of the Committee's work will consist of developing new procedures which ultimately will apply to urban as well as rural churches."

NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA MINISTERS!

All ministers of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference are to meet at Elon College, Library Building, at 10:00 a. m., on December 12, 1949. At the November meeting of the Piedmont Ministerial Association, it was voted to make the Association the North Carolina and Virginia Conference Ministerial Association.

Two important things will claim our attention at this meeting on December 12:

1. The review of the book, The Church and Older People, by Cedarleaf. Rev. James Allen of Lynchburg will be the reviewer.

2. Rev. Thurman Bowers will lead the discussion on "The United Evangelistic Advance" and our Conference. The results of the Greensboro Area Conference on Evangelism will be given and the proposed plans for Evangelism in the Conference during 1950. This will affect every church and every minister. A schedule of visiting evangelism teams will be made. "The Pilot Project" will be projected.

Every minister of every church in the North Carolina and Virginia Conference should be in attendance. Dues in the North Carolina and Virginia Ministerial Association will be $1.00 each and each minister will then receive mileage, though it is hoped those coming from the same direction will get together.

THE WELLESLEY MEETING.

Commenting upon the International Council held last June at Wellesley College, the Christian World of London says:

The Wellesley meetings were a heartening reminder that through this denomination groups of men and women throughout the world are vowed to the fundamental Congregational principle of liberty—as the Council's message to the Churches put it, "liberty for the individual, for the Churches, and for that free association of the Churches which is the Church." Congregationalism is still, among all the Free Churches, the freest of the free. No aspect of the Christian witness is more urgently needed in the world of today than this claim to freedom as "an inalienable right, not by the grant of society, but because all freedom is derived of God and resides in the free consent of the people of God. . . ." Freedom under God is the one condition of light: light in our theological studies, light in our discussion of ethics, light in our political and social decisions.

Congratulations to the Durham Morning Herald on its current publication of Fulton Oursler's "The Greatest Story Ever Told," a magnificent story of the life of Christ.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITH

A CHALLENGE TO THE CONVENTION.

To the Ministers, Laymen, Convention Boards, and Church and Sunday School Officials:

Threescore and ten years ago a group of capable and interested members of our church in the South had a vision of the needs and the possibilities of our church in the Southern Convention. The fires of hope were kindled in their hearts and burned brightly from day to day. They were convinced that the only hope for their church in the years to come was in a consecrated, alert, and efficiently trained leadership for the pulpit and pew. They realized that the only hope of a properly trained leadership for the church was for the church to do its training. The training could not be left to the institutions of other denominations or state-supported colleges. Moved by such visions and convictions and inspired by the Holy One, Himself, they, their fellow ministers and members arose, amassed a fortune out of scant holdings and put it in the cause of Christian education and Elon College arose. Of course, the fortune that they amassed was meager in comparison with the needs of the movement but considering the meagerness of their holdings it was a great fortune.

In the light of present day trends and evident encroachment on the field of Christian education, Elon College, its plans and purposes for the preparation of our young people, is needed more today than the day it was founded. If our civilization is to survive in the light of conflicting ideologies, many of which are subversive as well, there must be a sane and sound program of education for the training of those who must assume the responsibilities, not only of the church but of the state.

Elon College is in sound financial condition and from every standpoint is a more efficient and commanding institution than it has been in the last eighteen years. The problem that confronts the church and all who are interested in Elon College is not only to keep it at its present status but to see that it moves forward in keeping with the pace set by other institutions—church-related and tax-supported.

The college and the church have expressed their opinions as to what will be required in dollars and cents to make Elon College the kind of institution that the church needs today and tomorrow. Two million dollars will be required. Of this two million dollars, one-half million has been secured in cash and subscriptions. A campaign to secure the remainder is in progress but progressing far too slowly. Some new efforts must be made and that as quickly as possible.

Ministers and laymen of our church, what can be done? What should be done? This problem cannot be solved by letting someone else do it. We might as well tackle our own problem instead of depending on wishful thinking that some "Godfather" will come along and drop the necessary funds in our college's treasury. It just doesn't happen that way. If we will do all that we can, by the grace of God the other will be forthcoming.

A UNITED CAMPAIGN.

Could we profit by the example of others? The Methodist Church officials, ministers and laymen, have met and launched a campaign specifically for their colleges and seminaries. The Baptists through their several associations, ministers and laymen, have met and launched a united campaign for their colleges and seminaries. Today, I read in the paper, The Greensboro Daily News, of efforts on the part of the Lutherans, laymen and ministers, in a united campaign to raise funds for their colleges and seminaries. These denominations are not leaving the matter of the support and security of their colleges to the presidents of their respective institutions but they have assumed the responsibilities themselves and are pressing their campaigns to successful conclusions. Ministers, Boards, Organizations and Laymen of our churches in the Southern Convention, what shall we do? What is your answer? Could we profit by what others are doing? Others could hardly profit by what we are doing. Could we have a meeting of our people for this specific purpose and in that meeting face the issue as to what shall be the future of our college. If you want to know what the college means and has meant to the church, attend any gathering of the Conferences or Convention and dismiss those who have been trained at Elon College and see what goes out.

Here in full is the article referred to in The Greensboro Daily News.

Lutherans Set Drive to Aid Institutions.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Nov. 23—(AP)—Lutheran laymen and ministers from six states completed plans here today for a $6,000,000 appeal for funds.

The money will be used for the 14 colleges and nine seminaries of the United Lutheran Church in America.

The two-day regional conference ended with an address by Dr. R. E. Rullos of Springfield, Ohio.

"Seldom have I seen," he said, "a great movement command so widespread and favorable a response."

The educators call the goal of $6,000,000 small in comparison with the "terrific price" both church and state would pay if deprived of the services of these schools.

Several college presidents presented the needs of their institutions. They were President Voight R. Cromer of Lenoir Rhyne, President John H. Fray of Marion, Va., College, President James C. Kinard of Newberry, S. C., College, Provost Charles J. Smith of Roanoke College, in Salem, Va., and President John L. Yost of the Theological Seminary at Columbia, S. C.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

All conferences constituting the Southern Convention have had their annual meetings. Reports reflecting the activities and achievements of local churches were made to these several conferences in annual session. Among other things the reports revealed financial records, contributions to the various interests and causes of the church, locally and otherwise.

These churches all had before them the Convention's askings for the various causes of our church. The Convention asked the churches of our conferences to contribute to Elon College a total of fifteen thousand dollars. Today, $12,357.76 has been received on this apportionment. The college is most appreciative. It is a bit apprehensive, however, as to what our churches will do toward meeting this deficit. The college period closes December 31. All money sent in prior to that date will be credited on this year's apportionment unless otherwise directed.

In view of the acute needs of the college, I trust that many of our

HAN MEI—CHRISTIAN MIDDLE SCHOOL OF SHAOWU.

By MISS JOSEPHINE WALKER.*

In 1901 after the Boxer troubles were over our Shaowu Christian Boys School had about 15 teen-age students. It met in the gallery of what was once a large tea hong (house). It has now been converted into a home for six or seven Christian families, with the school in that roomy gallery.

As the school lacked an English teacher, they asked me to help out in English, Bible and Arithmetic. Beneath the gallery where we met were four or five kitchens with no chimneys. The cooking was not always over when I arrived in the morning and climbed to the gallery. Smoke, tears and coughing interfered with our work. Soon we moved to a large room near the church.

Friends asked me why I did not get busy and raise funds for a building. One day two teachers asked what I thought of several of them contributing funds for a full-time English teacher. "Fine! But how would it be if we raised funds for a school building?" I asked. "Better yet," was the reply. And then one pledged $25.00 and one $8.00.

Having started we had to go on. Next morning I asked the students what they thought of the idea. There was no response, not even a smile. "Failed there," I thought. That afternoon a group of the students came and enthusiastically told me that they had raised $500.00 for the building. "What!" I could hardly believe my ears. They showed me the list of names—mostly their fathers. "Have they signed for these amounts?" I asked. "No, but they will." And they did.

Our churches also sent in contributions till we had over $1,000.00. Missionary friends made up another thousand. From a Mrs. Harris, through the American Board, came $2,000. The boys marveled that a widow would contribute so much.

In the course of a year the building was up. Thanks to a generous carpenter our students were allowed to nail on much of the lath and so contributed their bit.

The name of the school came from Han which stands for China and Mei which stands for America. Han had also been used for the name Harris.

THE PURPOSE OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

"The key to real understanding and mutual consideration among men of all races is a shared allegiance to the one man who belongs to all races alike and to God. We must make friends with Jesus and win friends for him if we really want an end to war and woe, and slums. No lasting order can be brought about in our man-made chaos except on the principle that the friends of our Friend are friends," said Dr. Russell Henry Stafford, at the annual meeting of the American Board.

After describing the setup of the American Board with its national representation, Dr. Stafford pointed out that foreign missions does not mean a neglect of the home field or of social action. "The total project—home missions, foreign missions, Social Action—is simply our practical recognition that this is One World; that throughout its length and breadth it needs redemption; and that the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation. In the abstract we have recognized that for a long time. But in the air-plane age—not only the passenger plane but the freight plane and the bombing plane as well—we had better begin to be very concrete about it. For nowadays what hits anybody anywhere will be hitting us at latest day after tomorrow, on the rebound, hard enough to be sharply felt.

"Further, ours is no sectarian spirit. We are a part of the Universal Church in world action. Through the work of the American Board in all its phases on all its fields we are expressing the Word of God in Christ to those who with regard to hearing it have thus far been underprivileged. In this work we are not willingly in competition with any other Christian body. It is not to make Congregationalists that we aim, but Christians.

"All the major evangelical boards have now for some years been functioning unitedly through the Foreign Missions Conference of North America of which the American Board is a member. As touching foreign missions, Christian unity already has come in principle and to an ever increasing degree it is here in practice."

Some of the highlights of both "crisis and opportunity" which Dr. Stafford mentioned included his apprehensiveness for Africa "where Colonialism at its peak today has brought millions so near the boiling point that the lid may blow off any minute;" the project of a great new International Christian University in Japan; and heartening signs that governments in fields where the missionaries have been working are increasingly providing education and super-vising health, both services in which Christian missionaries pioneered.

"The purpose of foreign missions, or Christian World Action is to put a heart into the rapidly evolving machinery of world comity and administration. Not the United Nations, or any other device, will work, unless to its two dimensions of careful planning and skilled execution there be added heart as a third dimension. The place to put in that heart is down where the common people live and where the church works. The only heart big enough for that place is the heart of Christ. . . .

"Every missionary goes out to live as a friend among the new friends he will win, not as a critic or a sales agent, but as a comrade and a helper, teaching and learning, giving and receiving, in that warm and courteous reciprocity which is the very spirit of Christ. That is the sort of thing that breaks down walls of race and prejudice by proving that for Christians they simply are not there.

"There is a two-way Christian traffic across the seas nowadays. We are beginning to enjoy the fruits of the Younger Churches in the lands of the older churches. If we are honest, we have to admit there is a good deal wrong with our own religious thinking and practice. Wise men from far countries are at length helping us to see ourselves more clearly."

Dr. Stafford ended with a plea for open minds, open hearts, open purses and much intelligent study and deep prayer.

*Miss Josephine C. Walker, Forest Grove, Oregon, the author of this article is a subscriber to The Christian Sun, formerly missionary to Shaowu, and a personal friend of Timothy Chang's family. Miss Walker's father was the first missionary to Shaowu and was instrumental in organizing the North Fukien Synod. Miss Walker taught at Han Mei and worked with Timothy Chang's mother at Lo Te Girls High School and Women's School. Her intimate knowledge of Han Mei makes her article most interesting at this time.

Church Women at Work

SOUTHERN WOMEN ATTEND CONFERENCE.

More than nine hundred women, representing Evangelical and Reformed and Congregational Christian Churches in all parts of the United States, met in Cleveland, Ohio on November 15 to 18th for a joint Fellowship Assembly.

The assembly was one of the significant united programs in anticipation of the merger of the two denominations.

In the keynote address of the Fellowship Assembly, Mrs. Harper Sibley, Rochester, N. Y., president of the United Council of Church Women, spoke on the convention theme, "Together With One Voice." Greetings were extended by the officials of the two churches and presidents of the participating groups.

Other prominent leaders who were heard on the program were Mrs. Harrison E. Elliott, general secretary of the Y.W.C.A., and Miss Margaret T. Applegarth, a secretary of the American Committee of the World Council of Churches.

Dr. Ruth Isabel Seabury, secretary of Education for the Missions Council of the Congregational Christian Churches at the banquet on Thursday night, when Christian Nationals from many parts of the world participated in a "Festival of World Christians."

Plans for an interim organization of the two womens groups were heard in the business session, the seminars were held on the proposed departments of work for the women in the United Church.

Separate sessions of the two groups were held prior to the assembly.

Featured speakers before the Congregational Christian women were Rev. Ray Gibbons, director of the council for Social Action; Miss Merle Easton, director of curriculum for the division of Christian Education; Dr. David McKeith, Jr., executive vice-president of the American Board of Missions; and Dr. Albert D. Stauffer, minister and executive secretary of the Missions Council.

The following report of the joint planning committee was presented to the Fellowship Assembly.

1. That the Women's Guild and the Woman's Fellowship continue during the interim period.

2. That there be frequent exchange of speakers and that joint meetings of leaders and of groups of E. & R. and C. C. women be suggested and arranged wherever possible.

3. That as soon as possible some program materials be planned by a joint committee.

4. That the present Women's Joint Committee become the Ad Interim Planning committee as soon as the churches are officially merged and serve until the constitution for women's work in the new church is adopted.

Southern Convention women who attended this Fellowship Assembly were, Mrs. O. H. Paris, Mrs. W. B. Williams, and Mrs. John G. Truitt as official delegates of the Convention, and Mrs. F. C. Lester, Mrs. William T. Harrell, and Miss Verdie Showalter, presidents of the three conferences.

MRS. JOHN G. TRUITT.

ONE THOUSAND WOMEN MEET.

Can you imagine a meeting of 1,000 women? That was the number attending the Fellowship Assembly of the Congregational Christian and Evangelical Reformed Women held in Cleveland, Ohio, November 16-18.

The leader of worship for the entire meeting was Miss Margaret Applegarth, known throughout the Christian world for her connection with the World Day of Prayer and for her contribution to the World Council of Churches. She is a Northern Baptist. The speaker for all three days was Mrs. Harper Sibley, an ardent Episcopalian, President of the United Council of Church Women, and an advocate of the ecumenical church.

For many, the high point of the Assembly came on Thursday night, when all one thousand of us met for a Festival of World Christians—a banquet with Ruth Isabel Seabury as the Master of Ceremonies, and music and messages presented by nationals from nine countries. It was colorful, interesting, thrilling!

For others, the high point came with the closing communion service held in Old Stone Church (Presbyterian) near the hotel. The service was prepared by Miss Applegarth, who gave the communion meditation. Mrs. Sibley also spoke. Communion was administered by our Ohio superintendent and the E. and R. Synod president for that area. Mrs. Paris was one of the deaconesses. Each C. C. woman was asked to make a "date" with an E. and R. woman and go with her to the service. We from the Southern Convention "paired off" with E. and R. women from North Carolina, and enjoyed that special fellowship. (Incidentally, there were twelve E. and R. women from North Carolina.)

Our greatest regret was that Dr. Douglas Horton, our denominational minister, and Miss Helen Kenyon, our Moderator, were unable to take their scheduled parts on the program, being detained in New York City by court action being brought by one of our Congregational Churches against the merger.

No definite uniting action could be taken by the Fellowship Assembly. However, six areas of work were defined in which both groups of women will work during the next few years, and plans were adopted whereby a constitution may be presented and adopted when and if the merger takes place. The six departments are: Worship and Evangelism, Stewardship, World Missions, Friendly Service, Christian Social Action and Christian Education.

I am sure that each of us feels very fortunate to have had the opportunity of attending this great Fellowship Assembly. There are many things we will long remember—the charm with which their Mrs. Corman and our Mrs. Walley (national presidents) jointly presided, the efficiency with which their Miss Florence Partridge and our Mrs. E. E. McClintock (Berta) managed all the details of such a meeting so that everything went off without a "hitch," the beautiful snow which came down on the park in the center of Cleveland which our hotel overlooked, the opportunity for fellowship with so many Christian women, the messages of the speakers.

We thank you, women of the Southern Convention, for this opportunity, and hope that we can be more intelligent and inspiring leaders because of it.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Christmas is coming. That means gifts to give and receive. Recently I was writing about stamp collecting and your collection may help you with your gifts and cards.

To make your cards, choose red or white stock paper. Cut or fold it the size you want and then pick a design. With green one-cent stamps and red two-cent ones you may make attractive trees, holly wreaths or leaves and berries. Brown and green stamps will make pine cones and needles. Cut a small tree or leaf for a pattern. Then cut the stamps to fit and paste on your card. Write or print your greeting. You can think up many other designs and colors.

Stamps may be used to trim the tops or cover wastepaper baskets, letter boxes and utility boxes. You could decorate a small box to hold stamps and fill it with new stamps for a surprise present. Glue the stamps carefully, fitting the perforated edges together and after allowing a few days for drying, shellac once (or maybe twice) for a permanent finish.

Or just as in making cards, stamps may be cut into different shapes to decorate scrapbooks, notebooks or telephone covers. A clean round ice-cream carton may be covered with varied hued stamps and a hole punched in the top to make a twine holder. It would be a welcome kitchen present. Shellac or varnish this, too. Think up new ways to use stamps whether they be domestic or foreign.

You will hear and see a lot about Santa Claus. Please remember that that is only a small part of Christmas. We celebrate Christmas because Jesus was born and came to make our world more lovely, more beautiful and free from much misery and pain. If Jesus had not been born, we would not have Christmas nor Santa Claus. He is a jolly old fellow whose coming is celebrated in many different ways in different lands. Ask at the library for a copy of a book telling about the different names and customs about him. He has been called "Father Christmas," "Kris Kringle," "Saint Nicholas," "Pere Noel," "St. Nick," "Jolly Klaus" and you find out how many other names.

Remember your Advent Candles. Light a candle each Sunday night before Christmas until the Sunday before and you will have four shining for the Advent of the Baby Jesus.

WHEN SMALL VISITORS ARE COMING.

By LUCIA MALLORY.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

"You seem always to have plenty of delightful books for children, Miss Mallory," commented a friend who had been making a survey of the shelves and tables in the reading room where I work as the children's librarian. "I shall be so glad to bring my grandchildren in when they come to visit us next month. Surely, they will be able to find something here that will hold their interest. I don't want them to be homesick as they were the last time."

"I'll be pleased to help the children find books they will like, when you bring them in," I promised, wondering how anyone, child or adult, could be at a loss for pleasant occupation in Mrs. Code's lovely home.

"Thank you," my friend replied. "I'm sure your understanding of children and your knowledge of these books will be a great help. Diane and Patty are dear little girls, but I've never been able to make them feel at home—though they are always welcome to wander about our big house as much as they please. It seems very strange to me, because some of the happiest memories of my own childhood center around visits to the home of my grandparents. In some way I must have failed as a grandmother."

Something in my friend's troubled face checked a casual reply and made me give her problem serious thought. "Our big house," she had said. It was spacious—an old-fashioned home—very different from the compact apartments of modern cities to which her grandchildren were probably accustomed. Suddenly, I remembered an hour I had recently spent in a home in our town where small guests had already arrived to spend the summer with their grandparents.

"Do you know Mrs. Chester who lives on Warren Street?" I inquired.

"Yes, I know her quite well," Mrs. Code answered.

"I'm sure Mrs. Chester would be glad to show you how she and her husband prepared for their grandchildren's coming," I told her. "I believe you'll find there a solution of your problem."

A few weeks later Mrs. Code came back to the library, bringing with her two smiling little girls to meet me. While the children were absorbed in some pictures at one of the display tables, she thanked me for the suggestion I had made to her.

"I hope you'll find time, Miss Mallory, to come out to our house and see what we have done to make Diane and Patty welcome," she said. "Just as I saw the Chesters had done, we, too, put hooks low in the closets and emptied the lowest dresser drawers, so that the children's clothes could be placed within their easy reach. We brought down from the attic some small chairs and a table that their mother had used when she was a child. On the back porch their grandfather fixed a large wooden box for their toys. Also, he fastened a strong rope swing to the limb of a big maple tree in the back yard. I invested in some cookie cutters that were shaped like animals and little men. The girls have had a wonderful time helping me make cookies and an equally good time helping their grandfather make a garden—delighting in the small tools he provided for them.

"I can't thank you and Mrs. Chester enough," Mrs. Code concluded, "for leading me to understand that children cannot adjust quickly to unaccustomed environments, but that household appointments, suited to their stage of development, do much to reassure them and to make them happy. I know now that it is hard for them to feel at home in a house that is planned for adults only—however loving the grown-up occupants may be. We shall continue to keep the diminutive furniture available and a few toys on hand to entertain other small visitors who may come into our home."

OHIO PILGRIM FELLOWSHIP.

By JOHN H. HUSTON.

[Eugene Dominic attended a Junior High School Conference this summer. Following is his report to the Wauseon Church, made during the Sunday morning service. His minister, Rev. Frederick Fox, has been asked to have him make a recording of this report for distribution for Summer Conference promotion.]

I think the best way to tell you about Camp Craig is to tell you about a typical day. I will start with seven o'clock in the morning and end with ten o'clock at night and tell you about some of the things that happened in between.

First bell was at 7:00 a. m. but that was only for the Kitchen Police. I was K. P. three times but it wasn't so bad. Everyone else got up at 7:30. I really should say that I got down because I slept on the top bunk of a double-decker bed. There were six double-deckers in each cabin. The cabins were screened half-way up and pretty cold. I slept with my clothes on. After I got used to sleeping in a cabin with a bunch of restless boys, I slept pretty well.

At 8:00, we went over and had breakfast in a big dining room. I put a picture of it on the bulletin board with some other pictures of Camp Crag. The food was quite good—nothing fancy but nothing bad. We only had spaghetti twice.

After breakfast we went to "Morning Watch." This was really the beginning of the day. This was the time when we said our morning prayers or read from the Bible or just thought about how good it was to be alive. Only at church camps do we start the day like this.

Around ten minutes of nine, we went back to our cabins to make our beds and tidy up. They inspected our cabins every day and gave us ratings: excellent, good, fair, poor and awful. The first day we were "poor" but after that we were always "excellent."

The daily program began at 9:15. The first period was called, "Trail Blazing" and usually it was a movie about the needs of the world and what the church was trying to do about them. These movies were good. I saw some things I never saw before. I'll never forget some of the pictures about the poor people in China.

At 9:50, we went on our "First Trail." It wasn't an actual hike on foot—it was a hike you took with your brain. We separated into small groups—like Sunday school classes—and studied parts of the Bible. The teacher would ask us to look up characters in the Bible and then we would read the parts.

At 10:30, we all came back together again in assembly. This is when the daily announcements were handed out and we heard what we got in inspection. Afterwards the Camp Council met. I was the delegate from our cabin. We talked about the gripes of the campers and tried to understand why the counsellors had to do what they did.

At 11:15, we had a choice of going to one of four different "Understanding" groups. One group was about UNDERSTANDING ourselves; another was about UNDERSTANDING China; another was about UNDERSTANDING the Pilgrim Fellowship; and the last one was about UNDERSTANDING dramatics. I went to the one about Understanding Pilgrim Fellowship. Pilgrim Fellowship is the young people's society in the Congregational Christian Church. It is supposed to be interested in all the problems that the adult church is interested in but from a young person's point of view. One problem we tried to understand better was the problem of American Negroes and American Mexicans who do not seem to be getting the same breaks as American whites. We didn't try to find an answer—we just tried to understand it. The way we did it was interesting, I thought. We pretended we were colored—at least some of us were. The rest were white. One person was a white banker, another a white storekeeper, and another a white mother—just like the regular people in a small town. Then the person who pretended to be a colored man walked in and started talking and everyone treated him like a Negro. It made us understand how a Negro feels—especially if you are the Negro.

Before dinner, we had free time. I spent my time visiting and making friends. There were boys—and girls—there from all over. I met a couple of good guys from Cleveland. I had already had a letter from one of them. He invited me over to spend a weekend. I also met some very nice girls from Kent.

Dinner was at 12:30 and we were plenty hungry. After dinner we went back to our cabins and took a nap. This was called "horizontal hour." I think the counsellors enjoyed it more than we did. They were flat on their backs. We mostly talked.

After the hour's rest period, we went to our "Interest Groups." There were also four of these: choir, personalities, China, and living. I was more interested in living than any of the others so I went to that one. We had some hot discussions about how to act at parties, good manners away from home, and things of that sort. We talked about parents and voted which kind we would rather have: strict or lenient. Some of the kids voted for strict. Don't ask me why.

Recreation began at three o'clock. Most of us played baseball. There were some pretty good players and we thought we could beat the counsellors. We were so sure, we told them we would wash the dishes on Sunday if they licked us. We washed the dishes! The score was 8 to 6. However, the cooks were helpful—they used paper dishes.

After the ball games, we would go up to the old swimming hole. That was where they had dammed up the creek which ran by the camp. It was a good-sized lake, but cold. The ones who didn't want to swim could stay at the camp and work on their handicrafts. Some made pretty stained-glass windows; others worked with leather or copper or wood. I had one of the girls make me a plastic lanyard.

We had another "free time" at six—just before dinner. This was a time for visiting and playing ping pong. I did the visiting and Tom Ross cleaned up on ping pong. He was the Camp champion.

Supper was at 6:15. During supper, we sang and played table games. After supper, we had a light program. Some evenings, we had plays and skits. One evening we had a movie on "Dates"—what to talk about and how to act at various ages.

The official day came to an end with Vespers at 8:40. Sometimes we met in the dining hall and sometimes out on the hillside—depending upon the weather. We sang hymns together and the counsellors (who were mainly young ministers) gave short talks. The one I remember best was about thermometers and thermostats.

JEREMIAH TEACHES PERSONAL RELIGION.

LESSON XI—DECEMBER 11, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: I will put my law in their inward parts, and in their hearts will I write it.—Jeremiah 31:33.

LESSON: Jeremiah 8:4-7; 26; 31.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 51:1-13.

The Naturalness of Religion.

Some folks think that religion is something tacked on to life, something that men put on from the outside, something that some folks take to because they want people to think more highly of them, something that is an accessory of life instead of an integral part of the equipment of life. They think that religion is unnatural. Jeremiah had to deal with such people. And in his words in Chapter 8:4-7 he emphasizes the fact that irreligion is unnatural, that religion is natural. He does this under several figures of speech.

For instance, says he, what would you think if you saw a man fall, and make no attempt to get up? Unless he was seriously injured, he would immediately make an effort to get upon his feet and to continue his journey. Not to do so would be a departure from the natural order. Or again, suppose a man were making a journey and after taking the wrong fork in the road or making the wrong turn, he discovered his mistake and realized he was on the wrong road. Would he not, if he were a normal man, forthwith get back upon the right road even if he had to retrace his steps? What would you think of a man who persisted in walking backwards in blind ignorance of where he was going or of what he was walking into? And finally what shall we think of people who persisted in rushing headlong and even knowingly into evil and destructive ways like a dumb horse dashing into a cavalry charge of death?

As if this were not enough to convince people of the naturalness of religion, the prophet calls attention to the fact that even the dumb animals respond to a mysterious instinct, while the people of Jehovah "know not the coming of the Lord."

Well, folks have not changed. One has only to read the daily papers, to look around him, to look within himself, to see that the way of the transgressor is hard, that the wages of sin is death, that man cannot live by bread alone, that a man without religious faith is like unto a ship without both rudder and compass. As St. Augustine said long ago, "Thou hast made us for thyself and our hearts are restless until they rest in thee." The source of that vague dissatisfaction, that restlessness, that heart hunger in many modern men and women is simply the instinctive yearning of the soul for God. We have been created in His own image, He hath put His spirit within us, He has put eternity in our hearts, it is but natural that we should want Him and seek Him. But alas that instinct can be repressed and dulled and deadened, men can lose their appetite for God.

The Curse of Formalism.

The second portion of today's lesson deals with what one writer calls "the worthlessness of a religion of external forms." Obeying the "word of the Lord which came unto him," Jeremiah goes into the the court of the Lord's house and speaks courageously to those who had come up from the cities of Judah to worship in the Temple. Here at the very heart of the religious life of the nation, and in the midst of the forms and ceremonies prescribed by the ancient and honored law, the man of God denounces these forms and ceremonies as being worthless in the eyes of Jehovah, because there was no correspondence between profession and performance. The people were circumspect and correct concerning the forms of religion, but careless as to the fruits of religion. Like the scribes and Pharisees of a later day, their religion was formal, external, legal.

God was not pleased with such religion then. He declared through the prophet that He would make Jerusalem and even the great Temple like unto Shiloh, which even then was in ruins. It was a strange and sobering message but it found literal and fearful fulfilment within a few years. And even as God was not pleased with such religion then, He is not pleased with such religion now.

Except our righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the scribes and the Pharisees we shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of heaven. This does not mean that forms and ceremonies do not have a place and value in religion. But they are means to an end. And without the spirit they are dead.

Concerning Personal Religion.

It must be kept in mind that the Jews thought of themselves as members of a "covenant nation." God had made a covenant with the Jewish people, sealed and ratified at Sinai, and because of the sins of the people renewed by him again and again on their behalf. For the average Jew, religion was very much a matter of a national and hence an impersonal thing. The individual was very much swallowed up in the state. But a new landmark in religion was set up by Jeremiah when he announced the principle and the power of personal religion. There was an adage or proverb at that time, "The fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth have been set on edge." It was the ancient and popular game of passing the buck. Not so, says this man of God. "Every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge." It was a variation of Ezekiel's famous words, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Religion in essence is a personal thing. The heart of it is a personal relationship between God and the soul of the individual believer. It is only thus that religion can have warmth and power. It is only thus that it can become real. Its secret is simple. It begins with decision, a decision to yield one's self through faith to God and to obedience to him, and it continues by a host of other decisions as the call to action comes. It is a linking of life with a great leader in a sustaining, strengthening fellowship in service, and if need be in sacrifice.

in complete destruction as atoms themselves are ripped asunder. God is with us. We are at home, in a universe of His great love, which He has made, by His love for us and because of His love for us. God is with us. Hear the message of the blessed Advent time: "God so loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

RESOLUTION OF APPRECIATION.

The following is a resolution of appreciation for services rendered by the Rev. W. Millard Stevens, adopted by the First Congregational Christian Church of Burlington, North Carolina:

WHEREAS, The Reverend W. Millard Stevens has resigned his pastorate, after having served for nearly five years as a faithful and loyal pastor; therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That we will long remember his cooperative spirit and friendliness in our community. His untiring efforts in building the attendance and spiritual life of our church.

2. That we congratulate the Christian Temple of Norfolk, Virginia, upon being fortunate in securing a man of his high calibre for their spiritual leader.

3. That our prayers and sincere regards go with him and Mrs. Stevens as they enter a larger field of service.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be placed upon the records of our church, a copy sent to Mr. Stevens, one to the secretary of the Christian Temple of Norfolk, Virginia, and one to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication.

IN MEMORIAM.

During the past year two of our ministers have passed on to their reward. This report is designed to give some recognition to their personality and work in our midst.

LUCIUS L. LASSITER.

Rev. Lucius Lee Lassiter, son of the late John Lassiter and wife, was born in Gates County, near Sunbury, North Carolina, April 9, 1863. He attended Elon College and graduated from that institution in June, 1898. After graduation from college, he was called to serve a group of churches in the Virginia Valley Conference, where he remained for several years. His principal work as a pastor was done in that Conference. He was later called to serve the South Norfolk Church for a few months. After this he retired from active work, as a pastor, and devoted the most of his time to repair work as a carpenter, preaching as a supply occasionally, when an opportunity was open to him. For several years he was employed by the Lakeview Hospital of Suffolk where he used his talents to good effect in having general oversight over needed repairs.

He was a spiritually minded man, devout in his attitude towards the church and interested in its progress and spiritual growth. He died on the 23rd day of August, 1949.

* * * *

FRANK H. LEWIS.

Dr. Frank H. Lewis, pastor of the Shelton Memorial Church, Portsmouth, Virginia, for nine years, was born November 4, 1872, in the State of Maryland. He was a son of the late Abram and Elizabeth Hanly Lewis. He began preaching at the early age of 21 or 22 years, as a minister in the Methodist Protestant Church. Later he became pastor of some of the large churches of that denomination, the most significant pastorate being a great church in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. He served as president of his conference for a term of years and was recognized as a great preacher.

After his retirement he visited some friends in Portsmouth, Virginia. While on that visit the pastor of the Shelton Memorial Church passed on to his reward. Dr. Lewis was invited to preach one Sunday as a supply. The congregation was so well pleased a call was extended to him and he accepted, remaining as pastor until his death at Massanetta Springs Bible Conference, on August 28, 1949. Soon after accepting a call to the church in Portsmouth, Virginia, he transferred his membership to the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference. In November, 1948, he was elected president of this Conference.

Dr. Lewis was soon recognized as a great preacher. His physical appearance was a great asset to his work in the pulpit. His massive body, his alert attitude, his strong face, his keen mind, his vivid imagination and his eloquent tongue commanded attention when he appeared in the pulpit to declare the gospel message. He set for himself a high standard of moral conduct and spiritual living. He said to me many times: "I do not understand how any minister can afford to smoke or chew tobacco in any form. I think a minister should be different in his personal life." That was an index to his standard, for himself, in the whole field of ministerial relations.

He was a great Christian and a powerful preacher of the Word of God. He was a man of God. It was my happy privilege to have him as a real friend. He carried sunshine in his face and friendship in his heart.

His death was a great shock to all who knew him well.

We suggest that the Conference stand for a moment of silence, followed by a prayer of thanksgiving to God for the gift of these men to our church and a prayer of sympathy and friendship for the bereaved families.

We further suggest that a copy of this tribute be entered upon the records of the Conference, a copy sent to the families and a copy sent to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

It was a joy to visit the Wake Chapel Sunday school and church the third Sunday in November and to see what fine things that faithful people are doing for their church and community. Rev. Fred Register is the pastor. They had a bus and many cars to bring pupils to Sunday school. They had an excellent junior choir which sang during the worship period at Sunday school, and one of the finest young people's choirs I have heard in a long time. This choir along with the excellent church choir sang at the 11:00 o'clock service. They "passed the hat" for the Orphanage and received more than $1,400.00. Mr. W. J. Ballentine is a member of our board of trustees and keeps a liberal spirit alive there for this institution. Their many faithful members and their pastor join in this work for the children here.

Our children—about forty of them—presented a pageant at the Burlington Rotary Club this past Monday night. They graciously "passed the hat" and we received $1,582.00. There

He who gives a child a treat Rings a bell in Heaven's street!

These men live within a few miles of the Orphanage. They know its worth, its business reputation, and many of its children. They know they are helping helpless little ones.

Every church and every Sunday school is urged to check their record and see whether or not they are making a monthly offering from the Sunday school, and also to see to it that they make a liberal Thanksgiving offering. The attached report shows that we need $18,521.71 to reach our 1949 goal.

A few days ago I met a committee from the Hank's Chapel Church at the Ferrell-Browning Furniture Store in Durham, and they selected beautiful mahogany twin beds and completely furnished their room here, putting a beautiful rug on the floor, and curtains at the window. They paid for the fresh painting of the room. They know already how much I appreciate this.

Make your own Christmas a joyous one by helping your Children's Home reach a very much needed goal. Thank you!

Thermometers just show whether it's hot or cold, but thermostats do something about it. The point was: don't just blow your top like a thermometer—do something constructive like a thermostat.

After Vespers, we got ready for bed. But this was a slow process. We still had a lot of visiting to do. But by 9:45 each cabin had collected its campers for a private meeting. In our cabin, we met around a little worship center which we had built. It had a Bible on it. We went over the activities of the day and tried to figure out what had been good about it and what hadn't been. If there were any problems we tried to thrash them out. For instance, one girl didn't seem to be getting along with anyone and we decided we would try to give

ALGER.

WHEREAS, Almighty God has taken from our fold our dear brother, Thomas Z. Alger, to the home on high and where all tears are wiped away and where the just shall forever reign and be rewarded according to their works; therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That while we deeply feel the loss of so faithful and consecrated member, we resign our wills to the will of Him who doeth all things well.

2. That our deceased brother's associations with us have us have been and will continue to an inspiration and example to us to lead better lives and to perform more faithfully the work which the Master has called us to do.

3. That we recognize his faithfulness to duty in that he served the church as deacon for nearly fifty-four years.

4. That we extend to his sorrowing family our heartfelt sympathy in this their sad time of bereavement, and trust that they will be comforted by the Great Healer of all sorrows.

5. That a copy of these resolutions be inscribed on the records of the Newport Congregational Christian Church and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

COMMITTEE.

SIMPSON.

Our beloved member, Mrs. J. D. Simpson, age 79, passed to her eternal reward November 8, 1949.

We, the members of the Ladies Class of Bethlehem Christian Church desire to express our love and respect for one who served so faithfully in our class.

Therefore, be it resolved:

1. That we shall miss her in the sweet fellowship of our work together. We shall always cherish the memory of her friendship.

2. That we hold lasting remembrance of her love, loyalty and service to her Master.

3. That to the members of her family be extended our sincere sympathy and the hope that our appreciation of her may, in some measure, lighten the burden of their bereavement.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication and a copy sent to the members of her family.

HELP YOUR VOLUNTARY VIRGINIA TUBERCULOSIS ASSOCIATIONS FIGHT TO STAMP OUT TB.

Last year 15,000 Virginians had tuberculosis. Many of these in rural sections of our state could not get to adequate medical care because there is not enough chest surgery or hospital beds.

Your local tuberculosis association assumes a share in tuberculosis control by helping to paint a picture of the needs where you live. Your community does not get money to provide facilities for tuberculosis control until a certain percentage of people are aware of the need and a desire to correct the condition is created. In the second place, doctors, nurses, social workers, clinics, hospitals are of no avail until the man on the street knows enough about tuberculosis to take advantage of the facilities which are provided. Therefore the health education services of your local association are directed toward professional workers, schools and colleges, families and patients, management and labor. It makes use of all channels of communication from the spoken word to television aiming to tell all the people that TB is preventable and curable; how to prevent it, where to go for diagnosis, treatment and rehabilitation.

The greatest problem however is to find the unknown cases and get them under treatment before they spread their germs to others. Therefore local associations in Virginia have helped to encourage everyone to check up with a chest X-ray whenever possible and have tried to obtain X-ray survey services for their communities if they were not yet available. Working to make more community X-rays possible is still a challenge even if 201,000 Virginians were X-rayed in 1948.

Improved case finding with more people having X-rays each year as they become possible and modern treatment make it possible for more people to recover from tuberculosis, but the trend throughout the country shows a consistent increase in the number of people attacked. We have not been able to cut off the reservoirs of infection in the unknown cases. This is particularly true in the middle and old age groups. It is interesting to note that more than half the people who died of tuberculosis in Richmond last year were 45 years of age or older and this is also the trend in Virginia. Age is no guarantee against tuberculosis.

The tuberculosis control is based on a joint study of basic facts in the local Virginia community. These facts include such items as the number of known cases, prevalence in age and racial groups, present facilities for prevention, diagnosis and rehabilitation.

Most of the activities of local associations are of a continuing nature such as health education, public relations, research, casefinding, rehabilitation, finance and administration. While the specific activities change from year to year to fit the needs, the general plan is maintained.

Along with casefinding and health education rehabilitation is an essential part of the total program to control tuberculosis because through it individuals found to have TB are assisted in solving their personal problems and are aided in preparing to return to useful living when they receive their medical discharge from the hospital.

Medical research is a must in our efforts to eradicate tuberculosis. Without scientific knowledge, we cannot expect to make progress against TB. Through research we are learning more and more about the tuberculosis germ and its habits, about the course of the disease, about the treatment of tuberculosis, about agents in efforts to protect tuberculosis, about drugs believed to be of value in the treatment of tuberculosis. Last year local Virginia TB associations gave money for research in the use of streptomycin.

In the need for casefinding, health education, rehabilitation and medical research voluntary local tuberculosis associations have based their programs on their own localities. Treatment is not within the providence of voluntary associations but is provided by public agencies. It is the responsibility for local associations to keep the people informed of the need for adequate facilities to care for the tuberculars.

The program of tuberculosis control needs your support. It needs your active interest, your participation in its work if you can possibly spare the time, and your financial support through the purchase of Christmas Seals. Everyone in your community can help fight tuberculosis by buying and using Christmas Seals. This Christmas let's show a united front to stamp out tuberculosis.

her a better time. By the end of the week she seemed to like Camp just as well as we did.

Before lights out, we read some more from the Bible and took turns reading the prayers. Even after ten o'clock, when the lights did go out, we kept reading the scriptures by flashlight. Things got quieter and quieter and soon we were all asleep.

I don't remember what I dreamed about at Camp but since I got back I know I have dreamed about the good times I had there. I never had a better time. It was the best Camp yet and we all thank the church for sending us there. I hope we will be able to pay you back—with new ideals and enthusiasm.

THE FOOTHOLD

By Charles A. Wells

The financial crisis that has overtaken the dollar-pound areas is more spiritual than economic. The cost and wastage of war has pushed us beyond the foundation of physical resources. A national magazine recently pointed out the fact that all the gold mined since the days of Columbus—1492—only equals about 40 billion dollars. Yet our Government budget is 45 billion, which is more than all the gold mined in the past 500 years. Our national debt of 265 billion looms very large in those terms. What makes our money good is no longer monetary wealth; it is our faith in our country, its leadership, and in men. Those who do not believe in God are cynics and never have much faith in man. When we realize that the British pound is hanging for its life to the dollar we can see how the whole thing is braced by the quality of our faith. The future of America and the world rests more upon what will happen in our churches than in our banks.

PLEASANT RIDGE CHRISTIAN CHURCH PLANS CONSECRATION SERVICE FOR NEW PARSONAGE ON DECEMBER 11

Pleasant Ridge Christian Church of the Western North Carolina Conference realized a dream of many years on Saturday, November 19, 1949. This date marked the moving of Rev. and Mrs. Clyde L. Fields and their 13-year-old son, Clyde, Jr., into the new parsonage located on Route 1, Ramseur, on a knoll just across from Pleasant Ridge Church.

PLEASANT RIDGE PARSONAGE.

The parsonage is of frame construction, with white asbestos siding, completely insulated and weather-stripped, and heated by an oil floor-furnace. It is a two-story modern home containing eight rooms and bath, inlaid linoleum on the bathroom and kitchen floors, beautiful lighting fixtures, Venetian blinds, has a half basement, and is located on a tract of about two and one-half acres of land.

A Service of Consecration is planned for the 11:00 A. M. hour on December 11, 1949. At this service an effort will be made to clear the parsonage of some indebtedness. Special envelopes are being distributed to be turned in at the service on December 11. Contributions will be removed from the envelopes, the empty envelopes with the contributor's name and amount of contribution will be placed in a special metal box to be opened on the second Sunday of December, 1959 (ten years later). Newspaper clippings of the service, a copy of The Christian Sun, a short history of the parsonage, names of previous contributors of money, time, equipment, and materials will also be placed in the metal box.

News Flashes

Our Winchester Church is broadcasting its morning services during December through the facilities of WING (1400 K. C.). Rev. R. A. Whitten is pastor.

The Belew Creek Church makes available its building for a clinic of the medical department of Forsyth County. Clinics are held there monthly. This is sound Social Action as well as good churchmanship.

Rev. Carl Wallace, ministerial student at Elon College, is the new pastor of New Hope, Beulah, Oak Level, Antioch and Bethlehem Churches of the Eastern North Carolina Conference.

Be certain to remember our retired and disabled ministers at Christmas-time by receiving a liberal offering for the Christmas Fund. Gifts to this fund should be mailed promptly to the Southern Convention Office.

Dr. Frank Laubach, renowned missionary of the American Board, is to be at Elon College, December 13-14. He will address a mass meeting on the 14th to which all our people in driving distance are invited.

Superintendent Scott was guest preacher at the Biscoe Church in November. A thriving Sunday school is reported. Rev. T. D. Sutton of Seagrove will be the guest preacher on December 11 at 7:30 p. m.

The 17th annual performance of Handel's "The Messiah" was given in the Whitley Auditorium at Elon College last Sunday evening. A large audience heard this presentation by the Elon Festival Chorus of approximately 100 voices.

The National Board of the Churchmen's Brotherhood (E. and R. laymen) will meet jointly with the National Board of the Laymen's Fellowship (C. C. laymen) at the Shoreland Hotel in Chicago, December 17-18.

Superintendent and Mrs. Scott were guests at a fellowship supper meeting at the Reidsville Church, sponsored by the Pilgrim Fellowship of the church. Rev. Tucker G. Humphries and his people are to be commended for the enthusiastic activities of this important church.

Rev. J. Frank Apple, pastor of the Henderson Church, observed his 10th anniversary on Sunday, December 4. Under the ministry of Mr. Apple the Henderson Church has made large gains in membership both of the church and Sunday school. They have improved the church property considerably. Mr. Apple and his church hold places of importance in the life of the city. Congratulations to pastor and people.

The Christian Workers Conference will be held at Elon College January 29-February 1. The program will begin officially with Laymen's Rally on Sunday, January 29, at 3:00 p. m., followed by a banquet at 6:00 p. m. Guest speakers for the rally and banquet will be Rev. Martin L. Goslin, Chicago, Illinois; Mr. Thomas Moose, Chairman of the Evangelical and Reformed Laymen's Brotherhood; and Mr. Walter A. Graham, Director of the National Congregational Christian Layman's Fellowship. Participating in the Christian Workers entire program will be besides Dr. Goslin, Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, Richmond, Virginia; Rev. Ira D. Black, New York, and others. Pastors and laymen are urged to reserve those important dates.

CONNECTICUT PASTOR ACCEPTS BURLINGTON CALL.

Rev. Henry E. Robinson, pastor of the Congregational Church of Putnam since May, 1941, has announced acceptance of a call to the First Congregational Christian Church of Burlington, North Carolina, effective next February 1.

He is a graduate of Rice Institute, and the Hartford Seminary Foundation. He had former pastorates in Russell, Massachusetts, and South Coventry. Rev. Mr. Robinson is a former president of the Putnam Rotary Club and during his Putnam pastorate directed the centennial observance of the Congregational Church there in April, 1948.

He will succeed Rev. W. Millard Stevens.

JUST WHAT IS SOCIAL ACTION?

It is quite fitting that the Youth-Adult Teacher's quarterly for the present quarter opens with an article, "The Social Message of Our Church," by Dr. Ray Gibbons, Director of our Council for Social Action. The prophetic strain is the dominant strain of religious thought in the Bible. It is thoroughly social. It is also abiding, for Jesus Christ was one whose word and behavior caused men, first of all, to list Him as "one of the prophets." Therefore, we recommend to this Conference that we take seriously our study of "The Prophets Speak," a series of Church School lessons in this present quarter, continued and concluded in the quarter following Easter. There is no congregation unable to follow this recommendation. Therefore, we urge you to give sympathetic and receptive

REV. WM. T. SCOTT, Superintendent

HELP MAKE CHRISTMAS HAPPY FOR OUR AGED MINISTERS.

Will Christmas be a time free from want and undue suffering for our aged and infirm ministers and ministers' widows? You may have a big share in the answer to that question.

Jesus said, "I was sick and ye visited me. . . . In as much as ye do it unto one of the least of these my brethren ye do it unto me."

"Distributing to the necessity of the saints" was commended by Paul as one of the Christian virtues. Let us not fail to practice this virtue this Christmas. The support of the Christmas Fund is your opportunity.

At Christmastime each year the Board of Superannuation of the Southern Convention is authorized to ask the people of our churches to make a special gift to the Christmas Fund over and above the regular apportionment.

What Is the Christmas Fund?

The Christmas Fund is a love offering for our servants in the Christian ministry who have given their best years in giving us spiritual guidance and comfort. These servants have literally given themselves for us—and on very small salaries. Now because of age or illness they can no longer work or provide for their necessities.

This Christmas Fund provides a bit of Christmas cheer in the form of a small check, in addition to the monthly check which they receive, and a part of the Christmas Fund is held in reserve from which to draw for emergency need among our pensioners and pastors on small salaries during the year. If you could read the letters of gratitude for the Christmas Fund checks you would give liberally this year. For instance:

"When I received your Christmas Fund gift it eased my sorrow."

"It will help to buy much needed new glasses and pay the doctor's bill."

"Mother and I certainly were grateful for the Christmas check this year. There seemed to be so many things that we needed at the time. We talked it over several times and decided what we needed most. We got two pairs of double blankets, some warm clothing, and mother had dental work done. We used some of the money to get our little table radio fixed as it went off after Christmas. We do not have a newspaper and very seldom have a chance to go anywhere, so the radio means a great deal to us."

"I do not know how any words can express the gratitude of myself and my dear wife for the Christmas Fund check to keep us out of the 'red.'"

Last year (1948) 45 churches of the Convention gave a total of $1,293.58. Our Division of Ministerial Relief sent out Christmas checks totaling $1,270. We certainly ought to exceed that amount greatly in 1949 for two big reasons.

1. "It is blessed to receive, when one is beyond the salary age and when the dollar has lost its span. 'It is more blessed to give than to receive,' to help these servants of the churches to security and peace in their old age. Let us put ourselves in their places. Would we not wish to feel the hand of strength and love from the church? They have toiled, let us give them honor still."

2. Since 1948, when our Convention Board of Superannuation began sending its funds through our Division of Ministerial Relief of our National Board of Home Missions, our gifts have been considerably below the amount paid to our pensioners of the Convention. This is very embarrassing to your Board of Superannuation. Here are the figures for this year:

Payments to our pensioners, 1949. $5,493.00
Our gifts on Superannuation—January through October 3,145.80

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

CONGRATULATIONS!

Bethlehem Church, near Suffolk, is a fine example of progress resulting, partially at least, from a transition to a full-time ministry. Liberty Spring now follows suit. Other churches in the Convention have done likewise. Some have hesitated, have been afraid to launch out on their own and have hid their full talent in the napkin of an inadequate program. A strong church can lean on the crutch of a yoked pastorate until it minimizes its strength and is confirmed in weakness. Bethlehem and Liberty Spring are leading the way. Who will be next?

We rejoice with the Pleasant Ridge people in the realization of their long-cherished dream of having a parsonage and resident pastor. Sunday will be a great day for these people. It will mark the beginning of a new day in the history of the church. God can greatly bless a church when it fulfills the conditions for progress. This parsonage is one of many evidences of new life and vitality in the Western Carolina Conference.

HERE AND THERE.

The Southeastern Area Conference on Evangelism was held in Greensboro on Monday and Tuesday of last week. The Conference was held in the new St. Stephen's Congregational Christian Church of which the Rev. F. A. Hargett is the faithful and energetic pastor. Plans were made for gearing the churches of this area into The United Evangelistic Advance. The Summons will be issued promptly to every pastor and church. The Rev. R. A. Whitten is our Convention Chairman. He will be assisted by Supt. Scott and the Conference chairmen. The Greensboro Conference was held under the auspices of the Commission on Evangelism and Devotional Life. Dr. Wofford C. Timmons brought three able assistants: the Revs. Albert E. Couch, Paul W. Rishell and Arthur S. Wheelock. Watch our columns for further information concerning the United Evangelistic Advance.

Members of the Commissions of the Southern Regional Council met for morning and afternoon sessions in Atlanta on Wednesday of last week. Representatives came from Florida, Georgia, North Carolina and Tennessee. This Council seeks not only to strengthen the fellowship, but also and more especially to study, integrate and expand the total life of our churches in this tremendous area. Dr. Thomas Anderson is the aggressive president.

The editor and Mr. Philip J. Weaver, superintendent of the Southern Pines City Schools, drove over to our Sanford Church on Friday evening of last week. Dr. W. B. O'Neill, pastor-elect of the church, was present. The occasion of the meeting was a Stewardship Institute which was conducted by Dr. J. H. Dollar. Approximately forty people had met for three evenings in preparation for the Every Member Canvass. These people have the inspiration not only of Dr. Dollar's instruction, but the spontaneous enthusiasm engendered by a new building program. The brick-veneered church and the new educational building give this congregation a physical setting for an efficient and expanding program. For any church that may be having "hard-sledding," the prescription is simple: begin a new educational plant and have Jesse Dollar conduct a Stewardship Institute!

LADIES ONLY.

These lines are intended for a very considerable number of women throughout our Convention who may be depended upon to meet any emergency in their church. In countless situations they have arisen to the occasion with vision, heroism and sacrifice. In the crucial hour of need they have never been found wanting. Their name is legion. Without them many of our churches and institutions would have defaulted long ago. They are among God's elect.

The Christian Sun has been in a state of emergency for some time. The mounting and unavoidable rise in the cost of paper and printing coupled with an avowed decision not to raise the subscription price has thrown our publication account definitely into the red. New subscriptions have remedied but have not corrected the deficit. Additional resources are needed.

Many of our women's societies and Sunday school classes will close the year with a balance in the treasury, some with a substantial balance. It is by no means uncommon for some such groups to cast about for a worthy cause to espouse at the Christmas season. These women find great joy in giving a lift to destitute families, to needy and worthy causes.

Is it possible that our church paper might qualify as a recipient of a few gratuities? The need is obvious and urgent. Those who simply take the continuous publication of The Sun for granted are certainly not realistic in their thinking. It's inclusive ministry would indicate that it is a most worthy cause. It ministers not alone to the children, young people or elderly people. It is limited in its ministry to no one age or class.

Those who assume weekly responsibility for writing, editing and publishing follow a rather rigid schedule and labor more zealously than may be generally realized. Which is easier, to give a few dollars once a year or to labor in season and out of season to keep our paper in circulation?

Modest contributions, Sustaining Memberships of $10, group and gift subscriptions—these are the immediate and practical ways of resuscitating our ailing publication. All this would seem to be in keeping with the spirit of Christmas, the fact of Christmas; namely, proclaiming the Good News of the Gospel. Eagerly, expectantly and prayerfully we await your response.

SEEKING THE KINGDOM.

A Sermon

By REV. R. E. BRITTLE.*

In every task entrusted to men's hands and hearts, in every phase of human activity and endeavor there is in the end but one aim and goal—"Success." The greatest source of pride and joy, the superlative degree of deep and abiding satisfaction comes when out of the strivings of men are realized the desired results. But this goal of success is not ordinarily reached without a definite plan. Not a plan of the hit or miss type, but one which has been tried and found worthy of confidence and use.

The Church thinks in terms of spiritual success. Its thoughts center around and focus upon the Kingdom of God, and of bringing in more of His Kingdom to dwell within the hearts of men. While so many of the supporting and contributing factors of the Kingdom appear to be of the temporal and physical nature which occupy so much of our time and thought, and upon which we place so much emphasis, the question comes to our minds over and over again, how shall we achieve success from the standpoint of the Kingdom of God?

Jesus, who spoke with authority, and not as the scribes and Pharisees, gave to His followers for once and all time in simple yet conclusive language the rule and manner by which the problems which face us and disturb our minds could be solved when He said, "But seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you." (Matt. 6:33.) Jesus knew the truth of what He was speaking, and since that time many have been the ones who have tested the truth of that statement to a successful end. The great need is a simple child-like faith to trust God and a deep consecration of self.

*Mr. Brittle recently observed his twentieth anniversary at Bethlehem Church, Nansemond County. The church was filled to capacity for the service. Unusual progress has been made by the church since it went on full-time schedule, November 15, 1947. This anniversary sermon is published at the request of the church.

Whenever this verse of scripture comes to the mind of your speaker, he thinks of, and pictures, a man of years whom he met slowly and feebly walking down the hall of Alamance Building at Elon College in 1924. They exchanged greetings and walked on in different directions. Later, someone said this man was Rev. J. W. Wellons, affectionately called and known in the Christian Church as "Uncle Wellons."

Uncle Wellons was asked to preach on the day he was one hundred years old, and as he read the text from which he would preach he read, "But seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you." And as he unfolded that text in the Whitley Auditorium at Elon College, his voice was weak from use in proclaiming "the good tidings of great joy," but his faith was deep and abiding, and his spirit fresh and sweet, as the shadows of his evening of life grew long.

No doubt, it was doubly significant that Uncle Wellons used this verse of scripture as a basis for his sermon. First of all it was his deep faith in God which made him to know that God would give to all who would diligently seek Him to do His will all those things that were needful for his life. Besides, from the knowledge which came to him by that faith, he knew, too, from experience through many years of walking with God. Born and reared in the community of Barrett's Church, Southampton County, Virginia, in this Eastern Virginia Conference, Uncle Wellons remembered very distinctly the period of the Civil War and the hard years which followed. He remembered, too, how nearly everything of a material nature slipped away from him as a shadow, and that which had had a purchasing power as Confederate currency was no longer worth any more than the paper on which the monetary value had been stamped. The secret of success of his life rich in good works was in the fact that he trusted God, and first, in all things sought God and He gave unto him all those things necessary to make his life great and full of good works.

As we stop to think of the birth and growth of this great nation of which we are justly proud, we are reminded that it came out of seeking God and His Kingdom above everything else. Let us by the eye of our imagination picture a small band of believers who were willing to turn their backs on what to them had been home and home-land, leaving, forever, the scenes and friends of childhood days. They loved their homes and friends, but they heeded not the voice of sentiment when there was a choice to be made between them and the Kingdom of God and His Righteousness. And as we follow them in their departure we cannot help but sense the prompting forces of their lives; a love to worship God and serve His Kingdom and a faith by which they knew that through the days and the miles of the unknown ahead, that God would lead and provide. After these so-called Pilgrims had battled for months the rough and stormy seas, they were tossed upon the bleak New England coast in mid-winter, and on going ashore the first thing to be done was to go to their knees in prayers of thanksgiving and to consecrate anew their lives to Him who had delivered them. They knew not the perils and hazards and dangers which lurked within the shadows of that dense wilderness before their eyes, but they knew God and they knew He would provide for those who seek His Kingdom first. We would not discount the greatness of those who have contributed so much to our national greatness through their administrations, but we believe the seeds of greatness of this nation were planted there in that frozen New England soil by that little band of faithful ones who put God first.

Is it not a fact that too often in our work for the Kingdom of God that we are sorely disturbed and are over-anxious about the secondary things pertaining to the Kingdom? Is it not true that sometimes we think so much in terms of self; in gratifying our own desires; anxiety of glory, credit or praise; thinking so much of merely climbing and elevating ourselves; seeking diligently the places where the task seems light and the pay heavy; and making definite and exacting demands which work only to the advantage of self?

This seeking the Kingdom to which we are trying to give a certain degree of emphasis is not just looking for the Kingdom or a mental state of seeking, but it is to have the Kingdom and God's Righteousness so primarily in our minds that our whole being with all its resources will be dedicated and mobilized to advance His cause of Righteousness.

Right now in our conference we are disturbed over the thought of the fact that there are so many pulpits vacant and not available ministers to fill them. Similar conditions exist in other conferences as well as other de-

Christ at Work in Africa

Canadian missionary Dr. Sidney Gilchrist speaks of the past and the future from Dondi Station in Angola, Portuguese West Africa.

I have just been thinking. Remarkable how certain forms, faces and voices linger long in one's memory. I imagine there are a number of folks who read this letter who remember as vividly as I do the slim, smiling African who talked to us in Convocation Hall, Toronto, twenty-five years ago, about the black and white keys on the piano.

Do you remember—those of you who were there—how he made us lift the roof with "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name"? Do you recall what he said in those last few moments on the platform as he held us spell-bound? This is part of it: "... if you can show me a bridge, a hospital, raised by the disciples of Mohammed or Confucius in my country; if you can tell me the name of a missionary from China or Turkey who has died for my people, then I will place my hand over my mouth and accept the deletion of the word 'Christian' from the title of your Students' Federation. I put my hand before my eyes and I see in Africa, from North to South, from East to West, bridges and roads and hospitals and schools and thousands of men and women living a new life; and all that comes from Christ." Kwegyir Aggrey was a man not soon forgotten.

I want to tell you about another man whom you would remember if you could meet him. His name is Horacio Rodrigues and he is an Ochimbundu from the Bailundo region where the seeds of the Gospel were first sown nearly seventy years ago. Horacio doesn't resemble Aggrey in appearance nor is his personality similar to that of "the apostle of laughter," as Aggrey has been called. He is quiet and sober, almost hesitant in speech. He is a tall, lithe, fine-feathered Bantu, and a pastor of the African churches of the Lumvemba area, 100 miles from here. I doubt whether in the African ministry there is one more beloved and respected. Life has not been easy for him, and there has been much to try his courage and to prove his Christian grace. But he has the gift and ability to interpret that which is best in his group to others. His very presence in the frontier church of which he is the minister makes for a new feeling towards and a new understanding of the Bantu people by the white traders and government officials in the area.

We know that despite the ever headlong onrush of what trade and immigration into this country and the effort that European powers are exerting to build an economy founded on subservient and sub-European indigenous peoples, the Africa of tomorrow must nevertheless depend for its very spiritual life not on the white but on the African. Angola and the other great areas of Bantu Africa 20 years from now will desperately need the sons and daughters of men like Horacio Rodrigues—Africans with Christian home training, eager to serve and to save the people, equipped and prepared to bless and to build a new Africa.

We want, therefore, to see that as many as possible of the best of Africa's boys and girls be nurtured and guided, tutored and prepared for the work of the Kingdom tomorrow when we shall have gone on.

... And so I go back to Pastor and materials will also be placed in the metal box.

Under the pastorate of Rev. J. Frank Apple, 1933-1940, the Pleasant Ridge Church began to feel the need of a parsonage and a resident minister.

This idea and hope was cherished and further promoted under the ministry of Rev. W. T. Madren, 1942-1948. During this time the lot was purchased and the well drilled.

By February, 1949, a basement was pushed out and the foundation was laid. Some six months later the building was completed. Then on November 19, 1949, the pastor and family moved into the new parsonage.

Rev. Clyde Fields serves Spoon's Chapel and Union Grove Christian Churches Randolph County, in addition to Pleasant Ridge, near Ramseur, North Carolina. This newly formed church group and new minister are working out their new venture together, believing church grouping to be the answer to some of the rural church and rural pastor problems. Mr. Fields is also a student at Duke Divinity School, commuting to Durham from the parsonage.

The church urges all former members, friends, and former pastors to come and share the consecration service with us on December 11, at 11:00 a. m. Come and visit us anytime.

THE NEW GYMNASIUM.

Each day finds the new gymnasium nearer completion. The roof and the cement for the balcony, stairways, and floor are all being completed by the end of this week. Materials for the playing floor are being delivered. Present indications are that the building will be sufficiently completed by January 10 to permit basketball games to be scheduled. The opening game is scheduled to be played on the evening of January 14 with Catawba College as the visiting contestant. Of course, the remainder of our home games will be played in the new gymnasium. Right now we are in need of funds. If you have not made a contribution to this great undertaking for our college, I know you will want to. Won't you please let us hear from you?

THE STALEY-ATKINSON-NEWMAN MEMORIAL FUND.

Our church is a great church. It is made up of a group of great Christian people. When they decide to do a thing they usually get it done. It may be a year, or two years, or ten years, but as a rule they keep working at it until the job is completed.

Many years ago, our church, the Southern Convention, voted to do honor to the names and achievements of three of our outstanding leaders, Dr. Staley in the pastorate, Dr. Atkinson in missions, and Dr. Newman in education. We proposed to further immortalize these three characters and the departments of our church life that they represented by establishing a $100,000.00 foundation for Christian Education in Elon College. A good percentage of our people and the churches that they represented were enthusiastic for the opportunity. They and their churches contributed readily and generously. Others were willing to go along and undertake their share but with no particular degree of enthusiasm and still there were others to whom the idea did not appeal, or it did not appeal strongly to secure their cooperation or contribution. Even so, the movement pushed ahead. The entire $100,000.00 was pledged. All unpaid pledges are due but, of course, if a church elects, it may be late in making its payment. When contributions are made, the contributor should have his way. At any rate, payments continue to come in. Recently, the Windsor Church completed its obligation, and more recently, the Sanford Church has paid its apportionment in full. There are a number of other churches that are in arrears. The Foundation was completed months ago. The college advanced money out of its own funds to complete the foundation so that it might begin to operate. At present, the college's obligations are usually great. Payments on the Staley-Atkinson-Newman Memorial Fund are used to replace the advancement made. Your contribution now would not only be appreciated but would mean a great deal to the college. It would be a pleasure to hear from you.

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

Our churches and Sunday schools are doing very well this year. This week's report will put the total of apportionment giving for the college beyond $12,500.00 which is about $700 more than we received last year, but on the other hand, it leaves us nearly $2,500 short. It would be good if our churches and Sunday Schools that are in arrears would make a special effort to see that their apportionments are paid in full before January 1, 1950. Your payment would be of great assistance to the college.

CHRIST AT WORK IN AFRICA.

Horacio. He came to the hospital not long ago with two of his five children. They are not well. We have just finished examining little Estevao, seven years old, the younger of the two. And this is what we find: he has a spleen enlarged to the extent that it is palpable three finger-breadths below the last rib on his left side. Blood smears reveal the presence in his red blood cells of numerous 'rings' of subtertian malaria as well as abundant gametocytes (the kind that infect the mosquito). He is markedly anemic. The laboratory also reports that he carries in his intestinal tract the following parasites: roundworms, hookworms, and strongyloides stercoralis.

Now here is the child of one of the best of our African pastors. In these children lies the hope for the Ovimbundu and their kindred Bantu tribes. He is a polite, a well educated, a fine little Christian lad. But he lives in an environment that is physically one of the worst in the world, and, if he continues to live there, his chances for having the zip, the zeal to really grow, to do big things, to make the contribution that he should to his country, his people and his Master, are very poor indeed. . . . The pastor's home in Lumvumba is clean and free from the parasites that are commonly found in African houses. But it is set in a populous village, and the new sanitation that must be if this new generation is to have half a chance is not the sanitation of a house here and there but of villages and countrysides. Anti-anopheles drainage and insecticiding are needed. Mosquito nets must be made available. Some way must be found to provide drugs. Shoes and septic tanks, deep auger-bored latrines and safe water supplies: these are the beginning of the struggle for health into which we find ourselves thrown. It's a stupendous task. We seem to be bailing the ocean with leaky buckets, but we must do what we can. . . . That is if we really believe that Horacio's sons have work to do for Africa and for the One whose infant feet first toddled on African soil; if we want to help the new generation that is springing up in a thousand villages where we are known and where we are not regarded as are other white people; not even called by the same name; whose villages where we are to the people "parents," "our teachers," "Christ's younger brothers." We must work harder. You must help us harder. The churches at home must send us missionaries trained in rural sanitation, in practical public health, in the simple techniques of living safely and soundly close to the soil. Every missionary must be a health-craftsman.

We covet health for our African people. Help us to help them to find it—for their sake, and for Africa's, and for Christ's.

ALEPPO COLLEGE PRESIDENT SPEAKS.

"The rights of the Christians of Palestine, and the interests of Christendom in general, require the adoption of the plan outlined by the Palestine Conciliation Commission," says Dr. Alford Carleton, Congregational Christian educator from Syria where he is President of Aleppo College. Dr. Carleton reached Boston on November 10.

"Although the effective International administrative control of the Jerusalem area will take more firmness and wisdom than the United Nations has yet shown in dealing with affairs in Palestine, such international control is far and away the best of any plans proposed for the maintenance of peace in the Holy City with free access to the shrines of the three faiths concerned," declares Dr. Carleton.

Conditions in Syria today are "the most stable they have been in several years," states Dr. Carleton, adding "although the armistice arrangements between the Arab states and Israel have been faithfully kept, there seems to be very little progress towards permanent settlements of frontiers, refugees and political and economic relationships. In particular, the need of continuing help to the Arab refugees will go on apparently for a long time to come."

The various reports of the "unification of various Arab states" and "a military defensive alliance between all Arab states" cannot be explained away as "foreign intrigue" or "political juggling," Dr. Carleton believes. He feels they reflect the widespread and long standing desire of Arab people for larger unity and a larger free-trading area.

"The reorganization of the work of the Syrian University at Damascus under the leadership of Dr. Costi Zurayk (former Acting Syrian Minister at Washington) is giving to all educational work in Syria a new stability and a progressive temper it has lacked for some years past," says Dr. Carleton.

The conventional picture of a college president as either a dignified figure in cap and gown or a kindly Mr. Chips seated behind an orderly desk does not fit Dr. Alford Carleton.

When travel was restricted during World War II out in Syria he got about by volunteering to drive a 3-ton American Red Cross truck. The next moment he might appear in formal dinner attire seated between the British Ambassador and the Syrian Governor serving as an interpreter. Dr. Carleton speaks French and Arabic fluently.

Aleppo College has a student body consisting of Christians, Moslems and Jews coming from Turkey, Iraq and Cypress as well as Syria. When in December 1947 mobs burned synagogues, Jewish homes and schools and completely destroyed some Communist centers, Aleppo College was saved from the same fate by the intervention of the Syrian police and the loyalty of the student body made up of Jews, Arabs and Christians, who spoke in defense of the school and turned the mob aside.

Born in Albany, New York, and educated at Oberlin College, Hartford Theological Seminary (Ph.D.), Dr. Carleton, who is 46, began his Near East career as a tutor in American College at Tarsus, Turkey. In 1929 he was appointed a career missionary under the American Board.

In 1937 Dr. Carleton became President of Aleppo College, a growing institution which reflects the mixed history of the city and country it serves. It is a merger of central Turkey College, an American Board institution, and a Presbyterian school. Today three groups support Aleppo College, namely, the Presbyterian, the Congregational Christian, and the Armenian churches.

AMERICAN NISEI GOES TO AFRICA AS MISSIONARY.

Rev. and Mrs. Thomas Masaji Okuma of Wailuki, Maui, Hawaiian Islands, and their two small daughters, Margaret Wukiko, two years old, and Kathryn Harui, eight months old, have just reached international headquarters of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions in Boston by plane from Honolulu. They are newly appointed missionaries of the American Board for service in Angola, West Africa.

Mr. Okuma, an American Nisei, was born on Kauai Island and educated at the University of Hawaii, Berea College in Kentucky, Andover-Newton Theological School in Massachusetts and Yale Divinity School in Connecticut. His brother, Pfc. Francis Okuma, is with the 667th Engineers Topographic Company of the U. S. Army.

Mrs. Okuma, the former Naomi Chafin, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Chafin of Switzer, West Virginia. She is a graduate of Berea College, where she met her husband, and from 1945 to 1946 was dietitian in the Grace Hospital, New Haven, Connecticut. Going to Hawaii with her husband, she taught history and dramatics for a time at Kapaa High School on Kauai Island.

Returning to the Islands following Divinity School, Mr. Okuma was pastor of a church on Kauai for two years and then was transferred to work in a "larger parish" on Central Maui. During college and seminary days, he worked his way through school in a pineapple factory, a department store, on a newspaper, as a gardener and in intramural athletics.

Asked why he was going to the mission field, Mr. Okuma said, "The nature of the Christian Gospel itself compels one to think of the mission field. As products of western civilization we are responsible for the damage done to the so-called primitive cultures. There is a greater lack of trained leadership in the mission field than here, and lastly, there's a need in Angola—we go to serve that need."

SEEKING THE KINGDOM.

nominations. The great question is, what can we do about it? Our church in many ways is stronger than it has ever been before, yet producing very few ministers. Is it possible that we need a deeper consecration to the Kingdom of God in our modern homes and by our firesides where the plastic clay can be taken and fashioned into a vessel of honor and the emptiness of little lives be filled with the things of the Kingdom?

The cause of making the gospel known unto the uttermost parts of the earth, the noble cause of supporting Elon College, our orphanage, and every other enterprise of the church will be supported amply when men think first of the Kingdom. The panacea for all the headaches and heartaches and solution for every other problem of the church today can be and will be found in what the whole church needs—a deeper consecration which will prompt the church to seek first the Kingdom of God.

CHRISTMAS FRIENDLY SERVICE.

Much of the joy of Christmas comes in planning gifts for other people. Your church may have a church-wide project in which your children will want to participate. If you are looking for a project for children, you may be interested in this project.

PICTURES FOR CHILDREN EVERYWHERE.

In America, we take colored religious pictures for granted. They are a part of our church school equipment. There are many boys and girls in our world, however, who do not have access to such pictures. These children need the same kind of pictures as our boys and girls have.

The children in American church schools are being invited to send a selected set of pictures to boys and girls in any country in which they are interested. A gift of $1.00 will provide a set of 18 large pictures (12 x 17) for classroom use, and nine sets of 13 small pictures (3 x 4), selected from the large set, for distribution to the boys and girls. There are two sets from which you may choose. Set No. 1 is on the Old Testament. Set No. 2 is on the New Testament. Additional small sets of either No. 1 and No. 2 can be sent for 5 cents a set.

These pictures are being made available through the denominations and the World Council of Christian Education.

For a leaflet describing the project and containing the order form, send a card to Department of Children's Work, Room 805, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts.

Churches using the Pilgrim Series literature may already be working on this project. However, it seems an interesting thing for children to do, and is worth mentioning under the work of the Friendly Service Department, as we do suggest projects for our children's groups from time to time.

If you are interested in sending gifts other than money, write to Miss Helen Frances Smith, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York, for a list of items which are needed in the different mission stations.

OUR MISSIONARIES IN JAPAN.

During this year, our missionaries for special study will be those in Japan. A recent issue of Guideposts lists our missionaries there and gives some information about them taken from the 1949 American Board Year Book. If you are interested in more about these missionaries, write to the American Board, 14 Beacon Street, Boston 8, Massachusetts, and ask for the 1949 Year Book. Here is the information from Guideposts:

After eight years of service our 197 Kumai (Congregational Christian) churches became a part of the Church of Christ in Japan. In 1946 our missionaries were permitted to return; we have 26 on the field and the constant plea is for more missionaries to give spiritual content to democracy in the New Japan. The keyword is interdenominational cooperation.

An interesting program, using a quiz, to arouse interest in our work in Japan is printed also in the current issue of Guideposts. It is suggested that you will need to order Today in Japan by Armstrong Hunter (25c from The Missions Council, 287 Fourth Street, New York, N. Y.) CELEBRATE FIFTIETH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Thomas Atkinson in Dendron, Virginia, was the scene of the lovely celebration of their fiftieth wedding anniversary on Tuesday evening, November 29. The beautiful flower arrangements and lighted tapers throughout the lower floor symbolized the Golden Wedding observance. The guests were greeted by their daughter, Mrs. Turner Judkins and grandson, Julian Lewis of Surry. Mrs. W. H. Savedge presented them to the receiving line which composed the bridal party fifty years ago: Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson, Mrs. K. C. Bishop of Waverly, Mrs. John Presson of Wakefield, Mrs. J. S. Hobson of Hopewell, Mr. Albert Cox of Pocomoke City, Md., Mr. J. T. Atkinson and Mr. J. D. Emory. Mrs. Lucian West of Surry invited the guests into the dining room where the traditional wedding cake was served by Mrs. Garland W. Spratley. Mrs. Cobb assisted Mrs. Thurman Williams in registering the guests. Mrs. Cortez Cox of Newport News, Mrs. James Leath of Waverly and Mrs. Garland Morris displayed the lovely gifts which attested to the esteem and respect which their many friends hold for them. Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson have made their home here throughout their wedded life. They are charter members of the Dendron Church and Mr. Atkinson is senior deacon. Mrs. Atkinson served for ten years as president of the Waverly District of the Women's Missionary Conference.

FOR THE CHILDREN

MRS. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

Stars are a special part of Christmas. We see pictures of them on Christmas cards, in magazines as illustrations, and in show windows. Last week, two planets—Saturn and Mars—moved close together to put on a show of their own. Many people rose early to be able to see their lovely light.

Now that I am no longer a city-dweller, I have a ringside view of the stars. If I look one way I see an expanse of sky sprinkled with stars and fringed with long leaf pine needles; if I look another I see the stars framed through the magnolia branches. Either way it is a lovely sight! If I do the dizzy stunt of looking up for a long, long time I see a thousand or more (or so it seems).

Even those in the city can get a fairly clear view of the heavens. Although it is cold now, it is a good time to view the stars. If you don't know how to identify the stars, get a star guide. The ten cent stores carry a practical guide that costs about a quarter. Nearly everyone can find the milky way and the dippers: big and little.

Christmastime is a good time to think about stars and the wonderful star that hung over Bethlehem. Even our songs are full of the star—"Star of wonder, star of light"—"The stars in the sky" . . . "The silent stars go by."

Astronomers (those who make a study of the stars) tell us that three planets merged about the time of Christ's birth: Jupiter, Mars and Saturn, and made a spectacular showing. Isn't it wonderful to know that God's world is so well ordered that astronomers can tell the paths of stars in the long ago and predict them for the time to come? In the year 2400 these same planets will join in a heavenly are again.

Christmas is a family time. One happy way to herald the holidays would be for the whole family to wrap warmly and trek out to view the heavens and their stars.

Or the whole family might plan a trip to the Morehead Planetarium at Chapel Hill, North Carolina. This is the place where the astronomer can show the position and movement of the stars. At present, the Morehead Planetarium is showing an arrangement of stars such as those at the time of Christ's birth. It doesn't cost much to see this and it will not only give you pleasure, but help you realize the goodness and love of God in making our orderly, beautiful world.

Once I knew a teacher that described stars as being sparks from the angels' campfires. What do you think of them?

TELEPHONE NICKELS.

By JANE CARPENTER.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

My friend, Edith Price, with whom I was visiting, opened the side door just as her nine-year-old son, Albert, arrived almost breathless.

"Mom," he began, "I'm going with Ralph and Norris to pick apples for Mr. Snow. I'll be back by six."

"All right, Albert," she replied.

The boy still lingered, glancing hesitatingly in my direction. Then he went close up to his mother and said, "I've spent my nickels."

"Your phone nickels?"

"Yes, my phone nickels."

His mother reached for her purse, took out two nickels, handed them to him, and said in a friendly tone, "You shall tell me about it tonight, Albert."

The boy looked relieved, thanked her, and with a hasty "Good-by," was gone.

"What are phone nickels?" I asked Edith.

"Nickels, with which to telephone home," my friend answered, smiling. "At one of our parents' meetings, a mother complained that she never could know at which time her seventeen-year-old son would return when he went out in the evening with other young people. He would promise to be home at a definite time but often arrived hours later. This mother asked for advice, and after the matter had been carefully discussed one member of the group remarked that adolescent problems would be less difficult if boys and girls learned, when young, to have proper consideration for all other members of the family—especially their parents."

"Albert was almost eight then, and I began at once to make him feel an affectionate responsibility to his father and to me. I did not stir up his emotions but talked to him in a companionable manner. I remarked that we were a small family and ought always to know each other's whereabouts. I told him that when I expected to be away from home, at the time he would arrive from school, I would leave a note for him on the table. I said, too, that at all times I would like to know where I might find him. Since then, I have kept a nickle tacked loosely in two pockets of each of his suits. These—he understands—are to be used only for home telephone calls, and when one is used he must have it replaced as soon as possible. Usually, they remain undisturbed for weeks at a time; he knows he must not use them when he can contact me directly."

I was quite interested, and I expressed my appreciation. Then, that evening, I was seated on the piazza, knitting, when the following conversation floated out to me from an open window:

"Mom, I want you to know how I spent the phone nickels."

"Yes, Albert."

"Well, some of the fellows were going to buy ice cream cones, and I heard Jack Holt say, 'Oh, Al never has any money.' It made me pretty mad. So, although I did not really want the ice cream, I went in with the boys, and bought some. It was foolish, I know, and I had to use my phone nickels to pay for it. But I've earned fifty cents picking apples, and here is your ten cents. Now it is all right—isn't it, Mom?"

"That's something I'd like to have you think about, Albert. You know what a principle is, don't you?"

"I ought to, Mom. You've explained it often enough, but—"

"I'm afraid you have disregarded a principle. Were the nickels you spent your nickels?"

"No, only for telephoning; but I merely borrowed them."

"No one can borrow unless someone lends. One can take; but if a man takes what does not belong to him, people call it by an ugly name."

"Oh, Mom! But I am paying this back."

"Something might have prevented you from earning that money. Suppose you were the treasurer of the Junior Baseball Nine; could you 'borrow'—even for a moment—from the money in your keeping?"

"No—no, I couldn't do that."

"The same principle governs both cases, Albert."

"Yes, I see. Now, what must I do?"

Youth at Work in the Church

ANN TRUITT, Editor; HELEN JACKSON, C. B. TWIDDY, Associates.

SCHOLARSHIP AVAILABLE.

Young people throughout the country are preparing entries for the 1950 Parshad Youth Week Awards.

College scholarships totaling $10,200 will be offered through the United Christian Youth Movement, according to Dr. Isaac K. Beckes, executive secretary.

Local entries in the contest will be made and judged in connection with National Youth Week from January 29 through February 5. State, regional, and national judging will continue through the spring, and announcement of the awards will be made next May.

One boy and one girl will receive college scholarship awards of $400 a year for four years. Seven regional awards of $250 a year for four years will also be made.

Full and partial scholarships each summer to one of the seven regional conferences of the U.C.Y.M. will be made to these nine winners plus 28 others.

Entries will consist of:

1. A statement of life purpose as a Christian citizen and of plans for college education.
2. Record of high school scholastic work, extra-curricular activities, and study interest.
3. Listing of local church and denominational activities.
4. Review of work and interest in interchurch cooperation.
5. An essay not to exceed 1,500 words on "The Church's Responsibility in My Community," an original analysis which would indicate the author's "understanding of the Christian faith and its application in a definite situation."

Entry blanks may be obtained from denominational offices, state councils of churches, interdenominational youth councils, or from the U.C.Y.M., 206 South Michigan, Chicago 4, Ill.

Protestant youth of 40 denominations and more than 700 councils of churches and councils of religious education will be eligible to participate in the award program.

The college scholarships are made possible by Mr. and Mrs. Alfred H. Avery of Malden, Massachusetts, who now are helping to finance college work for 31 young people.

PLEDGE AID TO SOUTH OF ASIA.

A pledge of "all possible support" to Christian youth in Asia has been sent to the East Asia Christian Conference by the Youth Department of the World Council of Churches.

Asserting that Christians in Asia have "a tremendous opportunity . . . to forswear the mistakes of the West," the message of greeting, passed by the Department at its July meeting in Lausanne, Switzerland, will be read to the preliminary meeting of Asian church leaders and youth delegates at Bangkok, Siam, December 3.

Today, in Asia, at the cost of vast human suffering, new societies are being born. We from the Youth Department of the World Council of Churches send this message to the young Christians of Asia because we are one with them in the faith that out of suffering God can make a victory, as He did at Calvary. We pray that His grace may reach down and guide the human struggle toward a fulfillment of His Kingdom. We pray that He may use the Christian churches in Asia to carry forward His design.

We are mindful that division has weakened the churches in the West, and faulty vision has often kept them from speaking to people where they live and work, about their problems in a language they can understand. Today these churches are repenting their failures, and are trying to correct them. But we see in Asia a tremendous opportunity for Christian churches to forswear the mistakes of the West and to carry the Gospel of Jesus Christ into the market places, homes, fields and factories, into every part of human life.

Faced with turmoil, confusion and revolution, Christians in Asia today can write a new Book of Facts, give the Christian gospel a fresher, newer impetus than it has had in centuries.

In this great social upheaval, Christians must work alongside their fellow countrymen, using their minds and hands to build an order of social justice for every individual.

We pledge our prayers and all possible support to those young Christian leaders who will be meeting in Bangkok at the end of this year, and the Christian youth in Asia whom they represent. God has given them a mighty task. We pray that God will also give them the strength they need to preach on the dusty roads, in the villages and factories as the gospel has been preached in the greatest moments of the Christian Church.

JUST WHAT IS SOCIAL ACTION?

study to the message of the prophets, remembering as you study, that Roy Smith was right when he said: "If the old prophets had kept out of social issues they would have kept out of the Old Testament." Such a study of your Sunday school lessons in at least these two quarters of the coming year is our first step toward growth in an understanding of the social message and work of our churches.

Because the Bible is the one bit of Social Action Literature which is right at hand for all members of our congregations, we think it a reasonable expectation that each congregation should heed our suggestion that we think of Social Action in terms of the following portions of New Testament Scripture: "Ye are the salt of the earth. . . . Ye are the light of the world." (Matthew 5:13f.) "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deluding your own selves. . . . He that looketh into the perfect law, the law of liberty, and so continueth, being not a hearer that forgotteth, but a doer that worketh, this man shall be blessed in his doing. . . ." (James 1:22-25.)

Further, because in our type of church polity, it is not only the privilege, but the duty, of each congregation to arrive at its own understanding of the demands laid upon it as a witnessing congregation, we recommend that each congregation give at least one discussion meeting to the contemporary meaning of Jesus' Command: "Let your light so shine before men that they, seeing your good works, shall glorify your Father which is in Heaven." A meeting given over to a fruitful discussion of this text, and a sermon from the preacher on this demand Christ makes of His disciples, will surely give God the opportunity He is seeking to lead all of us into a more effective social witness to the redemptive and transforming power of His Gospel.

THE UNIVERSAL GOD.

LESSON XII—DECEMBER 18, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart.—Jeremiah 29:13.

LESSON: Isaiah 7:14; Jeremiah 29, 31; Luke 1. *

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalms 139:1-10.

The Problem.

Jehemiah had a problem on his hands. At least the attitude in the minds of his fellow-countrymen in Exile presented a problem to him, because of his concern for them and for their religion and faith. Here they were in Babylon, far away from home and beloved country, and cut off from the worship of Jehovah in the Temple which was the center of the religious life of the nation. According to the thinking of the people of that day, Jehovah's activity and presence were confined to the limits of the Holy Land itself. Their only hope, as they thought, was a speedy restoration to the land from which they had been rudely and ruthlessly taken. And if, as Jeremiah had frankly prophesied, both Jerusalem and the Temple were to be destroyed, that was to them the equivalent of a demonstration of the falsity of their religion, of the powerlessness of their God, and the worthlessness of His promises. Jeremiah thus faced the problem of helping his countrymen to see that Jehovah was the God of all the earth, independent of all geographical limitations, always ruling by righteousness which would not tolerate sin even in Jerusalem, ever present to guide and strengthen and sustain those who call upon Him. Else there was no future for the religion of Israel and no future for the nation which now had no basis for existence except its religion. It was a critical problem, an issue of far-reaching consequences, a turning point in the religious history of that nation and of religion in general.

The Answer.

The prophet first of all told the people, through a letter which he sent unto the elders and the priests and the prophets and the people in Exile, that they might as well face the fact that they themselves would never come back to Jerusalem or to their beloved land. For a period of seventy years—which might mean an indefinite period—they were to remain in Babylon. They were, therefore, to settle down, build houses, plant vineyards, marry, establish homes and rear their families in that far-off land. Furthermore they were to seek the peace of the land to which they had been carried captive, for its peace was their peace. The prophets who had told them they were soon to return had deceived them, they had not spoken the word of Jehovah concerning this future event.

To be sure eventually those among the Exiles would be permitted to return. Jehovah would not always leave His people under the hand of the conquering captor. But it would not be done in the life of the present generation. That was the stark, solid fact which they must face.

But they could face it with poise of mind if they would only rest on the truth which he now proclaimed. Their God was a universal God. Not only His power, but His comfort and His presence were everywhere available. Even though they were in Exile in a foreign land and among pagan peoples, they were still under His care, and they could find comfort in His fellowship and His presence. Furthermore the true worship of Him was not tied up with the Temple, as central and as sacred as it might be, or for that matter with Jerusalem either. True worship was of the heart and the spirit. It was also personal. Men worship as individuals as well as a nation or a group. The worship of the faithful heart, lifting its prayer to God who is never far from those who seek Him with the whole heart, was the important thing, and they could worship thus where they were. Thus it was that Jeremiah made an incalculable contribution to the religious life of his people, and established a principle of religion which found its fullest expression in the words of Jesus when He said "God is Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

The Underlying Reasons.

From whence came the prophets' answer to this pressing problem of his people. Perhaps first of all, was his recognition of the dignity and the worth of the Exiles who were living in Babylon. The conquerors had seen to it that the intellectual and religious leaders of Israel were deported. They were the "cream of Israel," and in them was whatever hope there was for the perpetuation of the nation and its religion. In the second place, Jeremiah frankly and bluntly stated that most of the people who had been left behind were like a basket of spoiled or rotten figs, so bad that the fruit was not fit to eat. They were a sorry lot, and with the city and the Temple, they faced certain destruction.

But above all else, Jeremiah's confidence in the future of his people, and in the vitality of their religion was based on the character of God. God is always central in his thought, and the creative source of the spiritual life of the nation. He transcends all geographical boundaries. He is not confined to a certain place like Jerusalem or to a certain center of worship like the Temple. He is the Eternal Spirit with whose spirit men can have fellowship in worship and service. He would put His spirit within the hearts of His chosen people, writing the covenant not on tables of stone, but on the table of the heart. And eventually He would bring His people back from Exile, and from the remnant He would build again a people in His good time, bring to fruition God's Messiah, the Savior of the world.

Jeremiah's message is needed in many quarters in our modern world. There is a subtle tendency for the nations to have national gods, to think of God as limited by national boundaries or by particular peoples. There is but one God, a universal God, the Father of all men, from whom the whole family in earth and in heaven is named.

conceived it wanted to do much more than entertain, much more even than merely retell the events of the New Testament. They wanted to bring home with an immediate impact the way in which the two-thousand-year-old lessons of brotherhood and faith which Jessu taught apply to everyday living here and now. They wanted to produce a program which would affect the actions of those who heard it.

This is what they hoped for—that listeners would say afterwards: The people in this drama have the same problems I do, and the answers they found make sense for me, too. Apparently, they have accomplished what they were after.

The man who started the whole idea was Fulton Oursler. A noted writer and editor for many years, he had become a profound student of Christianity after a visit to the Holy Land in the 1930's. These studies had decided him to retell the miraculous life of Jesus in a manner that would take it out of the remoteness of ancient history and lead people to read the Gospels at first hand. Mr. Oursler had been at work on the manuscript for several years when he realized that the strring material he was dealing with could be even more powerful over the air. He suggested a dramatic series to Waddill Catchings, head of a firm which produces radio programs, and got an enthusiastic approval.

After that the next step was to work up a sample script. The man Mr. Oursler asked to do the actual writing was Henry Denker, one of the top-flight radio writers in the business. Besides that, Mr. Denker was an expert on the Bible. He had studied the Old Testament from beginning to end in Hebrew three times, and had carried on intricate researches into the New Testament. He knew the material and he knew the problems that faced the project.

The first problem was interpretation. Different Christian denominations not only interpret Christ differently, they have varying shades of belief about the miracles related in the Gospels. To overcome that obstacle, Mr. Denker held long, probing discussions with Protestant ministers of many different churches and with the best scholars of the Roman Catholic church, as well as with persons prominent in the Jewish religion.

Today, a board of representative clergymen serves as an advisory group in order to insure universal acceptance of the material in the dramas. Every script goes to them and must have their approval before it is put into production. There are plenty of times when objections are raised but agreement has always been possible. "It is . . . a very clear lesson in the real brotherhood of man," as Henry Denker has declared.

One of the knottiest problems was the question of using the figure of Christ as a character in the dramas. This had been done on the stage and in the movies, but never over the air. Doubtters were firm on this point.

"You can't represent Christ's voice in a radio play. People won't stand for it," they said with finality.

But men with a purpose will find a way. First of all, it was agreed that when Jesus spoke, He would utter only the actual words which appear in the New Testament. Next, a device was adopted that appears in famous religious paintings, which always marks the figure of Our Lord by a halo. Only in this case, the halo became a musical motif, which sounds its shimmering lofty tones before and after Christ is heard. To put His words even more definitely on a plane by themselves, there is a slight pause before other characters follow Him, and the performer pronouncing His words speaks from an isolation booth which produces a cathedral-like echo effect.

Listeners have reacted with whole-hearted approval from the beginning. In addition to the reverent spirit and manner with which the words of Christ's figure are handled, something else has made the approval possible. The program, an unusually expensive one which costs close to a million a year to produce has not the slightest hint of any commercialism about it at all.

From the first, it was clear that The Greatest Story Ever Told would need a sponsor. No network could afford to carry a program calling for an average of fourteen actors a week, a thirty-two-piece orchestra and a sixteen-voice chorus. Sponsors, however, generally take on the cost of a radio production in order to sell a product, and as far as this one was concerned, commercials were unthinkable. In order to be heard without arousing resentment, the program would have to find a sponsor willing to forswear any use of the time for selling his wares.

The program found a sponsor who went further than that. He didn't even want his company's name mentioned. Unfortunately, there is an iron-bound FCC ruling which requires two mentions of the buyer's name whenever air time is paid for, and Paul Litchfield had to give in. He managed, however, to put the required credit into about the fewest words ever accorded a sponsor over the air. At the opening and close an announcer says—"This program is presented by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company"—and that is all.

This company wasn't the first to be offered The Greatest Story nor the first to be impressed by it. It was, however, the first to be willing to back a radio series based on Christ's teachings despite the danger of recrimination and without hope of gain. The man responsible for that willingness was the chairman of Goodyear's Board, Paul W. Litchfield. In the face of warnings from some of his closest business associates, Litchfield took on the responsibility for sponsoring the broadcasts.

A man over seventy, Paul Litchfield as a boy, had learned that the essence of Christianity is understanding of God and one's fellows and the practice of brotherly love.

Praise has poured in from all sides—from individual clergymen, as well as the public. Religious bodies of all denominations have offered congratulations and given active support. They have sent out letters urging members to listen in; they have endorsed the program from the pulpit. One Jewish group, with the purpose of combatting anti-Semitism, sent out three hundred thousand communications asking people to listen to the Easter trilogy. The accurate historical and religious treatment of the crucifixion story, they felt, would correct the ideas which breed prejudice.

More than a thousand ministers have written declaring that the dramas are more effective than a sermon. Many report that the program is bringing people back to a religion that they have rejected. One clergyman told about a man who was so interested in the life of Christ as he heard it on The Greatest Story that he began to read his Bible after years of neglect.

Thousands tell of the concrete good which The Greatest Story has brought about in their lives, but no practical result has been more dramatic than the full-page advertisement which appeared throughout the country in thirty-eight leading Sunday newspapers on May 4, 1947. The ad had been inserted by a rival of the sponsor and it was headlined: "We sug-

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

Visit us. Hanks Chapel's complete twin-bed suit of furniture, the lovely carpet, the newly painted walls and the pretty curtains are waiting for you. The window opens on a beautiful view of the orphanage campus and also of the college campus. If you wish to visit either of these institutions you are welcome to use this lovely room.

How about that report attached hereto! Isn't it beautiful? Thanks, thanks to everybody who has had a share, and to all who shall have a share. Five dollars, ten dollars, doesn't mean so much to many people, but every cent counts here. If you could see these children and know that in spite of all we can do they have to "stay in line" and feel the pinch of personal need of such things as a little money to get "my teacher a present" or "I wish I could get somebody that I love a present." Once in a while a lad in his early teens, say, will come up to me when he can find me alone with: "Dr. Truitt, this is the only coat I have" and shyly pointing at the frayed sleeves. Of course he gets a coat or a wind-breaker or a hand-me-down, for he must be right before he goes to your church or Sunday school to do a program, or even to our own Sunday school here.

The point to all this is: if you have not taken a Thanksgiving Offering in your Sunday school and church and mailed it you have a joyous privilege coming to you. Ask your people to make a liberal gift for these children. They cannot speak for themselves. You speak for them. And what is more send us a contribution yourself.

Helen Cook is a most attractive girl, 16, and has made the high school basketball team—as have two or three others of our girls. The other girls were putting in their orders for sweaters. She didn't know what to do. It would cost $8.00. She knew the needs of the 75 children here, but she hoped I wouldn't be angry with her. She ordered the sweater. She knew already that whatever she had to have and the others were having she could get. But multiply that across twelve months.

Bad eyes. That was the verdict of the school nurse. Serious condition of the tonsils for two others. Bad eyes for another. Bad teeth for two others. And all this after a check-up had been made on all of our children last spring and corrections made.

A committee began studying our insurance coverage on the seventeen buildings here last spring and completed their survey in September. They were such men as C. D. West, V. R. Holt, Clyde W. Gordon, along with some State authorities. Verdict: Greatly in need of better coverage. So $2,000 for insurance premium is due right now. It is not bread. It is not socks. But it may mean a roof over some child's head. At any rate all the money sent here cannot go "to feed and clothe a child." I used to say that before I learned better, but if we get these buildings into fairly good repair we shall need much more than we are asking.

A warm, clean bed; good food; fair clothes, and friendship these children have. Let's keep it so. In their behalf I say God bless you everyone.

GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD.

gest you listen to The Greatest Story Ever Told."

There are many reasons for the program's unique success in bringing home eternal truths with the immediate impact of current events. The masterly writing technique is an important one. It combines modern, straightforward English with an occasional, ancient phrase or unusual sentence structure, so that the dialogue fits its centuries-old background, yet has the freshness of face-to-face talk. Another is the music. Written by an authority on religious music, its blend of intense spiritual emotion and dramatic mood builds up the stories' suspense and reverent feeling to a high pitch.

Equally important is the acting. There is little earnestness like this in radio. Chosen from the best, the actors give everything they have to their roles. None of the actors will win fame through their performances, because their names will never be announced. Every member of the cast stays anonymous, so that the hallowed figure he portrays will suffer no identification with any characters which the actor may play on other programs, or with the actor himself.

Unlike the usual sponsors of the usual radio program, Mr. Litchfield and the men associated with him discourage publicity about the show, because of the constant worry of diminishing Christ's message of brotherhood by any hint of exploitation.

The sincerity of the men and women who produced The Greatest Story is matched by the enthusiasm of the people who hear it. There is the young mother who said: "If I hear many more programs of this type, I will undoubtedly become more serious in my attitude toward Christian thinking and Christian attitudes. . . ."

There is the young husband who wrote: "Our family can't seem to do without it, for no matter where we are on Sunday afternoons, my wife and I make a point to be at home in time so as not to miss the program."

Children seem to love the dramatizations. "My children can't wait to hear it," a mother wrote. "Sunday afternoon seems long to them for they are always asking how long before The Greatest Story is on."

It's after the Christmas programs that listeners have really spilled over with thanks. One letter that came in after last year's Yuletide dramatizations is a favorite of the producers. It was written by a little boy of six, who said, "I love your program. It is making people want to be good."

The most important point of all about the meaning of the Nativity was made by a veteran of the recent war. "You did a swell job telling the story of Christ's birth and making the big thing about peace and good will come right through good and strong. You're socking home the Christmas message of peace on earth, good will to men, not only at Christmas time, but the rest of the year, too. And speaking as a veteran, as well as a guy who believes that a person's race, religion or color has nothing to do with the kind of person he is—keep up the good work."

That is the idea—exactly. — Excerpts from an article in December 1949 Radio Mirror Magazine.

EDITORIAL NOTE: This year, the Christmas Cycle includes two programs, Part I on Sunday, December 18, and Part II on Sunday, December 25, under the title, "The Prince of Peace." The Theme of these two programs is the story of the coming of Christ, with emphasis on the fact that He came to earth for rich and poor alike, and that it was the poor who saw Him first, even though so many thought He would come only for the rich.

WELL KNOW MINISTER PASSES.

Funeral services for the Rev. J. S. Carden, 86, well known retired Christian minister of 906 Shepherd Street, Durham, North Carolina, were held Sunday afternoon, November 27, at the Congregational Christian Church on West Main Street. Dr. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor of the church, Rev. Clyde Boggs, Rev. E. M. Carter, and Rev. G. C. Crutchfield conducted the services. Interment followed in Little River Presbyterian Church Cemetery in Orange County.

The Rev. Mr. Carden died at 3:45 o'clock Friday morning after being in declining health for the past five years. He had been confined to his bed for one week with virus pneumonia.

He was born in Orange County, the son of the late Silas and Betty Bowen Carden. He received his education in the schools of Orange County and later attended Caldwell Institute and also Elon College. On August 22, 1889, he married the former Miss Mary Susan Allison of Orange County. In August of this year the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Carden celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary.

He was ordained in the ministry of the Christian Church in 1897 and served churches in Alamance, Durham, Granville, Caswell, Guilford, Chatham and Wake Counties, and at Buies Creek.

In addition to his wife he is survived by four daughters, Mrs. Bettie Sealf, Mrs. J. E. Harward, Mrs. M. T. Wagner of Durham, and Mrs. L. D. Franklin of Stem; 16 grandchildren, 19 great-grandchildren; two brothers, Levi S. Carden, and Newton Carden of Durham; and one sister, Mrs. Senora Davis of Durham.

HELP MAKE CHRISTMAS HAPPY FOR OUR AGED MINISTERS.

Our generous gifts to the Christmas Fund will help. Please give liberally to this great cause.

All payments to the Christmas Fund should be sent to the Southern Convention Office, Elon College, N. C., clearly designated, because these funds do not count on apportionment.

We have asked our Board in New York to mail to each pastor a quantity of Christmas Fund offering envelopes and leaflets. We urge our pastors and churches to make a generous offering to the 1949 Christmas Fund. "Freely ye have received. Freely give."

FOR THE CHILDREN.

"Give me the nickels; then, forget the incident but remember the lesson."

"I shan't want to do that again, Mom,—really I shan't."

The voices died away, and I was left to my own thoughts.

Dr. Adam Clarke once preached on the words, "Let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." At the conclusion of the discourse he announced a collection. "How can you, Doctor," asked a lady afterwards, "reconcile the freeness of the water of life with the collection at the close?" "Oh, madame," answered the learned and venerable divine, "God gives the water without money and without price; but you must pay for the waterworks, for the pipes, and the pitchers which convey the water to your neighborhood." Remember, you pay nothing to God; you are charged nothing for the water; but you cannot have convenient chapels to sit in without paying for them, nor a regular ministry to urge the water on your acceptance, without making a suitable provision for its support.—J. C. Jones, D. D.

THE GREATEST STORY EVER TOLD

It was two years ago, in the Christmas season of 1947, that the Nativity was first reenacted on The Greatest Story Ever Told, when the program was new. Immediately, letters poured in from all over the country, and they all struck the same note.

"It was so real," listener's wrote. "It was as if we were there ourselves."

Christmas Day, 1949, which falls on a Sunday, will hold an added beauty for the millions of listeners who will be able to hear the miracle of the Nativity dramatized on The Greatest Story. For them, more than ever, it will be the most urgent story ever told, because it can touch them in a way that only the modern miracle of radio makes possible.

This is what a young Midwestern housewife wrote, after hearing the first of last year's two Christmas broadcasts: "The wonder and awe of that Holy Night with the shepherds in the Judean Hills was portrayed so vividly, it was almost as if we were there ourselves. No sermon we ever sat through touched our very hearts as this program did."

And from an elderly, bed-ridden listener in the South: "I was there last Sunday—I forgot that I was listening to the radio and I found myself trembling with exaltation and delight as the magic words of the Angel Gabriel poured out into my room as if they were addressed to me."

The simple Hebrew shepherds to whom the fateful message was given that Holy Night as they beheld a new star in the sky could hardly have imagined this new wonder—that almost two thousand years later, millions upon millions upon millions of men, women and children would be listening together to the same marvelous words at the same time. These Americans have made The Greatest Story Ever Told, with its illuminating dramatizations of Christ's life and teachings, a part of their lives.

Ever since the program went on the air in the fall of 1947, more and more people have been drawing new inspiration and faith from the age-old lesson of brotherhood and peace which it re-tells. Last year, for example, New York's Governor Dewey wrote to Fulton Oursler, who first had the idea of using the best techniques of radio to present the message of Jesus in concrete, human terms.

"If every American would listen, this would be a better country," wrote the Governor.

Last Christmas, the second of the two holiday programs concerned the search of the three wise men for the new-born Prince of Peace. Men of different lands, they had yet been able to join together in their common goal. Listening to the dramatization, a devoted listener got an idea.

"I don't see how anyone could resist the appeal of your program," she wrote in. "I'd like to try something which may seem foolish, but which I feel could do wonders for mankind in our sorely troubled world."

"I want to try—to make an attempt anyway—to get some of the world's key figures to hear your Christmas broadcast. I want to send them records of that program. Is it possible to get such recordings? I don't care how much it would cost."

The producers of the show wondered what to tell her. It happened that this program was not among those which were being made available for popular distribution on records. While they were wondering, the telephone in the office rang one morning, and their correspondent explained that she had just arrived in New York.

She explained, "My husband and I came here to meet a refugee child we've adopted. We'd like to get the recordings off at the same time."

The producer gulped and paused.

"Look," he said, "I wouldn't care if those recordings were made of diamonds and cost a king's ransom. I'll see to it that you get them with the compliments of our organization. There's just one question I have. How can you be sure that the big men you send them to will listen?"

He could almost "hear" the woman's gentle smile over the phone, he said later.

"This is the Christmas season, isn't it?" she asked. "This is the time we commemorate the greatest miracle of the world. Shall I have so little faith then as not to believe that somehow, some of these men, maybe some of their assistants, will listen?"

A few days later, the recordings were on their way to President Truman, Joseph Stalin and Trygve Lie of the United Nations.

Inspiration is a big word, but it fits The Greatest Story Ever Told. From the first there had been a dedicated spirit behind the undertaking. The men who (Continued on page 13)

The Universal Golden Rule

Zoroastrian: "Do as you would like to be done by."

Confucian: "What you would not wish done to yourself, do not to others."

Buddhist: "One should seek for others the happiness one desires for one's self."

Jew: "Whatsoever you would not wish your neighbor to do to you, do not unto him."

Hindu: "The true rule is to guard and do by the things of others as you do by your own."

Mohammedan: "Let none of you treat your brother in a way he himself would dislike to be treated."

Christian: "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them."

The Golden Rule, like the thought of divinity, seems to be universal among all mankind. It is its own best proof of deity. Generation after generation all around the earth, speaking different tongues and reared among conflicting conditions, could not possibly have this universal conception of deity, nor this universal comprehension of one man's duty to another, if there were no God.

An application of the Golden Rule to all the affairs of mankind, as set forth in the Bible, would prevent all of our wars, stop the manufacture of all implements for human destruction, end our courts, close all of our jails and penitentiaries; make home a heaven, earth an Eden, and the universe the model place of all the ages in which to live.

Why can't we have the application of the Golden Rule?

PICTURE OF THE MONTH.

"SAMSON AND DELILAH."

Down through the ages many artists and writers have been inspired by the Old Testament to produce masterpieces—in story and song, on canvas and stone—depicting dramatic episodes in the lives of the biblical great. Among the subjects treated, none has had more attention than Samson, that baffling combination of weakness and greatness, who, as John Milton puts it, "divulged the secret gift of God to a deceitful woman."

Now comes Cecil B. De Mille, master of spectacular screen art, with his "Samson and Delilah" (Paramount). To say that De Mille has done nothing superior to this is praise indeed. With certain deviations and expansions, necessary in a treatment of this length, the story is straight out of the Book of Judges. And it provides a moving account of the man whose faith is mentioned in the Hebrews 11 "gallery of heroes."

Fourteen years in the making, "Samson and Delilah" is a graphic spectacle of intensely dramatic events in the familiar story. While liberty is taken with the Biblical text to provide a plot, there is no contradiction of facts. Their sequence may have been re-arranged, but none of this does violence to the moral and spiritual elements of the biblical narrative. They come through with almost devout sincerity—as in the case of Samson's prayers—and with awe-inspiring significance.

The all-important truth that Samson's hair is the symbol at once of his strength and of his dependence on God, that when the carnal nature rises above the power of the Spirit, compromise with sin and downfall inevitably ensue—with the possibility of subsequent pardon following repentance—will be understood by those with spiritual discernment. Others will see the lavish spectacle, a dramatic story, some superb color, grandiose sets, the re-creation of a long past civilization, and some interesting characterizations. To all, it should make certain biblical episodes live.

A large cast has been assembled and chosen carefully for each part. Victor Mature and Hedy Lamarr are Samson and Delilah, Henry Wilcoxon, George Sanders, Angela Lansbury make other personalities come through vividly. This is a story of much action, some of it is violent, but all of it faithfully, convincingly portrayed.

Says Dr. Poling: "Nothing greater in the filming of Bible stories has ever been done. Here is a dynamic understanding of the time and persons involved that is, I think, unequalled in the history of the motion picture industry." (Recommended for adults, young people and children.)—Protestant Motion Picture Council.

ORPHANAGE PARTIES.

How happy our children are being made with Christmas parties! Every child receives a special gift of some kind, refreshments, and then all sorts of fruits and candies. The singing of Christmas carols, and some special Christmas program is added for extra. Not all are alike but all will be beautiful and bountiful. The one we had already consisted of a full course turkey dinner in the beautiful Phi Gamma Delta fraternity building at Chapel Hill. The one coming up next is given by Chi Phi fraternity and their sorority sisters Sunday afternoon from two to four. On the 14th at 7:00 o'clock the Bell Telephone folks in Burlington will come to the Orphanage with their party. The 15th we go to our own Elon College for a party by the students. The 20th the Burlington Sunday school comes to us with a party. On the 21st the Woodmen of the World from Greensboro; and on the 24th our own Christmas party when we shall give out some of the presents sent in to us; and then Christmas morning the final party! These children have good times for Christmas. I hope they will get enough cash in our treasury to buy shoes, clothes, groceries, and pay the insurance, the up-keep in the months that are not as beautiful as December. Thanks to everybody, and God bless you everyone. If you could see how thrilled these children are you would be as happy as we are!

AN APPRECIATION OF THE SUN.

One of our pastors in the Southern Convention for twenty years writes: "Since I have retired from the active ministry and my income has been severely reduced I have had to cancel subscriptions to several papers, but so long as I can spare $2.00 I must keep THE SUN shining in my home."

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is completing its 105th year. A much appreciated Christian Christmas Gift would be a subscription to THE SUN. Send your gift subscriptions to The Convention Office, Elon College, North Carolina, and it will be appropriately acknowledged to the person receiving this Christmas gift from you.

LAYMEN AT WORK

MEN AT WORK IN THE CHURCH.*

By W. T. DUNN.

I am glad to be able to say that men are at work in the Church, in the churches of this Conference. We have evidence of that in the reports of the various laymen who took part in the program for Laymen's Sunday, which was the third Sunday in October. This has been an increasing movement since its inception about six years ago. Reports have been received that last year it had extended to the churches in forty-six states and to several countries overseas. This year most of the churches in the Conference held such a service and the encouraging thing is that most of them were conducted by the Laymen of the local church. There were very few calls for outside speakers.

But there is more work to be done and the men are able to do it, and most of the men of the church are glad to do it, but we have failed to get across to the men of the church just what needs to be done. In lots of cases the needs of the Conference and Convention have not been made clear to them. When those of us who attended the Conference go back home and tell them that our apportionments have been increased we do not take the pains to explain fully the expanded program that is being attempted; we do not explain to them the increased needs and opportunities. We just say, well the Conference is asking for more money this year, and they get the idea that Conference is some organization to devour any money that can be secured.

I think that the movie, shown last night, "And Now I See," was a great help and think that we should avail ourselves of the opportunity to have it shown in every local church where possible as there are a lot of George Millers who need to see it.

Another thing that would be most helpful is to see that every member of the church should have some job in the local church and then he would realize the needs of the church, the conference and the Convention. Some times I think there should be an iron-clad rule that no one person should hold a particular office for more than one or two years.

I always feel sorry for a congregation when I hear that one person has held the same office for 40 or 50 years. Think of the opportunities that person has had to train so many others and then they would have had the opportunity and privilege to be of service and to feel more responsibility to the work of the Kingdom. But we would rather do the work than to train some one else. It is hard I know to train other workers; it is like a mother training a daughter to make a meal. It would be so much easier for her to go ahead and cook it rather than tell the daughter how much of this or that to put in, how to mix the ingredients, how to cook it, how to serve it, etc, and then to clean up the kitchen. But she realizes that if the daughter is to learn to cook she has to have experience and so she patiently goes through the process and cleans up the mess. This is what we are going to have to do to get the men and women of the church to learn what is to be done and how to do it. We should let every member of the church share the work and the glory that is due each one.

Again I say that I think that the laymen of the church are willing to do the work of the kingdom when they know the needs. There are three things that are needed (and this is not original)—they are: inspiration, information and perspiration. The inspiration can come from the reading of our Bibles and from the ministry. We can get the information from those who know how and what to do, from our church papers, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, The Missionary Herald, Advance, Social Action, and others. Any interested layman can secure without charge The Laymen's Fellowship Letter by writing to Walter Graham, Pembroke 1, Kentucky. Mr. Graham is the leader of the Laymen's Fellowship of the denomination. There is

Established 1844 by Rev. Daniel W. Kerr.

A Religious Weekly for the Home, devoted to the interests of the Kingdom as represented by the Congregational Christian Churches.

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Christmas Gift---What Will It Be?

Is this your problem? Many people go through a brain storm at this season of the year, trying to think of something new or appropriate for Christmas gifts. Many, in their frantic search, overlook the most appropriate gifts. Secular gifts are publicized to the limit—and beyond! Many gifts have no inherent relationship to Christmas, while some prevalent ones violate the real spirit of the season.

There is nothing original—far from it—in the suggestion that one give a Bible for Christmas, and yet this is perennially apropos. “Oh,” someone may say, “everyone has a Bible!” Really? Granted, for the sake of argument, and yet the Bible need not be dismissed as a possible and appropriate gift. Those who really use their Bible may need and appreciate a new one. Elderly people may desire a copy with larger type. Sunday school teachers, ministers and laymen who have a bit of time on their hands would find a gift copy of “The Westminster Study of the Bible” was acceptable. There are also modern translations, you recall.

Bible adaptations are available in varied and interesting forms. W. W. Norton has published “Spokesmen for God,” an interpretation of the great personalities of the Old Testament by Edith Hamilton. Harper and Brothers announces “The Home Book of Bible Questions,” arranged by subject and thoroughly indexed by Burton Stevenson. “In Our Image” is a rich treasury of Old Testament Art and Literature, published by the Oxford Press.

Those who are selecting Bibles for children will find some new and interesting adaptations. The Oxford University Press has issued “A Small Child’s Bible,” seventy of the best loved stories retold with simplicity and reverence by Pelagie Doane. Scribners has just published “The Lord is My Shepherd,” stories of the Old and New Testaments told in modern speech and illustrated by Nancy Barnhart.

The giving of books opens a limitless field and the giving of religious books offers great latitude in choice. New books are being added to the classics from year to year. “Mary,” a novel of Sholem Asch (author of “The Nazarene” and “The Apostle”) has just been published by G. P. Putnam’s Sons. “Greatest Story Ever Told,” a fresh retelling of the ever-new story of Jesus by Fulton Oursler, is published by the Literary Guild of America. “Sam Higginbottom, Farmer,” a vivid account of an agricultural missionary in India, is published by Scribners and should be widely read. Do not overlook Fosdick’s “Jesus as His Contemporaries Saw Him.” Add to this list Stanley Jones’ new book, “The Way to Poise and Power.”

The variety of secular books for children published this season range all the way from such titles as “Cotton in My Sack” by Lois Lenski to “The Extraordinary Education of Johnny Longfoot in His Search for the Magic Hat” by Catherine Besterman. The number of children’s books has swelled to astonishing figures. In 1948, according to Publisher’s Weekly, 844 new juvenile titles were published, which was more than the number of books in any category of adult books with the exception of fiction. It is estimated that in 1949, the autumn harvest alone will number some 400 books by Christmas. Of these over a hundred will be picture books and first story books; about 160 for the middle years, and about 130 for the teen-aged group. The number of books for the year will be close to the 1948 total, but possible a bit lower because of continuing high production costs and economic uncertainties that existed at the beginning of the year.

Christmas shopping should be an exhilarating experience, not a chore. Christmas giving should be an investment in character, an extension of the Incarnation.

Hervey Allen, writing in The New York Times Book Review, says: “There is no substitute for a book. For of all manufactured objects that preoccupy time and occupy space, a book is pre-eminently the one embodied thing which is more spiritual and mental than material. And for that reason alone, as a gift it is transcendent and an addition not to the mere stock pile of the worldly a book has least the element of old mortality about it; it is by nature a fragment of life itself.”

For Christmas, therefore, solve your shopping problem by giving a book or The BOOK. Yet there is one alternative: a gift subscription to The Christian Sun.

The United Evangelistic Advance

By F. B. OGLESBY.*

The greatest effort of any denomination to move in on a city for Christ began Saturday, November 26, when The Methodist Church, under its General Board of Evangelism started a week's program of visitation and pulpit evangelism. Under the direction of Dr. Henry Williams of the Board, more than 600 Methodist ministers from all parts of the country converged upon the Metropolitan Area of Philadelphia and were assigned to assist local pastors in their churches. It was estimated that every Annual Conference in American Methodism was represented. Preliminary to the campaign several months of hard work had been done by Dr. Williams and local committees. Surveys were made of the area, which included Philadelphia and those parts of the New Jersey, Wilmington and the Peninsula Conference close to that city. More than 30,000 prospects were obtained by the surveys conducted. The program called for a minister preaching in each Methodist pulpit each evening while at the same time laymen and women, under the direction of another minister, were calling upon the prospects in their homes or places of business. The results for the first five nights were as follows: Transfers, 2,824; Professions of Faith in Christ, 4,303. These figures indicated that the goal of 10,000 accessions would be reached when the final figures were turned in.

Each morning of the campaign the ministers met in Arch Street Methodist Church for a period of inspiration and heart searching. Great addresses were delivered at these sessions by Bishop Gerald Kennedy of Portland, Oregon, and Dr. William R. Cannon, Professor of Church History, Emory University, Atlanta, Ga. Bishop Fred Pearce Corson, the resident Bishop, presided at these sessions. The final session was held Friday morning in Old St. Mark's Methodist Church, the cradle of American Methodism, for it was there that the first society in America was formed in 1767. The present building was dedicated in 1769. This service was a high moment and a sacred hour for the vast throng of ministers who crowded the building. They were brought to their feet in great fervor when Dr. Harry Dennman, the Executive Secretary of the Board of Evangelism, delivered the final charge to the church urging Methodism to make 1950 the great year of evangelism in its history.

Report of Historian of North Carolina and Virginia Conference

It was more than eight decades after the death of Rev. James O'Kelly when MacClenny brought from the press his book, The Life of Rev. James O'Kelly and The Early History of the Christian Church in the South. This is the first and the only comprehensive history we have of the early Christian Church. Mr. MacClenny is of the opinion that this book should be revised. He has information in his possession obtained since writing the book and is seeking for additional matter. I am of the opinion that it would be wise for this conference to memorialize the Southern Christian Convention at its 1950 session to consider the revision of the book, The Life of Rev. James O'Kelly, and the publication of the revised edition. The first edition has been sold years ago. I am also of the opinion that each young man in our church before being ordained to the ministry should have a fair knowledge of this book.

This conference has done much to honor and preserve the memory of the early leaders of the Christian Church. However, for many decades the grave of Rev. James O'Kelly in Chatham County, North Carolina, was neglected by the church. At the session of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference in 1850 a committee was named to place a monument to mark the resting place of Mr. O'Kelly. This committee did its work and reported at the session of 1854 the completion of the work. At the Bethlehem conference of 1947 a committee was appointed to visit the grave of Mr.

Sunday afternoon a great mass meeting was held in the City Auditorium. With a seating capacity of 15,000 it was necessary to open other buildings in order to take care of the throng of over 20,000 who attended. Homer Rodeheaver led the singing, assisted by a youth chorus of 2,000 and a choir of 3,000. Bishop Angie Smith of Oklahoma City was the preacher. Those who had the high honor of participating in this great campaign left Philadelphia with the deep assurance and conviction that the great Evangelical Churches of Christendom were rapidly moving out on an offensive for Christ against the rising tides of secularism that will eventually stem those tides and turn the thoughts and hearts of humanity towards God, who in Christ, is the only hope for the world.

O'Kelly and report conditions there. The results of this action on the part of this conference have surpassed expectations. The Southern Christian Convention became interested and through its Executive Committee or Board, in session at Elon College on October 12-13, 1948, established "The O'Kelly Memorial Foundation" for the purpose of preserving and caring for the family cemetery in which Rev. James O'Kelly is buried. A board of six trustees were elected to be the administrator of the conference or convention desires concerning the cemetery.

The trustees had their first meeting in Durham, North Carolina, on November 28, 1948. All six members were present. The trustees began at once to carry out the desires of the convention. Namely, to have the convention become the custodian of the cemetery where the body of Rev. James O'Kelly is buried, and secure a right-of-way thereto. After following legal advice a deed was secured from the heirs of the late Dr. and Mrs. N. D. York, who in a sale of the O'Kelly farm in 1905 reserved one-half acre, including the rock wall inclosure within which Mr. O'Kelly and about twenty members of his family are buried. This deed is recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Chatham County, N. C. A committee is at work to secure a right-of-way from highway No. 55 to the cemetery, a distance of one-half mile. The only way to reach the cemetery at

*Rev. F. B. Oglesby, D. D., Superintendent of the Winchester (Va.) District of Methodist Churches, was present and with 600 other ministers participated in a recent United Evangelistic Advance Campaign, conducted in Philadelphia, by the Methodist Church of America. His account before the Winchester Ministerial Association at its regular monthly meeting on December 5 was soul-stirring. At my request, Dr. Oglesby has given a brief picture of this great campaign. Because of what it meant to me, I should like to pass it on to the readers of The Sun, with the prayer that it might be an inspiration to us as we seek together to take our part in this United Evangelistic Advance.—Robert A. REV. BEN JOE EARP IMPROVING.

Medical examinations during this past week revealed very encouraging news for Rev. Ben Joe Earp of High Point, N. C. The doctor found Mr. Earp's heart to be stronger than it was just prior to the heart attack last May. Now the doctor dares to prescribe six more months of quiet, rest and stay-in-bed, which could mean that the "old ticker" may gain enough strength to be up and about again. When I talked with my father via telephone this week, his voice was full of eagerness over the new hope that the doctor has created.

The months since last May have passed slowly, hesitatingly, breathlessly. Not many days intervened between the bad heart spells which kept family, and friends anxious, less the minister's fight for life be cut short. The rigid routine of twenty-five pills daily; the caution about diet; fear of too much company or any sudden shock—all have kept those who kept the sick-bed vigil very tense. We remember days in June and July when he was not allowed to read his own mail; but somehow during those months the roses, snapdragons and many flowers of summer conveyed the meaning of other messages hidden behind words.

August gave way to Carolina's mild-weathered September and the deep blue sky of October. During all of this time—from May to November—the people of High Point Congregational Christian Church had maintained Mr. Earp as their pastor. The hope of having just the right leaders come to work with his parishoners at High Point was constantly in his prayers and conversation. Finally, in November, with the beginning of a new conference year, Rev. Mr. Welton T. Madren accepted the call to High Point. The congregation unanimously elected their former pastor as pastor emeritus.

On World Wide Communion Day, in October, Mr. Earp served communion to his deacons as they stood about his bedside. The deacons in turn waited upon the congregation at the church. This was one of the last services of the pastor before moving away from the church parsonage.

Few can understand the price a minister pays when he turns over his ministry to a younger servant. It is very hard to say goodbye to those to whom one has tied the threads of his life in such a way that the severing seems to break the web, and life loses part of its fullness.

Moving from the church parsonage was another experience with which the pastor was helped, as usual, by many close friends. Members of the congregation lent time, trucks, ladders, paint brushes and much that it takes to aid an invalid in making a new home. Now Mr. Earp is established at 228 Willowbrook Street in High Point, North, Carolina. The telephone has been installed at his bedside and the front door stays unlocked. Also he can read all the mail the postman leaves.

His time is spent reading, resting, taking pills and waiting for lunch, trays, bath and shave. His hands are still too swollen to allow him to do any writing, but he feeds himself and keeps hoping for the best.

* * * *

Our Thanksgiving Season has been a blessed one, in spite of sick beds being occupied. It was rather amusing to note Granddaddy Earp's enjoyment of having a three-and-a-half-year-old (in bed with tonsillitis) have luncheon trays at the same time and mimic with exact imitation "being sick like Granddaddy Earp!"

Many people have dropped in during this season. Mrs. Pearly Hall from the Palm Street Church in Greensboro came laden with a huge basket of fruit, ham, jelly and canned food.

Many letters of encouragement have been written from various fields where he has served in the Southern Convention. The Newport News Church Congregation wrote recently. Individual letters from pastors and lay people have done much to while away the long days and longer nights of convalescence.

SCOTT URGES UN TRUSTEESHIP FOR SOUTHWEST AFRICA.

An Anglican clergyman, Rev. Michael Scott, has been recognized by the Trusteeship Committee of the UN's General Assembly as spokesman for Herero and Hottentot Tribes of Southwest Africa. Speaking for the African natives before a meeting of the committee on November 26, Mr. Scott expressed strong opposition to the incorporation of the mandated territory of Southwest Africa into the Union of South Africa, and urged that the territory be placed under United Nations trusteeship.

Citing a long history of oppression of the African natives, Mr. Scott claimed that the annexation of Southwest Africa into the South African union would subject the Herero and Hottentot natives to the "apartheid" policy of stiff racial segregation and deny them any representation in the government.

"The future of all Africa and of South Africa especially calls for all civilized peoples to hold firm to their moral obligations," Mr. Scott stated, and urged that the disposition of Southwest Africa be decided "not as a narrowly judicial matter nor as one of political expediency."

After hearing Mr. Scott's report, Mr. Stephen M. Alexis, delegate from Haiti, said he understood why so much effort had been expended to prevent Mr. Scott from being heard, and proposed that the material which he had presented should be sent on to the plenary session of the General Assembly and of the International Court of Justice.

Mr. Scott's documented plea before the United Nations brought forth a spirited reaction from South African governmental authorities. The South African delegation at the UN walked out of the Trusteeship Committee for the remainder of its current sessions. In Pretoria, the South African prime minister, Daniel F. Malan, D. D., labeled Mr. Scott as an "agitator" and declared that the "interference mania" of the United Nations had reached such "farcical heights" that no nation would be safe from interference in her internal affairs.

Dr. Malan, a former minister of the Dutch Reformed Church, forecast that the Union of South Africa "will eventually be compelled to protect the aborigines from the embrace" of the United Nations.

Mr. Scott, whose plea before the Trusteeship Committee was sponsored by the International League for the Rights of Man, has long been active in racial affairs both in South Africa and India. He is best known for his leadership in the recent passive resistance campaign to the Asiatic Land Tenure Act promulgated in South Africa.

Born in England in 1907, Mr. Scott first went to South Africa at the age of 19 to work at an Anglican leper mission. Returning to England for his theological training, he attended Chichester Theological College and was ordained by the Bishop of the Diocese in 1932. From 1935 to 1939, Mr. Scott served as chaplain in Bombay and Calcutta, where he had considerable opportunity for racial work. After a period in the RAF during the early part of the war, Mr. Scott returned to South Africa where he now holds a general license to preach in the Diocese of Johannesburg.

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITE

A CAPACITY AUDIENCE HEARS "MESSIAH" BY ELON SINGERS.

Several hundred people had to be turned away because of lack of seating facilities, but there were more than 1,000 Alamance County residents in attendance last night who had their Christmas season of 1949 officially started when they heard 87 voices in the Elon College choir present the most famous of all season choral selections, "The Messiah," by George Frederick Handel.

It was the 17th annual presentation of the famous oratorio, and John Westmoreland in directing the group, certainly can known today that there probably never has been one that was better presented or accepted. He had perfect command of the large group and it was an inspiring achievement.

The chorus was assisted by a quartette of talented musicians and Fletcher Moore at the organ. Miss Virginia Groomes of the Elon College music faculty was the soprano soloist. Miss Lydia Summers of New York was contralto. Edward Kane of New York was tenor, and Robert C. Bird of Raleigh, bass. The performance was presented in Elon's Whitley Memorial Auditorium at 8:30 o'clock.

Handel's "Messiah" has come to be almost as much a part of Christmas in the musical appreciation world as in Santa Claus to the children, and rightly so.

The oratorio was begun August 22, 1741, and completed September 14, having been composed in 24 days. The text is taken entirely from the Scriptures.

It was first presented in Dublin, Ireland, on April 13, 1742, under the direction of the composer, and when the Hallelujah Chorus pealed forth for the first time King George II and all the audience are said to have been swayed by an irresistible impulse, rising spontaneously to their feet as all audiences for two centuries have done.

"I think I did see Heaven before me, the great God himself," said Handel when writing the Hallelujah chorus.

The oratorio was first performed in America in Boston on December 25, 1818, by the Handel and Haydn Society.

Not only was the presentation heard last night (Dec. 4) by the capacity crowd in the auditorium, but the Inter-City Network broadcast the entire program, originating through the facilities of WFNS-FM in Burlington and being heard over stations in Greensboro, Reidsville, and Madison.

The auditorium was filled with Christmas decoration greenery, and the large choir was formally dressed.

The chorus is all-important in the oratorio because it must carry well not only the Hallelujah chorus, but several other passages that tell a major part of the story. There was no question but that Director Westmoreland presented this part in the most convincing manner heard in this section for years.

But soloists, also, have an equally important part and the Elon Music Department reached new heights in its selection this year. All four soloists are professionals and are in great demand not only for "The Messiah" but for concerts as well. Miss Summers and Mr. Kane are booked out of New York.

Soloists must, to carry the story of the oratorio, sing such important messages:

"Come unto Him, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and He shall give you rest. Take His yoke upon you, and learn of Him; for He is meek and lowly of heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls."

Or another:

"Why do the nations so furiously rage together? And why do the people imagine a vain thing? The kings of the earth rise up, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord, and against His Anointed."

Or still another:

"There were shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flocks by night. And lo! the angel of the Lord came upon them and the glory of the Lord shown round about them, and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Fear not; for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying: Glory to God in the highest, and peace on earth, good will toward men."

APPORTIONMENT GIVING.

The days of the year are fast running out. It is to be hoped that the interest of our churches in our college may be increased and that their interest may be expressed in material contributions that the needed assistance may be given our college in these critical moments. We are still far away from the total askings of the Convention for the college. More than one-fourth of our churches have not met their full apportionments. There are a few more remaining days. It would mean much to the college and to your church if you would see that your apportionment is paid in full. There is always a feeling of satisfaction and joy in fulfilling our responsibilities completely. Won't

A LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

American Board Mission,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
October 12, 1949.

DEAR FRIENDS:

At last some mail has come through. You can guess what a treat it was after four long months of silence to get news from family and friends again. Quite a large quantity of letters and magazines had been accumulating in Foochow for us and when that city was liberated, they gradually found their way up to Foochow. The copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN were most welcome. We read with interest the news of the Southern Convention churches. We especially enjoyed personal letters from many of you. Now, because of the blockade, mail has again practically stopped—only a trickle now and then with an ancient postmark.

After receiving such a lift from your many letters, we discovered to our disappointment that we cannot even write personal letters in return because the postage rate is so high and our supply of money is limited. No money can come from America into China until diplomatic relations between the two countries has been established. Further, no bank has been put into operation in Shaowu to transfer funds up from Foochow. So, these six months we have had to economize in every way possible and hope that a way will soon open up.

At the present moment we are deliberating an important question—whether or not to continue on in Shaowu during this period of confusion or whether to go to Foochow to “weather the storm” with our other American Board friends there.

In September, several thousand peasant farmers, encouraged by remnants of the Nationalist government and armed with spears and guns, besieged Shaowu for over a week. This group is organized into a “Big Knife” society which combines Buddhist superstitious practices and politics. The members of this society paste a strip of red paper on their lips which is supposed to protect them from harm. They drink some kind of liquid which serves to intoxicate them and they fight with utter abandon. These Big Knifers twice entered the city and looted our hospital—taking much valuable equipment, including the two microscopes. They tried to break into our gate, but the gate held firm. Although ostensibly these people came to drive out the new government, they couldn't resist the temptation to pillage and loot.

Now these Big Knifers have been driven away and we are told that there is little likelihood that they will return. More troops have arrived in Shaowu and we are assured that they can now cope with the situation.

A major consideration in our decision to leave or stay is the medical problem. Dr. Riggs has recently taken over the superintendency of the hospital from Dr. Chu who resigned to go into private practice. Because of a lack of money, the scope of operations has been cut considerably. Dr. Riggs further reports that partly because of the looting and partly because of continued use, the medicines are being used up fast and several important ones are almost gone. Unless medicine and money can come from America the hospital sooner or later will have to close. He and Frances propose to go to Foochow to see what the prospects are for getting more medicine. While there they expect to welcome their first baby—in Union Hospital, Foochow—where surgical help is available if necessary. That would leave us in Shaowu without a doctor, so we all decided to accompany them. A month ago we were all ready to leave but the government claimed that they did not have the authority to give us a pass. We wired to Foochow and are still waiting for an answer. Because of disrupted communications, letters to Foochow now require from two to four weeks. When an answer to our telegram arrives, we will make our decision. We realize full well that if we leave Shaowu, because of government restrictions on travel of foreigners, we may never be permitted to return to our work and friends here. It is not a decision which can be made lightly.

We have been told that there is work for us in Foochow during our “refugee” period. If we leave Shaowu for that city, it will be with the hope that as soon as the situation in Shaowu becomes more stable and the international situation becomes clarified, we will return to our work in our chosen field—Shaowu.

Let me add one further word about the new government in China. In the five months under Communist control, three things have stood out. The first is the excellent morale and the idealistic spirit of the Communist army. Secondly, the new government has lived up to its promise of freedom of religion. We have gone freely about our work with a minimum of interference. Thirdly, as far as we can tell, the grafting and favoritism of the National government is gone. A willingness to sacrifice for the new government has replaced the corruption of former days. We are very much encouraged by the situation.

Finally, let me add a personal word. I sincerely hope that the U. S. government will decide to grant the new government immediate recognition. There is still in this part of China a reservoir of good will toward America among the people. Furthermore, I hope that our government will offer to give economic help in reconstruction projects if it is requested. I think such help will not be refused and will do much to foster good will between our two countries.

I have felt for some time that America made a big mistake in helping the Kuomintang government militarily. Such a policy was a radical departure from all former policy in China. Now we see the result. We are cursed by both sides. I hope the lesson has been well learned and that America will in the future, keep out of the internal politics of these people. My short acquaintance with the Chinese has convinced me that they are a most independent people and in the long run will not permit any foreign power to manage their affairs or to dictate their policies.

I was recently talking with a Chinese scholar, now a teacher in the local schools. He told me that he believed there was a good possibility of our two countries establishing friendly relations. He pointed out first the traditional good will between our two peoples. He said that the new government was leaving the door open for friendly relations in the plan to establish in the immediate future a modified capitalistic, not communistic, state. The establishment of a coalition government is also a bid for friendly relations with the non-Communist world. Finally, my friend pointed out that the new government desperately needs financial aid which only America can give.

NEWS FROM HERE AND THERE.

Mrs. Mack V. Welch, Superintendent of the Greensboro District, recently entertained the local presidents and other guests at her home near Hine's Chapel Church.

* * * *

Congratulations to the Elon women for arranging the mass meeting to hear Dr. Frank C. Laubach. Such a fine opportunity is certainly appreciated by the women of the Convention. Mrs. W. T. Scott is President of the Elon group.

CHRISTMAS PROGRAM AT WINSTON-SALEM.

Since I didn't receive much to write about from other places, I am forced to tell about my own church women.

On Friday evening, December 9, our Woman's Association held a regular monthly meeting combined with the Christmas party. The women had been instructed beforehand to bring to this meeting two things: a toy gift for our nursery, and a potted flower to sell at the meeting. The money from the sale of plants goes to help renovate the pastor's study.

Our program was "The Seeker," suggested in the Plan Book for this year. Since we held this meeting in a home, we had to change the printed program a great deal to fit into a small space. We could not use live figures for the different scenes but we secured some slides from the Convention Office and fitted them into the program at the appropriate places. The slides made the program much more interesting and they were quite lovely in the homey atmosphere. Some of the music on the printed program was unfamiliar to us, so we substituted other music and had the audience to sing some familiar carols. We used four readers, having one for each narrator, and one for the seeker. We enjoyed having some new music and some old, as the folk songs, "I Wonder as I Wander" and "When Joseph Was A-Walking" were quite new. We added a piano prelude of Christmas Carols, and this made a very good program.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE.

[A Christmas Devotional by Ella C. Trolinger, Burlington, North Carolina.]

SCRIPTURE: Isaiah 40:1-6; Luke 2:8-15; Isaiah 9:6-8.

When Christ was born in Bethlehem, God gave to the world His greatest gift—His only Son. Little did the peoples of the world know that God would show them the way of peace in the birth of a tiny baby in Bethlehem. But it is a fact in secular history that during the reign of Caesar Augustus—the life-time of Christ on Earth—there was peace.

But again wars returned to the earth, and during the 1,950 years since the shining of the Bethlehem star, there has hardly been a time when some part of the world has not known war.

In the birth of Christ God demonstrated to us His great regard for the humble and lowly—we see the lowly manger in an old barn—we hear the innkeeper say, "No room"—we see Joseph, perhaps little personality, but a heart filled with kindness, love and faith. We see the shepherds, probably unlearned, but filled with the wonder and glory of the Bethlehem star. And then the scene changes somewhat and we see the grandeur and splendor of the Wise Men as they journey from afar bringing their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh.

It was my privilege to visit the Cathedral in Cologne, Germany, and to see the three gold crowns said to be those worn by the three Wise Men. After much ado in producing heavy keys and after receiving a mark for his own pocket, the custodian unlocked a cabinet in conjunction with the altar of the church and brought out the crowns to our view. With a great sense of pride he explained that now the crowns are studded with semi-precious stones—"turquois, gar-nets, cameo and even some lapis lazuli from the United States. Once they were ornamented with diamonds, rubies and emeralds—but we sold those to pay for our wars to extend our boundaries and to further the power of the Father land." This seems to be an index to many pages of history—history filled with greed, bloodshed, fear and turmoil, desecration, confusion and then the worst example of misdirected power the world has ever known.

A crown has always been a symbol of glory, power and achievement—but I saw another crown over the high altar in Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris. This is not a symbol of glory and power, for it is the Crown of Thorns. Christ wore this crown and bore the agony of the cross to redeem all men of all nations. That is the best news man has ever heard.

As the birthday of our Lord draws near, let us then put away all jealousies and hatreds. Let us trust our fellowman because we trust God.

"And His name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

* * * *

Incidentally, the little booklet, The Family Celebrates Christmas, is excellent, not only for family Christmas, but for use in the Church School. The songs for children are quite lovely and easy to learn. I am using these songs here in Winston-Salem for our children's program for the adults on Christmas Sunday morning. Some of the poems are being used as speeches, and the suggestions for decorating are being used both at home and church. I wonder if our people are actually using these books, or do they just look at them and throw them aside. I would suggest that every family in our churches should have one, and certainly each could pay 50c for one. There is infinitely more good in them than they cost. David (my son) and I are having lots of fun making the Christmas Creche contained in this booklet. We are painting, shellacing, and arranging the figures and adding animals and scenery. The book contains many other ideas that would make for interesting occupations for the children. I hope you have one and are using it.

The truth is hard to find. Unless all of us make an about-face and become honest and forthright in our dealings with each other, the time may arrive when we won't even trust ourselves.—Earl Riney.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

The other day a little boy poked his head in my kitchen door. He drew a deep, deep breath, and then a sigh and came in. He sat down on the floor and began unbuttoning his coat. He comes to see me often and I'm not certain whether it is my company he likes, my children's, or our cookies. Perhaps it is a combination of all. He told us that his mother had never in his life (10 years) made a cookie. For that I feel very sad.

Christmas is a family time. If at no other time of the year, mothers should make cookies. If they claim not to know how—well, that is easy to fix. Just tell her to go to the store and buy a box of cookie mix. That is better than nothing. Bakery and store-bought cookies can be elegant, but one can't smell them cooking.

We don our aprons, roll up our sleeves and go to work. We have a variety of cutters and a press. I have never mastered the art of pressing cookies but the results are sometimes funny and sometimes pretty. Mrs. Shelton Smith of Durham told me that she made gingerbread men last Christmas and fashioned each one individually from a cardboard pattern. Gingerbread men are delicious!

To make Ginger Men you use:

- 1 cup molasses
- ½ cup sugar
- ¾ cup shortening
- 1 cup buttermilk (a quarter-cup of white vinegar will sour sweet milk)
- 1½ teaspoons soda
- 1 tablespoon ginger
- ½ teaspoonful salt
- A sprinkling of all spice, nutmeg or cinnamon

Just mix them altogether. The order doesn't matter and let it get very cold. Overnight in the refrigerator would be best. Then cut them out after rolling dough very thin. Bake for ten or twelve minutes at 375 degrees F. After they have been cooled, decorate with white icing, cinnamon drops, raisins or bits of cherries or citron.

These make nice gifts. If you stick a string (very clean of course) in the back of the men before baking, they may be hung from the tree.

I hope you save some for yourself and your family. After the evening meal it would be nice to read the old, old story of "The Gingerbread Man," the one who ran around saying:

*Run, run as fast as you can,
You can't catch me, I'm the gingerbread man.*

Then munch your ginger boys and drink your milk. And, if you know any girls and boys whose mothers can't make cookies—won't you let them share?

WHEN YOUR CHILDREN QUARREL.

By MABEL-RUTH JACKSON.

Issued by the National Kindergarten Association.

Mrs. Macklin had come over to lend her neighbor, Mrs. Lester, a recent magazine and had remained to chat. The two Lester children were playing quietly in the next room.

"I wish my two youngsters would be nice to each other, like yours are," Mrs. Macklin remarked somewhat enviously.

"They're not always so good," Mrs. Lester assured her. "In fact, they used to quarrel a lot. But that was partly my fault. I used to think that it was best for them to work out their difficulties by themselves since they'd need to be self-assertive and determined when they were grown; I thought that by trying to hold their own while they were young they would develop those characteristics."

"One day, Sister was shrieking, and when I went to see what was the matter she shed tears copiously; Rush just looked sulky and defiant. I was going to punish him, when suddenly I thought I'd better find out first what had happened. It seemed Sister had spoiled all the work he had done on a model airplane and he had slapped her. I couldn't really blame him; though, of course, I didn't say so. But I learned then to discount some of Sister's tears. It's easy for her to cry and she likes sympathy. Rush, on the other hand, is apt to tease and to be bossy. He had been the petted baby before Sister came and, now that he feels pushed off the throne, he often thinks he has to do something special to gain attention," she concluded, a little remorsefully.

"I know." Mrs. Macklin nodded. "I have the same problem. But I wish you'd tell me what you've done about it."

"I talked it over with Jim, and we decided that success in life depends a great deal more on being able to get along with people than on an ability to fight with them, even if, when fighting, one could be sure to win most of the time."

"Something like Dale Carnegie's theory."

"Yes," agreed Mrs. Lester, "something like that. But, in addition, that it's much easier to make friends and influence people in the right way if you've started practicing this when a child—in your own home. I watched to find out where the fault lay. I talked to Rush and tried to make him feel that because he is the elder and Sister the baby, I must depend on him.

"And now, I try hard to let them both know that I love them equally."

"Was that talk with Rush enough?" asked Mrs. Macklin, deeply interested.

"I has helped a lot. But sometimes I can't find out who was to blame for the trouble. So then I send Rush to one room and Sister to another and make them stay until they cool down."

"That's an idea," conceded Mrs. Macklin thoughtfully. "I'll have to try it."

"It's very important to keep cool yourself," cautioned her neighbor. "I don't scold them; I try to set an example in self-control. I'm learning a few lessons myself, by the way," she added, her smile a little embarrassed. "I used to go to pieces when they were quarreling so much. That didn't help one little bit."

Mrs. Macklin rose. "I know what you mean," she said ruefully. "I hope you'll enjoy this magazine."

"Oh, I shall; thank you for bringing it," answered Mrs. Lester.

"You don't need to thank me—I am taking home information that is much more valuable than any in the magazine," was the appreciative response.

ANNUAL REPORT OF NORTH CAROLINA AND VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE.

The officers of the North Carolina and Virginia Young People's Conference, who were elected last October, opened their year by meeting at Elon College on January 8, to make plans for the year. At this meeting, it was decided to have a rally in Reidsville on April 3. The details of this rally were planned at a committee meeting in February in Greensboro. In January, letters were sent to all churches to inform them of this meeting and to give suggestions for activities for Youth Week. Post cards were enclosed in this letter so that each church could send in a report of their activities for Youth Week. Letters were sent out in March to tell the people about the rally.

The rally was held on Sunday afternoon and evening with a large attendance. At this time, an offering of $34.02 was taken to help send our Southern Convention representative to an international work camp. We were one of two conferences to donate to this fund.

While attending the Young People's Conference at Elon College in June, several of our officers met with Mrs. Mark Andes to discuss plans for a summer retreat. The retreat was held the week-end of August 13-14, at Camp Betty Hastings (Winston-Salem YWCA Camp) near Walkerton, North Carolina. A fee of $2.50 was charged to cover expenses for the week-end. A total of 56 people were there for the night, with several others coming in on Sunday. The entire group attended our Winston-Salem Church on Sunday morning for worship.

In October, the president and one of the counselors, Mrs. Mark Andes, attended the Southern Convention Pilgrim Fellowship Council Meeting at Elon College. At that time, the Missionary Action Chairman for our Conference, Miss Lois Long, was appointed Social Action Chairman for the Convention to replace Bill Scott, Jr., who is away in school. Plans are now being made for an officers' meeting at which time the forthcoming rally will be discussed. Any church who would like to be host for this rally is asked to contact the president or one of the counselors (Mr. & Mrs. Mark Andes, and Mrs. W. E. Wisseman).

We received $17.00 at the beginning of the year which was left in the previous treasury. This amount, along with the $100 allotted us by the Conference has been spent for mailing expense, literature, traveling expense, week-end retreat, and other items. We appreciate the money that was allotted to us last year, and wish to be considered in this year's budget.

CYPRESS CHAPEL YOUNG PEOPLE.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Cypress Chapel are very grateful for a year of successful work under our leader, Mrs. Henry Rountree, and President Jack Byrd.

We held our monthly meetings with well planned programs and worship services.

We aided the Missionary Society with the Thank Offering program. At Thanksgiving we remembered our shut-ins with Thanksgiving baskets.

Youth Week was observed at an evening service, with Mr. V. B. Harrell, Jr., as our speaker, and the youth of the church aided in making the service a success. World Day of Prayer was observed with the Woman's Missionary Society at a public program.

We were well represented at the Fellowship meeting held at Liberty Spring.

Our society was host to Liberty Spring, Bethlehem, Oak Grove and Damascus to hear the home mission book taught. We were invited to Bethlehem to hear our foreign mission book taught by Mrs. Thomas Woodward.

As our Friendly Service Project we sent a box containing soap, tooth paste, pencils, etc., to the Rev. H. W. Case, missionary in Elbowoods, North Dakota.

We gave a Memorial to J. W. Jones, Jr.

In August, we entertained the Rutritans to raise money for our society.

We were thankful to close our year with all our goals met. With much hard work, our group is now a superior society. For the coming year our main project is to do even greater work.

BETTY BYRD,
Secretary.

FELLOWSHIP MEETS.

The officers of the Western North Carolina Conference Youth Fellowship had a meeting in Albemarle on Sunday afternoon, December 4, 1949.

The meeting was well attended. The officers planned the program for the next rally to be at Sea Grove, North Carolina, January 29, 1950.

So, be sure to look for the program in THE CHRISTIAN SUN at a later date.

STUDENT FROM CHINA ENTERS ELON COLLEGE.

Roland Yii, 30-year-old Chinese student, has just enrolled at Elon College for the winter quarter after traveling more than 12,000 miles to enter the college of his choice. His arrival at Elon this week climaxed three years of planning and efforts to reach America in pursuit of a higher education.

Yii, whose youthful appearance belies his age, speaks almost perfect English, largely because of his association with Americans while serving as an interpreter for the American Armed Forces and government groups. He was with the United States Army for 10 months in 1945 and spent one year with the American advisory group after the war.

His choice of Elon College was also made as a result of his army association, for he formed a close friendship with a young man from Portsmouth, Va., whom he contacted when he decided to come to the United States to study. That friend recommended Elon and placed an application for him there.

All that, however, was nearly three years ago, and the intervening time was spent in an effort to unravel the "red tape" and secure the necessary government permission and passport to come to America. He also used the time to earn money toward his expenses, and he had accumulated $1,400 in American money by the time of his departure. He remarks, however, that his funds had dwindled to about $600 by the time he arrived at Elon College.

His home is at Chengtu, Szechwan, China, a town and province in Southwestern China within about 200 miles of Chungking.

GOD'S MESSIAH.

LESSON XIII—DECEMBER 25, 1949.

MEMORY SELECTION: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace among men with whom he is pleased.—Luke 2:14.

LESSON: Isaiah 2:2-4; 9:1-7; 11:1-9; Jeremiah 33:14-18; Luke 2.

DEVOTIONAL READING: John 1:1-14.

Indiscourageable Optimists.

The Jews are the world's incurable and indiscourageable optimists. They believe that the best is yet to be, that the "Golden Age" lies in the future and not in the past. This faith is expressed in what is known as the "Messianic Hope." It is significant that the scriptures from which the lesson for today are taken, the passages that speak of the coming Messiah in the most glowing terms and in boldest confidence, come out of the darkest days of the life of the nation. There is one thing that is common to the historical background of all of these passages of scripture—the fact that the Jewish people were under the heel and at the mercy of powerful and ruthless tyrants, to whom they paid tribute and by whom they had been robbed of their freedom. And yet the Messianic Hope glows and shines brightly against this dark background. As one writer strikingly puts it, "The flower of the Messianic Hope blossomed in a wilderness of calamity."

The Messiah.

What do we mean by "The Messiah"? Is there any relation between the Jewish Messiah and the Christian Christ? A word of definition and explanation will help at this point. The word "Messiah" comes from a Hebrew word which means "anointed." It was the custom in those days to anoint kings and priests with oil as a part of the ceremony setting them apart as solemnly commissioned representatives of Jehovah in their special field of service. Hence the word itself eventually came to mean one specially commissioned to represent God in His dealings with men. For instance a king was referred to as "the anointed of Jehovah." In a sense the kings were "Messiahs." But these kings were human and they represented Jehovah only imperfectly, they were all more or less disappointing. There gradually grew up the idea that eventually there would come, some day, a representative of Jehovah, who would be a full and perfect representation of Jehovah. This was to be the true "Messiah," the Anointed of Jehovah.

And this Messiah in the Hebrew language is one and the same as the Christ in the Greek language. Christ and Messiah mean exactly the same thing. The one is the Greek, and the other is the Hebrew translation of the same word. It is well to keep that simple and significant fact in mind.

The Growth of the Messianic Hope.

It has been noted that at the beginning the king was the Messiah in the sense of being the "anointed of the Lord." But these kings failed to fulfil the high hopes of one who should represent Jehovah satisfactorily. Furthermore in due time the nation came under the domination of foreign and evil powers, and in time ceased to be a nation. At first the Messiah was to be an earthly king who would defeat the enemies of Israel, establish Jerusalem again as the capital of the nation, and inaugurate an era of peace and prosperity. As the fortunes of Israel waned more and more, the Messianic Hope took on a new aspect, an aspect which is known in theological language as an apocalyptic element. The Messiah was to be a supernatural being, a heavenly king who would come down and establish peace after victory over the enemies of the Hebrew nation. The darker the national picture the more brilliant the Messianic Hope, and as a rule the more fantastic.

The Messianic Character And Rule.

In the language of today's lesson the prophets were describing in picturesque language the character and the rule of the Messiah. Strength, wisdom, understanding, authority, ability to rule wisely and well, and at the same time tenderness, compassion, equity, mercy were attributes of his character as the Messiah. He would govern the nations of the world, but Jerusalem would be the center of the religious life of the nations. The Messiah was to be a Person—He emerges as this out of the evolutionary thinking of the prophets. In recent lessons we learned how the idea of the Messiah evolved from the idea of the nation as a whole, through a part of the nation, and then as an individual and he as a servant and of all things as a suffering servant—this was the expectation of the people, this was the culmination of the Messianic Hope.

The Messianic Hope Fulfilled.

Christmas is the fulfilment of the Messianic Hope. The Babe of Bethlehem was God's Anointed, God's Messiah, God's Christ. This is the heart of the Christian faith. All the prophecies concerning the righteous character and rule of the Messiah were fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth who was born the Babe of Bethlehem. When Peter said at Caesarea Philippi, "Thou art the Christ (The Messiah) the Son of the living God," he was stating that which millions of Christian believers accept as basic in their beliefs. When John the Baptist asked, "Art thou he that should come (these words mean literally 'The Messiah') Jesus made it plain that they need look for no other—he was the Messiah. Both privately and publicly Jesus announced the fact that he was the Messiah, God's Anointed.

But he was so different from what the Jews expected. They just could not think of the Messiah in such humble guise, and above all else as allowing himself to be nailed to a Cross. They thought Jesus was a blasphemer in claiming to be the Messiah. They received him not as such. They still look for the Messiah. The look in vain—the Messiah has come. Jesus is the Christ, the Messiah, God's Anointed.

MRS. REIDELL DIES AT HOLLAND.

Mrs. Margaret Elizabeth Reidell, 81, died Saturday morning at her home in Holland, Virginia, after a long illness.

Survivors include her husband, R. H. Reidell of Holland; a son, E. R. Reidell of Emporia, Virginia; six grandchildren and six great grandchildren; two sisters, Mrs. E. Duke of Ivor and Mrs. Lula Jones of Suffolk; several nieces and nephews.

Funeral services were held Monday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock at the Holland Christian Church with Dr. W. B. O'Neill and Dr. I. W. Johnson as the officiating ministers. Burial followed in the Holland Cemetery.

REPORT OF HISTORIAN, N. C. & VA. CONFERENCE.

ing a history of each individual church in the Southern Christian Convention to be placed with those already there. Being the Historian of both the North Carolina and Virginia Conference and of the Southern Convention, I decided to take the lead in attempting this. I began with this conference and have secured a history of about twenty-five per cent of our forty-seven churches.

Mr. MacClenny has donated to the Church History room some important history relative to this conference. I hoped to give this session of conference the benefit of these records and went to Elon with this in view, but was not able to gain access to the library, as school was closed on that day.

In conclusion I shall give briefly such facts as I was able to secure concerning the work of the past year among our churches.

Asheville has made important improvements to her church property. The interior and exterior of the house of worship has been painted and a new memorial altar installed and dedicated.

Belew Creek and Salem Chapel now constitute a pastorate with Rev. Allen Hurdle giving his full time to the work of these two churches. Mr. Hurdle and family are comfortably situated in the attractive parsonage, located at Belew Creek.

Carolina has installed a central heating system, and plans are being made for new Sunday school classrooms in the basement.

Danville has completed a new educational building costing $30,000.00. This church had its beginning in 1914 in a two-room public school building on Third Avenue. Through the years there has been a splendid growth both in numbers and influence. It is now an institutional church with buildings and equipment valued at $75,000.00. The annual financial outlay is about $40,000.00. At home and abroad there are about one hundred and fifty persons looking to this church for support.

Faith Home, Incorporated, was founded by this church in 1937, and has a staff of seven workers and property valued at $30,000.00. The annual budget for the support of this home is $10,000. Thirty children are cared for regularly and each year fifty children are placed into permanent homes.

Gibsonville plans to build a new auditorium. The work there is moving forward.

Palm Street (Greensboro) has purchased additional land joining the present church property and about February 1, 1950, plan to begin the construction of a modern plant with auditorium and additional equipment to meet every need in modern progressive church work.

First Church, Greensboro in 1947 voted to set up a steering committee to study ways and means of securing a new church building. In May, 1948, the church authorized its board of trustees to purchase seven lots between East and West Radiance Drive in the sub-division known as Roseway. These lots were purchased and a planning committee was set up to prepare plans for the new church. The estimated cost of building and equipment is $160,000.00. This church has had an increasing building fund for a number of years. In September it was announced that $54,000.00 additional was needed to carry out plans for the new church. A canvass was made resulting in cash and subscription of nearly $60,000.00.

Progress is being made on the new building at Bethlehem where over $44,000.00 has been spent in the construction of this modern church plant. There are seventeen rooms in the Sunday school building. Kitchen and small assembly room in the basement. Over $600.00 has been spent on the grounds in grading and laying off driveways and parking spaces. Grounds will be seeded and driveways graded. When completed there will be a central heating system and running water. The seating capacity of the main auditorium will be six hundred.

Burlington has purchased a beautiful parsonage with spacious grounds in one of the most desirable residential portions of the city. This church plans to erect a modern educational building at some time in the not-so-distant future.

Elk Spur and Rocky Ford of our Carroll County work have painted their parsonage both interior and exterior. Rocky Ford people have painted their house of worship. Rev. James Madren, a ministerial student in Elon College, served as summer pastor for these churches and it was under his leadership that most of the improvements were made.

Tryon (Erskine Memorial) has completed a new educational building at a cost of more than $35,000.00.

Union (N. C.) plans a new building which will be modern in construction throughout.

Zion, organized last year and admitted to this conference, is now constructing the first unit of its building. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, the pastor, is to be commended for the manner that he has led this newly organized band to do things. Walls of the first floor are nearing completion. Door frames and a part of the window frames are in place and the windows are purchased. All bills have been paid to date, but money is needed to complete the building. Services are being held regularly in a private home.

Durham is now in the midst of a building fund campaign for a Christian educational building. The estimated cost of this is $50,000.00—$30,000.00 of this amount is in the church treasury. Work will begin on the proposed building at an early date.

Elon College Community Church has erected a parish house by purchasing in January, 1948, an Army Chapel from the Government. This building was located at Camp Davis near Wilmington, North Carolina. It was dismantled and moved to the church lot adjoining the parsonage at Elon College.

The exterior of the building was not altered, but the interior was arranged to serve the local needs. The building is forty by eighty feet, has an assembly room and will seat two hundred and fifty people for worship or for assembly. There are seven other rooms, including a modernly equipped kitchen with china and seating capacity for feeding one hundred and fifty people. A nursery is provided for small children, a small church parlor, a room for scouts and other rooms for Sunday school purposes.

This project has added new life and interest to the entire church and community. The building and equipment represents an investment of $15,000. Other work to be done will increase the entire cost to $16,000. This is the first church building in the history of the community. Religious services, worship and exercises, have been held in the College Chapel.

New Lebanon has in the course of construction a brick veneered building with auditorium and seven Sunday school classrooms to cost $30,000. The work will be completed in 1950. This project when completed will be a credit to the membership, the community and a valuable addition to the church property of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference.

The Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

I wish you knew these boys and girls. I wish you knew them everyone. I wish you could have seen a 16-year-old yesterday spending the long, hard day in a clinic where her roommate was coming out from under ether after an operation. She was but a school girl, and mostly full of laughter which often was but a mere giggle, but yesterday she was all business. The way she dampened her patient-friend's face, smoothed the covers, adjusted the sputum pan, talked quietly to her, held her at times by main force, and kept right on the job all day long. You would have stood in amazement at her resourcefulness and competence. "Helen, you are a real nurse and a brave fine girl," I said to her. "She is such a good patient, and I have only tried to do exactly as the nurse told me to do." "Hasn't the day been long?" I asked. "Not too long, and it has been such fun."

The other day a little fellow stood in my office. "My clinker iron has gone to pieces, and I must have another before the furnace fills with clinkers and I have trouble." "What furnace? Where, young fellow?" I asked. "The furnace that is keeping this building warm," he said. Well, there he was wheeling coal in a wheelbarrow as big as his 12-year-old self, and shoveling it into the hopper, just like a man. How bright and keen he was. How well he knew his job! How fine his service. I wanted to hug him, but you can't hug a man as big as that!

Three fine young fellows stood before me at the desk a few days ago to get me to sign an "excuse" for their day's absence from high school. And why were they absent? By everybody laying-to good and steady the day before Thanksgiving every last ear of corn that could be brought in from the fields. Their hands were rough, but their faces and spirits were something shining, shining like men unafraid of work, and glad to have a great job well done.

Yes, I could fill my column with many stories of real faithful service which these boys and girls render. It seems perfectly marvelous to me. The other staff members are not surprised for they know how very excellent these lads and lassies are. Are you going to fail them? No, you must not. Help them achieve the manhood and the womanhood to which they are entitled. Let your heart speak to you, and send us the funds which are so greatly needed to reach our goal. Look at the final total today at the foot of the attached report and see how much it lacks of being $50,000.00, and then say a prayer for every child here and make a Christmas or Thanksgiving donation now. Maybe you cannot give much, or maybe you can give more than you realize but whatever you give will help make good fortune overcome misfortune in the lives of these brave, fine children.

And do remember this worthy institution in your wills. Just this week we received $100.00 which comes to us from a bequest.

JOHN G. TRUITT,
Superintendent.

LETTER FROM THE JACKSONS.

It is my fervent hope that my native country will do all in its power to go the second mile, in furthering mutual understanding and cooperation between the Chinese and ourselves. I heard it said recently that if America abandons China now, it will serve to throw her into the lap of the Soviet Union. Therefore, for our own good as well as for "good neighbor" reasons, recognition and economic assistance should immediately be forthcoming. Such is the hope of

REV. J. S. CARDEN.

My first knowledge of Brother Carden was in July of 1910. He came to our church (Pleasant Ridge, Guilford County) with Rev. S. B. Clapp to assist him in a series of revival services. Brother Carden did the preaching through the week and made a favorable impression upon the entire community. Brother Clapp was giving up the work there that fall, and the church extended a call to Brother Carden, which he readily accepted and served the church acceptably for some seven years, without a break. As I look back over the years now, I think I can truthfully say, those were the most prosperous years of my knowledge of the church. While
Mr. Carden was a good preacher, presenting his message in plain and understandable language, yet it was not his preaching that impressed me most.
It was his life, as a man, gentle, considerate and friendly to every one he met.

Those days were days when no one traveled by auto—all traveling was done by horse and buggy, or horse and wagon. When preaching day came around, some one had the pleasure to meet him either at Friendship
R. R. Station, or Summerfield, and carry him to their house for the night and see him to church on Sunday.
It was a standing custom of my father—if he did not meet him at the railroad station to be the first on the grounds and when Brother Carden arrived to put in a bid for him to go to our house for dinner, and to spend the night, and these visits gave me my impression of Brother Carden.

Usually several of our neighbors would come over and far into the night a lively and interesting conversation was carried on, which was both interesting and inspiring. When the crowd would subside, Brother Carden would lead in our family worship. He would always start at the head of the family and call all our names in his prayer. This made an impression I have never forgotten, which no doubt resulted in the entering of the ministry of my brother, H. E., and myself. As it was under his preaching that both of us professed faith in Christ and united with the church.

Throughout all these years Brother Carden was minister No. 1 to our family. He was a good man, a hard worker, who preached all his years and never received a living wage. I recall Brother Charlie Rowland having said of Brother Carden on one occasion, "Here was goodness at its best."

G. C. CRUTCHFIELD.

THE TALE OF THE GOBLET.

The tale of the goblet, which the genius of a heathen fashioned, was true; and taught a moral of which many a death-bed furnishes the melancholy illustration. Having made a model of a serpent, he fixed it in the bottom of a cup. Coiled for the spring, a pair of gleaming eyes in its head, and in its open mouth fangs raised to strike, it lay beneath the ruby wine. Nor did he who raised that golden cup to quench his thirst, and quaff the delicious draught, suspect what lay below, till, as he reached the dregs, that dreadful head rose up and glistened before his eyes. So, when life's cup is nearly emptied, and sin's last pleaser quaffed, and unwilling lips are draining the bitter dregs, shall rise the ghastly terrors of remorse and death and judgment, upon the despairing soul. Be assured, a serpent lurks at the bottom of guilt's sweetest pleasure. To this awful truth may God, by his Word and Holy Spirit, open your eyes!—T. Guthrie.

We hope at the next session of con-

Greetings from Southern Synod, Evangelical and Reformed Church

By REV. LONNIE A. CARPENTER, President

It is a great joy for me to be able to bring greetings to the pastors and members of The Southern Convention of the Congregational Christian Churches. I speak not only for myself but for the pastors and members of all the Evangelical and Reformed Churches of Southern Synod, for I am certain that they would want me to do so.

Many months have passed since we first began talking about a possible merger of our two great churches, but as these months have rolled by we of the Evangelical and Reformed Church have had an opportunity to learn to know you of the Congregational Christian Churches and we have learned to love you. We are anxiously looking forward to the day when we will truly be The United Church of Christ. Out of our two Communion will come this one great church, moving forward as a mighty army to do the will and work of our Master and His Kingdom.

Several weeks ago the Synodical Council of our Church met with the Executive Committee of your Southern Convention at Elon College. The discussions and experiences that we shared together at this fine meeting were indicative of the splendid Christian spirit which you people of the C. C. Churches here in the South have manifest throughout the merger proceedings. We of the Southern Synod left Elon College on that day feeling that it was good to have been there. The true spirit of our Lord was exemplified in every thing said and done on this occasion.

The sending of your splendid church paper, The Christian Sun, to the ministers of our Synod has been greatly appreciated. It has given us an opportunity to read of the progress you are making in your churches, and helps us to know you more intimately. We have reciprocated and are sending our synodical paper, The Standard, to the ministers of your fellowship. We hope through it they may learn to know us just a bit better.

Again, let me say, that is a real joy to say "GREETINGS" to you of the Congregational Christian Fellowship on behalf of myself, our ministers and people. We pray that the Spirit may continue to work through us so that soon we will be able to say, "We are The United Church of Christ." I am certain that in that glad hour the Master and Lord of us all will say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servants."

NUMBER 50

The United Evangelistic Advance For Jesus Christ and His Church

In THE SOUTHERN CONVENTION OF CONGREGATIONAL CHRISTIAN CHURCHES

To our Churches, their Pastors, Laymen, Lay Women, and Youth:
Greetings in Jesus Christ:

Our Testimony and Commitment

In testimony of our devotion to Jesus Christ, our Lord and Savior, and as an acknowledgement of the fulfillment of the promise of the Holy Spirit to us, we beseech you to join in covenant with God through Christ, and with one another . . .

1. To enter into and to promote the UNITED EVANGELISTIC ADVANCE in every Church of the Convention from January 1 to December 31, 1950.
2. To seek to bring men and women, boys and girls to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, and to the commitment of their lives to His service.
3. To consolidate the force of these decisions for Christ by enlisting them into the membership of His Church; and to this end seek a membership gain of at least 10 per cent in each local Church.
4. To practice and promote regular attendance at Church and Sunday School services for worship, spiritual enrichment and study; and the daily practice of private and family devotions.
5. To give ourselves individually and collectively to achieve these high objectives, and to enlist every Pastor, Layman, Woman, and Youth of our church in this EVANGELISTIC ADVANCE.

Yours for Christ and His Church,

ROBERT A. WHITTEN, Chairman
Southern Convention Evangelism Committee

GEORGE D. COLCLOUGH, Chairman
The Laymen's Fellowship

News Flashes

Rev. Earl Farrell is the new Chaplain of the Cypress Ruritan Club, near Suffolk, Virginia.

There will be no paper issued next week. Meantime the publication force wish for each reader a Happy Christmas and a Prosperous New Year.

Elon College still needs contributions for its gymnasium building program. Why not make Dr. Smith happy by sending the college a Christmas gift for this fund?

The evening service at our Richmond Church last Sunday featured the church orchestra in a concert of pre-Christmas music. Dr. Helfenstein spoke briefly, but most interestingly, using as his subject, "My Visit to Bethlehem."

JOY TO THE WORLD.

By WILLIAM R. CATTON.

That your joy might be full."

—JOHN 15:11.

There are many things to occasion our rejoicing. The reunion with family or friends at Christmas time, giving and receiving gifts, abundant health, worthy work to do and strength with which to do it, valor and fidelity in the face of adversity, patience and perseverance in defeat, courage to encounter all the ills of life and still to greet the unseen with a cheer. One or another of these has given or will give joy to all of us.

We are friendly, we are honest, we are brave—and we are joyful. Material abundance may add its measure of satisfaction, but the deeper joy of life is built on character, and on faith.

Profoundest of all the reasons for our joy we hear in song on Christmas Day, "Joy to the world, the Lord is come." If God be for us, who can be against us! The birth of this child in Bethlehem, and his becoming all he did become, is our assurance of the love of God. For God sent his son that the world through him might be saved. Here, indeed, is reason for joy.

Let us wish for one another a joyful Christmas. Whether on the surface it is merry and gay, or a quiet and a solemn day, may it be truly a day of deep and abiding joy. Rejoice and be exceeding glad, for the promises of God, confirmed in Jesus Christ, are this day renewed, and they are altogether sufficient for our faith.

SANFORD ACCEPTS CHALLENGE.

A new educational building involving more expense for fuel, lights, insurance and janitor service together with an increase for pastor's salary and benevolences caused our congregation to face the absolute necessity of increasing the budget to almost double. When the total amount of the budget was considered and compared with the membership (which is small) the task seemed impossible. The finance committee gave much thought to the matter and discussed ways and means and hoped to find a method that would work successfully. Their final decision was to have a Stewardship Institute. Although a bit skeptical of the Institute, it seemed the best "risk" of any of the plans or schemes considered. Dr. Jesse H. Dollar of the Elon Community Church was secured to conduct the Institute which proceeded as follows:

On Sunday night, November 27, a film, "And Now I See," was shown to the entire congregation. After this, Dr. Dollar met with members of the finance committee to counsel and advise them. Young people were especially invited to attend as students pledging themselves to attend all sessions and to assist in the canvass.

Three study classes were conducted by Dr. Dollar beginning on Wednesday and continuing through Friday night. Sunday, December 4, was chosen as Loyalty Sunday. The service was conducted by our pastor-elect, Dr. Will B. O'Neill, with Dr. Dollar preaching the sermon. Pledges were made and envelopes given to the people as they left the church. The results of the pledging at the end of the service were amazing.

In the afternoon the workers returned for final instructions and a prayer of consecration by Dr. Dollar. The canvasser went to call on those who did not attend the service. Total pledges amounted to two and one-half times the total income for the church the previous year.

How do we feel now? One said, "It was as if our church had a re-

SOUTHERN CONVENTION EVANGELISTIC ADVANCE

Plan of Action

A Call to Prayer and Commitment in each Church and Sunday School on Sundays, December 25, 1949 and January 1, 1950, to lay the high purposes of the UNITED EVANGELISTIC ADVANCE upon the hearts, minds and wills of all our people as our primary objective during the year of 1950.

An enlistment in each Church of lay people personal workers, and their participation in training for the important work of personal evangelism.

Conference-wide area training and inspirational meetings of committee personal workers.

Each local Church locate and list the names of prospective Church members in the community or parish.

Period of cultivation and commitment of prospects . . .

- (a) Through "Two by Two" personal witness and visitation.
- (b) Through Pastors' Classes and other Study Groups.
- (c) Through special services, appropriate literature, and decision days.

Special Services of Ingathering into Church Membership at Evangelistic Services, Easter, on Children's Day, at Youth Conferences, on World-Wide Communion Sunday, Thanksgiving, and at other regular intervals during year.

Strengthening the Members of the Household of Faith . . . Each Church and Pastor is called upon to assist each new member received into the Church to find his useful place in the Church; to discover and offer opportunities for service in the program of the Church as a means of Christian growth; to encourage non-resident and inactive members to re-enlist themselves actively in their own or some sister Church.

CHRISTMAS EVE IN BETHLEHEM.

By GLORIA M. WYSNER, Assoc. Sec'y,
Foreign Missions Conference.

Christmas Eve I went to Bethlehem. It had always been my dream to spend a Christmas Eve there. With a Swedish Missionary friend we went to the Damascus gate where we took a delapidated taxi and asked the driver to take us to the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem. We had covered about three quarters of the distance from Jerusalem to Bethlehem when we ran into the worst traffic jam I have ever been in. There were jeeps, others were several Jews who had come from one of the large concentration camps, sent by their fellow Jews to see what the Christians do in Bethlehem on Christmas Eve. They were there because they were curious and so was I. Many of the folks were far from home and were lonely and needed a Friend. I was far from home and lonely and I, too, needed a Friend. Some were there who had recently lost loved ones, whose hearts were broken, and who needed a Comforter. Such an experience had been mine only a few days before, and I, too, needed a Comforter. We met a

THE CHRISTMAS MESSAGE

By REV. C. REXFORD RAYMOND, D. D.
Pastor, Circular Congregational Church, Charleston, S. C.

The Angel Song of Christmas and the Star
Proclaim that love abides, the greatest gift
Of God. For love endures all things, is far Above self-seeking, patient, kind and swift
To see the good that lives in other folk;
Rejoices in the right, seeks not her own,
Not arrogant or rude, does not provoke
Discord, nor plans to live for self alone.

Love makes the home a refuge from the storm
And jealous strife that otherwise might rule
The warring lives of men. Love can reform
The world and usher in the joy of Yule.
For homes alit by love become earth's leaven,
The foregleam of eternal peace in heaven.

ambulances, private cars, busses and four-wheel vehicles of every description trying to make their way to and from Bethlehem on the narrow road. For an hour we waited, unable to move. Finally, my friend suggested that we walk. I shall always be thankful that we walked to Bethlehem that night. Instead of being whirled up to the door of the Church of the Nativity in true American style, we made our way up the winding narrow streets of Bethlehem. Children thrust their heads out the doors and windows to see the crowd. Passing some of the houses one heard the donkey bray and saw the camel beside the door resting from his travels of the day. Arab merchants were on the street selling sweets. We mingled with the crowd. Young men and women in the uniforms of many nations were there. Some spoke strange tongues.
Men and women of all races mingled in Bethlehem that night. Among Moslem doctor who had sat next to me at dinner about three hours earlier. To him Jesus was a Prophet. To me He was the Christ. All on the streets of Bethlehem that night had

Our Principles.

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

CHRISTMAS AROUND THE WORLD

This is no mere romantic idea. It is realism; not stark realism, but glorious realism. On wings of prayer, preaching, stewardship, and missionary endeavor, the gospel has gained advent into all representative nations and cultures of the world. The angel song which echoed throughout the Judean hills has echoed around the world.

In far too many instances the record of the Christian religion may be written in the familiar words, "Too little, too late." But we may give thanks to God that from generation to generation there have been those who have responded to the Call of Christ, that multiplied sacrifices have been made.

"And the angel said, Fear not; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." That prophecy, its continued and expanding fulfillment brings to fruition innumerable hopes. "To all people," mind you. A true Christmas cannot be a selfish one. "All people" have a claim on the blessings which stem from Christ.

As an illustration of the ever widening influence of the gospel, here is the announcement that a contract has been signed with Radio Luxembourg in Europe which will permit Dr. Hyman J. Appleman to preach, by transcription, an evangelistic Gospel message for one-half hour each Thursday night, from 11:00 to 11:30, beginning in February. This tremendously powerful 200,000 watt radio station, which covers eighty-two per cent of the great continent of Europe, or a population of approximately 34,000,000 potential listeners, will carry Dr. Appleman's voice behind the Iron Curtain of Russia with a message of hope to his own people. While this Gospel program is to be presented in English, plans are already under way to contract for another period of broadcasting over this same station during which Dr. Appleman will preach in the Russian, the German, or the Yiddish language.

Arrangements are also being made to broadcast fifteen-minute Gospel programs featuring Dr. Appleman over station H-C-J-B in Quito, Ecuador, well known as "The Voice of the Andes." This radio station, located 10,000 feet high in the Andes Mountains of Ecuador, provides a world-wide radio voice to short-wave listening audiences numbering nearly 300,000,000.

When the Prince of Peace was born, the song of "peace on earth, goodwill toward men" was heard in the fields about Bethlehem. No one had a monopoly on the first Christmas. It is our confidence that the message, the spirit and the fruits of Christmas will extend far and wide throughout our world during this blessed season. There is a great joy in having some small part in this significant achievement.

TESTIMONY FROM TOKYO

Early in October, 1,300 Japanese pastors of the Kyodan, the united Church of Christ in Japan, gathered in Tokyo for a meeting to commemorate the 90th anniversary of the opening of Protestant work in Japan. Reports indicate it was a good meeting. Before it concluded, a resolution was passed which will be of interest to American Christians generally. It was adopted by unanimous vote, as follows:

"Remembering the generosity of the churches in America in assisting our Kyodan in the post-war period by providing us various Spiritual and Material necessities and especially by arranging to encourage us with good gifts of food, clothing and, even more, with scholarships for our children;

"Moreover, learning now that they have generously contributed a substantial sum toward the expenses of this great gathering which enabled us to get together on this historic occasion, the first time since the war;

"Hereby we wish to express our deepest gratitude and hearty appreciation to the Churches in America for their gracious Christian friendship shown to us and request the Council of Cooperation and the Interboard Committee to convey our message with Christian greetings to their constituencies."

Guest Editorial: Tarheelia as a State of Writing

In Mayflower Cup competition this year 47 books by residents of North Carolina were entered and judged. It may be worth while to analyze and evaluate Tarheelia's 1949 literary crop.

In the first place it was a big one, twice as big as last year's. Of the 47 books, 12 were fiction and 35 non-fiction. It was and always has been difficult, if not impossible, for the judges to make an award they could be satisfied was correct in a competition covering both of these vast fields of literature. Which is better, a book of poems or a volume of history, chalk or cheese, ham or nylons? Who can say? It is good to hear that plans are being considered by the Mayflower Society to have the competition divided into the two categories.

In fiction this year the level was good. There were skillfully written romances, e. g., Katherine Newlin Burt's "Still Water" and James Street's and James Childer's "Tomorrow We Reap." There were two historical novels, Chalmers G. Davidson's "Cloud Over Catawba," and Legette Blythe's "Bold Galilean." Robert K. Marshall's "Little Squire Jim" relied on folklore in the Mt. Airy-Hanging Rock area. Carl (Continued on page 15.)

AN EXPECTANT CHRISTMAS.

(PSALM 62.)

A Sermon

By REV. EDWARD J. VORBA,
First Congregational Church,
Bradford, Vermont.

The sense of expectation is a vital part of the Advent and Christmas season. Perhaps the anticipation of things to come is never so high in any other time of the Christian year to many people.

An expectant Christmas is written large in the Gospel records. It is Luke who tells us most about this Christmas time, and the earnest look forward is in every line. That Gospel opens with the coming of two new lives into the world. What joy and wonder about the future can come at such a time! A new life—new possibilities—everything yet to happen! Oh, what thrills run through the stories of the angel's announcement to Zechariah about the approaching birth to his wife Elizabeth of a son to be called John the Baptist. Then the glory of the coming of the angel Gabriel to Nazareth and his speaking to Mary of the coming of a son to her and her husband Joseph.

Then what vibrant lines of expectation there follow as Mary journeys to Judah to visit her cousin Elizabeth. Some of the most joyous verse and music in all the world have come from Mary's lips in "The Magnificent":

My soul magnifies the Lord, and my soul rejoices in God my Savior!

And then when John is born, Zechariah sings of the future:

... the day shall dawn upon us on high to give light to those who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death.

Then the crescendo of expectancy as the Christmas story proceeds in Luke's Gospel. It is a glorious fact there on the plains of Palestine as the angels surround the shepherds and sing:

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men with whom He is well pleased!

It is in antiphony to those magnificent words uttered so long before by Isaiah:

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The Might God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace.

Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice, from henceforth even for ever.

May that joyous note of expectancy mark our celebrations of this Advent and Christmas season this year. As we hear words coming to us from our God as He does reveal Himself in His Son, may we say with the Psalmist:

My soul wait thou in silence for God only; for my expectation is from Him.

Yea, while we watch on these plains of earthly darkness as did the shepherds of long ago, may the angels of Christmas come once again. And may our hearts be filled with high expectation at the coming of our Lord.

There is nothing that I can think of that is more needed now than this feeling of expectancy. For the future today is something to be feared. It is to be dreaded and to be quaked at.

Oh, what a change I have seen in this past year and a half. I came back from Europe filled with a vital understanding of the world situation first hand contact. I could envision the task for all of us ahead. On the Britannic as I returned to these shores I thought of my forefathers as they had come over those same waters a full century before. They had a mission! So did I in this modern age!

Then the minute my feet touched the streets of New York I felt things beginning to change. I had been out of touch for a whole year and knew only the scars of war and the needs of despairing people. I had forgotten about the greed and indifference there can be in Americans. I was unprepared to find the same fear of the future I had felt in Europe. One moment on that summer morning the Statue of Liberty and all she means! Then the fear and mistrust of our real America!

So that realization has deepened since. I know what the Psalmist meant by saying we can be "bowing walls and tottering fences." We are paralyzed by the fear of another war. We cringe with the thought of another depression. We tremble and take it all for granted. And I understand now more than I did a year ago my contention that I would prefer war to a depression. It is a low state of affairs when one is forced to make such a choice!

But there it is. It is a very real part of our daily life. We eat it. We sleep it. And we are beginning to say what Pope did in his "Letter to Gay"—"Blessed is he who expects nothing, for he shall never be disappointed."

Oh, into the gloom and resignation of our time must break the expectancy of our Christianity as it reaches a climax in this Christmas time. The stars must shine again for us! That One Star must lead us once again! The heavenly angels must sing again, and we must journey to Bethlehem once more!

This is no easy or shallow expectancy God is bidding us to at the advent of His Son. He summons us to it right in the middle of this dark night. Congreve knew what he was talking about when he said, "Uncertainty and expectation are the joys of life." They are linked even now.

We have believed that progress was inevitable. We thought that we and the world were getting better all the time. Then came the war to shatter all that. Now we live in disappointment. We are beginning to feel that man is but a puppet in the hands of Fate. We turn once again to belief in economic laws and cycles.

Our Christian expectancy must disperse such disillusionment and ride rough shod over such lack of faith. And it can, for it is rooted in divine things. It is the certainty that God is working within history. It is the assurance that He labors with us for good. It is the knowledge that our partnership in obedience to Him can and will triumph over evil. It is the hope that lives and nations will be made "a highway for our God." It is expectancy based upon the joy and hope—the "Christian-ness" of this Christmastide.

Sir William MacGregor, whose unflagging zeal for humanity in many parts of the globe has done so much for the cause of Christianity, once discussed with me the relatively rapid progress of Mohammedanism in West Africa as compared with that of Christianity. "It's just this," he said, "every Mohammedan regards himself as a missionary; the majority of Christians think it is another man's work."—Bishop Frodsham.

STATEMENT ON
"THE CHURCHES AND AMERICAN POLICY IN THE FAR EAST"

The advance of Communism in the Far East, signaled by the proclamation on October 1, 1949, of the "People's Republic of China," is a matter of deep concern to the American people. Despite developments deemed to be inimical to our cherished democratic ideals, it remains within the power of the United States to help shape the destiny of the 1,200,000,000 people of Asia.

This is true because the record of our nation, in the main, has been one of sincere friendship for the peoples of the Far East. The right of the Chinese people to develop their political institutions without interference from without has long been a cardinal principle of American policy. For fifty years our Government has opposed efforts to establish "spheres of influence" in China. The "Open Door" and related policies encouraged the Chinese people to resist encroachment upon their sovereign rights. In opposing Japan's Twenty-One Demands, the United States championed the territorial integrity of China. In remitting to the Chinese Government the larger part of the Boxer indemnity payments, our country sought to build a bridge of understanding between East and West. Our nation has stood before the world as the advocate of political freedom for subject peoples. In pursuance of this policy the Philippine Islands achieved their independence. Influential voices in America have been lifted in support of human rights in Asia. The traditional American mood, respecting the peoples of Asia, has been one of opposition to economic slavery, political tutelage, and dictatorship of the few over the many.

Despite this record of American friendship for the peoples of the Far East, the ideological clash and power struggle which today engulf the world have adversely affected the moral position of our nation in Asia. This has been due, in part, to the spreading of hostile propaganda and, in part, to the seeming inability of our nation to formulate a policy related to the realities of the revolutionary era emerging in Asia.

We believe that the time has come for the United States unequivocally to restate its concern for those Asiatic peoples who today are struggling for higher standards of living and for equal rights within the world community.

We believe our churches would welcome a bold proclamation of policy by the President of the United States, delivered before a joint session of the Congress, the purpose of which would be to encourage the peoples of Asia to believe that the best way to achieve their awakened desires is not civil war and revolution with their dangers of a permanent totalitarianism, but an orderly and progressive march toward the goal of a free and democratic Asia.

We believe the further advance of Communism in China and Asia cannot permanently be stopped by military action. Such military assistance as the United States placed at the disposal of the Chinese Nationalists proved unavailing. The reasons for this are many, but among these reasons is the fact that the civil war in China is not only a test of arms, it is also, in part, a social and political convulsion of revolutionary proportions. Similarly, the thrust of Communism in other parts of Asia is only in part a military operation; in other and more important respects it has taken advantage of a mass protest against grinding poverty, economic injustice, social maladjustment, and political subservience to the West. Accordingly, neither the creation of a Pacific military alliance, nor the granting of military assistance by the United States to the non-communist forces of the Far East, would alone suffice to establish in that area the conditions of a just and durable peace.

Nor do we believe that the challenge to the West deriving from the revolutionary upsurge of Asia's millions can be met by the hasty improvisation of national policy designed to counter the spread of Communism first in one country, then in another. It is a matter genuinely to be deplored that the United States, with its democratic traditions and its long established commitment to freedom for subject and dependent people's, has become aligned in popular world opinion with the maintenance of the status quo rather than with the forces making for a new Asia. This has been due, in part, to the confusion in the public mind regarding the developing crisis in Asia. The fear that Russia might control Asia must not tempt us into a reliance upon military strategy when it is obvious that Communist influence cannot be arrested apart from a general effort to further the economic betterment and growing independence of the Asiatic peoples. The real issue is whether or not our government is prepared to advance the greater welfare of the peoples of Asia, with higher standards of living, and with cultural, social, and political institutions which will accord with the free choice of the peoples directly concerned.

We believe the United States should proclaim its purpose to work for an early peace settlement with Japan. It should be possible to negotiate a peace settlement with Japan, the effect of which would be to establish a mutuality of interests between that country and her neighbors and with the West. The creation in Japan of a free state, under conditions which would safeguard the rights and ensure the dignities of her people and which would accelerate the processes of economic and moral recovery, could be a powerful stimulus in the evolution of a democratic Asia.

We believe the United States, in cooperation with the United Nations, should labor incessantly for the observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms for the peoples of Asia. The status of inferiority thus far imposed upon these people by the West is coming to an end. Since the War India, Pakistan, the Philippine Islands, Burma, Ceylon, have acquired their independence. The United States of Indonesia is in the process of formation. This rapid succession of peoples toward political freedom heralds the dawn of a new era in the Far East. The International Trusteeship System of the United Nations provides opportunity for the United States and other member nations to advance the economic, social and educational progress of the peoples of the Trust Territories and to develop self-government. The United States, which has entered into a trust agreement respecting the former Japanese Mandated Islands and which is the sole power occupying Okinawa, has it within its power to provide a living demonstration of its purpose to respect the rights and to promote the well-being of the inhabitants of these areas. Support for and participation in the activities of the Trusteeship Council should be regarded by the United States as a priority of the highest importance.

We believe the United States, as an earnest of its purpose to respect the rights and freedoms and dignities of Asiatic peoples, should complete the process of amending its immigration and naturalization laws so that, within the quota system, all discrimina-

News of Elon College

By PRESIDENT L. E. SMITE

HE IS FROM EVERLASTING TO EVERLASTING.

With prophetic vision, the prophet, Isaiah, looked out over the hills of time and saw the day of the coming of the Lord. The prophet declared that the people who walked in darkness would see a light which would mean good government for His people, order and peace for the world.

The Shepherds keeping watch over their flocks on the stony slopes of Bethlehem heard the songs of angels announcing the Savior's birth. They abandoned their sheep and hastened to the manger, beheld the mother and child and went forth to spread the good news that the one whose name was called Jesus had come to save His people from their sins.

The Wise Men saw His glory reflected in the skies and guided by the light of the star came to Bethlehem. They, too, found the young child, Jesus. They opened their eyes and beheld Him. They opened their hearts and worshipped Him. They opened their treasures and gave to Him precious gifts, gifts that honored Him as King, Physician, and Savior.

John the Baptist, moved by God's power and led by His spirit, marched through the wilderness declaring, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord."

He came not to be ministered unto but to minister and to give his life for mankind. He came not to call the righteous but sinners to repentance. He was in the world in Isaiah's day for He is from everlasting to everlasting. He was born in Herod's time. He is born today in every heart and land that will be opened to Him. He was proclaimed by angels, prophets and Kings. His servants are commanded to carry the gospel to the ends of the earth even in our time. He was worshipped by the wise men and ignorant people alike. Today, He claims the homage of all—wise and ignorant, high and low. His love includes all. His power is as wide as the world and His mercy endures forever. At this season of the year, we proclaim His birth. All men, everywhere, in one way or another, acknowledge His coming and are glad to receive His benefits, material and spiritual. To our shame, it would seem that we attach more importance to the possibility of material gain than to the spiritual graces and blessings. The commercial world apparently becomes impatient waiting for the Thanksgiving festival to be over that they may begin to commercialize Christmas, the time of the birth of our Lord. The average city lines its streets with decorations and floods its byways with brilliant lights, not in honor or even recognition of the birth of Christ but in the hope of attracting customers who with their earnings may purchase their wares. There is no sin in striving to attract would-be customers and to offer commodities for barter and trade, but there is sin in not opening our hearts to Christ and refusing to give ourselves to Him and failing to honor Him with the due proportion of our substance. The world was in darkness and need when, nearly 2000 years ago, Christ was born. The world is in confusion, need, distress, and fear today. If all who have accepted Christ and know Him would walk in His footsteps and share what they have as did the Christ, confusion would largely disappear, need would be partially met, fear would vanish, and hope and assurance would possess our hearts and the world. May we behold His star anew and have the courage to forsake the evils of selfishness and greed and divide our living in the spirit of Christ that the world may be blessed because we live.

MT. BETHEL.

The second Sunday in December I preached in my old home church, and joined with Rev. Fred Allred, the pastor, and the people in the service of the Lord's Supper. It was a great privilege to preach again in the church of my childhood, to see in my memory my brothers, my sister and my parents as we went to its Sunday school and its main worship services in years gone by. But as I saw the fine young teachers, the little boys and girls, the young deacons, and the congregation made up largely of young people I said it is a new day, and here is tomorrow.

The Rev. Fred Allred and Mrs. Allred are greatly beloved by the people of the community and church, and they are doing a constructive piece of work. There is a good future for that church. Mt. Bethel stands in the heart of a fine rural community where the people own their farms and their modern homes, and a good many of them go to church. Let the church catch the imagination and heart of the people with a really constructive leadership such as the Allreds are capable of giving as soon as Mr. Allred finishes his college course and it will assume its rightful place in the spiritual leadership of a good people. Already they are thinking of a parsonage right near the church and a minister living in their community. The church is alive and its members are devoted to it and they feel that if they can hold their present pastor a much better day is ahead for them. Translated, "Mt. Bethel" means "God's house on a hill." May it long remain God's house where dreams continue to come true for young parents and their lovely children.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

CHRISTMAS WITHOUT EGGNOG.

Many years ago, we knew an old gentleman who considered himself in every sense of the word, a temperance man. He wouldn't drink a drop of liquor except at Christmastime, when he always served egg-nog.

On December 25, 1949, when we celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ, the United States will serve egg-nog. It served egg-nog at Christmas time in 1948, and right on back through the years of Repeal. The egg-nog served was a mixed drink in every sense of the word. It contained murders (scores of them), rapes (only God knows how many), brutal beatings of little children (hundreds of them), accidents, disasters, misery. We like to think of Christmas as a joyous occasion but for many, many thousands of people it is a time of horror and suffering.

During the Christmas season, the liquor traffic will sell much more than usual. Those who drink will be urged to buy—to have "Christmas Cheer" in their homes, to present to their friends liquid Hell and distilled damnation all wrapped up in pretty packages tied with red ribbon.

How wonderful Christmas would be without egg-nog! After all, it is a time for rejoicing rather than a time for brutality and suffering. The celebration of the day ought to be in keeping with the character of the Man-God whose birth is the occasion for the rejoicing. Whisky and gin, wine and beer, can contribute nothing to the proper observance of the Day which honors the birth of Him who was the loving Savior of mankind.

A LETTER FROM DR. RIGGS.

NOTE—This letter from Dr. Riggs has been delayed until it is almost useless as a barometer of present conditions in the Shaowu area. However it is interesting and helps to round out later reports which have been received. It also shows the loyalty of those who represent us on the foreign field.

Shaowu Christian Hospital,
Shaowu, Fukien, China,
August 24, 1949.

DEAR FRIENDS:

We have just received the news of the liberation of Foochow, which gives us fresh hope that communications with the outside may once again be reliably established. We have been receiving a trickle of letters from America ever since we were liberated in May, but our folks there had apparently not been hearing from us. For the past few days we in our mountain home here on Erh Shih Tu even seemed to be cut off from Shaowu, as Communists and local resisters were fighting it out between here and there. But now that the capital of the province has surrendered, we think scattered resistance and disorder will come to an end and more nearly normal communications and trade restored.

Our mountain Erh Shih Tu area where we have been living since April has not been affected by all the disorders and troubles of the outside world. So isolated are these remote villages that they have always considered themselves immune from the plagues of former governments, such as taxation, conscription, and interference by county government officials; and they expect their relations with the new government to be equally peaceful and remote. That has made this area an ideal place to live and work during these weeks of disturbances in the outside world. For nearly three months now I have been out in the various villages, seeing patients and showing health posters; and for the past month a special team has been with me most of the time, with a portable generation and slide projector, showing slides and film strips on health education, religious topics, agriculture and home life, etc. The response we have had to this program has been heartwarming in its enthusiasm. For a brief period we were also spraying villages with DDT as a public health measure for the control of malaria and diarrheal diseases through the destruction of mosquitoes and flies; but this phase of the work came to an abrupt end when we ran out of DDT, with no hope of getting any more.

I am not deluding myself into believing that this brief sporadic effort is doing these people much permanent good. They have been isolated in the mountains for so long and are so set in their old ways of thinking and living that it will take more than occasional lectures and moving pictures to change them. But the effect on me, of getting down out of the "ivory tower" of the Hospital in Shaowu, and into the homes of these people, to observe and share a bit in their life, and learn how friendly and kindly they are and yet how tragically shackled by their poverty and some of their old vicious health practices and lack of sanitation, has been worth an awful lot. I am finally getting some conception of what disease conditions exist in this area and why, and what some of the problems and opportunities are as a challenge for the establishing of an effective health and medical program for this North Fukien area for which we have assumed responsibility.

Only one disturbing fact darkens the prospects for the future. We have been immune here from direct interference by the civil war and the Communists; but the securing of funds and supplies for this program, difficult continually for the past two years because of poor communications, has been cut off entirely during the past few months due to the outside disturbances; and there does not seem to be any hope that this problem can be solved within the foreseeable future. Much as I am reluctant to admit, my ability to do any good here is absolutely dependent on the steady flow of supplies. I have already run out of DDT and worm medicine—the most commonly needed remedy in this area—and am on the verge of being crippled by lack of various other spare parts and materials. If the new government foreign policy is going to continue to restrict our work here in this way, we may be forced to abandon this whole program just as the opportunity is opening up and look elsewhere for a field of work in some other part of the world. Needless to say we will leave here, if we have to, with genuine regret.

Best regards,

tory statutes based upon considerations of color or nationality, would be removed. All Oriental peoples, now racially ineligible for citizenship, should be granted the same status in relation to our immigration and naturalization laws as is or may be accorded the peoples of China, India and the Philippine Islands.

We point to the faithful and courageous Christian minority in Asia with admiration and thanksgiving. We call upon the Christian community of America to join with the Christian community in Asia in advancing a movement of spiritual reformation as daring in its conception and as revolutionary in its effects as was the Christian enterprise of the early Apostles. Christian youth in Asia, America and other lands, should be encouraged to participate in a veritable crusade to bring the whole of the Far East into a knowledge of Christ. Our churches, colleges and theological seminaries should undertake the enlistment of vastly expanded missionary personnel firmly grounded in the Christian faith and with a thorough understanding of the methods and techniques by which secular ideologies are propagated. New types of missionary endeavor should be explored which would more effectively relate the gospel of Christ to the struggles of Oriental peoples for economic and political justice. Nor can the influence of the Christian gospel be made pervasive among the masses of Asia as long as Christians of the West give so sparingly of their earthly treasure to exalt the name of Christ in lands other than our own. If the secular influences currently sweeping over Asia are to be countered by the healing and reconciling influence of Christianity, our people must be prepared substantially to increase their total giving for the world mission of the Church.

The Christian enterprise in Asiatic lands is believed by its critics and by many of its friends, to be too much dominated by the patterns of the West. The churches of Christ in America, in their relations with Orientals, should seek to widen their geo-

Church Women at Work

With Emphasis on Missions

MRS. W. J. ANDES, Editor

637 S. Sunset Drive, Winston-Salem, N. C.

DR. LAUBACH SPEAKS TO WOMEN AT ELON.

I was one of those women who heard Dr. Frank C. Laubach on December 14th at 3:00 p. m. at Elon College, having been given a special invitation by the Elon Woman's Fellowship. Attendance was not very large, though those who came seemed quite eager and interested.

Dr. Laubach, introduced by Miss Pattie Lee Coghill as a "World Christian," has been in sixty-one countries—two more than the number of countries in the United Nations—59. He was invited to those countries, not by the churches, but by the governments, and he has been personally thanked by those governments. Governments, he stated, are extremely anxious to have their illiterates taught to read, and they are not opposed to Christianity. Using his famous method of "each one teach one," Dr. Laubach first teaches the pupil to read. Then he tells him that Christ himself began this method—he opened the eyes of the blind and everything was all new again. So, he creates an opening for introducing the Christian gospel. The people are not prejudiced toward Christianity, Dr. Laubach says. They are eager to accept it and want to learn about it.

The only trouble is that we don't have enough people to teach and we don't have enough money to carry on the work. Though each person is taught to teach another as soon as he learns, there are not enough people to teach to spread Christianity fast enough. In other words, Dr. Laubach says that we will lose Asia unless we put enough money and people into the work fast enough to combat Communism. We should have 10,000 new teachers to teach 1,000 illiterates each year, so that we would have 10,000,000 people taught yearly. This, he thinks, is the only way to strengthen the gospel and do our duty toward God. If we lose these people to Communism, Dr. Laubach says that we will have many enemies—practically everybody will be against us—even God because we will have failed him.

Ninety per cent of illiterates are not Protestant, while ninety per cent of Protestants are literate. This is mostly because Protestants are taught to read the Bible for themselves. After the illiterates are taught to read, then they can be given Bibles, and providing suitable literature is another part of Dr. Laubach's work.

In the countries where the greatest per cent of illiterates are, those are also the areas of high mortality—the areas of hunger—and the underdeveloped areas. These people make up three-fifths of the world's population.

Dr. Laubach suggested several things which we could do to help strengthen our Christianity. One relates to the recent major triumph in the Assembly of United Nations, when the program to help backward nations was approved 100 per cent. This is the program in which the U. S. will send to other countries some of our technicians in different fields to help develop the underdeveloped areas. To learn what we can do and how to write Congressmen about this, write to: Richard Fagley, Federal Council, 297 Fourth Avenue, New York City. There is danger of this fine program being done in the wrong way if we don't do our part to urge it being done in the Christian way.

Another suggestion involves the Representatives in the United Nations. These people have tremendous decisions to make, and they need our prayers and interest. Write to: Layman's Movement, 347 Madison Avenue, New York City, and ask for the Prayer Cards so you can have the names of each country's representatives and can pray for them all.

Another suggestion is that we write to our missionaries. They need our prayers and our support. Let them know that you are thinking of them and praying for them.

"Prayer," said Dr. Laubach, "is the mightiest force in the world—when you also act."

SWEDISH WOMAN HELPS TIMOTHY CHANG.

Though she doesn't know about it, perhaps, Mrs. Tillie Gundersen is helping Timothy Chang—because the Woman's Association of Winston-Salem has sent in $10.00 for a Memorial Certificate and that $10.00 came from Mrs. Gundersen.

Mrs. Gundersen came to Winston-Salem from Chicago, where she had been living in a Sweish settlement and attending a Lutheran church, having been a Lutheran all her life. She visited practically all the churches around Winston-Salem, and they all seemed too large and too cold. Finally, one day she was riding by our church with her son and he said to her, "Mother, maybe you would like this little church." "Maybe I would," she said, "I believe I will go in and see what it's like." So she started coming to our church and we began learning what an interesting person she was. Having been born in Sweden, she had a definite accent and we always enjoyed hearing her talk—not only because of her accent but because she always wanted to give her witness to her Lord. She could lead beautiful prayers and always did when called upon. She enjoyed our Woman's Association because it gave her a chance to make friends. She was always so lonely because she missed her native people and her Lutheran Church.

On Wednesday before Mrs. Gundersen was to join our church, she quietly slipped away. Several weeks later, a member of her family called Mr. Andes and stated that they had found some of her tithe money and they wanted to give some of it to our church and some to her church in Chicago. They would like it to go for some phase of missions, they said.

Knowing Mrs. Gundersen's keen interest in the work of our women, we in the December meeting decided that a Memorial certificate in her honor would be the most appropriate thing we could use it for.

This money, of course, goes into our Life Memberships and Memorials fund and helps during these four years Timothy Chang, a student at Duke Divinity School. So, this Swedish woman has given some of her money to help a Chinese boy through Seminary, so he may return to his own country, and help teach Christianity.

graphical thinking to the end that Christ may be received among the people as One for whom there is no East or West. It is the inescapable duty of Christians everywhere to seek a spiritual unity in Christ that transcends all considerations of race or nationality. Only in this manner can Christianity be made a living and dynamic force among Asiatic peoples.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Mrs. R. L. HOUSE, Editor

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS:

We know that Mrs. House must have written a wonderful Christmas story for you, but we have waited for it till Wednesday morning and must go to press. The mails are terribly slow, you know, at Christmas time.

We are giving you two poems which we hope you will like. One is for Christmas and the other is a New Year's Wish.

CHRIST'S BIRTH.

*At the decree of Caesar
Joseph and Mary came To Bethlehem of Judea,
To register their name.*

*The Inn was overcrowded,
And night drew on apace;
The stable gave a straw pallet—
A lowly, humble place.*

*Angels, Joseph and Mary
Were at the trysting place,
Where she brought forth her
First Born
Heaven's glory in His face.*

*Thus came the loved Redeemer,
God's spoken Word to man,
Bringing salvation by the cross—
And Christmas Day began.*

*He will return some glad day,
Ruler and Judge of all;
When angels will again rejoice,
Chanting the Advent call.*

—Mabel F. Dennett.

NEW YEAR'S WISHES.

*What shall I wish thee?
Treasures of earth?
Songs in the springtime,
Pleasures and mirth?
Flowers on thy pathway,
Skies ever clear?
Would this insure thee
A Happy New Year?*

*What shall I wish thee?
What can be found
Bringing thee sunshine
All the year 'round?
Where is the treasure,
Lasting and dear,
That shall ensure thee
A Happy New Year?*

*Faith that increaseth,
Walking in light;
Hope that aboundeth,
Happy and bright;*

*Love that is perfect,
Casting out fear;
These shall ensure thee
A Happy New Year.*

*Peace in the Saviour, Rest at His feet,
Smile of His countenance
Radiant and sweet,
Joy in His presence!
Christ ever near!
This will ensure thee
A Happy New Year!*

Billy sat on the back porch with his chin in his hands.

"Our boy seems unhappy about something today," said Mother. "I wonder what it can be. Anybody who had five candles on his cake yesterday—"

"I thought something was the matter," said Father. "Was it too much birthday cake, do you think? Or didn't the new wagon please him?"

"Oh, it wasn't the wagon!" exclaimed Mother. "That was just what he wanted. He has talked of nothing else for days."

"It must be big enough," went on Father. "A wagon that was any bigger would be too much for him to handle."

What could be the matter with Billy? Mother coaxed him at dinner-time with his favorite potato soup followed by ice cream, but he would eat very little of either.

All afternoon Billy continued to appear troubled. He played with the new wagon in a spiritless sort of way—most of the time sitting in it very quietly.

"I can't understand it," said Mother. "He's always whooping and shouting with the other boys."

"Do you think we ought to call, the doctor?" Father asked.

"Oh, no—not yet," replied Mother. "But if he isn't better by morning—"

Then, just before supper, Mother found Billy in his bedroom with his back straight against the wall, "Why, Billy, what are you doing? Trying to measure yourself?" she asked.

"Y-y-yes," Billy admitted. "You said when I was five years old I'd be bigger, but I'm just the same size."

Mother took Billy in her arms. "Oh, Son, is that what has worried you?" she asked. "You will be taller soon, but not at once. You'll be five for a year, you know; you'll grow a tiny bit day by day. But, Billy, it's not how tall you are, it's how you behave—the way you do things—that will tell people that you are really five years old now!"

We should be careful to make our statements about time and growth intelligible to children. It may be hard for us to recall any confusion, regarding the statements of adults, that existed in our own minds during childhood, but close observation will convince anyone of the fact that children often wander in a wilderness of strange terms. Many persons could match the above story with other instances of misunderstanding.

Some children of school age think that Lincoln lived before Washington because his birthday comes first on the February calendar. Very young children frequently ask, "Is it morning or afternoon?" or say, "Did we go home yet?"

The remark by his mother that Harry was not yet "big enough" to go to kindergarten, when a neighbor not nearly as tall as Harry went every day, was extremely hard for Harry to understand.

Let us be very thoughtful and develop concepts more completely, so that the small child will know what we are talking about. If we do not exercise this care, many a small bewildered "Billy" may bewilder us by his strange conduct.

A minister, having preached on the doctrine of original sin, was afterwards waited on by some persons who stated their objections to what he had advanced. After hearing them, he said, "I hope you do not deny actual sin, too?" "No," they replied. The good man expressed his satisfaction at their acknowledgment; but, to show the absurdity of their opinions in denying a doctrine so plainly taught in Scripture, he asked them, "Did you ever see a tree growing without a root?"—J. Caird.

Youth at Work in the Church

ANN TRUITT, Editor; HELEN JACKSON, C. B. TWIDDY, Associates.

STUDENT CONFERENCE TO BE HELD AT ELON COLLEGE.

Rev. C. Baxter Twiddy, president of the Southern Convention Youth Council, has called a special student conference to be held at Elon College on January 6 and 7, 1950.

All students of the Evangelical and Reformed Church as well as Congregational Christian students are invited and urged to be present for this, the first joint meeting of Congregational Christian and Evangelical and Reformed students to be held in North Carolina.

Dr. Bryant Drake, National Student Secretary of Congregational Christian Churches, has been secured as special speaker and conference leader. There will be other speakers who will be of especial interest to all students. In addition to the program of speakers and seminars, there will be time for fun and recreation.

That students from distant colleges may have ample time to get there, the first meeting is set for 5:30 p. m., Friday. The conference will close around 3:30 Saturday afternoon.

A registration fee of one dollar will cover all expenses while at Elon College. Those expecting to attend should notify Rev. C. Baxter Twiddy, Elon College, North Carolina, immediately so that over-night accommodations may be arranged.

VALLEY OF VIRGINIA YOUNG PEOPLE'S RALLY.

The Young People of the Virginia Valley Central Conference will meet in a New Year's Rally on Sunday afternoon and evening, January 1, 1950, at Bethlehem Church, located on the Valley Pike, between Harrisonburg and New Market. All young people of the conference—not just organized groups—are invited, and it is hoped that every church in the Valley Conference will be well represented. The program is as follows:

CHRISTMAS EVE IN BETHLEHEM.

sinned and needed a Savior, and so did I.

Then I looked to the left and saw on the shepherd's field a fire still glowing. Services had been held there earlier in the evening for the men in the armed forces. I thought of that first Christmas Eve when the angels announced to the shepherds there the birth of Jesus. How significant that announcement was! I had visited in various countries and everywhere I was finding some kind of fear—fears of all descriptions and some beyond description. How significant then the words of the angels, "Fear not, for I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people, for unto you is born this day in the City of David a Saviour who is Christ the Lord."

Mingled in the streets of Bethlehem were the curious, the lonely, the broken-hearted, the sin-sick. All of us needed the Christian message of the angels and I realized again that only in Him could all these needs be satisfied.

Sunday School Lesson

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, D. D.

THE CONTINUING BAND OF DISCIPLES.

LESSON I—JANUARY 1, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: You shall receive power when the Holy Spirit is come upon you; and you shall be my witnesses in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and Samaria, and to the end of the earth.—Acts 1:8.

LESSON: Acts 1:1-14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: John 14:14-20.

Volume No. I.—Dr. Luke.

"The former treatise I made, O Theophilus, concerning all that Jesus began to do and to teach until the day that He was received up after that He had given commandment through the Holy Spirit unto the apostles whom He had chosen." The Gospel according to St. Luke, or the Gospel of Luke was written by Luke "the beloved physician" to tell about what Jesus began to do and to teach. The emphasis is upon the word "began." At least Luke could tell only of the beginning of the ministry of Jesus. It is still going on, in increasing volume and influence.

Volume No. II—Dr. Luke.

• Dr. Luke wrote Volume No. II to his friend Theophilus. In this volume entitled Acts or "The Acts of the Apostles" the beloved physician, a friend and fellow-traveler of Paul, wrote about what the living Spirit of this Jesus did in and through these apostles whom He had called. As his first book was a book of beauty, his second book is a book of power. It is history, but there is nothing dry or dull about it. It is alive, thrilling, vivid, dramatic, inspiring.

The Foundation of Christian Faith.

"To whom He showed himself alive after His passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days." That was the central theme of the preaching of the apostles—the fact, the indisputable fact that Jesus Christ had risen from the dead, and that He was alive forevermore. He demonstrated this fact by many infallible proofs and over a long period of time. Christianity stands or falls on the Resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Concerning the Kingdom of God.

"And speaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God."

When Jesus began His public ministry "He came preaching the gospel of the Kingdom of God or of heaven. It was the central theme of much of His preaching. He taught His disciples to pray "Thy kingdom come." And after He had risen from the dead, He spoke with them of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. The command given during His life to seek first the Kingdom of God was not repealed by our Risen Lord.

Concerning the Unknown Future.

"Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom of Israel?" The question is revealing on two points. It shows that the disciples had not fully realized the nature of Christ's reign—they thought of it in terms of the Messianic kingdom, of an earthly kingdom, of the restoration of the glory of the Davidic reign, with the Jews "sitting pretty." And they were unduly curious about the unknown future. God's wisdom and love are revealed as much in what He does not let us know, as in what He does make known. Dreaming can take the place of doing, to the detriment of the Kingdom.

Not By Might, But By My Spirit.

"Wait for the promise of the Father . . . but ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you." There was so much to do then and the apostles were so eager to do it. But they were not ready to do it. They did not have the power of the Holy Spirit. Religion is primarily a matter of dynamics and not of mechanics, although mechanics are necessary. The average church would do more and do better if it waited for more power. Our modern world needs the discipline and the dispensation of "The Upper Room."

Beginning Where We Are.

"Beginning at Jerusalem." That was a difficult and it was a dangerous place to be and to begin. But that was just where they were to begin—right where they were. And that is just where we are to begin to witness for Christ—right where we are. Let no one think he would witness for Christ if he were somewhere else if he is not witnessing for Christ where he is.

One must witness in Jerusalem as well as to the ends of the earth.

Mystery In Religion.

"And a cloud received him out of their sight." That cloud might well stand for the mysterious element in religion in general and concerning the Ascension in particular. The fact is that the Ascension marked the end of the earthly ministry of Jesus. But it was only a part of His continuing ministry in the Spirit. Men are not to allow the things that they cannot understand in religion to keep them from doing the things they ought to do and they know they ought to do.

In One Accord In Prayer.

"These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication." They obeyed the command of our Lord and they later received the power. It is ever thus.

THE CHURCH EMPOWERED.

LESSON II—JANUARY 8, 1950.

MEMORY SELECTION: Repent and be baptized, every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of your sins; and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit.—Acts 2:39.

LESSON: Acts 2:1-4; 14-17; 37-41.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Joel 2:28-32.

The Outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

Pentecost marked the birthday of the Church. It was on that day, the fiftieth day after the Passover, that the Holy Spirit came upon the waiting and praying group in the Upper Room, and that in a way the Church was born. The Spirit came in fulfillment of the promise made by our Lord to His disciples before His death and before His Ascension. The account of the coming of the Holy Spirit is brief—only four verses are devoted to its actual coming—but it was history-making. Like the Resurrection it had to be put in symbolic language. There was a sound "as of a rushing, mighty wind from heaven"—an invisible, supernatural power which could not be seen, but the effects of which could be seen. There were cloven tongues "as of fire," and fire was a symbol of the divine presence and activity. There was a sense of abundance—the house was "filled" where they were sitting, and "they were all filled with the Holy Spirit." And in some strange way those upon whom the Spirit came, began to speak with other tongues, that is in languages.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON EVANGELISM.

[Adopted at the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, Ingram Church, November 15, 1949. Voted to be printed in The Sun.]

As we come near to the halfway mark of the twentieth century, it seems to be wisdom on our part to take stock of what has been happening. It opened with great confidence in the future. Looking back, we see an almost incredible advance in science and technology. Man has learned as never before to master nature for his own benefit. The proponents of our national advance in evangelistic efforts interpret the first half of our century as an age in which men have been absorbed in their own interests, with little or no vision of the purposes and plans of God for them. It might rightly be called a secular age. Therefore, the words of United States Senator Frank P. Graham are pertinent at this point: "If civilization is not as inventive socially and politically, and as concerned spiritually, as it is powerful scientifically, it will eventually lose itself." Present world conditions call for a genuine revival of Christianity patterned upon the teachings of the Savior.

It is said when the Duke of Wellington was asked if it was worth while to send evangelists of the Cross to entertain people he said, "What are your standing orders?" The apostle Paul advised young Timothy to do "the work of an evangelist." The Master gave all of us as His disciples the Divine Commission when he said, "Go out into the highways and hedges." He also gave us the Divine compulsion when He said, "and compel them to come in." This may be done by invitation, intercession, and being kind and good to people. Then follows the Divine conception, that "My house might be filled." These are our present standing orders from our great Leader, Jesus the Christ.

As ministers and lay men and women of the Conference we have an unusual opportunity before us now, in helping to "fill His House." The United Evangelist Advance began on World Communion Sunday, October 2, of this year and will run through December 31, 1950. This program of evangelism is sponsored by 27 constituent denominations of the Federal Council of Churches, together with eleven other denominations not in the Federal Council. These 38 Protestant bodies number approximately 40 million members and will march forward together under the banner, "America for Christ."

We therefore most earnestly recommend that every pastor acquaint himself and his people with the program of the United Evangelistic Advance. We believe that this information will result in the cooperation of pastors and people in making this period a time of ingathering of souls for the Master and His Kingdom.

We further recommend that we, as individuals, commit ourselves to the mission or purpose of the Advance in achieving the five-fold objective:

1. The spiritual renewal of the ministry and membership of the churches.

2. The reaching and winning of the multitudes of unchurched of the nation for Christ and His Church.

3. The careful instruction and assimilation of every new member who is brought into the membership of the churches.

4. The enlisting of all members who have moved to new communities and who have failed to identify themselves with any local church where they now live.

5. By the vital transformation of persons through Christ, so that Christian personalities shall be developed in the home, business, politics and in all other human relationships in order that these new persons may in turn produce a more Christian society.

ACHESON APPROVES CHRISTIAN UNIVERSITY IN JAPAN.

Secretary of State Dean Acheson has given his unqualified approval to the International Christian University in Japan for which the Japan International Christian University Foundation is now raising a fund of $10,000,000. Mr. Acheson made this statement at a press conference in Washington on November 30:

"I should like to call your attention to a project which is being undertaken by a foundation in New York under the leadership of Dr. Ralph E. Diffendorfer and Dr. John Coventry Smith to establish an International Christian University in Japan. Joseph C. Grew, former Under-Secretary of State, is National Chairman of a campaign to raise funds in this country and Canada to finance the undertaking.

"I think this is an excellent project. A university of this character can do a great deal of constructive good in an educational way and for the development of democracy in Japan. General MacArthur has heartily endorsed the project, and I am informed that the Japanese themselves have already subscribed over 150,000,000 yen, 95 per cent of the contributors being non-Christians.

"The University is to be non-sectarian and the emphasis is to be on maintaining the highest academic standards. The faculty, both Japanese and international, is to be Christian but there is to be no attempt to proselytize, for freedom of religion is one of the most important of the freedoms.

"Many prominent people in the United States and Canada are supporting the project. Such a university cannot fail to play an important part in Japan's future and I think the project deserves the interest and support of all of us in our own interest as well as in the interest of Japan."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

languages other than their own. Back of and beneath all this mystery is the fact that the Spirit of the living God and the living Christ manifested himself and filled the lives of the disciples and the gathered group because their hearts were prepared and receptive. Our Lord had promised that if they tarried in Jerusalem they would be endued with power from on high, and this was the fulfillment of that promise. He also said that they should be His witnesses and they began immediately to witness for Him.

Evangelistic Preaching.

Peter's sermon at Pentecost was vital and life-changing. It was scriptural in background and content and centered in Christ. It was disturbingly pointed and plain and pierced to the very hearts of the hearers who cried out, "What shall we do?" Coming as it did from a man who was filled with the Holy Spirit, and accompanied by the Holy Spirit which brought conviction, it resulted in the conversion of three thousand souls. Here is preaching at its best.

The Ingathering.

"And the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." How important it is that the new convert is received into the fellowship of the church. And that he continue in that fellowship and in learning and in attending Holy Communion, and in prayer as did these early converts of the church.

The Orphanage

DEAR HELPERS:

Their little suits were very new, very plain. They had been bought for the special purpose of going to the Christian Orphanage. They were twins so the suits were exactly alike. Little eight-year-old boys. They have been here now a week. Their little faces are peeked, and their little bodies show the need of better food, better prepared. Their big, soft eyes are lusterless, but their grades in school are good. It is their first Christmas away from home. Already they have been entertained by two large groups of college young men and women—at Chapel Hill and Elon. Already they are having fun, and already they are beginning to improve.

Tomorrow two more will be added to the orphanage family. They will be added to a group of lovely children. They will find warm rooms, warm clothes, Christmas and Santa Claus. Some song or story will remind them of their former home or lack of it, and at such times they will be quiet and mindful of yesterday, but in the main they will be happy. They will find friendship and companionship such as goes to make a lovely home. No, not everything that makes home, but close to it. It is that difference which touches our hearts, and causes us to love them all the more. Bathed bodies, new clothes, and good food and something pleasant to play, or do, goes a long way toward bringing fairyland right here under the big oak trees atop these quiet hills.

When I talk with, play with and work with these olders boys and girls, see their fine bright minds, their happy industrious and gay spirit, their growth in real character and personal responsibility and strength, I cannot help but be proud of them. The way they look out for one another, and share their gifts, or clothes, or spending money I say to myself, "There are real folks."

Too, when I see all I see here I wonder how we can fail to get the final goal of $50,000.00 so much needed. At this report we are $8,879.14 from it. Sixty-two churches have sent nothing in November or December. If you could see them start out on a cold and rainy winter morning several blocks to school you would quickly realize that they are facing life "the good, tough way" with the need of more than they have. If you could realize how plain their food is at times, and how alike it was to the food of the day before you would not say they are being "pampered and spoiled." If you could see some of their rooms, and their furniture, the walls and the floors, you would know that we are far from having too much. I like to put the "best foot forward," but just remember it takes two feet to run a good race. Come, see for yourselves, see these children and learn for yourselves that for them "life is real, life is earnest" and that their worthy goals are ahead. . . . And I do thank you for your loyal and generous giving which makes this good report possible today. Thank you.

A. H. McIVER.

ADVISORY COUNCIL OF AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY IN ANNUAL MEETING.

A budget of $3,146,000 for their 1950 Scripture program was approved by the Advisory Council of the American Bible Society, which met on the last two days of November. The Council consists of executives, leading pastors and editors of fifty denominations who recognize the Bible Society as their official source of Scripture supply. The budget figure shows an increase of more than $800,000 over the 1949 budget. The major part of the increase is being sought to meet unprecedented opportunity of supplying Scriptures to Japan and to aid the Bible Societies in Europe in their post-war rehabilitation work. To assist in raising this amount the Bible Society will seek 500,000 new members. Dr. Eric M. North, secretary in charge of the foreign work of the Bible Society, who has just returned from a conference in Tokyo with the Japan Bible Society, reported, in an interview with General MacArthur, that 4,000,000 copies of the Scriptures have already been supplied to the Japan Bible Society by the American people, since the end of the war. Three million more copies will be furnished during 1950, it is planned. General MacArthur stated, according to Dr. North, that thirty million Scriptures will be needed to fill the eventual needs of Japan.

"The Japan Bible Society under whose direction the Scriptures are being distributed," said Dr. North, "is developing a system of colportage. The work has been divided into 'counties' and is under the leadership of a co-leader who in turn secures volunteer helpers. Visits are made from house to house and to all schools.

"Bible classes are being held after hours in banks, municipal offices and other business organizations. Other classes are led by pastors who meet two and three times a week with these groups. The local churches have been badly hit, and pastors, many of whom receive no salary at all, must secure work on the side in order to support themselves. The missionary force is not adequate and must be multiplied many times, so that Christianity today finds an entrance to Japan through continuing large distribution of the Scriptures."

Dr. Gilbert Darlington, treasurer, reported that the Society's estimated printing requirements for 1950, to be published in the United States, totals 13,695,000 copies of the Scriptures. This includes 717,500 Bibles in various languages; 881,000 Testaments; 6,250,000 copies of Portions of the Bible; 97,000 separate copies of the Book of Psalms to be bound with New Testaments; 650,000 copies of the Sermon on the Mount and 5,100,000 twenty-four page Gospels.

The program included sending to the Eastern Zone of Germany, either the finished books or materials for printing Scriptures locally, 400,000 Bibles; 300,000 Testaments and 2,000 Scriptures for the blind. For the Western Zone, the Society's program includes 200,000 Bibles; 300,000 Testaments and 2,000 Scriptures for the blind.

If opportunity opens, the American Bible Society has ready for shipment, Scriptures to Russia, Bulgaria, Hungary, Poland, Serbia, and the Ukraine.

The American Bible Society, to safeguard editions of the Holy Scriptures, has stored well-printed copies of the books in fireproof buildings which include the Library of the University of Colorado at Boulder, Colorado; the Library of Dartmouth College, Hanover, New Hampshire and the Publication Library of the Society in New York City. For this safe-keeping program up to October 25, 1949, in addition to its own publications, the Society had received Scriptures from the Bible Society of India and Ceylon; the China Bible House in Shanghai; the Czechoslovakian Bible Society; the Japan Bible Society; the National Bible Society of Scotland, the Netherlands Bible Society and the Norwegian Bible Society. Papier mache mats are also stored in fireproof warehouses in Vancouver, British Columbia. Bibles, Testaments and Portions of the Bible are stored in Hong Kong.

Sanburg's Remembrance Rock was a 1,607-page novel of what might be called the American dream covering 300 years. Probably the best of the fiction was Foster Fitzsimmon's Bright Leaf with its vital characters and its significant content.

In the non-fiction field there were 10 volumes of history, if we use the term expansively. Four of these were books of local history, covering Pender, Forsyth, Watauga and Alamance Counties, varying in quality but on the whole quite good. There were four specialized historical works, including Dr. Archibald Henderson's labor of love, The Campus of the First State University, Spencer B. King's The History of Selective Service in North Carolina, and Wiley B. Sanders' The Juvenile Courts of North Carolina. Then there were two excellent books dealing with the history of tobacco in this state, which we have referred to before, Nannie M. Tilley's The Bright Tobacco Industry, 1860-1927, and Joseph C. Robert's The Story of Tobacco in America.

The year brought forth four books of poetry. Two of them, Come Up the Valley by Francis Pledge Hulme of Salem College, and Plowed Ground by James Larkin Pearson, were quite good.

The drama was represented by only one work, Paul Green's The Common Glory, but that was first-rate.

There were two books of essays, Dr. Hardin Craig's An Interpretation of Shakespeare and Freedom and Renaissance, both brilliant and stirring works.

There were four books of sermons and four books about the South, the most important of which was a school book called Exploring the South by Vance, Ivey and Bond.

In autobiography Virgil St. Cloud's memoirs of a hotel man, Pioneer Blood, was rich and racy, while Elliott Merriek's Green Mountain Farm—parts of which came out in the New Yorker and other magazines, was a delightful piece of work.

In biography there were three books, but Phillips Russell's The Woman Who Rang the Bell, which won the cup, was outstanding.

There were two books of North Carolina legends and mysteries. Of these John Harden's The Devil's Tramping Ground, a most entertaining book, proved, as Gerald Johnson said in a review of it, that North Carolina has always had mysteries, from the disappearance of the Lost Colony to the senatorial appointment of Frank Graham.

Looking back over the past 30 years one would conclude that North Carolina has moved quite a distance from the time when H. L. Mencken could say in The Sahara of the Bozart that the only writer in the South worth mentioning was James Branch Cabell. We now have important writers by the colony. In that time North Carolina has done very well in the novel, the short story, the drama, biography and history, but perhaps the most important work has been done in the field of self-examination as illustrated by the works of Howard L. Odum, S. H. Hobbs, Rupert B. Vance, Harriet L. Herring and others.—Greensboro Daily News.

DISPLACED PERSONS

By Charles A. Wells

Displaced persons are not just a product of the modern world. Since earliest history there have been those who, through misfortune, war or religious belief, have been driven from their homes and forced to wander—homeless and unwanted. The holy family lived in Nazareth but at the whim of a tyrant they were ordered out upon the dusty roadway, forced to flee into strange lands. Certainly one would have thought that God could have sent His Son to be born into the manor house of a landed aristocrat or the palace of a merchant prince where He would have had a fitting background of security and nobility. But instead God sought the nobility of the humble for His Son and the security of the low Bethlehem hills and a wayside manger. It was out of the understanding of such a life that this divine Son, having grown to manhood, said "Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth."
